[1] The applicant was injured by an explosion while blasting holes for the defendants upon some farm land near Fresno. The facts will be related in connection with the discussion of the several points raised by petitioners. The first of these is that there is a material variance between the application filed with the Industrial Accident Commission and the proof offered at the hearing. The applicant stated in his application for adjustment of claim that he was paid 1¼ cents per hole, and blasted about 400 to 450 holes a day. The commission found:

"The rate of pay of the said employee in said employment was one and one quarter cents for each hole blasted, and the average daily earnings at said rate equalled $4.00, working six days in the week. The average weekly earnings were $22.80."

It is true there is a conflict in the testimony upon this question by reason of the fact that the applicant testified that he was working for $4 a day at the time of his injury, and his compensation at that time was not dependent upon the amount of his work. However, the testimony of the applicant's son, who was working with him, and of the employer and the evidence of the canceled checks issued in payment of wages, removes the question from the realm of doubt, and supports the finding of the commission. We cannot see how the petitioners were prejudiced in this matter. The finding of the commission is in harmony with their contention, and it is substantially in accord with the allegations of the application. Any variance in the finding from the allegations of the application is in favor of petitioners, as 400 holes at 1¼ cents per hole would be more than $4 a day. In the case of a complaint filed in an ordinary action at law and a variance therefrom in the proof, the court would be empowered to order an amendment to conform to the proof or to find in accordance with the facts proven. Sections 469 and 470, Code Civ. Proc. The rule applicable to the informal pleadings before the Industrial Commission should be at least as liberal.

[2] The second contention made by petitioners is that Henry Hettinger, the applicant, was an independent contractor, and not an employee. Petitioners had taken a contract for drilling and blasting holes to break up hardpan on certain land in Fresno at the rate of 10 cents a hole. Mr. Stuckert, one of the petitioners, operated one drilling machine, and employed a man to operate another one. The applicant and his son were engaged to follow up these machines and blast out the holes drilled thereby. They were paid 1¼ cents a hole for this work. The powder and blasting materials were furnished by the owner of the land. The applicant furnished nothing but his labor, and it appears that he was not required to work any certain number of hours, but was free to come and go as he wished. It is because of this latter fact that petitioners contend that applicant was an independent contractor. It is, of course, difficult to lay down any hard and fast rule by which to measure one's status in this respect, and it is unnecessary to do so in the present case. For it seems clear from the entire evidence that the applicant was an employee of petitioner, although he was paid under a system known as "piecework" rather than a regular daily wage. Mr. Stuckert, one of the petitioners, stated that he had found that men worked better under that system, and he always employed them thus. If applicant had been an independent contractor, he would have been legally obligated to complete his contract, but there is nothing in the record to indicate that applicant was not free at all times to discontinue his work without legal liability. He did not contract to drill any certain number of holes, nor to do any certain amount of work, but he merely engaged to work from day to day upon a wage to be measured by the actual amount of work done. His employment was no different in this respect from the employment of Mr. Liepsick, who drove one of the drilling machines. Mr. Liepsick stated that he was paid at the rate of 1½ cents a hole for the drilling; that he never drilled over 300 holes a day. The method of estimating his wages did not make him an independent contractor, and the case of the applicant is no different in principle.

[3] The other objection urged is that the applicant was engaged in an employment excluded by the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act. It is insisted that his work comes under the classification of either farming, viticulture, horticulture, or agriculture. We think there is no merit in this contention. The record shows that the petitioners made contracts with various owners of land to drill and blast holes in the land as a preparation for the planting of vines and trees. The evidence shows that the applicant was experienced in the use of explosives and in the work of blasting. His work was only incidentally, in this instance, connected with the farm. Blasting of holes might as well be done for the planting of telegraph poles, or in mining or building operations and in many other connections. It is not, inherently, farm work, and our courts are not disposed to cramp and narrow the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 831); it is their duty and policy to liberally construe said act, with the purpose of extending the benefits of the act for the protection of persons injured in the course of their employment.

The award of the Industrial Accident Commission is affirmed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; NOURSE, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 191

STEEL et al. v. THOMPSON. (Civ. 2462.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 27, 1922.)

1. Landlord and tenant ⟸109(1) — Written agreement not required to surrender lease.

A written agreement is not required to constitute a surrender of a lease, as it may be accomplished by operation of law.

2. Landlord and tenant ⟸233(2)—Surrender of lease a question of fact.

Whether there has been in a given case a surrender of a lease is a question of fact, to be determined in the first instance by the trial court.

3. Appeal and error ⟸1010(1)—Finding of trial court sustained by substantial evidence conclusive.

Where the findings of the trial court are sustained by substantial evidence, they are conclusive on appeal.

4. Landlord and tenant ⟸184(2)—Evidence held not to show unconditional acceptance of surrender of lease.

In action to recover a sum deposited by a tenant to secure payment of rent under a lease, evidence held not to show an unconditional acceptance of surrender of lease.

5. Landlord and tenant ⟸194(1) — Notice that lessor will rent surrendered property for lessee's benefit evidences lessor's refusal to accept surrender.

Purpose of a notice to the lessee from the lessor that surrendered property will be rented for lessee's benefit is to furnish evidence that the lessor does not release the lessee from liability for rent under the lease.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; L. W. Fulkerth, Judge.

Action by George F. Steel and others against Richard G. Thompson. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

W. H. Hatton and Thomas M. Anaya, both of Modesto, for appellants.

Hawkins & Hawkins, of Modesto, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought to recover the sum of $375 deposited by appellants with respondent to secure the payment of rent under the terms of a lease executed by the latter to the former. As stated by appellants:

"The only point relied upon for a reversal of the judgment in this case is that it appears conclusively that there was a surrender of the lease by the tenants and an unqualified acceptance by the landlord of such surrender."

If the last statement be true, then, as the trial court stated, the plaintiffs or appellants herein are entitled to the $375. In relation to this controverted point the trial court found:

"As to paragraph IV of plaintiff's complaint the court finds that on the 17th day of October, 1920, that plaintiffs vacated the said premises and left the same vacant and thereupon and thereafter surrendered to the defendant the keys to the said building but did not surrender the lease, but kept the same in their possession, and that the defendant did not accept the surrender of said lease; and did not accept the surrender of the said possession of said leased premises until after the same had been vacated and he thereupon did re-enter and take possession of said leased premises and did attempt to lease the same to other parties."

It is claimed by appellants that this finding is entirely unsupported.

As to the principle of law involved there can be no controversy. It is clearly stated in Baker v. Eilers Music Co., 26 Cal. App. 371, 146 Pac. 1056, as follows:

"A lease contract may be brought to an end by the surrender of the leased premises and the acquiescence in such surrender by the lessor. Such acquiescence is perhaps best evidenced by his taking possession of the property and assuming again all of the authority over it of an owner in possession. * * * A lessor who takes possession of property delivered to him by his tenant and does so unqualifiedly, thereby releases his tenants. He may accept possession of the property for the benefit of the tenant and relet the same; in the latter case he has no action except one for damages for the difference between what he was able in good faith to let the property for and the amount provided to be paid under the lease agreement. Bradbury v. Higginson, 162 Cal. 602 (123 Pac. 797); Oliver v. Loydon, 163 Cal. 124 (124 Pac. 731)."

[1] Of course, it is not disputed that a written agreement is not required to constitute such surrender, as it may be accomplished by operation of law. Welcome v. Hess, 90 Cal. 507, 27 Pac. 369, 25 Am. St. Rep. 145.

[2] It is also the established rule that whether in any given case there has been such surrender is a question of fact to be determined in the first instance by the trial court. Triest & Co. v. Goldstone, 173 Cal. 240, 159 Pac. 715.

[3] It necessarily follows that, if there is any substantial evidence in the record to sustain the finding of the trial court that there was no unqualified acceptance of the surrender by the lessor, this court is bound by said finding. In other words, if it can be said from a review of the whole record that ground exists for a rational conclusion that it was the understanding of the parties that notwithstanding the surrender of possession by the lessees they would still be held for whatever damages might accrue thereby to the lessor, we cannot interfere with the judgment although it may be opposed to our view as to the preponderance of the evidence.

[4] One consideration to which the trial court attached much importance is the unreasonableness of the position that the lessor would voluntarily release the lessees from further liability when the former had no assurance that he could secure another tenant. As the trial court declared:

"To my mind, it is quite apparent that there never was any mutual cancellation of this lease. Mr. Thompson wasn't mutually giving up $125 a month rent when he had no possible, or at least no definite plan for receiving that amount of rent from anybody else under another rental, * * * especially when he had a deposit of $375 to guarantee the payment of rent."

The trial court was also of the opinion that if "the lease had been actually canceled and it was understood that the deposit was to be returned that it would have been a part of the agreement." Those considerations may have been entitled to some weight in the determination of the ultimate question, but as we view it they would hardly be sufficient of themselves to justify the finding. The inference, however, is strengthened by a fair construction of the testimony of Mr. Thompson, who, in reply to the question, "Well now will you state to the court your recollection of what you said about his leaving the premises?" answered:

"Mr. Steel told me that he was unable to make his business pay, and I told him that it was indeed regrettable that he had to lease; I said that I hated to see anybody lose out on a deal that they got into; and we discussed the possibilities of utilizing the building, Mr. Steel informing me that he felt quite certain that he could get another tenant; that he had somebody in mind. I don't know who it was."

Furthermore he testified:

"He said: 'I have had a hard time, Mr. Thompson, and I want you to be as easy on me as you can.' This was in regard to the money that he had put up. And I told him that we could not do anything at this time because we did not know whether we would get it released or not. The Court: You mean not released, but the property leased again. A. Yes the property leased again, the supposition being if we could get a new tenant that would pay us as much as he was paying before the expiration of the time, that this that was put up as a deposit on the lease, that undoubtedly we would be able to give some of it back to him."

Again, in reply to the question, "What did you tell Mr. Steel?" He answered:

"That I could not do anything for him in the way of his deposit until later on, until we found out how things were coming out."

Since there was no express agreement as to the surrender, we must, of course, arrive at the intention of the parties from their conduct and statements, and it is, assuredly, not an unfair inference from what we have related that it was understood that respondent did not accept the surrender unqualifiedly and unconditionally but that he would hold appellant for the actual loss—making it as light as possible. The parties were not required to use any particular form of expression, but it is sufficient if it may be rationally gathered from the whole transaction that the parties understood that the acceptance was qualified as we have indicated.

[5] Appellant urges the importance of a notice to the lessee from the lessor that the property will be rented for the lessee's benefit, but the purpose of such notice is to furnish evidence that the lessor does not release the lessee from liability under the lease and the same result may follow from other evidence. That such conclusion may be reached from a consideration of the whole record we think there can be no serious doubt. It is to be supposed that these parties were not familiar with the intricacies of the law or the technical phrases that would be employed by a lawyer, but applying the usual tests to what was said and done, we are satisfied the finding of the court is supported.

Some suggestion is made that the material allegation of the complaint as to the surrender and acceptance was not denied in the answer, but such is not the case. The second paragraph of said answer is as follows:

"Defendant denies that on the 17th day of October, 1920, or at any other time, defendant accepted the surrender of said lease or accepted the surrender of the possession of the premises described in the complaint or re-entered or took possession of said premises or relet the same to other parties other than plaintiffs, except defendant admits that after said premises were vacated he took possession of the said premises and endeavored to lease the same to other parties as hereinafter stated."

To recapitulate: To release the lessee from liability he must surrender the property and it must be accepted unqualifiedly by the lessor. The question of whether it is so accepted is one of fact to be determined by the trial court from the whole transaction. If the possession is given up and the lessor re-enters without any agreement, express or implied, that the lessee's liability for rent is to continue, the lessee is acquitted of any further responsibility. But if it may be said from the conduct and declarations of the parties that the acceptance was conditioned that the lessee would be still liable under his contract of lease for whatever loss might be suffered by the lessor, the former may be held for the damage, notwithstanding there may be no specific admonition by the lessor to the lessee that the property will be rented for the latter's benefit. For the purpose of such notice is to furnish evidence that the lessor does not release the lessee from liability, but this condition and understanding may be shown, of course, by other evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; ANDERSON, Justice pro tem.

---

(59 Cal. App. 174)

PEOPLE'S STATE BANK v. PENELLO.

SAME v. BERTAINA. (Civ. 2454.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 26, 1922. Rehearing Denied Oct. 26, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 23, 1922.)

1. Bills and notes ⟸365(1)—Note in hands of indorsee for value in usual course before maturity and without notice not subject to equities between original parties.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 3105–3110, a note in the hands of an indorsee for value in the usual course of business before maturity, if taken without notice of any infirmity in the instrument, and without knowledge of any facts that would excite the suspicion of a prudent person, is not subject to existing equities between the original parties.

2. Bills and notes ⟸358—Indorsee of note as collateral security a holder for value and in usual course.

The indorsee of a note merely as collateral security for a pre-existing debt owing to him by his indorser is a holder for value and in the usual course of business in view of Civ. Code, § 3106.

3. Bills and notes ⟸525—Indorsee of note as collateral security held not to have notice of defects in consideration.

In an indorsee's action on notes taken as collateral security for a pre-existing debt owing by the indorser, evidence held to show that plaintiff acted in good faith and without actual or constructive knowledge of any defect in the consideration therefor.

4. Bills and notes ⟸337—Banks taking notes as collateral may presume a sufficient consideration in a fair and regular transaction in the ordinary course of business.

In transactions conducted according to the usual method obtaining in business, banks have a right to act upon the presumption in taking notes as collateral security that the notes were given for a sufficient consideration, that private transactions have been fair and regular, and that the ordinary course of business has been followed in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subds. 19–21.

5. Bills and notes ⟸330—Special form of indorsement held not to show suspicion by indorsee as to validity of consideration for note.

Where, in a bank's action on notes given as collateral security, the claim of fraud in the original consideration is set up, the fact that the form of indorsement relieved the bank of all responsibilities as to presentment, protest, and notice of dishonor held not evidence showing that the bank suspected the validity of the notes.

6. Bills and notes ⟸497(5)—To be bona fide holder indorsee need not show want of notice of fraud in consideration.

In an indorsee's action on notes taken as collateral security, wherein fraud in the original consideration was set up, an instruction that, if the fraud had been proven, the burden of proof was upon plaintiff to show that it took the notes before maturity for a valuable consideration without notice of the fraud, and in good faith, held erroneous as requiring proof that the indorsee had no notice of the fraud; the burden of showing such fact being on defendant.

7. Bills and notes ⟸430—In absence of agreement, renewal note does not extinguish original debt.

A renewal note does not extinguish the debt represented by a note for which it is given in lieu unless there is a distinct and unqualified agreement that it shall so operate.

8. Novation ⟸4—No change in parties on note shown by different place of indorsement thereon.

In action on notes given by defendants for stock in a corporation, which notes defendants claimed were procured by fraud, defendants' argument that, since the old notes were signed by the corporation, and indorsed by the principal stockholders on the back, whereas a new note which had been given the bank was "signed by all parties as makers," there was a novation, extinguishing the old notes, could not be sustained, for, although an indorsement is usually made upon the back of an instrument, the place is not essential, and a signature on the face of a bill or note may be an indorsement if so intended.

9. Pledges ⟸58(1)—Indorsee of note as collateral security may sue thereon without resorting to original debtor.

A bank holding notes as collateral security for a debt may bring suit thereon as indorsee without first resorting to the original debtor, in view of Civ. Code, § 3006.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Separate actions by the People's State Bank against B. Penello and against George Bertaina, consolidated by stipulation, and tried before the same jury. Judgment for defendants and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. N. Graybiel, of Turlock (Andrew R. Schottky, of Merced, of counsel), for appellant.

F. W. Henderson, of Merced, and Henry W. Longsdorf, of Fresno, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. By stipulation these two actions were consolidated and tried together before the same jury. The complaints were filed the same day, each seeking to recover from the defendant the aggregate amount of $1,000 upon three promissory notes, the circumstances in both cases being identical. The notes were originally given to the Hunt-Jewett-Bontz Company, a corporation of Turlock, for $1,000 worth of stock in said corporation to be issued to each defendant. After execution said notes were assigned before maturity, along with other notes of the Hunt-Jewett-Bontz Company, to plaintiff as collateral security for an indebtedness due from said company to plaintiff, said indebtedness being in excess of the aggregate amount of all the notes assigned. The execution of the notes and the assignment by the Hunt-Jewett-Bontz Company to plaintiff were not disputed, but each defendant in his answer alleged that fraud was perpetrated by the company in obtaining the notes and that plaintiff at the time of the assignment had knowledge of the fraud or of such facts as to put it upon inquiry. The jury found for the defendants, and the appeal is from the judgment entered thereon.

The defense was set forth in the answer as follows:

"That there is not now, nor was there at any time any consideration for any of said notes; that said defendant has at no time received any consideration therefor; that said plaintiff in said action took all of said notes with knowledge of said fact and with full knowledge that said defendant had received no consideration whatever for any of said notes."

In the following paragraph is set forth an account of the transaction between the agent of the Hunt-Jewett-Bontz Company and the defendants resulting in the execution of the notes. Therein certain fraudulent representations are disclosed, and the averments are sufficient to justify a finding that the instruments were without consideration and void as far as the company is concerned. Then come these allegations:

"That defendant is informed and believes, and therefore alleges upon information and belief, that said plaintiff took said notes from said company with full knowledge of all the facts herein alleged, and with full notice that said defendant had been induced to sign said notes for stock in said company and that there had not been and has not been at any time any consideration therefor. Defendant is informed and believes, and therefore alleges upon information and belief that said plaintiff has parted with no consideration for said notes and holds the same for the use and benefit of said company."

[1] For the purpose of this decision we may concede that, if the action had been brought by the original payee, the defense would be sufficient to defeat it, but the vital question herein affects the rights of an indorsee for value, in the usual course of business, of a note before maturity. The rule in such cases is well established by the authorities, and, indeed, it is embodied in the provisions of the Civil Code (sections 3105–3110) that the note in the hands of such indorsee, if taken without notice of any infirmity in the instrument and without knowledge of any facts that would excite the suspicion of a prudent person, is not subject to existing equities between the original parties. For a fuller discussion of this legal proposition we may refer to Citizens' Bank v. Stewart, 22 Cal. App. 91, 133 Pac. 337; Griswold v. Morrison (Cal. App.) 200 Pac. 62; Eames v. Crosier, 101 Cal. 260, 35 Pac. 873; Blochman Commercial & Savings Bank v. Moretti et al., 177 Cal. 256, 170 Pac. 419.

[2, 3] As to the facts, there is no dispute that the notes were assigned to plaintiff before maturity as collateral security for the payment of a debt owing by the assignor to said assignee. There is no doubt that the indorsee of a note merely as collateral security for a pre-existing debt owing to him by his indorser is a holder for value and in the usual course of business. Griswold v. Morrison, supra; section 3106, Civ. Code. We think it equally plain that the only rational inference from the evidence is that plaintiff, in taking an assignment of said note, acted in good faith and without knowledge, either actual or constructive, of any defect in the consideration therefor. To show this it will be necessary to quote extensively from the testimony of two witnesses, J. E. Weaver and R. K. Bontz, who, as admitted by respondents, "are the only persons who know what actually transpired and what was said when the notes passed into the bank's possession."

Mr. Weaver, the president of the bank, testified:

"The Hunt-Jewett-Bontz Company was indebted to the People's State Bank to the amount at that time of $10,300. I had previously, a few days before this, requested them, or informed them rather, that the notes were not in a satisfactory condition at the bank, and requested them to do something about it. Mr. Bontz came to see me, young Mr. Bontz, now, I am speaking of, and he asked what they should do; naturally, the first thing that I told him, I would like to have the notes paid; he said they were not in a position to do that then; then I told him that part of it must be paid, and would like to have the other secured in some way; then he agreed at that time that he would pay a small note, a $1,300 note—the $1,300 note previously had been a $1,500 note, but $200 had been paid—and the $4,000 and $5,000 notes; so he told me that they had a considerable amount of small notes that he would leave with me as collateral. Now this conversation was a few days prior to the 16th; so on the 16th he came in and brought these notes, these with a number of others, and he paid the $1,300 note as he agreed to do, and left this list of notes, these being among the others, and we held them there; I questioned him at the time about the ones that I did not know; some of them were notes given by people in the vicinity that I knew well, and others were not; these were among the ones that I did not know; I questioned him about the standing of these men; he informed me that they were perfectly good; he indorsed the notes in my presence."

He answered "No" to this question:

"Had you any knowledge as to the making of the notes and the conditions surrounding the making of the notes, at the time the notes were transferred to you by the Hunt-Jewett-Bontz Company."

In explaining further his desire to have the bank secured he testified:

"I never had a statement from the Hunt-Jewett-Bontz Company, but I surmised they were heavily in debt. * * * I knew the first year of their storing sweet potatoes there that they could not have helped but to have made a loss, because they stored a great many potatoes, and they rotted to a great extent. I knew the bulk of the business was not with us, and I had no means of knowing which way they were losing, as they were not doing the bulk of business with us; I knew these notes were not in a satisfactory condition, and I wanted to be a little safer."

As to the consideration for the notes, in the deposition of the witness taken by respondents appear these questions and answers:

"Q. What conversation was had as to the consideration of these notes? A. I don't know as I ever knew that, no explanation made, I cannot tell you, they were given for different things, the information was not given to us at the time. Q. What did Mr. Bontz say to you, what these notes were for; what the company had taken them for? A. I would not say; I can tell what my understanding was; some of them was given for stock of Hunt-Jewett-Bontz Company and others given for seed potatoes. There were other notes besides these, anywhere from $25 up to these larger ones, one for $500 just paid."

Again he testified:

"I have no recollection of making any inquiry about why the notes were given; I made inquiries about who the parties were and their financial standing; that is the only thing that interested me; I don't remember that I asked, because I already knew that some of these were given for seed potatoes, that he got for seed; I knew they were taking out the potatoes when he bought them; he had a contract; and that was just as far as I knew; I just happened to recognize the note in here, and I know it had been given; I was not concerned as to why these notes were given; I was only concerned whether they were negotiable notes; I knew I did not inquire, and I did not know at the time what the consideration was; I did not understand what a single one of them was for, and what I may have thought, it was wholly immaterial to me what they were given for."

Mr. Bontz testified as follows:

"Mr. Weaver called me in to speak to me relative to the notes that we had at the bank, and stated that he would like to have them rearranged in some manner, in answer to which I said I would take up the one for $1,300 and put up security on the balance. This security was notes we held in the office, some for seed and for general stock shares. As I remember it, nothing was said at the bank relative to what the notes were taken by ourselves for, and on taking them over to the bank later on they seemed perfectly agreeable to Mr. Weaver, and he took them in as security."

He further testified that Mr. Weaver inquired who Mr. Penello was, and likewise as to Mr. Bertaino, and "I recollect very distinctly that he didn't ask what the consideration was for," and did not inquire how the notes had come into his possession.

[4] In the transaction as detailed by these witnesses we find nothing startling or suspicious. As far as we are advised, the conduct of Weaver and of Bontz was entirely reasonable and what might be expected under the circumstances. It was quite natural that the creditor should want some security for the indebtedness, and there is nothing to show that Weaver had any reason to question the integrity of the debtor, or was not entirely justified in assuming that the notes were what they purported to be. We cannot doubt that the business was conducted as is usual in such cases. Assuredly, banks are warranted in assuming that their customers, with whom they have done business, and whose honesty they have no reason to suspect, have not resorted to fraud in obtaining notes which they proffer as collateral security. They have a right, in transactions conducted according to the usual method which obtains in business, to act upon the presumption that "a promissory note * * * was given * * * for a sufficient consideration," that "private transactions have been fair and regular," and "that the ordinary course of business has been followed." Section 1963, subds. 21, 19, and 20, Code Civ. Proc.

However, the able counsel for respondents contend that the following significant circumstances were indicative of a suspicion of some infirmity in the execution of said notes: (1) "Mr. Weaver knew that the preceding year had been a disastrous one for the Hunt-Jewett-Bontz Company, and had surmised that it had suffered heavy losses"; (2) he knew that "the financial condition of the company was so precarious that he was unwilling to continue the loan at that amount, or at all, unsecured; (3) he knew that the company in its desperate situation was trying to sell stock bearing a high rate of interest and carrying a preference"; (4) "since he had been solicited to purchase stock he knew what representations were being used to induce prospects to buy; (5) he had the 'impression' at the time of taking them that some of the notes received as collateral were stock subscription notes, and it is fairly inferable that he know the Penello and Bertaino notes were such"; and, finally, it is claimed that there is evidence of bad faith in the form of the indorsement by which the notes were transferred to the bank. "The bank took them under a special and peculiar form of indorsement, which relieved it of all the responsibilities as to presentment, protest and notice of dishonor which ordinarily attach to absolute ownership and which guaranteed payment by the indorser." In none of these circumstances or all combined do we see anything that suggests fraud in the inception of the notes. No reason appears therein to inspire suspicion that the company had perpetrated a gross wrong—in fact had committed a crime—in obtaining these notes. The situation would simply awaken apprehension that there might be difficulty in liquidating the indebtedness, and would prompt an effort to obtain better security.

Moreover, in these statements respondents have mistakenly portrayed the evidence in the case. For instance, in answer to a question relating to Mr. Weaver's knowledge of the sale of stock at the time of the execution of the notes, he testified:

"I cannot say whether I knew at that time or not, but I knew later that they were selling stock. Whether I knew it at that time or not, I don't know. I never knew very much about it, I can tell you that."

As to the effort made to sell Mr. Weaver stock, he testified that some man came in to sell some stock, and in answer to the question whether he bought any he replied:

"I don't buy anybody's stock; that is the rule that I have made; I would not listen to them five minutes, I don't care what the scheme is, I would not talk to this man three minutes. I said I did not know anything about their scheme, and I did not want to know."

He testified further that this occurred after he had taken over the notes.

[5] In reference to the form of indorsement appellant declares:

"That is the common indorsement that any bank requires and this particular indorsement was the indorsement printed upon the back of the notes in written stock form at the time the defendant originally signed the notes in favor of the Hunt-Jewett-Bontz Co."

And that these blank notes must have been secured from the First National Bank of Turlock, since the name of that bank appeared upon the face of said notes, and the only thing needed to complete the indorsement was the signature of said company. At any rate, there is no evidence that this so-called special form of indorsement was prepared by appellant. Moreover, we do not regard this circumstance as any evidence that appellant suspected the validity of the notes, but only as indicative of natural caution on the part of the creditor. We may add that in Commercial Security Co. v. Modesto Drug Co., 43 Cal. App. 162, 184 Pac. 964, this court held that—

"The fact that the plaintiff took a bill of sale of the notes with a guaranty from the [payee] that they would be paid, in lieu of the customary indorsement in such a case, does not constitute a circumstance sufficiently significant to justify a suspicion that the notes were not all that they on their face purported to be."

In this connection we may refer to the following instruction given by the court on request of defendants:

"In this action I charge you that in the event that you find that the fraud, if any, as alleged in the answers on file herein has been proven, that the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to show that it took the notes in question before maturity, for a valuable consideration, without notice of said fraud, if any, and in good faith."

[6] The uncontroverted evidence showed that plaintiff did take said notes before maturity, for a valuable consideration and in good faith, but notwithstanding these facts, in order to recover, this instruction directed the jury that plaintiff must go further and prove that it had no notice of the fraud. Such, as we understand it, is not the law. The true doctrine is clearly set forth in the Eames Case, supra, quoted with approval in Blockman Commercial Bank v. Moretti, supra, as follows:

"Upon proof by the defendant of fraud or illegality in the inception of the note, the burden is cast upon the indorsee to show that he is an innocent holder. This the latter may do by showing that he purchased the note before maturity, or from an innocent indorsee for value, in the usual course of business. When this is done, unless the evidence shows that the note was taken by the plaintiff under circumstances creating the presumption that he knew the facts impeaching its validity, the burden is cast upon the defendant to show, if he would defeat the plaintiff in his action, that the latter took the instrument with notice of the defendant's equities."

Since there was no evidence of any suspicious circumstances in connection with the transfer of the notes, and there could be no presumption that the indorsee knew any facts that might impeach the validity of said instruments, the burden was upon defendants to prove knowledge of said facts. The instruction was therefore erroneous. It is true that Mr. Weaver testified that he had no knowledge of any fraud or of failure of consideration, but the jury may not have regarded that as sufficient to satisfy the requirement of the instruction as to the burden of proof. As to the suggestion of respondents that appellant should have proposed the modification or limitation of said instruction as indicated in the above quotation from the opinion in the Eames Case, supra, it is sufficient to say that the appellant did request the proper instruction, which was given by the court, as follows:

"The court also instructs the jury that the burden of proof is on the defendant to show that the bank had actual knowledge of the defense made here when it acquired the notes or had actual knowledge of such fact indicating the defense that its action in taking the instrument amounted to bad faith; and the court further instructs the jury that, unless there are circumstances which incite suspicion, the purchaser is not bound to make inquiry at the time of purchase."

From the verdict, though, we conclude that the jury must have followed the instruction proposed by defendants.

We are satisfied that respondents are in error in the claim that the original indebtedness to the bank from said company was canceled, and therefore the notes held as collateral were released and discharged as security. It is true that a new note was given, but Mr. Weaver testified:

"This is a renewal, that number on there signifies a renewal note. That is the number of the former note."

He was positive and unshaken in repeated declarations that the debt was not extinguished, but the last note simply involved a different promise to pay the same indebtedness.

[7] Of course, the rule is well settled that—

"A renewal note does not extinguish the debt represented by a note for which it is given in lieu, unless there is a distinct and unqualified agreement that it shall so operate." Andrews v. First National Bank of Los Angeles (Cal. App.) 203 Pac. 156; Savings Bank v. Central Market Co., 122 Cal. 28, 54 Pac. 273; Sather Banking Co. v. Briggs Co., 138 Cal. 724, 72 Pac. 352.

[8] Respondents argue that, since the "old notes were signed by Hunt-Jewett-Bontz Company and indorsed by the principal stockholders on the back," and "the new note was signed by all parties as makers," there must have been a novation; that is, the substitution of a new obligation for the old. However, the "signature on the face of a bill or note may be an indorsement if it was so intended by the parties to the transaction. An indorsement, as the word signifies, usually is made upon the back of an instrument, but the place is held not to be essential." Shain v. Sullivan, 106 Cal. 208, 39 Pac. 606. As to the manner in which the signatures were made, Mr. Weaver testified that they indorsed these notes on the face, but ordinarily notes were indorsed on the back.

We think the only rational conclusion from the whole record is that the indebtedness was not extinguished by the new note, that said note was intended as renewed evidence of the portion of the original obligation which had not been paid, and that the notes of respondents were still held as collateral security for said amount which was greater than the face value of the security.

[9] Respondents make the point that—

"The bank cannot prevail as against these notes because the principal obligation is collectible. Hulett v. Marine Bank, 143 Mich. 219, 106 N. W. 879, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1042. It does not appear that the Hunt-Jewett-Bontz Company were not financially responsible, though they were heavily involved. They maintained a balance with appellant and honored their checks for amounts equal to those claimed from either defendant."

The case cited seems to support the contention of respondents, but it is against the weight of authority and the rule that prevails in this state.

In the case note found in 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1042, it is stated that—

"Ordinarily, the bona fide holder of a note as collateral security may enforce it without first resorting to the original debtor, the liability of the maker thereon not being conditional on the nonpayment of the principal debt, but being primary and absolute."

Many cases and authorities are therein cited to justify said statement of the rule, but it is unnecessary to mention them specifically in this opinion. In this state, it may be said, the statute imposes no such condition as a prerequisite to the collection of a note pledged as security. Section 3006, Civ. Code. The note affords concurrent security, and the object of giving it is to furnish another fund out of which the principal debt may be paid, and its payment does not depend upon any condition or contingency not expressed in the note. We may add that the Supreme Court, in Sonoma Valley Bank v. Hill, 59 Cal. 107, indorsed the doctrine announced in Robinson v. Hurley, 11 Iowa, 410, 79 Am. Dec. 497, as follows:

"After the debt falls due the pledgee under the law has his election to pursue one of three courses: First, to proceed personally against the pledgor for his debt without selling the collateral security; or, second, to file a bill in chancery and have a judicial sale under a regular decree of foreclosure; or, third, to sell without judicial process, upon giving reasonable notice to the debtor to redeem."

However, as we have seen, where the collateral consists of evidence of debt, the statute has taken away the remedy of sale, but the creditor has his option to proceed against the principal debtor or to recover on the pledged note.

We can perceive no merit in the claim that appellant was an agent for collection only of said notes. The evidence all shows that they were assigned as security for the payment of the company's indebtedness to the bank, and in such case the indorsee is regarded as a holder for value and in the usual course of business, and if the note is taken in good faith the indorsee is not subject to the equities existing between the original parties.

We think the judgment should be reversed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 196

FRANCIS v. MERKLEY. (Civ. 2457.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 27, 1922.)

1. Sales ⇐87(3)—Evidence held to show sale contract not contingent on third person's doing work of value of goods for buyer.

In an action for the value of a tractor and plows sold, evidence held to show that the contract of sale was not contingent on a third person's doing sufficient work under his contract with the buyer to entitle the third person to a credit for an amount equal to the agreed value of the machinery.

2. Sales ⇐156—Delivery to another at buyer's direction held delivery to buyer.

Where at the time a sales agreement was made buyer directed delivery of the goods to a third person, such delivery was a delivery to the buyer.

3. Sales ⇐92—Demand for return held not to amount to a rescission by consent of sale of machinery.

Seller's letter, through his attorney, to the buyer, stating that seller, being unpaid, demanded return of the machinery sold, merely amounted to an offer to acquit buyer of further liability if he would return the property, and, not being accepted, was not a rescission by consent within Civ. Code, § 1689.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by G. C. Francis against A. A. Merkley. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Arthur C. Huston, of Woodland, for appellant.

J. M. Inman, of Sacramento, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. Plaintiff brought the action to recover the value of a C. L. Best 75 H. P. tractor and one set of John Deere plows which he claims to have sold to the defendant, and he had judgment for the sum of $1,995, from which judgment the appeal has been taken.

Appellant states that—

The "appeal is taken upon the following grounds: (1) That the arrangement between plaintiff and defendant and the delivery of the memorandum was contingent on Davenport doing sufficient work under his contract with the defendant to entitle Davenport to a payment of $2,500, the agreed value of the tractor, and that the finding of the court to the contrary was against the weight of evidence; (2) that it was conclusively proved at the trial that the tractor was not delivered to the defendant, but was delivered to Davenport; (3) that the plaintiff elected to rescind the contract between himself and defendant."

[1] As to the first of these the statement by appellant is sufficient to condemn it. He claims only that the finding is against the weight of evidence, thereby implying that there was substantial evidence to support it. Indeed, in elaborating the point, he admits that "the evidence of the plaintiff, standing by itself, justified the court in finding that the memorandum signed by Merkley constituted an agreement by the plaintiff to sell and an agreement by the defendant to purchase, and that it contained the entire arrangement between the parties," but the contention is that this is contradicted by Davenport and the defendant. Appellant seems to have forgotten the well-established rule that must govern an appellate court where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence. Nevertheless, to show how utterly baseless is this first ground we may recite the important facts upon which said finding was based. It was admitted by defendant that he executed a written memorandum as follows:

"This is to certify that I have this day sold 1,000 sacks of barley to G. C. Francis at $2.50 per sack, same to be allowed on the purchase of a C. L. Best (75 H. P.) and set of John Deere plows (10 plows) on basis of $2,500 as purchase price of said implements. [Signed] A. A. Merkley."

The contention of defendant was that the real purchaser was one Davenport, who had entered into a contract with him to do certain land leveling, and who did not have the money or machinery to complete the work, or at least that the parties understood and agreed that defendant was not to pay for said machinery until Davenport was entitled to a credit for said amount on account of his work. As to this Davenport testified as follows:

"Q. And did you purchase a tractor from Mr. Francis? A. No. Q. Did you purchase this machinery from Mr. Francis at any time? A. I did not. Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Merkley in regard to the machinery? What was to become of it, or with relation to it generally? A. I was to do sufficient work for Mr. Merkley to pay $2,500 for the machinery before I owned the engine. Q. You said nothing in your—in your talk about selling this. A.

Yes. Q. To Mr. Merkley. A. About what? Q. About Mr. Merkley buying the engine from Mr. Francis. A. We talked that. Q. Did Mr. Merkley buy the engine? A. Bought the engine for me to do the work. Q. For you? A. Yes."

The plaintiff testified as follows:

"Q. You have read this agreement, of course, which I just introduced in evidence? A. Yes, sir. Q. Where was that signed? A. Signed in Mr. Merkley's office. Q. Was there at the signing of this contract, or at any time, any understanding of any kind between you and Mr. Davenport, or between you and Mr. Merkley, in regard to doing of certain work by Mr. Davenport for Mr. Merkley, as a portion of this transaction? A. No. sir; there never was. Q. Did you hear a discussion between Mr. Davenport and Mr. Merkley in reference to the taking of this machinery? A. All the discussion was—Mr. Davenport was there when the agreement was made out—Mr. Merkley agreed, before Mr. Davenport, to take the engine himself, and deliver me 1,000 sacks of barley for the engine, at $2.50 a sack. I told him to write it out; consequently it was written out. Q. Was there any portion of that conversation relating to doing of work on Mr. Davenport's part? A. Absolutely none; no, sir. Q. So far as any understanding between you and Mr. Merkley is concerned, was it all contained in that agreement? A. Yes, sir."

From the foregoing it is manifestly true, as stated by respondent, that the court was entirely justified in concluding "that the intent of all the parties was plain and fully expressed in this written contract," and the court was fully warranted in declining to write into the contract something that does not appear therein.

[2] Upon the second point it is sufficient to quote the following testimony of plaintiff:

"Q. Where is the engine now? A. So far as I know, it is over at Mr. Merkleys. Q. To whom did you deliver the engine? A. At the request of Mr. Merkley, I delivered it to Mr. Davenport. Q. When did Mr. Merkley make that request? A. At the time the agreement was made out. Q. What did he say? A. He said let Mr. Davenport have the engine."

Of course, under such circumstances, a delivery to Davenport was a delivery to the defendant.

[3] The third contention is based upon the fact that on December 30, 1920, plaintiff's attorney wrote this letter to the defendant:

"Inclosed please find copy of memorandum between yourself and G. C. Francis. He tells me that he was unable to secure this barley and he now demands return of the machinery. Kindly let me know what your disposition in the matter is."

In the first place, rescission was not pleaded by the defendant. In fact, his sole claim was that the machinery was purchased by or for Davenport, and it was the agreement that it should be paid for by him either directly or indirectly. Moreover, said demand did not amount to a rescission, nor was it a case wherein there was any ground for rescission, unless by consent (Civ. Code, § 1689), and defendant refused his consent, stating:

"This machinery was moved to my place by W. L. Davenport and should be returned by him."

Said demand amounted, at most, to an offer to acquit defendant of further liability if it would return the property. Since, however, it was not accepted, it created no rights in favor of appellant. In truth there is evidence that the parties thereafter agreed that, instead of returning the machinery, defendant would deliver the barley according to the written contract. Subsequently he declined to do this, and plaintiff properly brought the action for its value.

We discover no merit in the appeal, and the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; ANDERSON, Justice pro tem.

---

59 Cal. App. 125

KIRKPATRICK et al. v. PYE. (Civ. 4285.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 20, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 16, 1922.)

1. Sales ⟸59—Letter of box company to seller held not part of sales contract.

Where acceptance of plaintiffs' order for 220,000 lug boxes constituted a complete contract, a subsequent letter to defendant seller from a box company, contracting to supply him 300,000 lug boxes, was not made part of the contract between plaintiff and defendant by the fact that plaintiff's contract was written upon a letter head which had printed at the top "Quotations are for prompt acceptance and acceptance by mill," plaintiff's contract being an accepted order, not accepted quotation, nor by the fact that plaintiff saw fit to advance to the seller a $2,000 advance, which the box company required as an advance on its contract.

2. Sales ⟸79—Contract for delivery of lug boxes construed to mean delivery to buyer at buyer's city in 40 days.

Where Sacramento buyer contracted with seller on August 19th to purchase lug boxes at a price fixed on the Sacramento freight rate, and the entire order was to be completed within the next 40 days, the boxes being intended for use in packing fruit, and having been resold by buyer, held, that the entire order was to be delivered to Sacramento or to other place directed by plaintiff within 40 days from date of contract; Civ. Code, § 1754, as to place of delivery of personal property sold when not in existence, being inapplicable where the parties have contracted as to place of delivery.

3. Sales ⟸81(4)—Buyer not bound under contract to pay for goods in transit.

Where a contract for the sale of lug boxes was conditioned on seller's ability to secure cars for transportation, and subject to labor troubles and strikes, and the purchaser agreed that in case that any of such conditions causing him to make cancellation of any part of the order, to accept and pay for boxes made that might be in transit or were being loaded at the mill, the buyer was not bound to pay for six carloads which were in transit and not delivered in time, where the order was not canceled because of failure of transportation facilities or of labor, but for unexcused failure of seller to deliver in time.

4. Evidence ⟹448—Where terms of contract ambiguous, court may inquire as to understanding of parties.

Where the terms of a written sales contract were not entirely free from ambiguity on the question of delivery, it was permissible for the trial court, under Civ. Code, § 1649, to inquire as to the understanding of the parties.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Dudley Kinsell, Judge.

Action by Glen E. Kirkpatrick and others against B. J. Pye. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Edwin M. Otis, and McKannay & Hunt, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Ford & Johnson, of San Francisco, for respondents.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an action for money had and received. The plaintiffs did business under the name of Sacramento Brokerage Company and the defendant under the name of California-Oregon Lumber & Box Company, and hereinafter they will be thus referred to, respectively. On August 19, 1919, the Sacramento Brokerage Company contracted, in writing, to purchase from the California-Oregon Lumber & Box Company 220,000 Los Angeles lug boxes at $12 a hundred, price fixed on the Sacramento freight rate. Several days after the making of the aforesaid contract the California-Oregon Lumber & Box Company showed to plaintiff's agent a letter, wherein it was set forth that, unless a deposit of $2,000 was made by defendant with the Pacific Wirebound Box Company, which company was to manufacture boxes for the defendant, the boxes would not be made. Thereupon the Sacramento Brokerage Company, through its agent, advanced the $2,000 so demanded, and, having accepted and paid in full for all boxes received by it, made demand for the return of the $2,000 theretofore advanced. Defendant refused to repay the $2,000 deposit, contending that plaintiff had failed to accept six carloads of boxes which were a part of the 220,000 box order. Plaintiff admits that it refused to accept six carloads of boxes and justifies its action in so doing on the ground that the boxes were not delivered to plaintiff within the time prescribed in the written contract.

[1] The sole question to be determined is as to whether or not plaintiff breached its contract by failing to accept the six carloads of boxes, as it is, of course, clear that if it accepted and paid for all the boxes required by the contract, the Sacramento Brokerage Company is entitled to a return of its $2,000 accommodation advance, which is the subject of this action.

To determine whether or not this contract was breached by plaintiff requires an examination of the contract and the interpretation placed thereon by the parties before the alleged breach. It is the contention of the appellant that the entire contract between the parties consists of the written contract of August 19, 1919, and the letter from the Pacific Wirebound Box Company to the defendant, written a week later. We must first determine, then, whether this letter from a third party is a part of the contract and binding upon the plaintiff; and, second, we are required to ascertain from the contract where delivery of the boxes was to be made.

The contract of August 19, 1919, is set forth in the record as follows:

"California-Oregon Lumber & Box Company.

"Forest Products. Telephone Sutter 1028.

112 Market St., San Francisco.

"Aug. 19, 1919.

"Sacramento Brokerage, Sacramento, California.

"Quotations are for prompt acceptance and acceptance by mill. Subject to previous sale. Unless otherwise stated, all agreements on our part are contingent upon acts or other causes beyond our control. Taxes national and state on freight bills or shipments to be paid by purchaser.

"This is to acknowledge receipt of order for 220,000 Los Angeles lug boxes. These boxes to have veneer sides and bottoms and California white pine ends and cleats.

"Terms and Delivery.—Price delivered on a Sacramento freight rate to be $12 per 100 without tops. Net cash with sight draft against bill of lading. Entire order to be completed within the next forty days.

"Conditions.—Upon our ability to secure cars for transportation of same, and subject to any labor troubles or acts commonly known as strikes and so forth, over which we have no control.

"The Purchaser.—Agrees in case that any of the above conditions causing him to make cancellation of any part of order, to accept and pay for all boxes made to this order that may be in transit or being loaded at mill.

"California Oregon Lumber & Box Co.,
"B. J. Pye.
"Sacramento Brokerage Co.,
"E. L. Zeigler.

"These lugs are to be standard dimensions; and in event heads and cleats are to be loaded into one car; the same number of sides and bottoms are to be loaded into the other car, so as to arrive about the same time, as these lugs go to various loading stations."

The letter from the Pacific Wirebound Box Company to the defendant is as follows:

"Pacific Wirebound Box Co.,

San Francisco, Calif., August 26, 1919.

"Dear Sir: With reference to our several conversations on the subject of supplying 300,000 Los Angeles Lug Box Sides and Bottoms as per our letter of August 18th, file WW-3514, desire to advise that Mr. T. A. Burns called on the phone this morning with reference to the conversations you and I had had in connection with the mode of accepting the order and making shipments thereon.

"Desire to advise that we agreed that we would accept the order, subject to conditions mentioned in our letter of August 18th, and to be shipped conditioned upon our ability to secure cars, and other conditions mentioned in the concluding paragraph of our letter; terms, however, to be changed to the following:

"Net cash with draft B/L attached, instead of 10 days from invoice datings, as mentioned in our former letter; and that an advance payment of $2,000 is to be made on this acceptance of order, to cover any liabilities that might arise, with reference to materials being cut and such as might be on hand, not being shipped 40 days from date, for causes stated. (Check for $2,000 is hereby acknowledged.)

"Mr. Burns advises that as rapidly as cars are loaded and on advice of contents, check would be given us covering the total value of the shipment; it being understood that no cancellation of order would occur, unless the stock could not be put in transit within the 40 days mentioned, and for the reasons stated.

"With this understanding we are willing to proceed with the shipment of the 10 cars, totaling 300,000 sides and bottoms, green rotary cut spruce material.

"Yours truly,

"Pacific Wirebound Box Co.,
"G. X. Wendling, President.

"Mr. B. J. Pye, Mgr., California-Oregon Lumber & Box Co., 112 Market St., City."

The trial court held that the above-quoted letter of the Pacific Wirebound Box Company to the defendant was no part of the contract between the parties hereto and refused to admit it in evidence, and this ruling is contended by the appellant to be reversible error. We think there is no merit in this contention. Appellant's position is that, because the contract between him and the Sacramento Brokerage Company was written upon a letterhead which had printed at the top thereof in small type, "Quotations are for prompt acceptance and acceptance by mill," that the Sacramento Brokerage Company became bound by any conditions which appeared in the letter of Pacific Wirebound Box Company, the manufacturer.

We think this argument is without force. In the first place, the contract between the parties hereto was not in the form of a quotation and acceptance. It is, as appears upon the face, the acknowledgment of an order for boxes, accepted by the California-Oregon Lumber & Box Company. The acceptance of this order is unconditional, except for the matters mentioned in the paragraph entitled "conditions," none of which enter into the present case.

Appellant seeks to charge the Sacramento Brokerage Company with the conditions imposed upon appellant by its vendor, because one of those conditions was that no cancellation of order should be made by purchaser unless the boxes were not put in transit within 40 days. If this condition could be imposed upon the Sacramento Brokerage Company, it would have been under obligation to accept the six cars of boxes in dispute, because they were actually in transit at the expiration of the 40 days. But we think it perfectly clear that the Sacramento Brokerage Company was in no way bound by the conditions of a contract between the California-Oregon Lumber & Box Company and Pacific Wirebound Box Company, made after the contract between Sacramento Brokerage Company and California-Oregon Lumber & Box Company had been executed. The letter of the Pacific Wirebound Box Company was dated a week later than the contract between the parties; it was for 300,000 Los Angeles lug box sides and bottoms, while plaintiff's order was for but 220,000 of these boxes. There is no evidence that Sacramento Brokerage Company knew from where its vendor was to purchase the boxes, or what conditions would enter into that purchase. Suppose that after the defendant had made its contract with plaintiff and had gone into the open market to purchase the goods, it had found that it was compelled to pay twice as much for the boxes as it was to receive for them from the plaintiff. Could it be contended that the plaintiff was bound to meet this condition imposed upon his vendor? Assuredly not; and there is no more reason why it should be bound by one condition imposed upon its vendor than by another.

Appellant seeks comfort from the fact that the Sacramento Brokerage Company advanced the $2,000 demanded by the Pacific Wirebound Box Company. We fail to see the significance of this fact. The Sacramento Brokerage Company was under no legal obligation to do this. It may have considered it expedient at that time to advance the money, regardless of its legal obligation to do so, but this could not enlarge its liabilities or the appellant's rights.

We know of no legal principle which would warrant the introduction of this correspondence between defendant and its vendor, as against this plaintiff. The plaintiff placed an order with the defendant for certain boxes, which was accepted by defendant. Where defendant chose to secure the goods contracted to be sold, or upon what terms was a matter of unconcern to plaintiff. The refusal of the trial court to admit this communication in evidence was, therefore, proper.

[2] A more difficult question confronts us in interpreting the contract upon the question of delivery. The construction given to the contract by the trial court was that the entire order was to be delivered to Sacramento or to such other place as plaintiff should direct, within 40 days from date of contract. We think this is a fair interpretation of the language of the contract. It would seem also to be the reasonable construction of the contract, and the one acted upon by the parties in their dealings thereunder. The boxes were to be used in packing fruit and had been resold by the Sacramento Brokerage Company. For such a use, a delay of a day or two even might be of vital importance. When the plaintiff entered into its contract with the defendant it did not know, so far as the record discloses, where the defendant would secure the boxes. It is unreasonable to suppose that plaintiff would have contracted to accept delivery of the boxes at a place the location of which was unknown to plaintiff at the time of making the contract. Plaintiff contracted to have the boxes delivered during the fruit season. To take the extreme illustration advanced by respondent, if appellant's contention be correct, it might have ordered the boxes from a mill in China, and plaintiff would have received delivery when the goods were loaded on the boats, though they arrived weeks after the fruit season, and at a time when they would have been valueless to plaintiff. The plaintiff had contracted to resell these boxes and had been directing shipments directly to its customers. This course of dealing was known to the defendant, and it seems reasonable to suppose that the parties contracted with reference thereto. We think that the construction placed upon the contract by the trial court was proper under all the circumstances appearing in the record.

[3] Another contention of appellant is that the following provision of the contract applies to the present situation:

"The purchaser agrees in case that any of the above conditions causing him to make cancellation of any part of order, to accept and pay for all boxes made to this order that may be in transit or being loaded at mill."

It is contended that because of this provision, the plaintiff was bound to pay for the six carloads which were in transit, even though they had not been delivered in time to conform to the provisions of the contract. A glance at the contract between the parties, heretofore set out, is convincing of the fact that the paragraph relied upon by appellant has reference only to the paragraph immediately preceding it, wherein it is provided that the delivery is conditioned upon ability to secure cars for transportation and subject to any labor troubles or acts commonly known as strikes and so forth. It is obvious from a reading of the contract that it was intended in the event the defendant was excused from further performance because of strikes or lack of transportation facilities, the plaintiff should, nevertheless, be compelled to pay for all boxes then in transit or being loaded at the mill. Further than this, California-Oregon Lumber & Box Company was not protected. The order was not canceled because of failure of transportation facilities or of labor. It was canceled by plaintiff because of failure to deliver in the time provided by the contract, and no excuse is given in the record for the failure to deliver in time. The boxes were purchased for resale to fruit growers. Plaintiff had resold them and was forced to purchase elsewhere to fill its orders. Defendant was fully aware of all the surrounding circumstances, and telegrams between the parties advised defendant of the urgent need for the boxes.

Appellant contends for the application of section 1754 of the Civil Code, providing that where personal property is sold which is not in existence, it is deliverable at the place where it is produced. The application of this section would cause a reversal of the judgment, because, as stated, it was admitted that the goods had been loaded at the mills within the time limited in the contract. This matter is, of course, involved in our discussion of the interpretation which the trial court placed upon the contract with reference to its provisions for delivery. Section 1754, Civil Code, obviously has no application if the parties have contracted with reference to the place of delivery.

[4] In deference to the appellant's position upon this matter, it must be admitted that the contract is not entirely free from ambiguity upon the question of delivery, and for this reason it was permissible for the trial court to apply section 1649 of the Civil Code and inquire as to the understanding of the parties. We have already discussed the matters appearing in the record tending to support the view of the trial court, and one of the most convincing of such matters is the testimony of the appellant, himself, as follows:

"Q. Suppose that no diverting order had ever been made by Mr. Ziegler's company [the respondents] under the terms of this contract, where would the cars have been delivered? A. They would have gone to Sacramento. They would still have been sold under the Sacramento freight rate."

To recapitulate, then, we think that in the light of the surrounding circumstances appearing in the record and the interpretation given to the contract by the parties themselves in their dealings thereunder, the trial court correctly interpreted the contract between the parties as calling for delivery at Sacramento or at such place as should be designated by Sacramento Brokerage Company. As thus interpreted, defendant was in default in the delivery of the last six cars and plaintiff was within its rights in refusing to accept same.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 251

In re STEVENS. (Civ. 3911.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Sept. 30, 1922.)

1. Attorney and client ⟸61—District Court of Appeal on application for reinstatement by disbarred attorney convicted of crime in the federal court will consider the evidence adduced.

Where an attorney was disbarred because of his conviction in the federal court, the District Court of Appeal on application for reinstatement, opposed by the Bar Association on the ground that the record made on the trial shows him to be devoid of that fundamental moral perception and personal integrity required of attorneys, will examine the evidence adduced during his trial in the federal court.

2. Attorney and client ⟸61—Proof of reform of attorney, disbarred for extorting money from men frequenting houses of prostitution, must be overwhelming to warrant reinstatement.

Where an attorney was disbarred because of conviction in the federal court of conspiracy to use the United States mail to defraud, on evidence showing that the attorney had procured from prostitutes the names of men who had frequented house of prostitution, and had tried to extort money from such men by threatening to expose them, the past misdeeds of such attorney will not preclude District Court of Appeal from granting his application for reinstatement on theory that he is necessarily devoid of that fundamental moral perception and personal integrity required of an attorney, but proof of reform to warrant reinstatement must be overwhelming.

3. Attorney and client ⟸61—Evidence of reform of disbarred attorney held not sufficient to warrant reinstatement.

In such case, evidence held not sufficiently overwhelming to warrant reinstatement.

In the matter of the application of W. H. Stevens for reinstatement as an attorney at law. Application denied.

Gates & Randles, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Oscar Lawler, of Los Angeles, for respondent Los Angeles Bar Association.

WORKS, J. The following is a chronology of the events which are principally involved in the present application:

On January 10, 1911, W. H. Stevens was admitted to the bar of California, although he never engaged in the practice of law until March 1, 1912; on November 18, 1913, he was indicted by a federal grand jury upon a charge of conspiracy to use the United States mails in a scheme to defraud; on September 7, 1915, having been tried and convicted under the indictment, he was sentenced to imprisonment for 6 months and to pay a fine of $2,500; on June 14, 1917, he was disbarred by an order of the District Court of Appeal of this district because of his conviction of the charge mentioned; on December 8, 1917, he completed his term of imprisonment under the conviction, and was discharged from confinement; since his discharge he has been in the employ, in various capacities, of the Los Angeles Railway Corporation, a street railway company, his service in each capacity commencing on the date specified below: February 6, 1918, as conductor; October 28, 1919, as inspector; April 1, 1920, as supervisor, apparently acting under that particular employment for nearly a year in the office of the manager of service in the performance of special work; September 20, 1921, on special work in the main office of the company. Meanwhile, on October 31, 1921, he was pardoned by President Woodrow Wilson by an instrument reciting the fact of the conviction above mentioned, and stating that the pardon was granted "for the purpose of restoring his civil rights"; and on March 8, 1922, his petition in the present proceeding was filed.

[1] As petitioner was disbarred because of his conviction in the federal court of the crime with the commission of which he was there charged, it is not only proper, but it is necessary, in considering this application for his reinstatement, to examine the evidence adduced upon his trial in that tribunal; particularly as the respondent bar association opposes the reinstatement on the ground that the record made on the trial "shows that said Stevens is devoid of that fundamental moral perception and personal integrity to which the public and the courts are entitled on the part of every person who would pursue the practice of the legal profession."

This proceeding is of such grave import, considering its effect upon the future welfare of petitioner, upon the standing of the legal profession, and upon the rights of the general public, that we have not been content to read merely the portions of the record of the trial which were pointed out to us at the oral argument, but we have carefully and circumspectly perused the entire record in so far as it may by any possibility bear upon the question which is now of interest to us. After that labor, and also after a perusal of the portions which have been submitted to us of the record made in another trial, we state the facts as overwhelmingly established by the testimony of various witnesses, substantially corroborating each other, as against the practically unsupported statements and denials of petitioner, who, on his trial in the federal court, took the witness stand in his own behalf:

Petitioner had been appointed a guardian ad litem to represent a defendant in a divorce case, the cause having been begun by the husband, and the wife being a minor. Through his acquaintance with this young woman, thus commenced, petitioner, after the exercise of much diligence in the premises, became also acquainted with three or four other girls, who, like the defendant in the divorce suit, had theretofore engaged in the indiscriminate practice of sexual intercourse, either for hire or for pleasure. The defendant in the divorce case and some of the other girls had been inmates of an assignation house in Los Angeles known as the Jonquil Apartments. From these girls, including his ward, petitioner procured the names of several men said by them to have been frequenters of the house. His activities in all these matters were spurred by the statement, first made to him by the ward, that several of these men, not content with the usual methods of carnal enjoyment, had indulged with the girls in certain unnatural and unmentionable sex practices. From one of the girls, however, who had not been a resident of the Jonquil, petitioner procured the name of the man asserted by her first to have made a successful attack upon her virtue in the ordinary manner. Some of the men whose names were now in the possession of petitioner were people of note in the communities in which they respectively lived. Petitioner became at once alert to get into personal touch with these men, making trips to Santa Ana, Monrovia, and El Centro for the purpose. On the journeys to the first and last named places he was accompanied by his ward, and, in addition to paying his own traveling and hotel expenses, he advanced hers. Not only did he go upon these quests to the places named, but petitioner called upon men in Los Angeles. Upon various of these individuals, in Los Angeles and out, he made demands for money. All but one of them refused to accede to the demands, that one paying to petitioner the sum of $2,500. Petitioner asserted at his trial in the federal court that in dealing with the men he was attempting merely to settle out of court claims which his clients had against them for damages because of the undermining of their health by the unnatural practices to which they had been subjected, except that one of the claims was for damages for the alleged rape of the girl who had not been an inmate of the Jonquil. The charge against petitioner in the federal court was based upon letters written to some of the men concerning the alleged claims against them, and the jury which tried the cause refused to believe petitioner's assertion as to the innocent character of his negotiations, including, in part, those letters. His conviction resulted, as already recited.

After reading the record which was made before the jury we cannot avoid concurring in the conclusion reached by that body. We are abundantly satisfied that petitioner studiously and deliberately embarked in an endeavor, which he pursued both diligently and relentlessly, to wrest large sums of money from these men by playing upon their fear of exposure and disgrace. It is true that he filed suits for damages against those who did not accede to his demands for a "settlement" of the alleged claims against them, but even this circumstance turns against him when it is pointed out that none of the suits were pressed and that they were all speedily dismissed.

There is yet another chapter in the story of petitioner's misdeeds. Not content with his piratical raid upon the purse of the individual through whose fears he had procured the payment of the sum of $2,500, he reported to his clients that the sum paid to him was $1,000. The truth as to this matter was not ascertained by them until long afterward.

[2] Notwithstanding the revolting character of the conduct of petitioner throughout this chain of events, we cannot join in the view of respondent that his past misdeeds show that he still is necessarily "devoid of that fundamental moral perception and personal integrity" which should undoubtedly reside in every practitioner at the bar. To adopt that theory would be to depart not only from the teachings of human experience, but from the principles upon which are based the conduct and maintenance of the punitive and corrective institutions of mankind. It is not surpassing the bounds of truth to say that civilization itself is devoted to the view that no criminal is so steeped in his crimes, no wrongdoer is so debased, that he may not be made to feel the purifying and elevating effects of reformation and regeneration. We cannot, in so far as any judgment we might pronounce could possibly have that effect, place petitioner outside the pale thus erected. We do, however, feel the pressure of the evident truth that one who has been guilty of the acts which he has committed should not be reinstated in the ranks of the legal profession except upon the most clear and convincing, nay, we will say upon overwhelming, proof of reform—proof which we could with confidence lay before the world in justification of a judgment again installing him in the profession which he has so flagrantly disgraced.

The statement just made has a particular application to the present case. The record of the trial in the federal court shows that extended newspaper publicity had already been given to the Jonquil Apartment affair in connection with a criminal cause recently theretofore tried in the state court. This trial was under an indictment of a prominent and wealthy man for contributing to the delinquency of one of the "Jonquil girls," who was also one of the clients of petitioner in his endeavor to collect "damages" from the men whose names he had procured in the manner above stated. We cannot go outside the record made in this proceeding, but we think we are justified in assuming that the trial of petitioner in the federal court, following upon the trial in the state court, was given as great attention in the daily press as was the latter, doubtless being regarded as an added and intriguing chapter in an already celebrated newspaper story. We have no doubt that the frailties and misdeeds of petitioner were thus thoroughly advertised to the public. We have no doubt, further, that the public, remembering the offenses of petitioner, would be shocked at his restoration to the legal profession except upon such a complete and conclusive showing of reform on his part as would convince the general mind that, if reinstated, he would discharge his every duty as a lawyer with an unswerving fidelity. Such considerations must be of controlling moment in every such proceeding as this. Not only must members of the profession be people of integrity, but the public must know, if possible, that they are people of integrity. Not only must the bar be entitled to the respect and confidence of the public, but it must, if possible, actually enjoy that respect and confidence. At least, such is the goal which every lawyer and every judge should strive to aid the profession to reach. Having these precepts in mind, we could not reinstate any disbarred attorney at law if the general public could entertain any just doubt, upon the showing of reformation and regeneration made by him, whether the standing of the profession were not lowered by his return to its ranks.

With these views in mind, let us examine the showing made by petitioner in the present proceeding. We first notice a paper in the following form:

"To Whom it May Concern: We, the undersigned, employees of the Los Angeles Railway Corporation, and we and each of us, personally knowing W. H. Stevens of Los Angeles, Cal., and Stevens having worked as a conductor, an inspector and a supervisor with us, have had an opportunity of observing and have observed the conduct of said W. H. Stevens. That we verily believe he is honest, industrious, conscientious and of good moral character, and we verily believe that if he were reinstated as a member of the bar of the State of California, that it would be for the best interests of all concerned."

This document bears the signatures of 601 persons, but we can see no force in it as affecting the question now before us, except the force of numbers, and that, it must appear at once, alone amounts to nothing. Looking to the substance of the paper which has been so generously signed, we cannot see that we are to be aided by it. If we grant for the time being that there could be anything in the observed conduct of petitioner as "a conductor, an inspector, and a supervisor" which would enable any single and unremitting scrutinizer of that conduct to determine from it whether he would make an honest and a reliable lawyer—a point, however, which we reserve for further mention—we cannot perceive how this array of 600 persons could have had petitioner so closely under their observation as to enable them, en masse, and with no showing of fact except this general statement en masse, to resolve that question. Recognizing the laudable willingness of the signers of the paper to help a fellow employee out of difficulty, and with great respect for their honesty of purpose in appending their names to the document, we can ascribe no weight to the presentment made by it.

The next branch of the showing which we shall notice is made up of individual letters from various officers or employees of the Los Angeles Railway Corporation. These agents of the company, taking their letters in the order in which they are presented to us, were the manager of transportation, the general claim agent, chief special agent, superintendent of division 4, foreman of division 4, superintendent of schedules, superintendent of employment, assistant chief instructor, director of public relations, director of traffic, and superintendent of operation. Aside from these communications, there are before us two letters on the paper of the railway company, signed by individuals whose relationship to the corporation does not appear. It is certified in each of this parcel of letters, taking them generally, for they are couched in different terms, that petitioner's work for the company has been pursued in an honest and diligent manner, and that he is one of the trusted employees of the corporation. It is somewhat difficult to determine, being guided alone by the official designations following the signatures to these letters, exactly what has been the relationship between petitioner and the various writers of them; but we shall assume that some of the letters, at least, come from those who have been his superiors, who have been in close touch with his work, and who are therefore best qualified to certify to the nature of it and to the honesty and fidelity with which it has been performed. We are thus brought directly to the question whether petitioner's several employments with the Los Angeles Railway Corporation have put him to the test necessary to purge him of the taint of his old wrongdoing and to satisfy us and the public generally that he would make a faithful and trustworthy practitioner at the bar. Are we shown that he has been tried in the fire and has not been found wanting? These questions must be answered with due regard to the nature of the offenses which resulted in his expulsion from the profession. The petitioner's employments with the railway may be set in great contrast with the position he once occupied as a lawyer, and which he would reassume if he were reinstated. There is nothing in the record here to show that he has been subjected to any particular temptation while an employee of the corporation. Lawyers are continually under great temptations, temptations to which, unfortunately, they occasionally yield, as petitioner once yielded. While with the company petitioner has always been at work under the direction, control, and supervision of others. This circumstance naturally would aid him to withstand temptation, if in truth temptation could ever have assailed him in those employments. A lawyer is his own master, and encounters frequent opportunity to prey upon his clients with but little fear of detection and punishment. In his recent employments we are not shown that petitioner has handled considerable sums of money. A lawyer is often called upon to safeguard large amounts which come into his possession, and often under his almost unbridled control. Petitioner in his positions with the company could never have become possessed of such an array of facts, valuable to the unprincipled mind, as he marshalled with diligence in the "Jonquil affair." Facts damaging to the peace of mind of individuals come almost daily into the hands of lawyers, and if petitioner were reinstated the natural consequence would follow that he might early in his practice become the recipient of information which could be used as he used his knowledge concerning the men alleged to have frequented the Jonquil. We need pursue the contrast no further. We cannot read in the letters of these railway officials and employees anything to show that, if petitioner were again placed in the position in which he found himself so soon after his admission to the bar, he might not again fall as far as he fell then.

The remainder of the showing made by petitioner consists of four affidavits from members of the Los Angeles bar, one from a justice of the peace of Los Angeles township, and one from a police judge in the city of Los Angeles. There is also a letter from the assistant United States attorney who conducted the prosecution of petitioner in the federal court. This letter does not show, nor do any of the affidavits show, any of the activities of petitioner except such as are incident to his various positions with the Los Angeles Railway Corporation. This part of the showing, although the papers constituting it come from those having a keener perception of the temptations to which a member of the bar is subjected than does the layman, must be placed so far as their effect is concerned in the same category with the branches of the showing with which we have already dealt. These lawyers and judges give us no facts upon which we can be reasonably certain that, if petitioner were reinstated, he would be faithful to the sacred trust which is reposed in every attorney at law.

[3] We cannot close this opinion without congratulating petitioner upon the standing which he has acquired with the representatives of the corporation in the employ of which he has remained for the past three years and a half, and upon the confidence with which his fellow employees regard him. We hope he may rise yet higher in the company's line of service, and that he may come to occupy yet higher posts in its employ, or in any other walks in life which he may choose to follow. Let us say, also, that such strictures as we have passed upon his character and conduct relate only to the time when he committed the acts which led to his disbarment. We do not say that he is not now qualified to be reinstated in his place at the bar. We say only that the showing made in his behalf fails to convince us that he is so qualified.

The petition is denied.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 196

TAHOE PINES CO. et al. v. NEWMAN.
(Civ. 4276.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Sept. 27, 1922.)

1. Specific performance ⟸121(11)—Evidence held to sustain judgment that vendors performed all the conditions of the contract.

In an action for specific performance of a contract to purchase land providing that the vendor agrees to pay taxes at the present assessed value thereof until whole purchase money is fully paid, the fact that vendor paid the taxes for the first year only was not grounds for reversing the judgment that plaintiffs performed all the conditions of the contract, where there was evidence that it was the intention of the parties that the vendor was to pay the taxes only while the property was assessed as acreage and that defendant paid the taxes without protest when the assessment was apportioned to the several lots and blocks.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⟸37(4)—Statement by vendor that he was convinced that the property could be resold at a profit was mere opinion.

A statement by plaintiff vendors that, considering the way in which the land was selling, they were convinced that the property sold to defendant could be resold within a year at a profit, when standing alone, amounted to no more than a mere expression of opinion and was not sufficient to avoid the contract for fraud.

3. Specific performance ⟸92(2)—Vendor may enforce contract where he acquired land after executing the contract.

In an action for specific performance of a contract to purchase land, evidence that vendor, at the time of executing the contract, had an agreement to purchase the land in question and afterwards did purchase it, was sufficient to establish ability on his part to sell the land and convey title to the same.

4. Limitation of actions ⟸51(2) — Vendor may sue at law for each installment when due or sue in equity for specific performance.

Where a contract for the sale of land provides that the purchase money is to be paid in installments, the vendor, upon default in the payments, may sue at law for each installment when due or sue in equity for specific performance after the last installment is due, at which time the right of action in equity accrued for applying the statute of limitations.

5. Limitation of actions ⟸51(2)—Action does not accrue until last installment is due.

The four-year limitation for bringing an action for installments due under a contract for the sale of land does not bar an action for specific performance commenced within four years after the last installment was due, as the cause of action did not accrue until the last installment was due.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Bernard J. Flood, Judge.

Action by the Tahoe Pines Company and another against George Newman. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Edgar C. Levey, of San Francisco, for appellant.

John Breuner, Jr., and Breuner & Erb, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. This is a suit in equity brought by the plaintiffs as vendors to specifically enforce the provisions of a contract relating to the sale of certain real property. The contract sued upon was entered into between the defendant and Ferguson-Breuner Company, a copartnership, which copartnership was subsequently incorporated under the same name. At the time the transaction was had the copartnership did not have title to the property, but it was subsequently acquired by plaintiff Tahoe Pines Company, which latter corporation was formed shortly thereafter for the purpose of acquiring title to the property, and it was ready and willing at all times to convey title to plaintiff and other purchasers, hereinafter referred to, in conformity with the terms of their contract. The full purchase price of the land in question was the sum of $2,500. As required by the terms of the agreement, defendant deposited $250 on the execution thereof, and paid $40 in monthly installments thereafter for a period of time until his total payments amounted to the sum of $1,430, when he refused to make any further payments, claiming that the plaintiffs had neglected to pay the taxes on the property as required by the contract of sale. Claim is also made that defendant's consent to the contract was obtained through misrepresentation and fraud. The contract was entered into on September 2, 1909, and defendant, as a further defense, set up that the monthly installments commencing with the 2d day of January, 1912, to and including the 2d day of January, 1914, were barred by the provisions of section 337, subd. 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Trial was had before the court without a jury, and judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiffs for the full sum of $1,070, the unpaid balance of the purchase price, as prayed for, and defendant appeals.

From the evidence it appears that the Ferguson-Breuner Company had acquired a tract of land on the shores of Lake Tahoe for the purposes of subdivision. The entire tract consisted of some 200 acres. This company subdivided the tract into blocks and lots, and the land here in dispute consisted of one of such blocks which was divided into eight lots. At the time the contract in question was entered into, the entire tract was assessed as a whole. On account of the different character and value of the lots and blocks as subdivided, it was deemed impossible for the parties to determine what proportion of the tax defendant should be required to pay while the tract was assessed as acreage. Accordingly, the parties inserted a clause in their contract with reference to payment of taxes. Such clause reads as follows:

"Said first party (Ferguson Breuner Company) agrees to pay taxes on said property at the present assessed value thereof, until whole purchase money is fully paid."

[1] It is first contended as ground for reversal that this condition of the contract was breached by plaintiffs, and that the evidence conclusively shows that with the exception of those levied for the year 1909 the entire taxes assessed against the property were paid by defendant, and that no part was assessed or paid by plaintiffs, for which reason it is claimed the judgment that plaintiffs performed all the conditions of their contract finds no support in the evidence. We see no force in this contention.

[2] It is manifest from the record that it was the intention of the parties that the vendor was to pay the taxes only while the property was assessed as acreage. At the time of the execution of the contract the land was so assessed. Thereafter and when the assessment was apportioned to the several lots and blocks, defendant paid the taxes willingly and without objection or protest, and never requested plaintiffs so to do. The evidence shows that defendant and other purchasers were fully informed upon this subject, and, further, that all parties were in accord with this arrangement. Equally without merit is the claim that the contract was induced by fraud and misrepresentation. In this connection it is claimed by appellant that at the time he agreed to buy the property a printed prospectus was shown to him wherein sites for a clubhouse and hotel were set out, and representations were made that an extensive water system would be installed upon the land, and that a wharf would be built and streets constructed, and the hotel and clubhouse would be erected all within a year from the date of the agreement of purchase. It is further claimed that defendant was assured that the vendor could dispose of a portion of the property, and that from the sale of one-half of it obtain more than a sufficient amount to pay for the whole. Plaintiffs denied that any such representations had ever been made. It is admitted that defendant was informed that considering the way in which the land was selling that the vendor was convinced it could be resold within a year at a profit. But standing alone this amounted to no more than a mere expression of opinion. The entire evidence upon this subject shows that the price paid for the land was, as plaintiffs allege, just and equitable, and fully sustains the findings of the trial court upon this subject, and it further shows that plaintiffs did not make the alleged fraudulent representations which it is claimed induced defendant to enter into the agreement.

[3-5] Appellant further claims that the evidence fails to establish ability on the part of Ferguson-Breuner Company to originally contract to sell the land or to convey title to the same. The evidence shows that at the time the contract was made the copartnership had an agreement to purchase the tract in question. It was therefore in a position to contract with other parties for its sale. Wolff v. Cloyne, 156 Cal. 746, 106 Pac. 104. The case does not present any question of doubtful or defective title. It is not necessary that a vendor should be the absolute owner of property at the date of an agreement of sale. An equitable estate in the land or a right to become its owner is the subject of sale, and whenever one is so situated that he can acquire the title thereto, he is in a position to make a valid agreement with reference to the property. Easton v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 307, 27 Pac. 280, 25 Am. St. Rep. 123. Moreover, the title to the land in question was acquired by plaintiff Tahoe Pines Company, which took over the business of the partnership and the corporation for the benefit of all purchasers in the tract, and plaintiffs were at all times in a position to convey title. And finally, with reference to the claim that certain of the installments are barred by limitation of time: It is claimed that in an action at law on an obligation nonequitable in character, to pay a certain sum in installments, that the statute of limitations begins to run upon each installment upon the date it is due. Whether this be true or not is of no consequence, as the present action is one in equity to compel specific performance, and is in no sense an action at law to recover the purchase price or certain installments thereof. While the vendors might have commenced an action at law for the recovery of each installment when due, they were not bound to do so. They had the option to pursue in the alternative either a legal or equitable remedy. It is a well-established and familar doctrine of equity that the right to specific performance, if it exists at all, is, and necessarily must be, mutual. The remedy must be alike attainable by both parties to the agreement. This is a distinctive feature of the doctrine. Pomeroy on Contracts, § 6. Where, therefore, in a contract for the sale of land, since the purchaser may, by a suit in equity, compel the execution and delivery of a deed, the vendor by a similar suit may also enforce the undertaking of the vendee, although perhaps the substantial part of the relief sought amounts to nothing more than a liability on the part of such vendee to pay a certain sum of money. The requisite of mutuality includes both a mutuality of legal rights and a mutuality in equitable remedies. Assuming, therefore, that the four-year limitation is applicable, we fail to see how the statute can be successfully invoked. The present action was filed within four years from the date the last installment was due. The cause of action upon which plaintiff has elected to stand did not accrue until that time. In a contract of the character here involved where the purchase money is to be paid in installments, neither party to the contract can maintain an action for specific performance until the last payment is due. The vendor is prevented because of the fact that the installments are not due, and the vendee for the reason that until he has made full payment he is not in a condition to demand a conveyance. Jones v. Boyd, 80 N. C. 258. Prior to this period, therefore, the cause of action upon which plaintiff relies did not accrue, and, this being so, such a suit brought before that time would have been premature. Troy v. Clarke, 30 Cal. 420; May v. Sullivan, 37 Miss. 541.

For the reasons given the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; ST. SURE, Justice pro tem.

190 Cal. 60

BREWER et al. v. RAILROAD COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA. (L. A. 6716.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 10, 1922. Rehearing Denied Dec. 8, 1922.)

1. Waters and water courses ⟸257(1)—Commission's order not disturbed for exclusion of evidence, unless amounting to denial of due process ousting it of jurisdiction.

In view of limited power of review, order of the Railroad Commission fixing rates to be charged by a water company, cannot be set aside on certiorari because of error in rulings on evidence, unless constituting an entire exclusion of admissible evidence on one side touching the essential issue, amounting to a denial of due process of law, and so ousting the Commission of jurisdiction, which cannot be said to be the case where the main substance of that evidence was before the Commission in the form of record of evidence presented in earlier proceedings involving the same issues.

2. Waters and water courses ⟸232—Finding of dedication to public use not authorized by declarations of appropriators and articles of incorporation.

Declarations of the original appropriators of the waters of a river and of the corporation formed by them as to the purposes of such appropriation, and the statement in the articles of incorporation of the corporation's purposes, are insufficient in themselves to justify a finding that the waters were to be devoted to a public use or that the corporation was a public utility.

3. Waters and water courses ⟸232 — Acts pursuant to declared purposes of appropriators held to justify finding of dedication to public use.

Acts of corporation formed by appropriators of waters pursuant to and consistent with their declared purposes, together with stipulation of original contracts that water rights were to be subject to "legal rates," held to justify finding that from the first the waters had been dedicated to a public purpose, and that the corporation was a public utility.

4. Waters and water courses ⟸232—Company cannot, without consent of all beneficiaries, revoke dedication to public use.

A water company, having dedicated its water to a public use, cannot revoke the dedication and convert its water into a private use, without the consent of all the beneficiaries of the use.

5. Estoppel ⟸68(1)—Users of water held by their acquiescence in orders of Commission fixing rates to have waived right to claim company was not public utility.

Users of water having submitted themselves and their water rights to jurisdiction of the Railroad Commission, and without attempt to review, paid rates fixed by the Commission on the theory of the company being a public utility, waived right to claim, in a subsequent proceeding before the Commission, that the company was not such a utility, and to stand on their contracts.

In Bank.

Application by John C. Brewer and others for writ of certiorari, to review orders of the Railroad Commission of the State of California fixing water rates. Application denied.

Jesse George and Clarence S. Preston, both of San Diego, for petitioners.

C. C. Crouch, of San Diego, Harry A. Encell, of San Francisco, and Sweet, Stearns & Forward, of San Diego, for Cuyamaca Water Co.

Hugh Gordon and William W. Clary, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Justice pro tem. This is an application of John C. Brewer and a large number of other users of the water of the Cuyamaca Water Company for a writ of review, wherein it is sought to have reviewed and annulled certain orders of the Railroad Commission, affecting the rates paid and to be paid by said applicants for the use of water of the said company upon their respective premises. The immediate subjects of review are three separate proceedings instituted before the Commission affecting such rates, but which were ordered by the Commission to be heard together upon the same evidence as to each proceeding. These were: First, a proceeding instituted April 15, 1919, by the Cuyamaca Water Company, a copartnership maintaining a water system in the county of San Diego for distribution of water for agricultural and domestic uses, seeking a general increase in the water rates of said company; second, a proceeding instituted shortly thereafter by the same applicant for an emergency surcharge upon its rates then in effect; third, a proceeding instituted by Robert Ross et al., embracing a considerable number of the petitioners herein who were domestic users of water of said copartnership, charging unjust and discriminatory rates and poor service, and asking for a readjustment of water rates. Upon the grouping and hearing of these three proceedings the Commission took certain testimony, refused to take or consider certain other testimony, and finally made the several orders sought to be reviewed herein. In order to rightly understand and pass upon the questions presented herein, it will necessary to give a brief recital of the history of the Cuyamaca Water Company and its predecessor, the San Diego Flume Company, and of the prior proceedings before the Railroad Commission bearing on the matters herein subjected to review.

The source of the water supply of the water system now owned and operated by the Cuyamaca Water Company is the San Diego river, which rises in the mountains to the northeast of the city of San Diego and, flowing in a general southwesterly direction, enters the ocean just north of said city. In its course it passes through the El Cajon Valley, which embraces an extensive body of agricultural land. This valley was part of an old Mexican grant, known as Rancho El Cajon, which embraced many thousand acres of land, and which came to be partitioned, in the year 1874, into 20 separate parcels. In the year 1885, Henry B. Lockwood and ten other persons owned in severalty practically all of the best agricultural lands in the El Cajon Valley, which lands, however, had remained undeveloped for want of water, without which they were of small value. In the latter year W. E. Robinson, T. S. Van Dyke, and S. H. Marlette united in filing upon and appropriating 21,000 inches of the waters of the San Diego river, being practically its entire ordinary flow. The notices of appropriation stated "that the places where said water is intended to be used are as follows: The lands and rancho El Cajon, on the mesa between El Cajon and the city of San Diego, and the city of San Diego." In order to carry into effect these purposes by means of the proper canals, ditches, etc., Robinson and his associates entered into an agreement with said landowners in the El Cajon Valley, wherein the former agreed to construct the necessary diversion and irrigation system to bring said waters to said and other lands, in consideration of these landowners transferring to them all of their rights as riparian owners in and to the waters of the San Diego river and also granting to them the necessary rights of way over their respective parcels of land for canals, pipe lines, etc. This agreement contained the following recitals:

"Whereas, W. E. Robinson and associates are about to establish and provide for a system of waterworks for the purpose of providing water with which to irrigate the lands of the Cajon Valley, part of the lands known as the Ex-Mission of San Diego, and also to provide water for distribution and sale in the city of San Diego (all in the county of San Diego), state of California; and for that purpose will on or before the 1st day of January, 1886, commence actual operations for the construction of necessary dams, aqueducts or pipe lines to impound and secure the waters of the San Diego river at a point east of the said Cajon ranch, and to conduct said water to and upon the lands and places aforesaid as far south as the gate entering L. Chase's orchard, and will thereafter prosecute their said business with reasonable diligence and without unnecessary delay until it is brought upon and ready for sale and distribution in the Cajon Valley, as aforesaid, and thereafter continue their said works so as to bring the surplus of the water so impounded and secured to and upon the mission land aforesaid and to said city of San Diego for distribution therein."

Upon the execution of this agreement, Robinson and his associates organized a corporation known as the "San Diego Flume Company," with a capitalization of $1,000,000, to which they transferred all of their rights acquired under said appropriation and also said agreement, receiving, as the consideration therefor, capital stock of the said corporation to the amount of $450,000 par value. The original articles of incorporation of the San Diego Flume Company stated:

"That the purposes for which it is formed are to appropriate, divert, and take water from the San Diego river and other streams in the county of San Diego, Cal., and convey and sell the same for irrigation, domestic use, mechanical purposes, and use by the city of San Diego and other cities and towns in said county; to build and maintain dams, reservoirs, and any kind of aqueduct or flume; to reclaim and improve by supplying with water, dry lands in said county, and to that end to acquire, hold and convey real estate."

The San Diego Flume Company at once upon its organization reposted and recorded its own notices of appropriation of the waters of the San Diego river, in which notices of appropriation it was provided that "said water is appropriated, claimed and intended for irrigation, domestic and mechanical purposes. The places where it is intended to use said water are the city of San Diego, Ex-Mission ranch, rancho El Cajon." The company at once proceeded with the development of its water system. During the year 1886 the corporation acquired by purchase 3,145 acres of land in what is known as the Rancho Ex-Mission, lying to the westward of the El Cajon Valley and between its lands and the city of San Diego, and caused said lands to be surveyed and platted so that 1,000 acres thereof was subdivided into 100 tracts of 10 acres each, 200 acres thereof into villa lots of smaller dimensions, and 80 acres thereof into town lots, each of an area of 50 by 100 feet. The corporation then proceeded to sell off this tract of land, as thus subdivided, under a form of contract by which, through the medium of certain trustees, the corporation agreed to give to each purchaser of one of said 10-acre tracts one of said town lots, and also agreed to convey to each owner of a 10-acre tract a perpetual water right to one miner's inch of water at an annual rental of $3 per acre. The contract for the sale of these lands upon said terms stipulated that the water company was to extend its aqueduct into the city of San Diego, and this being done, to supply water to the holders of town lots for use thereon at city rates. The owners of the larger or 10-acre tracts were, however, to be first supplied with water before supplying any other lands or lots therewith. While the San Diego Flume Company was thus developing its water system for use upon its own lands, it was also, beginning with the year 1886 and continuing down to the year 1910, engaged in making water right contracts with the various owners of land in the El Cajon Valley and also in the Ex-Mission rancho aforesaid, outside of its own holdings therein. The first of these contracts and in fact the first water right contract executed by said corporation appears in the terms and conditions of a deed made by one Hawley to said corporation, conveying to it an undivided one-half interest in certain lands in El Cajon Valley, wherein one of the conditions subsequent to the grant was stated to be that—

"The said flume company is within three years to build a flume or other aqueduct across or adjacent to said tract of land, carrying water for irrigation according to the purposes of said company's incorporation, and shall grant to the grantor, his heirs, representatives, or assigns, a right to the use of water from said flume or aqueduct at the legal rates and to the amount of 1 inch, measured under a 4-inch pressure for each 10 acres of arable land in such portion as may be assigned to grantor in partitioning. Such water right is to be perpetual and without further compensation except the legal rates aforesaid, and subject only to the act of God, of the law, or public enemy."

The amount of water to be supplied under this contract was 70 inches. A second water right contract was made with Hawley a few weeks after the date of said deed by which he agreed to buy water from the San Diego Flume Company for use on certain other described lands in San Diego county, the contract containing the same provision as that above quoted from the former one. Still later in the same year a third contract was made with Hawley in substantially the same form as the two prior agreements, and wherein it was repeated that said Hawley was to have his designated "right of water from said flume or aqueduct at the legal rates."

About the time of the making of these contracts with Hawley the San Diego Flume Company entered into a contract with Wendell Easton, George W. Frink, and Frank B. Wilde, owners of a tract of land in El Cajon Valley, known as "S" or "Jarvis tract," by the terms of which certain rights of way for its aqueducts, flumes, and other waterways were granted by the latter to the corporation, which in turn, granted to said Easton, Frink, and Wilde—

"the right to purchase for the sum of $10 an acre, any portion of 200 water rights to be taken from the flume line to any point or points on said line that the said parties or their assigns may select. Each of said water rights is to be one miner's inch under a 4-inch pressure to each 15 acres of land to be designated as hereafter provided and at the legal rates as fixed by the supervisors of said county, in addition to the price of said water right. * * * Said water right is to be perpetual and without further compensation except the legal rates aforesaid."

During the years 1887 and 1889, inclusive, six other agreements for water rights were entered into between the corporation and the following water users, viz.: Terralta Land & Water Company, F. J. Wramplemeier, El Cajon Vineyard Company, C. F. Francisco, El Cajon Valley Company, and Uri Hill. Each of these six agreements was in substantially the same form as the others, and each provided for the annual payment of a fixed water rate for each inch of water supplied to the lands of these respective water users, and each also contained the proviso that "if said land is hereafter included within the limits of any incorporated city or town, said company may demand city rates," etc. It seems to be conceded that the provisions of the several contracts above referred to as having been made by the San Diego Flume Company between the years 1885 and 1889 have reference to the rate-fixing powers of the board of supervisors of the counties under statutes then in effect, and applying generally to water companies. On February 24, 1921, on petition of a number of inhabitants within the region then being supplied with water by said corporation, the board of supervisors of the county of San Diego, purporting to act under the then existing statutes (Stats. 1885, p. 95), adopted an ordinance fixing a maximum water rate to be charged by said corporation at $120 per miner's inch per annum. It appears, however, that the San Diego Flume Company at the time was not charging any of the persons to whom it was then supplying water under its outstanding agreements a rate equal to that fixed by said ordinance as the maximum rate it would be entitled to charge; and it also appears that, in its subsequent agreements for the supplying of water to its customers during the period that said ordinance remained in force, it never provided for a charge equal to said maximum rate.

Between the years 1889 and 1909 the San Diego Flume Company, as its business and water system expanded, made a large number of contracts with various persons and corporations for the sale of its water. Some of these were with landowners directly; some were with other water companies purchasing water in quantity for distribution among their own customers upon their own terms; some were with persons or corporations using the water for other purposes than either irrigation or domestic uses. Some of these agreements provided for such water rates as might be fixed by law; others provided for flat rates, omitting any such provision. It may be pertinent to note at this point that, after the board of supervisors of said county had assumed jurisdiction to regulate the water rates to be charged by the San Diego Flume Company through its ordinance, above referred to, the said water company undertook to secure, and did, in fact, secure the modification of its foregoing agreements with Hawley, with Easton, Frink, and Wilde, and with other landowners in the El Cajon Valley, by the terms of which new agreements the clause in each of the said original agreements "at rates fixed by law" was eliminated. It may be also noted that as to certain of the agreements by the corporation for the sale of water to new subdivisions or districts opened up for water consumption after the date of the said ordinance and outside of El Cajon Valley, the provision for the sale of water subject to "legal rates" was expressly retained. The significance of both these states of facts will be later commented upon. In the year 1910 the San Diego Flume Company sold and conveyed all of its property and rights in and to its aforesaid water system and all outstanding agreements relating thereto to one James A. Murray, who shortly thereafter formed a partnership with one E. Fletcher, under the firm name of Cuyamaca Water Company. Subsequently W. G. Henshaw became a member of this firm. Said copartnership has since been operating said water properties and system under said name. By the terms of the transfer by the corporation to the copartnership the latter became obligated to perform the terms and conditions of all outstanding water contracts to be theretofore performed by said corporation.

On June 25, 1912, the individuals comprising the copartnership of the Cuyamaca Water Company filed an application before the Railroad Commission for an order authorizing said applicants to increase the water rates then being charged their consumers in the county of San Diego. Notice of the hearing upon said application was ordered to be given by publication in four newspapers within the region covered by the water distributing system of said applicants, and such notice was so published according to the terms of said order. A considerable number of the customers of the applicants appeared upon the hearing of said application, the domestic consumers and certain consumers taking water for irrigation purposes being separately represented by counsel and opposing the application upon different grounds. As to just who or what number of persons was represented by the counsel who appeared for the consumers taking water for irrigation purposes does not very clearly appear, the record merely showing that Haines &

Haines and D. G. Gordon appeared for certain protestants of this class without identification by name, Mr. Gordon, who was himself a landowner in the "S" tract, stating that he appeared "for the water users on the main flume," while Mr. Haines stated that he represented the holders of water rights contracts to 428 inches of water, a list of the names of whom had been furnished by the applicants to the Commission. Upon the hearing all of the water rights contracts of the San Diego Flume Company were presented in evidence, and the Railroad Commission in its decision engaged in a very exhaustive examination into the history, business, and status of the former San Diego Flume Company, including an investigation of all of these outstanding water contracts which were presented in evidence before it and to which in said decision it specifically refers. The conclusion of the Commission as a result of such investigation was that the Cuyamaca Water Company was from its inception a public utility and, as such, subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission as to its water rates. The Commission then proceeded to fix the water rates to be allowed to be charged these several classes of consumers, which rates were in most, if not all, cases, higher than the rates which had been theretofore charged and collected under the terms of the outstanding agreements. The Commission further found that the main flume or aqueduct of the water company was in a bad state of deterioration, requiring immediate renewal, and, as a condition to the proposed increase in the rates of the applicants, provided that such increased rates should not be charged or collected until the applicants had complied with the requirement of the Commission with respect to the renewal of its flume, or until they had satisfied the Commission that they were proceeding to comply therewith in good faith. No application for a rehearing before the Commission as to the matters covered by its aforesaid orders was made by any of the parties who had appeared before it, nor by any other of the water users affected by said orders, nor was any application made to the courts calling in question the jurisdiction of the said Commission to make or enforce its said orders.

Between March 28, 1913, the date of the decision of the Railroad Commission upon this first proceeding before it, and September 24, 1920, the date of the decision of the Commission which is assailed in this proceeding, the Cuyamaca Water Company was before the Railroad Commission upon numerous occasions, and in fifteen or more separate proceedings in which its water rates were involved. In the latter part of the year 1913 the copartnership filed another application for an increase in water rates, based upon certain alleged outlays in the improvement of its plant. In this proceeding, as in the former one, D. G. Gordon and the firm of Haines & Haines appeared as representing irrigation customers of said water company holding water right agreements. Whether said counsel represented all of this class of the customers of the water company does not expressly appear from the record of said proceeding, but the objection urged by them was to the effect that the applicant was not entitled at said time to an increase in water rates, for the reason that it had not complied with the order of the Commission, made in the previous proceeding, as to the replacement of its flume. The ruling of the Commission was inconclusive, holding the matter of an increase of the rates of the applicant in abeyance until it had complied with the Commission's earlier order. In July, 1914, the Cuyamaca Water Company again applied to the Commission for an order authorizing a general increase in its water rates. In this proceeding quite an array of counsel appeared representing various classes of the applicants and consumers, among these D. G. Gordon appeared for consumers on the flume line; or, in other words, irrigation consumers. The firm of Haines & Haines also again appeared as representing Lemon Grove Mutual Water Company and Fairmount Water Company. A little later in the same year D. G. Gordon, purporting to represent himself and approximately 100 other persons having contract rights to water from the main flume, filed a complaint before the Commission alleging mismanagement, and defective distribution on the part of the San Diego Flume Company and praying for both general and specific relief. It is conceded in the briefs of the petitioners herein that said D. G. Gordon and his counsel, Sumner & May, represented in said proceeding practically all of the petitioners herein. This proceeding was by the Commission heard together with the then pending proceeding last above referred to. Public hearings were held in the city of San Diego covering in all about two weeks, during which time, by stipulation of counsel, all of the evidence, taken upon the several prior proceedings of the same applicants before the Commission was presented in evidence in that proceeding. While said proceeding was pending and undetermined, the Cuyamaca Water Company, in November, 1914, entered into a contract for the sale of its water system to an irrigation district, which had been formed within the region occupied by its water system, and it was represented to the Commission that an application would be presented to the Commission for the fixation of the price at which the Cuyamaca Water Company might be permitted to make said sale.

In view of this impending transfer the Commission concluded that it would be ill advised to make any present change in the water rates of the applicant. In its order deferring the matter for future consideration, the Commission recited as a fact established before it that, while as yet the applicant had not complied with the earlier order of the Commission in the matter of the replacement of its flume, it had been collecting from its water consumers the increased water rates provided for in its said earlier decision. There were during the year 1915 several proceedings before the Railroad Commission affecting, with one exception, consumers of the product of the Cuyamaca Water Company other than the petitioners herein, and which need not be adverted to other than to note that in all of said proceedings the water company was alleged to be treated as and dealt with in the capacity of a public utility by all parties concerned. The excepted proceeding was one instituted by the La Mesa Development Company as the holder of a contract entered into on February 7, 1908, with the San Diego Flume Company, wherein the latter agreed to supply the former with 150 miner's inches of water upon demand therefor at any time within 20 years, for use upon lands belonging to the development company, the consideration of which agreement being the sum of $120,000. The contention of the applicant in that proceeding was that its contractual rights to such water had been injuriously affected by that portion of the order of said Commission made on March 28, 1913, in the first proceeding above referred to forbidding the water company from adding any more consumers to its system except domestic consumers. The commission, upon the hearing of this proceeding, modified its earlier order by adding thereto this provision:

"Provided however it is not intended by this order to prevent the said James A. Murray and Ed Fletcher (the then owners of the Cuyamaca Water Company) from performing any valid contract for the supply of water which existed at the time of making this order, to wit, March 28, 1913, made by the San Diego Flume Company, predecessor in interest of the said James A. Murray and Ed Fletcher."

The petitioners herein were not parties to that proceeding.

The prospective sale of the properties of the Cuyamaca Water Company to the irrigation district not having been consummated and a sale of its water system to the city of San Diego having also fallen through, the Cuyamaca Water Company, on the 6th day of January, 1916, renewed its application theretofore made before the Commission for a general increase in its water rates. In this proceeding the same array of counsel appeared purporting to represent the several sets of consumers which had been represented by them in earlier proceedings. By stipulation between counsel for the several parties to the proceeding all evidence introduced before the Commission in the several earlier matters was admitted in evidence in the instant proceeding, the hearing otherwise thereon occupying several days, and the decision thereon being delayed until January 25, 1917, at which time the Commission rendered its decision, in which it recited the history of the several prior proceedings before the Commission and its rulings upon the questions presented therein. Among other things, the Commission ruled that, upon the representation to it that the Cuyamaca Water Company was proceeding in good faith to comply with the order of the Commission in the first proceeding before it as to the reconstruction of its main flume, the company had been permitted to charge and collect from its consumers the rates specified in said earlier order, and that said rates had been accepted without contest by the water company's consumers, and had been in effect continuously since July 1, 1913, after an exhaustive review of the present condition of the properties of the water company and after directing certain betterments to be made in storage and transmission system, and after reciting that there had been considerable difficulty in the application of the water company's existing rates, which difficulties and discriminations it proposes to remove by the adoption of a block rate applicable alike to all consumers under the same conditions, said block rate to provide a uniform rate for general use with a separate rate for irrigation use in excess of 2,000 cubic feet per month. The Commission accordingly adopted a schedule of rates applicable to all of the consumers of the water company, regardless of the origin of their rights to water service, to be effective on and after March 1, 1917. No petition for a rehearing was presented by any of the parties to said proceeding or affected by said order, nor was any application for a writ of review presented or filed in the courts.

The next proceedings before the Railroad Commission were that which the petitioners herein seek to have reviewed. On April 13, 1919, the Cuyamaca Water Company instituted said proceeding before the Railroad Commission seeking a general increase in its water rates. Shortly thereafter, alleging certain abnormal conditions in the cost of service to be then existing, the Cuyamaca Water Company filed another application before the Commission for a surcharge upon its water rates then in effect. Several months prior to the inception of these two proceedings and on September 5, 1918, a proceeding had been instituted before the Commission by Robert Ross et al., consumers of water furnished by said water company within certain territory adjacent to the city of San Diego, wherein it was alleged that the water rates and charges of the Cuyamaca Water Company were excessive, unreasonable, and discriminatory as to them; that the valuation of the property and plant of said water company fixed by said Commission in its earlier orders was excessive; that the service was bad and the water furnished unfit for human consumption, and praying for an order of the Commission establishing just and reasonable rates as to said petitioners and for general relief. On the 14th of July, 1919, an order was made by the Railroad Commission that the matters be heard together on the 22d day of July, 1919, and ordered general notice to be given to all of the consumers of the Cuyamaca Water Company, by both posting and mailing, of the pendency of these proceedings and of the date of hearing thereon. On said date a considerable number of the petitioners herein, who had received said notices of the hearing upon said proceedings, appeared and verbally protested against the immediate hearing hereon. The Commission, however, proceeded to take testimony in said proceedings without regard to said verbal protests and without allowing the protestants time or opportunity to present evidence in support of their objections; and thereafter and on August 11, 1919, filed its decision in the matter of the application for a surcharge upon existing rates, allowing such surcharge as against all water users and fixing the amount thereof, such surcharge to be effective from the date of said decision and to remain in effect until January 1, 1920, unless otherwise ordered by the Commission; as to the matter of the adjustment of the entire rate schedule of the water company, pursuant to its application therefor and as to the question of the jurisdiction of the Commission in such adjustment to alter the rates of consumers holding water right agreements, both of such matters were held in abeyance by the Commission until a complete hearing would be had thereon. Thereafter, and on August 30, 1919, a considerable number of consumers filed with the Commission an application for a rehearing upon the decision of the Commission, relative to the imposition of a general surcharge upon their water rates, wherein they set forth that certain of said applicants were the holders of contracts with the San Diego Flume Company, entitling the holders thereof to be furnished with water by the Cuyamaca Water Company as the successor of the San Diego Flume Company, at a fixed rate and charge, which was much less than the rate and charge allowed by said decision, and that said decision of the Commission, in so far as it attempted to impose a higher rate and charge upon said applicants, was in excess of the jurisdiction of the Commission and violative of the Constitution of the United States and of the state of California. They also alleged various other grounds of irregularity in the proceedings of the Commission and of insufficiency of notice thereof as grounds for a rehearing upon said matter. Thereupon, and on October 21, 1919, the Commission made an order fixing December 19, 1919, as the date for a hearing upon said last-named application, and also as the date for a general hearing upon the other applications of the several matters involving the water rates of the Cuyamaca Water Company then pending before it. Prior to the date set for said hearing a large number of petitioners herein holding water rights contracts from the San Diego Flume Company filed an answer to the petition of the Cuyamaca Water Company for a general increase of its water rates, wherein two separate and specific objections and defenses thereto were set forth. By the first of these the power and jurisdiction of the Railroad Commission to entertain or conduct any proceeding for the fixation of water rates of the Cuyamaca Water Company so as to affect injuriously the rights of said protestants as the holders of said water rights agreements was directly assailed. By the second of these defenses the application of the Cuyamaca Water Company for a general increase in rates was objected to upon the ground that the water system and properties of the applicant for such increase were mismanaged and were not economically operated and, hence, that their said application should be denied.

At the time of filing their said answer to the application of the Cuyamaca Company for a general rate increase, the said protestants therein, who are also the petitioners in the instant proceeding, also filed with said Commission a cross-complaint, wherein, in addition to the matters set forth in their answer and protest above referred to, they affirmatively set forth that the water rates charged by the said water company under the previous orders of the Commission establishing and fixing the rates to be charged and collected by said water company and particularly under the order in that behalf made on March 6, 1917, are excessive, unreasonable, unjust, and discriminatory in a large number of specified particulars, and praying for the setting aside of the several previous orders of the Commission establishing and regulating the water rates of the Cuyamaca Water Company and for a revaluation of the water system and properties of said water company and the establishment of reasonable rates. In their said cross-complaint the petitioners herein seek to have whatever rights they possess under their respective water rights contracts preserved, and to have such re-established rates applied only to such excess of water supplied by said water company to them above the amount called for by the terms of their said water rights contracts. The hearing upon the matters put in issue by the aforesaid answer and cross-complaint of said protestants, the petitioners herein, came before the Commission upon the date set for the general hearing upon the other matters then pending before it. The petitioners herein were present and were prepared to produce evidence upon said hearing in support of the averments of their answer as to the existence and validity of their respective water rights contracts, and in support of their objection that the Commission had no power or jurisdiction to make any order or orders affecting the vested rights of said protestants acquired thereby, nor to establish or enforce any water rates schedule or charge increasing the rates of said protestants as fixed by said agreements. The Railroad Commission refused to permit the said protestants, in support of their said pleadings upon said hearing, to present any evidence or proof to establish or show the existence or validity of any of their said water contracts and refused to permit the protestants to offer in evidence said contracts or to prove or show that the San Diego Flume Company, from which they had received their said contracts, was not a public utility in respect to the water covered by the terms of said contracts; upon the ground that in the previous proceedings before the Commission it had been decided that the San Diego Flume Company was from its inception and as to all its water users a public utility, and hence, that such evidence on the part of the protestants and cross-complainants was immaterial; to all of which rulings the protestants objected at the time of said hearing. The Commission, notwithstanding its refusal to allow the protestants to introduce in evidence their water rights contracts and also the other evidence proferred by them, tending to show that the San Diego Water Company was not a public utility at the time of the making of said agreements, did upon its own motion put in evidence in said proceeding all of the evidence which had been offered in evidence before it in the several proceedings involving the fixation of water rates which had been heard before it in the previous years, and which not only embraced all of the contracts and records of the San Diego Flume Company, but included also the history of the development of said corporation and of its water system from the inception of its organization and acquisition by appropriation of the waters of the San Diego river, for the uses and purposes specified in both the original and reposted notices of such appropriation. The Commission had, therefore, before it in the course of said proceeding a very considerable portion of the evidence which it had not permitted the protestants on their own behalf to offer. At the conclusion of said hearing the protestants presented in writing their formal protest in much of detail against the exclusion of such evidence and against the alleged arbitrary action of the Commission in excluding the same, and also against certain other rulings of the Commission excluding certain other offered evidence of the protestants and cross-complainants respecting the alleged mismanagement of the affairs and properties of the Cuyamaca Water Company. Said formal protest so filed was accompanied by a motion that the Commission reopen the hearing and admit such evidence. Thereafter, and on September 24, 1920, the Commission denied the protestants' motion to reopen the case the Commission filing at said time its opinion and order covering all of the proceedings then pending before it and providing for a general increase in the water rates of the applicant for such increase. Thereafter the protestants filed a petition for rehearing wherein all of their prior objections and protests against the power and jurisdiction of the Commission to establish water rates affecting their vested rights under their said water rights contracts were restated, which petition was by the Commission denied on October 8, 1920. Thereafter and on October 22, 1920, the said protestants filed in this court their present petition for a writ of review.

[1] The first contention of the petitioners herein is that they are entitled to have the proceedings of the Railroad Commission assailed herein reviewed and their orders made therein annulled, by reason of the alleged arbitrary action of the Commission in its refusal to permit said petitioners, as protestants in said proceedings, to present their evidence upon the issue as to whether or not the San Diego Flume Company was a public utility, and to present in evidence their several water rights agreements upon said issue, and in support of their contention that as to them, and as to said contracts with them, said corporation was not a public utility. In addressing ourselves to a determination of this question, it must be conceded that, if the question as to whether the San Diego Flume Company was from its inception forward a public utility was in fact an issue before the Commission in said proceedings, the refusal of that body to admit the evidence proffered by the protestants upon that issue would have been grave error which upon an ordinary appeal would have compelled a reversal. But this is not an ordinary appeal, nor has this court the authority, under its limited powers of review, to set aside orders of the Railroad Commission in matters over which it has been given jurisdiction, because of errors in the admission or rejection of evidence. If however, the error of the Commission in this regard had amounted to the entire exclusion of evidence otherwise admissible touching the essential matter in issue before it, so that, in deciding such issue, the Commission had so arbitrarily ruled as to permit but one side of the controversy to be litigated before it, we would have no hesitancy in deciding upon certiorari that such arbitrary action on the part of the Commission had amounted to a denial of due process of law so as to divorce it of jurisdiction to decide the matter before it. But that is not this case, as presented in the record before us, since it appears that, notwithstanding its rulings in the exclusion of their evidence, of which the petitioners herein complain, the main substance of that same evidence was presented before the Commission in said proceeding in form of the record of the evidence presented before it in the several earlier proceedings involving the same issues. The petitioners here in fact predicate a large part of their contention and argument that the San Diego Water Company was not from its inception, or ever, as to them, a public utility upon such evidence. This being so, and the Commission having in fact before it the main amount of the substantial evidence upon which the petitioners rely to support their present contention, this court cannot say that the error of the Commission in refusing to admit such evidence in the first instance and, upon its proffer by the protestants, amounted to a denial of due process of law so as to oust the Commission of jurisdiction to render its ultimate decision sought to be reviewed herein.

[2-4] The next contention of the petitioners herein is that, upon the undisputed evidence which was actually before it, the Railroad Commission cannot rightfully draw the conclusion that the San Diego Flume Company was from its inception, or ever, as to their contractual rights as water users, a public utility. This involves a brief consideration of that evidence. It is true that the declarations of the original appropriators of the waters of the San Diego river and of the corporation formed by them as to the purposes of such appropriation would not in themselves suffice to justify a finding that such waters were to be devoted to a public use or that such corporation was a public utility. Palmer v. Railroad Commission, 167 Cal. 163, 138 Pac. 997. Neither would the statement of the corporation in its articles as to its purposes be sufficient in itself to support a finding on the part of the Railroad Commission that such corporation was a public utility. Del Mar Water Co. v. Eshleman, 167 Cal. 666, 140 Pac. 591, 948. When, however, the original appropriators of water from a stream, having declared that their purposes are to secure that commodity for general public consumption, organize a corporation which, in its articles of incorporation, declares its purposes to be that of utilizing the water thus acquired for sale for irrigation, domestic use, mechanical purposes, and for use generally in cities and towns within the zone of its proposed distributing system; and when such corporation proceeds under such declared purposes to establish a distributing system having both a reginal and a constructional amplitude, a direction and a destination consistent with such purposes; and when such corporation in its earliest contracts for the acquisition of rights of way for its aqueducts, canals, pipes, etc., and for the distribution of its waters therein, expressly stipulates that whatever water rights were therein granted were to be subject to "legal rates"; and when the recitals of such agreements in most instances showed that the city of San Diego and other existing or proposed towns and town sites were to be supplied and served with water from the company's distributing system; and when in fact such corporation proceeded, as rapidly as the construction and extension of its water distributing system would permit, to sell and serve water to the general public coming within the area of such expansion for irrigation, for domestic uses, for mechanical purposes, and for whatever other uses such water might be put to by its purchasers—it must be held that substantial evidence of such a carrying into effect of the originally declared purposes of the original appropriators of such water and of the corporation formed by them has been presented as would suffice to justify a finding that the water thus acquired and utilized by such corporation had from its inception been dedicated to a public use, and that such corporation was a public utility. The Commission had before it such evidence.

In the earlier proceedings before it, at which some, at least, of the petitioners herein were present in person or were represented by counsel, the foregoing facts were made fully to appear. Generally they were contained in the recitals or covenants of the various agreements which the San Diego Flume Company made with the predecessors of most of the petitioners herein, and out of which their rights as water users arise. As to the law applicable to these facts, it may be said to be fairly well settled under the more recent decisions of this court. In the case of Palermo Land & Water Company v. Railroad Commission, 173 Cal. 380, 160 Pac. 228, the agreements which the Palermo Land & Water Company made with its customers provided that its water was to be supplied "at such rates as may be fixed by law in the district in which said lands are situated"; and this court held that, as to those who held under such agreements, it appeared that the parties contemplated at the very inception of their contract rights that the rates to be charged should be fixed by public authority; and that the fixing of rates by public authority implies that the service is to be that of a public utility. The evidence before the Commission showed that, in practically every one of the early contracts for supplying water to the owners of land in the El Cajon Valley, there was inserted the clause that the right to take and use the varying amounts of water to be supplied to each of said landowners was to be subject to "legal rates." A large majority of the petitioners herein are the successors in interest of the original landowners who were parties to these contracts. It is true as stated by the petitioners herein that, after the board of supervisors of the county of San Diego had, under statutes then in force, adopted an ordinance declaring the San Diego Water Company to be a public service corporation and establishing a maximum water rate for its water, the said corporation undertook to call in these earlier contracts and issue new contracts to the landowners holding the same, omitting the clause providing that this water service should be subject to legal rates. This action on the part of the San Diego Flume Company was attempted to be taken six or more years after its organization and after its character as a public service corporation had become practically crystallized by its conduct in selling its water to all sorts of customers over a widely distributed system. Having thus dedicated its water to a public use, the company could not revoke such dedication and convert its waters into a private use, without the consent of all of the beneficiaries of such use. Franscioni v. Soledad L. & W. Co., 170 Cal. 221–228, 149 Pac. 161; Leavitt v. Lassen Irr. Co., 157 Cal. 82–89, 106 Pac. 404, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242.

[5] The main question involved in this proceeding, and which we think affects and concludes all of the petitioners herein, is the question as to whether or not these petitioners by their acts and conduct in relation to the numerous proceedings before the Railroad Commission touching the water rates of the Cuyamaca Water Company have concluded themselves from asserting in the present proceeding that the San Diego Flume Company was, and that the Cuyamaca Water Company as its successor in interest is, not a public utility. The petitioners herein number in all 116 persons, excluding duplications as where certain of the petitioners appear as husband and wife, or as members of copartnerships. These persons assert themselves to be landowners either in the El Cajon rancho or the Ex-Mission rancho. They are subject to several classifications as to the origin of their land ownerships. They are also subject to several classifications as to their appearances before the Commission in the several proceedings instituted before it prior to the proceeding of 1919, which is assailed herein; as for example certain of said petitioners appeared or were represented by counsel in the original proceeding instituted before the Commission in 1913, wherein it was expressly held that as to all of its water users the San Diego Flume Company was from its inception a public utility. As to the several proceedings before the Commission prior to 1916, those of the petitioners herein who did appear therein assert that the orders of the Commission made therein fixing water rates were conditional upon the making of certain betterments in the distributing system, which the company did not make and said petitioners therefore argue that they were not bound by the decision of the Commission that the water company was from its inception a public utility. This reasoning will not bear scrutiny. Having submitted themselves to the jurisdiction of the Commission, such of these petitioners so doing are bound by its conclusion as to the public utility character of the water company. If it failed to comply with the orders of the Commission as to betterments, the remedy of said petitioners was by appeal to the Commission to compel the making of the betterments, but it was not the reassertion of special water rights over which said petitioners had by their acquiescence yielded to the Commission the right of control.

In 1916 certain of said petitioners appeared as complainants before the Railroad Commission through one D. G. Gordon, asserting himself to represent approximately 100 persons holding water right contracts along the main flume, in which proceeding doubtless the major portion of the petitioners herein were represented by said Gordon. In said proceeding the Railroad Commission again decided that the San Diego Flume Company was a public utility, as was also its successor the Cuyamaca Water Company, and thereafter proceeded to order a general readjustment of its water rates, which order occurred on and after March 1, 1917. Still later and in 1918, certain other of the petitioners herein appeared as complainants before the Commission in a proceeding entitled, Robert Ross et al. v. Cuyamaca Water Co., complaining of excessive water rates and seeking affirmative relief from the Commission. Coincident with the proceedings initiated by D. G. Gordon in 1916, the Cuyamaca Water Company presented an application before the Commission for a general readjustment and regulation of its water rates, in which proceeding a large number, if not all of the petitioners herein, appeared as respondents. As to these several proceedings which antedated the final proceeding assailed herein, it must be held that as to those of the petitioners herein who actually appeared as respondents in said proceedings, or who affirmatively appeared as complainants therein, they are bound by the several decisions of the Commission holding the San Diego Flume Company to have been from its inception a public utility, and its successor in interest to be such public utility and hence subject to the jurisdiction and orders of the Commission. In holding that those of these petitioners who thus appeared either affirmatively or as respondents and submitted themselves and their several asserted water rights to the jurisdiction of the Commission in the several proceedings before it prior to March 1, 1917, we do so, not upon the theory that the decisions of the Railroad Commission are binding upon said petitioners as res adjudicata, since we doubt that the decisions of an inferior tribunal rise to the dignity and authority of being res adjudicata (Prentis v. Atlantic, etc., Co., 211 U. S. 210, 29 Sup. Ct. 67, 53 L. Ed. 150), but we do so upon the theory that such of the petitioners herein as thus by their appearance or by their affirmative action submitted their several rights and claims as water users to the jurisdiction of the Commission and having done so accepted the rulings of the Commission as determinative of their said rights and claims, without seeking to have such rulings reviewed by the courts; and accepted and paid the water rates which the Commission established and put in force, upon the theory and finding that the water company as to all of its water users was a public utility, such petitioners cannot now be heard to urge that, as to them and their water rights agreements, said water company was and is not a public utility, and as such subject to regulation by the Railroad Commission. The following authorities fully support this conclusion. Franscioni v. Soledad L. & W. Co., supra; Allen v. Railroad Commission, 179 Cal. 68–82, 175 Pac. 466, 8 A. L. R. 249; Frazee v. Railroad Commission, 185 Cal. 690, 201 Pac. 921.

This being so, it becomes important to determine from the record before us if possible the extent to which the petitioners have thus submitted themselves and their water rights and claims to the jurisdiction of the Railroad Commission. While there is considerable doubt and confusion upon this subject as to the earlier proceedings before the Commission, it would seem to be conceded by the petitioners herein that they all appeared in person or by counsel in the proceedings which were initiated before the Railroad Commission on January 6, 1916, by the Cuyamaca Water Company, praying for a general increase in its water rates affecting all consumers, and which was decided by the Railroad Commission on January 25, 1917, wherein it was held, after an exhaustive review of the past history and present condition of the water company, that it was a public utility as to all its water users; that certain betterments should be made in its distributing system, and that a general system of rates applicable alike to all consumers should be established and put into effect from and after March 1, 1917. The record shows that no petition for rehearing was presented upon this decision nor was any writ of review applied for, but that, on the contrary, such general water rates as were thus established were put into effect as to all its consumers by the water company from and after March 1, 1917, and that such water rates were collected from, and paid by, all of said consumers, including the petitioners herein, for more than two years thereafter and so far as this record discloses are still being collected and paid. It is true that when, in the year 1919, the Cuyamaca Water Company again appeared before the Railroad Commission to apply for another general increase in its water rates, these petitioners responded to said application with their protest against such increase and undertook to reassert the existence and vitality of their several water rights agreements; but we think that at that time they had fully waived their right to stand upon said agreements or to longer claim that as to them the Cuyamaca Water Company was not a public utility and as such fully within the regulatory power of the Railroad Commission as to all of its consumers. This being so, the Railroad Commission must be held to have acquired full jurisdiction to make the orders which are sought to be assailed in the present proceeding.

The application for the writ is therefore denied.

We concur; SHAW, C. J.; WASTE, J.; LENNON, J.; WILBUR, J.; LAWLOR, J.

---

190 Cal. 85

BREWER et al. v. RAILROAD COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA. (L. A. 6739.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 10, 1922. Rehearing Denied Dec. 8, 1922.)

Estoppel ⇐68(1)—Waiver of right of user of water by acquiescence, in order of Commission to claim company was not public utility, held unaffected by judgment in prior action.

Waiver of right of a user of water to claim, in proceedings before Railroad Commission to fix rates to be charged by a water company, that the company was not a public utility, by reason of having submitted himself and his water rights to jurisdiction of the Commission in a previous such proceeding, and having acquiesced in the rates then fixed on the theory of the company being a public utility, was unaffected by judgment in a prior action between him and the company in which the company's right to collect for water according to contract between them was sustained, without the question of the company being a public utility directly arising.

In Bank.

Petition by John C. Brewer and others for writ of certiorari to review order of the Railroad Commission of the State of California fixing water rates. Petition denied.

Jesse George and Clarence S. Preston, both of San Diego, for petitioners.

C. C. Crouch, of San Diego, Harry A. Encell, of San Francisco, and Sweet, Stearns &

Forward, of San Diego, for Cuyamaca Water Co.

Hugh Gordon and William W. Clary, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Justice pro tem. This proceeding is, in substance, identical with the proceeding entitled Brewer v. Railroad Commission (L. A. No. 6716), 210 Pac. 511, this day decided. The petition filed in the former proceeding on October 22, 1920, was refiled on November 15, 1920, for the purpose of obviating an objection based on the ground that the petition for rehearing in one of the proceedings before the Railroad Commission had not been finally acted on by the Commission at the time said former petition was filed. Said petition was later denied, and no point was made in the former proceeding that the application therein had been prematurely filed. Our decision, this day filed, in said former proceeding therefore disregarded that objection, and is applicable to all points presented in the instant proceeding, with the exception of the question raised by the separate petition of the petitioners Strobeck and Legge, who, while joining in the main petition, add thereto an additional claim for relief based upon averments peculiar to their alleged water right agreement. These averments are, in brief, that said petitioners Strobeck and Legge are successors in interest of certain contract holders named C. H. Souther and Souther & Crosby, who, in the year 1890, had acquired certain lands in the "S" subdivision of the El Cajon rancho, and who in that year had received said water rights agreements from the San Diego Flume Company for the service of water upon their said lands in specific amounts per acre and at a specified rate. These water rights agreements would be subject to the same conditions held in our former opinion, this day filed, to affect water rights agreements of all other petitioners, but for the added averments of said Strobeck and Legge to the effect that in the year 1901, in an action brought by said Souther & Crosby in the district court of the United States for the southern district of California against the San Diego Flume Company to cancel said contracts upon the ground that the said flume company had not lived up to their terms, the flume company had filed a cross-bill for the recovery of the contract price of the water to be furnished the plaintiffs under said contract, and that a judgment had been rendered in favor of the cross-complainants upholding said contracts, which judgment had been affirmed on appeal by the Circuit Court of Appeals in the case of San Diego Flume Co. v. Souther, 90 Fed. 164, 32 C. C. A. 548, and San Diego Flume Co. v. Souther, 104 Fed. 706, 44 C. C. A. 143, the latter being a decision of said court upon rehearing.

The said petitioners further allege that, after the rendition of these decisions in said cause, the parties thereto entered into a stipulation settling said controversy and agreeing that said contracts should remain and be in full force and effect. The foregoing decisions were rendered in the years 1898 and 1900, respectively, and said stipulation between the parties to said action was dated February 14, 1903. The said petitioners assert that the judgment in said cause constituted a final and conclusive adjudication as to the validity of said contracts and the vested rights of the parties thereto thereunder. A reference to the two decisions of the federal court, above referred to, will show, however, that the question as to whether or not the San Diego Flume Company was a public utility at the time of entering into said contracts did not directly arise and that all that said court in both of its said decisions decided was that a California corporation organized after the adoption of article 14, § 2, of the Constitution of 1879, providing that "the right to collect rates or compensation for the use of water supplied to any county, city and county, or town, or the inhabitants thereof, is a franchise, and cannot be exercised except by authority of and in the manner prescribed by law," was not by said provision of the Constitution precluded from making contracts for the supplying of water and the payment of rentals therefor until such time as the Legislature had made statutory provision for the regulation of the rates to be charged by such corporation. The court further held that the fact that the board of supervisors of the county of San Diego, acting under the statute of 1885, empowering such boards to fix and regulate the water rates of corporations, had adopted an ordinance fixing the water rates to be charged by the San Diego Flume Company at a certain rate did not preclude said company from entering into contracts with water users for a less rate. We are unable to see how these particular petitioners are aided by these decisions or by the judgment rendered in said cause. The trial of said cause and the judgment therein and the stipulation of the parties thereto as to the effect of said judgment all antedated by several years the several proceedings before the Railroad Commission referred to and fully discussed in our opinion in the prior proceeding, this day filed. These special petitioners are in no better position as to the validity of the water right agreements held by their predecessors in interest in said tract of land than are all the other holders of such agreements who were parties to such proceedings and who are held to have submitted themselves and their alleged contract rights to the jurisdiction of said Commission in one or the other of such proceedings, and to have acquiesced in the prior orders of the Commission regulating water rates.

Upon the authority of our opinion in the former proceeding, this day filed, the petition herein is denied, both as to the general petitioners herein, and as to the special petitioners upon their separate application herein.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; WASTE, J.; LENNON, J.; WILBUR, J.; LAWLOR, J.

---

190 Cal. 57

PEOPLE v. DONNELLY. (Cr. 2462.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 9, 1922.)

1. Homicide ⊂=22(3) — No appreciable time for premeditation is essential to murder in first degree.

The test as to what constitutes murder in the first degree is whether the act of killing is preceded by a concurrence of will, deliberation, and premeditation on the part of slayer, regardless of how rapidly these acts of the mind succeeded each other or how quickly they may be followed by the act of killing.

2. Criminal law ⊂=829(3)—Not error to refuse instructions covered by charge as given.

In a prosecution for homicide held there was no error in refusing instructions on the time between the intention to kill and the act of killing, where the matter was fully covered by the charge as given.

3. Homicide ⊂=300(3, 7)—Requested instructions held not applicable to evidence and erroneous.

Instructions on self-defense held properly refused as embracing matter not included in the testimony and because contrary to law.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

George Donnelly was convicted of murder in the first degree, a new trial was denied, and he appeals. Affirmed.

A. B. Reynolds, of Sacramento, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

WASTE, J. The defendant was charged with the crime of murder. Both he and the deceased were prisoners in the state prison at Folsom. The jury returned a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree, without recommendation, and the defendant was sentenced to pay the extreme penalty. He made a motion for a new trial, which was denied, and he now appeals from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying his motion.

Defendant urges but two points: First, that the evidence does not show that degree of premeditation essential to constitute murder in the first degree; second, that the court erred in refusing certain instructions requested by him.

In support of his first contention defendant claims that there is no evidence showing any motive for the killing of Morse by himself, except a sudden quarrel that arose between Morse and a fellow prisoner, in which the defendant participated. He admits that the killing was accompanied with malice, but contends that the evidence does not show a deliberate and permeditated attempt to slay Morse, and, lacking in this intent, is not sufficient to sustain a conviction of murder in the first degree. We have carefully read the entire record, and are convinced that this contention cannot be sustained. The killing took place in the corridor of the prison on November 12, 1921, between 4 and 5 o'clock, at a time when the prisoners were assembling for the purpose of marching into the dining room to partake of their evening meal. They were not yet in line, but were "bunched up." Morse had taken a position near another prisoner, Edwin Silva, who was friendly with and a prison pal of the defendant. Morse and Silva became engaged in a bitter quarrel. The defendant, overhearing the remarks passing between the two quarreling prisoners, approached them, addressed a remark to Morse, and stabbed him twice in the neck, severing the spinal cord and penetrating the spine, from which injury he died a few hours later.

[1] It appears that there was no appreciable time between the remark addressed by the defendant to Morse and the fatal blow. But that fact, of itself, does not lessen the degree of the crime. "There need be no appreciable space of time between the intention to kill, and the act of killing. They may be as instantaneous as successive thoughts of the mind. It is only necessary that the act of killing be preceded by a concurrence of will, deliberation, and premeditation, on the part of the slayer, and, if such is the case, the killing is murder of the first degree, no matter how rapidly these acts of the mind succeeded each other, or how quickly they may be followed by the act of killing." People v. Cotta, 49 Cal. 166, 168; People v. Sanchez, 24 Cal. 17, 30.

[2] Appellant contends that the court erred in refusing to give an instruction, reading in part as follows:

"But while the fatal purpose or intent and its execution may follow thus rapidly upon each other, it is proper for you to take into consideration the shortness of such interval, if such be the fact, in considering whether such sudden and speedy execution may not be attributed to sudden passion and anger, rather than to the deliberation and premeditation, which must characterize the higher offense."

---

The court did not err in refusing the instruction. The subject-matter was fully covered by other portions of the charge. The court very carefully instructed the jury on every phase of murder, and gave special attention to the matter of the degree of deliberation and premeditation necessary to constitute murder in the first degree.

[3] The defendant requested the court to give the following instruction:

"The court instructs the jury that if you believe from the evidence that the deceased was a man of superior strength to the defendant, and that by reason of such superior strength he was regarded by defendant as able to do him serious bodily injury, and further believe from the evidence that said deceased assaulted defendant, or by his words or acts produced in the mind of defendant a reasonable apprehension or fear of assault, or if you believe from the evidence that defendant had been informed that deceased had threatened to kill him or do him serious bodily injury, and further believe from the evidence that said deceased assaulted defendant, or by his words or acts produced in the mind of defendant a reasonable apprehension or fear of assault, or if you believe from the evidence that defendant had been informed that deceased had threatened to kill him or do him serious bodily harm, and that at the time of the difficulty deceased did some act manifesting an intention to execute such threat, or threats, and that said act produced a reasonable apprehension in defendant's mind that deceased was about to execute said threat, defendant had the right to defend himself with all necessary force, viewing the matter from his standpoint in the light of all the surrounding facts and circumstances, including the character and reputation of deceased. 148 S. W. 746."

The court refused to give this instruction, indorsing thereon, "Refused. This proposed instruction covers much not included in the testimony, and hence is not applicable to the facts." This statement of the trial court is correct, and it was not error to refuse the instruction. The instruction was also against law in particulars which we do not now need to point out, for the law in relation to self-defense was correctly stated, and the subject was fully covered in other instructions given by the court.

No other points are urged by the appellant. However, in view of the fact that the judgment of conviction carries with it the infliction of the extreme penalty, we have carefully read the entire record, and find nothing therein indicating that the defendant did not have a fair and impartial trial, or that the evidence was insufficient to warrant his conviction.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; WILBUR, J.; LAWLOR, J.; LENNON, J.; RICHARDS, Justice pro tem.

59 Cal. App. 225

CALIFORNIA NOTION & TOY CO. et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION et al.
(Civ. 4313.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Sept. 28, 1922.)

Master and servant ⟸405(4)—Compensable disability held not shown.

Where there was no evidence that compensation applicant sustained, by reason of a fall, any physical injury contributing to his disability, and uncontradicted medical testimony showed that there was no serious injury, and that the disability was a vascular cortical lesion, caused by high blood pressure, which condition and resulting symptoms had no connection with his employment, applicant did not sustain burden of proving that his disability arose out of his employment.

Certiorari by the California Notion & Toy Company and another against the Industrial Accident Commission and others, to review an order awarding compensation for injuries. Award annulled.

Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

A. E. Graupner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

LANGDON, P. J. This matter comes to us upon a writ of review. It is contended by petitioner that an award of the Industrial Accident Commission, allowing compensation to Edward G. Fennig for a period from September 24, 1921, to February 28, 1922, the date of the award, is unwarranted, and should be annulled. The Commission found that, since the injury, the applicant has been suffering from a diseased condition of the blood vessels, and any disability existing after the date of the award is due to said diseased condition, and not to said injury.

Edward G. Fennig, at the time of the accident involved here, was a man of the age of about 63 years. He had been employed for 25 years as a salesman and stock clerk by the California Notion & Toy Company. He had worked continually and steadily in his employment, and had not had occasion to require the services of a physician except occasionally for a cold. On September 16, 1921, he was attempting to take down some stock from the shelves. He had a short, movable ladder which he had carried to the shelves. He stated at the hearing that his recollection of the matters immediately preceding the accident and of the accident itself was not clear, and that he thought he went up the ladder about four or five steps, but that he really did not remember whether he had mounted the ladder or not. He had no recollection of having fallen, and, indeed, recalled nothing from the time he started to mount the ladder until he was being taken downstairs by a fellow employee, who had found him lying on the floor with the ladder on top of him.

The symptoms of which Fennig complained were nervousness and an inability to talk coherently and think correctly. The only physical injuries which were apparent after his fall were a bruise and small cut on his head and some bruises on his legs. He stated that he was unable to return to his work because of his inability to speak intelligibly and his tendency to become fatigued very easily.

At the request of petitioners an order was made by the Industrial Accident Commission for an examination of the applicant by a medical examiner to be appointed by the Commission. The record contains several medical reports, which is all the evidence in the record to explain the cause of the accident. One of these concludes with the statement:

"In arriving at a decision as to whether his cerebral lesion is intra or extra cerebral, and whether he may have had his cerebral accident and then fallen, or fallen and then had the development of cerebral picture, it will be necessary to have fundus findings, X-rays of head, urine examination, et al. The patient should be in a hospital. In any event, his arterial condition—and there has long been present arterial disease—is the fundamental basis of his picture."

The second report concludes with the opinion:

"No signs of head injury have been found. No evidence of fracture of the skull or of brain injury without fracture. The aphasia and neurological findings on the right side of body are due to an interference in cerebral circulation. Further study in hospital of cardiovascular system and X-rays of head were advised. The patient and family were opposed to his entering hospital, but subsequent X-rays were taken and no evidence of fracture found."

Another medical report stated:

"It would seem to me, basing this opinion more on clinical experience and also on the symptomatology in this case than on definite demonstrable pathological evidence, that the patient suffered a vascular cortical lesion rather on the basis of his high blood pressure and arteriosclerosis than as a result of his injury. In other words, I am inclined to the belief that he fell because of a vascular disorder and the fall did not produce it."

The applicant refused to go to a hospital and submit to a more thorough examination.

There was no other evidence offered upon the question before us for decision, i. e.: Was the applicant injured in the course of his employment and did his injury arise out of his employment? The Industrial Accident Commission has found in favor of the applicant upon these matters and in support of its findings urges upon our attention the case of Eastman Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 186 Cal. 587, 200 Pac. 17. The petitioners, with equal earnestness, contend that the present case is analogous to the case of Brooker v. Industrial Accident Commission, 176 Cal. 275, 168 Pac. 126, L. R. A. 1918F, 878.

An analysis of the cases relied upon by the respective parties hereto and of the cases cited therein would seem to establish:

(1) Where the proximate and immediate cause of the injury is disability arising solely from an idiopathic or subjective condition, the weight of authority, including the decisions of this state, are against recovery, though the injury clearly occurs in the course of employment. Eastman Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra.

(2) The burden of proving that the injury arose out of the employment is upon the applicant. Casualty Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 176 Cal. at page 533, 169 Pac. 76. A failure to sustain a burden of proof cannot be remedied by a finding based upon guess, conjecture, or surmise. Glass on Workmen's Compensation Law, pp. 39, 40; Puckhaber v. Southern Pac. Co., 132 Cal. 363, 64 Pac. 480.

We are of the opinion that the instant case is clearly differentiated from the case of Eastman Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra. It was pointed out therein, with much precision, that, even though the immediate cause of the fall of the driver from the truck was heart disease, it did not appear that the fall or the heart disease caused his death; that the death was caused, according to medical testimony appearing in the record, by the passage of the wheels of the truck over his body after he had fallen to the street. In other words, neither the constitutional weakness of the deceased nor his resulting fall caused his death, but his death was caused by the automobile operated in the course of his employment. In the case of Wicks v. Dowell, L. R. (1905) 2 K. B. Div. 225, cited by our Supreme Court in the Eastman Co. Case, supra, a man subject to epileptic fits was standing on a wooden stage in a ship close to the hatchway. By reason of fit, he fell into the hold and was injured by the fall. The court held that, while the cause of the fall was the fit, the cause of the injury was the fall, which was incident to the employment over the open hatchway.

The reasoning of the cases we have discussed herein, as well as the reasoning of other cases cited by the parties hereto, by analogy, has brought us to the conclusion that the applicant in the instant case has not sustained the burden of proving that his disability arose out of his employment. He offered no evidence to contradict the opinion of experts, who had made careful medical examinations, that the fall was occasioned by a vascular disorder. Nevertheless, had applicant, because of his fall, sustained a fracture of his skull or a broken limb or any other injury attributable to his fall, that injury would have arisen out of his employment under the reasoning in the case of Eastman Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra; and, had such injury resulted in disability, it would have formed the basis for an award by the Commission. But there is no evidence that applicant sustained, by reason of his fall, any physical injury which has resulted in or contributed to his disability. The medical testimony is that there is no evidence of any fracture of the skull or head injury, and the only injuries sustained by the fall, so far as the record discloses, were bruises on the legs and a bruise and a small cut on the head. The real disability from which the applicant was suffering at the time of the hearing, according to all the testimony, including his own, was inability to articulate his words, lapse of memory, confused thinking, and fatigue, and these symptoms were caused, according to the only testimony before us, by a vascular cortical lesion, caused by high blood pressure. This condition and the resulting symptoms had no possible connection with his employment. There is no evidence that, because of any thing or any duty incident to his employment, the consequences of this disorder were aggravated or its results in any way changed.

It is the duty and purpose of this court to construe liberally the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 831) to effectuate its purposes and to charge to industry injuries to its employees properly chargeable thereto. But we can see neither reason nor justice in laying down a principle which would give to a man stricken with paralysis while at his place of business, the right to throw the financial burden of his disability upon his employer where the disability was in no measure increased or contributed to by the employment, and the physical conditions causing the same were in no measure due thereto. In such a case, the rights of the employee are no greater than they would have been had the attack occurred at his own home unless it is shown that his disability was in some way increased or affected by the incident of place.

The award of the Industrial Accident Commission is annulled.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 240

PEOPLE v. SAVINOVICH et al. (Civ. 891.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 30, 1922.)

1. Criminal law ⟸779—Evidence insufficient to warrant instruction as to acts of conspirators.

In an arson prosecution of three defendants, evidence held insufficient to warrant an instruction as to admissibility of acts and declarations of conspirators.

2. Criminal law ⟸814(1)—Charges restricted to law applicable to question within issues.

Although, under Pen. Code, §§ 1093, 1127, the trial judge should charge on points pertinent to the issues when requested, and state all matters of law for the jury's information, such charge should be restricted to questions within the issues.

3. Criminal law ⟸761(3), 1172(3)—Charge covering assumed issue not supported by evidence, is erroneous, and if prejudicial, calls for reversal.

When a charge, even though a correct statement of abstract legal principles, is extended so as to cover an assumed issue finding no support in the evidence, it constitutes error which, if prejudicial, will warrant reversal of judgment of conviction.

4. Criminal law ⟸779—Instruction as to evidence of acts of conspirators to commit arson error.

In a prosecution of three defendants for arson, an instruction, that if evidence had been introduced establishing a conspiracy between either of defendants, then that act or declaration of either in furtherance of the object was competent evidence against the others, was erroneous as meaning that if two of them had entered into an agreement to burn the building and either one acted in furtherance of the object, their acts and declarations were competent against the third, although he was not a party to the conspiracy.

5. Criminal law ⟸1172(6)—Instruction that lodgers in building burned need not be actual owners harmless, where not shown that there were any lodgers.

In a prosecution for arson of a building occupied by human beings, in the nighttime, where there was no evidence that lodgers were in the building at the time of the fire, an instruction that if there were lodgers in the building at the time of the alleged fire, it was not necessary that they be the actual owners of the premises, was not prejudicial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Charles Savinovich and others were convicted of arson and they appeal. Reversed.

Ernest R. Utley, of Calexico, Harry W. Horton, of El Centro, and O. V. Willson, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., and E. R. Simon, Dist. Atty., and Harry B. Ellison, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of El Centro, for the People.

SHAW, J. The above-named defendants were jointly charged by information with the crime of arson, in that they, on or about October 2, 1921, willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and maliciously in the nighttime of said day, set fire to and caused to be burned a certain inhabited building with the felonious intent to destroy the same, which said building was then and there occupied by human beings. The jury found all of the defendants guilty of arson in the first degree. Judgment of imprisonment in the state prison was thereupon pronounced, and defendants have appealed therefrom and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

It appears that the defendants owned and conducted a restaurant in the city of El Centro, known as the "San Francisco Grill." About July 1st defendant Savinovich left El Centro for Los Angeles, employing Nick Lettunich to act in his stead in the conduct of the business, and for which service he individually was to compensate him. About August 20th Lettunich severed his connection with the firm, after which it was conducted, in the absence of Savinovich, by defendants Markovich and Rapur, the former still holding his interest in the firm. The fire occurred in the kitchen of the restaurant about 9 o'clock p. m. on October 2, 1921, and a few days thereafter Savinovich, receiving information of the fire, returned to El Centro. Over the restaurant in the second story of the building was a lodging house, known as the "Panama Rooms," conducted by Douglas Doty and wife, with whom lived Harvey Buckley, a son of the latter. While there is no evidence that any persons other than the three named were at the time occupants of the building as lodgers, it does appear that, while Mrs. Doty was temporarily absent from the building, they were occupying the same as a home. Mr. Doty, it appears, was in one of the rooms occupied by his family, over the kitchen of the restaurant, when he discovered the fire by noticing smoke coming up through the floor, to which fact he called the attention of young Buckley, who at the time had returned to his room in the building from which he had a few minutes before absented himself.

A number of assignments of error are urged in support of a reversal of the judgment and order, chief among which is the fact that the court instructed the jury as follows:

"If any evidence has been introduced in this case tending to establish a confederation or conspiracy to commit the offense charged in the information, between either of the defendants, then I instruct you that any act or declaration of either confederate in furtherance of the object and purpose of the confederation, is competent evidence against the others, if you believe beyond a reasonable doubt that a conspiracy existed to commit the offense."

It is insisted, first, that there is no evidence, either direct or circumstantial, tending to establish a conspiracy between the defendants to commit the offense, and hence it was error to instruct the jury as to conspiracy; and, second, assuming the existence of such evidence, the instruction was erroneous in that the jury were told that if a conspiracy was formed between any two of the defendants and either of them acted in furtherance of the object and purpose of the conspiracy, such fact was competent evidence against all of the defendants.

The only evidence to which we are directed by the Attorney General touching the question of a conspiracy is the testimony of Lettunich, who stated that when he was employed about July 1st he had a conversation with Savinovich, wherein the latter said "it would be worth $150 if I burned the place up for him." That was all that was said by Savinovich or himself with reference to the matter, and no money was paid to him other than $15 for advance wages. He never repeated this statement to either of the other defendants or informed them in any way of what Savinovich said to him. He further says that about the 6th of August he was present in the kitchen with Markovich and Rapur, at which time one of them—though he could not remember which one—made the remark that the only way they could pay their bills would be to burn the place. "They did not know how they were going to pay their bills; that the business was getting rotten and the only way they could make any money was to burn it." And in answer to the question: "Which one of the defendants said that to the other, do you know?" he said, "No, sir; I could not testify to that." When asked as to the condition of the business, if he knew, he replied, "Well, I don't think it paid." He further stated that they owed several hundred dollars, fixing the amount at $250 or $300. Neither Markovich nor Rapur ever made any proposition to him to burn the building. There was some evidence tending to prove that the value of the equipment of the restaurant was five or six thousand dollars; but we are by the Attorney General directed to no testimony whatsoever showing that the property was insured, or that any motive existed for burning it.

[1, 2] Conceding it does not require direct evidence to prove the existence of a conspiracy to commit a crime (People v. Eldridge, 147 Cal. 782, 82 Pac. 442), and that it may be established by facts and circumstances from which the fact may be fairly inferred (People v. Donnolly, 143 Cal. 398, 77 Pac. 177), we are nevertheless of the opinion that the meager testimony quoted was insufficient to warrant the court in instructing the jury as to a conspiracy had between the defendants to burn the building. While it is true that the trial judge, under the provisions of sections 1093 and 1127 of the Penal Code, should charge the jury on points pertinent to the issues when requested by either party, and state to them all matters of law for their information, nevertheless such charge should be restricted to such matters of law applicable to questions which are fairly within the issues tried.

[3] When the charge, even though a correct statement of abstract legal principles, is extended beyond such limitations so as to cover an assumed issue which finds no support in the evidence, it constitutes error which, if prejudicial, will warrant a reversal of a judgment of conviction. State v. De Wolfe, 29 Mont. 415, 74 Pac. 1084; Territory v. Claypool, 11 N. M. 568, 71 Pac. 463; Territory v. Leslie, 15 N. M. 240, 106 Pac. 378; Blashfield on Instructions to Juries (2d Ed.) § 82. Assuming it to be true that, as stated by the witness Lettunich, he was told by Savinovich three months prior to the fire that it would be worth $150 if he burned the place, it does not appear that either Rapur or Markovich had any knowledge of the making of the proposal, or that Savinovich entered into an unlawful agreement with his partners to burn the building. And assuming likewise that either Rapur or Markovich, in the presence of the witness Lettunich, made the statement that the only profit to be derived from the business was to burn the place, there is no evidence or circumstance established which would justify the inference that the other assented to it, or that Savinovich, absent from El Centro, was a party to such an agreement, if made.

[4] Conceding, however, that the evidence was sufficient to warrant the court in instructing the jury as to conspiracy, the instruction given upon the subject is not only erroneous but was well calculated to confuse and mislead the jury in considering the testimony. They were told that if there was a conspiracy (as to which no definition was given) to commit the offense charged between either of the defendants, which, since one person cannot conspire with himself (Carl Corper Brewing Co. v. Minwegen & Weiss Mfg. Co., 77 Ill. App. 213), must have been understood by the jury as referring to any two of them, then the act or declaration of either of such two so conspiring in furtherance of the object of the conspiracy was competent evidence against the others and each of them. The term "others" clearly has reference to the other defendants. Clearly, the meaning of the instruction, according to the plain import of the language employed, was that if Rapur and Markovich had entered into an agreement to burn the building, and either one acted in furtherance of the object of such agreement, his or their acts and declarations were competent evidence against Savinovich, although it might clearly appear that he was not a party to the conspiracy and wholly ignorant of its existence. In view of the meager and unsatisfactory evidence of the witness Lettunich, and the fact that the jury were not informed as to what constituted a confederation or conspiracy to commit the act, the instruction, under the circumstances shown, was highly prejudicial to the defendants. There is no direct evidence that either of them set fire to the building, and the verdict of guilty was undoubtedly based upon the belief that some one at least of the three was desirous of having the property destroyed by fire and, so believing, the jury found that a conspiracy existed and that the act of such one was competent evidence showing the guilt of the others.

[5] Another instruction complained of is as follows:

"You are instructed that if you believe there were lodgers in the building at the time of the alleged fire, it is not necessary that said lodgers be the actual owners of the premises."

While Doty and his wife conducted the lodging house, and while it sufficiently appears that at the time of the fire Mr. Doty was in his room when he discovered the fire, nevertheless there is no evidence whatever that the rooms were occupied by lodgers other than Doty's family at the time of the fire. Hence there was no evidence upon which the jury could believe there were lodgers in the building at the time of the fire. They might, from the fact that the upper rooms were devoted to the purposes of conducting a lodging house, have believed that lodgers were in the building, but there was no evidence upon which to base such belief. However, as to this instruction, since there was testimony showing that Doty, who made his home in the building, was in his room at the time of the fire, it cannot be deemed prejudicial to the defendants.

There are other alleged errors predicated upon the introduction and rejection of testimony, which, however, in view of our conclusion, it is unnecessary to consider.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 276

In re COOK. (Civ. 4292.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 2, 1922.)

1. Evidence ⟸498½—Question of competency of witness to testify to competency of person to take care of herself and her property is within discretion of the court.

In a proceeding to restore a person under guardianship to competency, the question of competency of witness to testify as to the competency of such person to take care of herself and her property is within the discretion of the court.

2. Appeal and error ⟸971(2)—Ruling of trial court as to competency of witnesses not disturbed in absence of abuse of discretion.

The appellate court will not disturb the ruling of the trial court as to the competency of witnesses to testify to the ability of a person under guardianship to take care of herself and of her property in the absence of an abuse of such a discretion.

---

⟸For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; R. L. Thompson, Judge.

In the matter of the estate and guardianship of Eliza Cook, incompetent. From an order restoring respondent to competency, certain of her sons appeal. Affirmed.

Gale & Gale and W. F. Cowan, all of Santa Rosa, for appellants.

F. A. Meyer, of Petaluma, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. This is an appeal from an order of the trial court restoring to competency the respondent Eliza Cook, who had been adjudged an incompetent by order of the superior court on October 25, 1917. The trial court found after a full and fair hearing that the respondent was of sound mind and capable of taking care of herself and of her property, and that she was not likely to be deceived or imposed upon by artful or designing persons.

Appellants, who are sons of the respondent, attack the order upon the ground that the evidence is insufficient to support this finding, and upon the further ground that the witnesses called by respondent to testify as to her competency were not intimate acquaintances of the respondent having sufficient knowledge of her business ability and affairs to qualify them as witnesses upon the subject-matter of respondent's competency.

As to the first point, respondent presented a mass of evidence of medical witnesses and others who had had business dealings with her for many years past, and the weight of all this testimony was to the effect that the respondent was of sound mind, able, and competent to take care of herself and of her property, and not likely to be deceived or imposed upon by artful or designing persons. The evidence is without conflict, and clearly supports the finding.

[1, 2] The second point urged by appellants is, in effect, that the witnesses called by respondent did not show sufficient intimacy with respondent's ability to transact her business or manage her property to qualify them as witnesses upon the subject of her competency. Appellants concede, as of course they must, that the question of the competency of the witnesses to testify is within the discretion of the trial court, and that the appellate court will not disturb the ruling of the trial court in the absence of an abuse of such discretion. In the case presented it would have been an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court if it had refused to let these witnesses testify. There is no merit in the appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

59 Cal. App. 324

KHAN v. ZEMANSKY et al. (Civ. 2453.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 13, 1922.)

1. Witnesses ⟸319—Cannot be impeached on immaterial matters.

A witness cannot be impeached on immaterial matters.

2. Witnesses ⟸383—Where place of marriage was immaterial, defendant's wife could not be impeached by showing her contradictory evidence.

Where plaintiff's wife, on cross-examination by defendant, testified as to the place where she had married the plaintiff, evidence that in a trial between other parties she had testified that they had been married in another state, was not admissible for purpose of impeachment, the time or place of marriage being wholly immaterial to any issue in the case.

3. Witnesses ⟸388(2)—Where witness was not asked whether she had made inconsistent statement, testimony as to such statement inadmissible for impeachment.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2052, a witness could not be impeached by evidence of statement inconsistent with her testimony, where there was no foundation laid by asking her whether she had made such inconsistent statement.

4. Witnesses ⟸406—Where witness accounted for his presence in store by evidence of sale of oil stock to employee, employee's testimony that sale was on another day admissible for impeachment.

In action for conversion of diamond ring, in which a witness testified that he saw defendant deliver a diamond ring to plaintiff in defendant's stock, and accounted for his presence in the store by testimony that he had sold oil stock to one of defendant's employees, the employee's testimony that he had made but one purchase of oil stock from the witness and check dated on a day other than that on which the witness had testified he had seen defendant hand plaintiff the ring, held admissible to discredit the testimony of the witness that he was in the store on the date on which he had testified he had seen defendant hand the ring to the plaintiff under Code Civ. Proc. § 1868.

5. Trial ⟸260(3) — Refusal of instructions covered by given instructions not error.

Refusal of instructions as to burden of proof was not error, where instructions given fully and correctly stated the law as to the burden of proof.

6. Witnesses ⟸343—Striking out evidence as to plaintiff's reputation held not abuse of discretion, where witnesses testified that they did not know where plaintiff lived.

In action for conversion, where police officers testified for impeachment purposes, as to plaintiff's "reputation" and not his "general reputation," and further testified that they did not know where plaintiff lived but merely knew where he had been engaged in business, but the evidence did not show the length of time plaintiff was engaged in such business, or whether the officers' knowledge of his reputation was acquired from those with whom the plaintiff usually associated or came into contact, or whether it was a reputation among the police officers only, the court did not abuse its discretion in striking out such testimony as to his reputation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; C. O. Busick, Judge.

Action by K. Khan against Abe Zemansky and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

C. E. McLaughlin and C. P. McLaughlin, both of Sacramento, for appellants.

John R. Connelly and J. F. Gaffney, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. Plaintiff was given judgment against both defendants for the possession of a diamond ring or the value thereof in case delivery could not be made.

It is contended "'that there is no basis for the judgment against defendant Perky. The evidence shows without dispute that he was a salesman in the store of defendant Zemansky." The complaint alleges that the defendants came into possession of the ring and retained possession thereof. The answer alleges:

"That on or about the 10th day of March, 1920, said plaintiff left with said defendants a diamond ring, which was the only diamond ring claimed, or in the possession of plaintiff, of which defendants or either of them ever had possession, to be sold by defendants * * * and said diamond ring was, on or about the 19th day of March, 1920, by said defendant Abe Zemansky given and returned to the possession of said plaintiff."

It is thus plain that the only issue to be tried was whether the ring had been returned. The evidence bearing on this issue was sharply conflicting. There was ample evidence, if believed, to support the implied finding of the jury that the ring had not been returned. Since the answer admits that both defendants received the ring, the judgment against Perky cannot be disturbed for want of evidence to support it.

[1-3] The plaintiff is a Hindu. His wife is a white woman. Both testified at the trial. Both testified that they were husband and wife. On cross-examination both testified that they were married in Helena, Mont. The court sustained objections to questions as to the time of the marriage and refused to permit the defendants to impeach Mrs. Khan by showing that, in a trial between other parties, she had testified that she and the plaintiff were married in California. The time or place of marriage was wholly immaterial to any issue in the case. It is settled that a witness cannot be impeached on immaterial matters. Further, Mrs. Khan was not asked whether she had made the alleged inconsistent statement, and hence, there was no foundation for the impeaching question. Code Civ. Proc. § 2052.

[4] E. C. Turney was sworn as a witness for defendants and testified that he was in Zemansky's store March 19, 1920, and there saw Zemansky deliver a diamond ring to plaintiff. He fixed the date by a sale of oil stock he made in the store on that day to one of Zemansky's employees. On cross-examination, Turney said he thought that he had sold some oil stock to W. W. McFall on the same day. In rebuttal, counsel for plaintiff called McFall as a witness, who testified that he made but one purchase of oil stock from Turney and produced the check given in payment therefor, dated May 10, 1920. He further stated that he thought the check was dated the day of the purchase, but could not say positively that such was the fact. Since Turney had fixed the time at which he saw the ring delivered to plaintiff by reference to a sale of oil stock made on that day, and stated on cross-examination that he thought he had made a sale of stock to McFall on the same day, the testimony given by McFall was admissible as tending in some degree to discredit Turney's statement that he was in Zemansky's store March 19th. Code Civ. Proc. § 1868; Davis v. California Powder-Works, 84 Cal. 617, 24 Pac. 387; Wigmore on Evidence, § 1005 (f). Even if the admission of such testimony were error, "an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence," does not show "that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice." Const. art. 6, § 4½.

[5] The court refused to instruct the jury as follows:

"The burden is upon the plaintiff to prove his case to a moral certainty; that is, by that degree of proof which ordinarily produces conviction in an unprejudiced mind."

The court instructed the jury:

"That the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to establish by a preponderance of the evidence each of the material allegations in the complaint not admitted by the answer. * * * That by a preponderance of evidence is meant that evidence which, after a consideration of all the evidence, is, in the judgment of the jury, entitled to the greatest weight; that testimony which points to a certain conclusion appears to be more credible and probable than the testimony to the contrary, that is more convincing. It does not mean necessarily a greater number of witnesses, but only such evidence that satisfies an unprejudiced mind of the truth of the allegations to be established by the party upon whom rests the burden of proof."

The instructions given fully and correctly state the law as to burden of proof, and it follows that the defendants were not prejudiced by the refusal to give the proposed instruction.

[6] The court struck out the testimony of two character witnesses produced by the defendants for the purpose of impeaching the plaintiff as a witness. T. N. Koenig, a police officer for 20 years, and having charge of the detective bureau at the time of the trial, testified that he knew plaintiff's "reputation in the community in which he lives for truth, honesty and integrity," and that it is bad. On cross-examination, the witness testified: "I know his business; I do not know where he lives, never did know where he lives." On motion of counsel for plaintiff, his testimony was stricken out. Manifestly this was not error. Martin A. Pennish, a retired police officer, who had retired 18 months before the trial, testified that he had known the plaintiff for several years around the lower end of town; that he did not know where plaintiff lived, but knew where he was doing business in November, 1919, "before he moved out"; that witness "knew he was here during that time." Counsel for defendants then propounded the following question: "I will ask you if you know his reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity in the City of Sacramento?" On objection by counsel for plaintiff, the witness was further interrogated and testified that plaintiff "was living here off and on during that time." He was then asked: "Do you know his reputation?" Counsel for plaintiff objected: "We renew the objection on the ground as irrelevant, immaterial and incompetent, he does not know where—." The witness then further testified that plaintiff's residence must have been in Sacramento "or he would not have been here." The court overruled the objection and the witness answered that plaintiff's reputation is bad. On cross-examination the witness testified that he did not know where plaintiff resided since November, 1919; that witness "never knew where he resided." The court thereupon struck out the testimony of the witness. The witness was not asked if he knew the general reputation of the plaintiff for truth, honesty, and integrity, the word "general" being omitted from all questions upon the subject. The objection that the testimony thus sought to be elicited was incompetent should have been sustained, and it was not error for the court to strike it out. People v. Markham, 64 Cal. 157, 163, 30 Pac. 620, 49 Am. Rep. 700; People v. Cord, 157 Cal. 562, 571, 108 Pac. 511; Teese v. Huntingdon, 23 How. 2, 16 L. Ed. 479. The evidence of the witness, considered alone or in connection with the other evidence in the case, was such as to justify the conclusion that he did not know the general reputation of the plaintiff in the neighborhood in which he resided. Some authorities hold that proof of general reputation is not necessarily limited to the neighborhood of the residence of the witness sought to be impeached. In Wigmore on Evidence, § 1616, it is said:

"The traditional phrase about 'neighborhood' reputation was appropriate to the conditions of the time; but it should not be taken as imposing arbitrary limitations not appropriate in other times. Alia tempora, allii mores. What the law then and now desired was a trustworthy reputation; if that is to be found among a circle of persons other than the circle of neighbors about a sleeping place, it should be received."

The evidence here does not show the length of time the plaintiff was engaged in the restaurant business, or whether the witness' knowledge of his reputation was acquired from those with whom the plaintiff usually associated or came in contact, or whether it was a reputation among the police officers only, as in the case of People v. Markham, supra. The reason for limiting such proof to the neighborhood of one's residence is that he there usually spends most of his time and most frequently comes into social and business contact with others. If the rule is to be extended to permit proof of one's reputation in business circles, the party offering such proof may reasonably be required to show the opportunities in such circles of forming a correct estimate of the character of the witness sought to be impeached. It is not an abuse of discretion to require something more than merely that the impeaching witness knows the other's place of business and his reputation in the vicinity of such place.

"The question as to whether a sufficient foundation has been laid to warrant a witness in expressing such an opinion is a matter especially committed to the judgment of the trial court, and unless that discretion is shown to have been clearly abused, there can be no prejudicial error." People v. Love, 29 Cal. App. 521, 525, 157 Pac. 9, 11.

It cannot be said that the court abused its discretion in striking out the testimony of the impeaching witnesses.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANDERSON, Justice pro tem.; BURNETT, J.

59 Cal. App. 234

PRYOR v. McGUIRE. (Civ. 2463.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 29, 1922.)

1. Appeal and error ⟸1011(1)—Findings on conflicting evidence conclusive.

Findings of facts on substantially conflicting evidence are removed from the consideration of the appellate court.

2. Evidence ⟸78—Inferences against party last in possession failing to produce written contract justified.

From the facts that defendant by fraud obtained possession from plaintiff of the written contract between them, that it was last known to be in his possession, that his explanation of his failure to produce it at the trial was not satisfactory, and that if its terms were as he claimed there was no reason for his diligence in obtaining possession of it, as its production would have defeated plaintiff's cause of action, the court was authorized to draw inferences against defendant's version of its contents.

3. Brokers ⟸86(4)—Finding of broker being procuring cause of sale, consummated by owner and broker's customer, authorized.

Finding that broker was the procuring cause of the sale, though it was consummated by the owner and the customer introduced by the broker, held justified by the evidence.

4. Brokers ⟸43(3)—Broker's contract good, though reduced to writing after he produced the purchaser.

The statute of frauds is satisfied rendering a broker's contract with his principal enforceable, though it was not reduced to writing till after the broker had produced the purchaser, the purpose of the statute being to compel the authentication of evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmett Seawell, Judge.

Action by G. E. Pryor against M. McGuire. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. F. Cowan, of Santa Rosa, for appellant.

Fred W. McConnell, of Healdsburg, for respondent.

ANDERSON, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff brought the action to recover a commission as broker for the sale of defendant's land. The case was tried by the court without a jury, and plaintiff had judgment, from which defendant appeals.

The trial court found that "on or about the 3d day of March, 1921, the defendant, by the written agreement hereinafter referred to, employed the plaintiff to find a purchaser for and to sell for the defendant, certain real property, described as follows:

"Ten acres of land adjoining the 'Chisholm Ranch' near Windsor in Sonoma county, Cal., which said real property was at that time in the possession of defendant, and agreed to pay plaintiff for his services, and as his compensation for finding a purchaser for said land, and making a sale thereof, a commission of 5 per cent. for the purchase price accepted by the defendant for said real property from a purchaser found by said plaintiff."

The contract which was offered by plaintiff to support such finding was as follows:

"We, the undersigned, hereby authorize G. E. Pryor, real estate agent, to sell the following described property located in the county of Sonoma, state of California, and described as follows, to wit: 10 acres of land adjoining the Chisholm Ranch near Windsor. [List of Personal Property.] We agree to pay to the said agent $1,000 of the purchase price which is $10,000 or any other amount we may agree to take when the property is sold or a purchaser is found by the said agent. In case the place is sold for less than $10,000, the commission is to be 5 per cent. [Signed] M. McGuire."

The proof of the foregoing contract was established by parol evidence, the original contract having been lost, it having been returned to the defendant (seller), and he failing to produce the same at the trial when called for. This situation produced a conflict in the evidence as to the exact wording of the contract, but the trial court sustained the plaintiff's contention as to the correct wording of the contract.

A question of fraud was also injected into the case by reason of the return of the contract by the broker to the seller, the contention of the plaintiff (broker) being that the contract was returned solely by reason of the fraud and misrepresentation of the defendant. Upon this question the trial court also upheld the contention of the plaintiff (broker).

Appellant also raises some other points, one of which is, granting that the broker produced a purchaser ready, willing, and able to purchase, yet he claims no liability attached against the seller for the reason that said purchaser was produced before the written contract was executed. It was also contended that no liability attached for the reason that the sale was consummated between the buyer and the seller without the aid of the broker.

We will first address ourselves to the findings of the court: (1) That the broker produced a purchaser, able, ready, and willing, and who in fact did purchase the property described in the contract. (2) That the defendant practiced fraud and made false representations for the purpose of obtaining possession of the written contract theretofore executed and delivered to plaintiff.

[1] As to these two essential findings we may say admittedly that there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, and, this being so, the question as a matter of law is removed from the consideration of the appellate court; but in order to ascertain this fact we have read the record, and we are constrained to say that a careful reading of the entire evidence convinces us that the trial court was well justified in making such findings. A comparison of the deposition of the defendant with his testimony given at the trial could not impress one with his frankness—there are evasions and contradictions which the trial court could not overlook.

[2] The learned counsel for appellant earnesty contends that the trial court should have followed the version of the defendant as to the terms contained in the contract, but it must be borne in mind that the original contract was last known to be in the possession of the defendant, and that it was taken from the possession of the plaintiff by the defendant, as the court found, through fraud; and the defendant's explanation of his failure to produce it at the trial could not be said to be entirely satisfactory, and moreover, if the written contract contained the clause which defendant claimed it did contain, there was no reason for the diligence exercised by the defendant in taking the contract out of the hands of the plaintiff.

If it contained the clause as claimed by the defendant, to the effect that plaintiff was to receive no commission whatsoever if the price obtained for the place did not exceed $9,000, then its very presentation would have defeated plaintiff's action. Why should defendant fear it, it being his very weapon of defense, as he claimed? According to defendant's version, for the plaintiff to present the written contract would mean his defeat in the action, and the trial court had a right to draw all reasonable inference from the fact that the defendant did not present the contract.

[3] Appellant makes a further attack upon the judgment for the reason, as he claims, that the broker did not consummate the sale, but that the sale was finally accomplished through the defendant's efforts. We do not deem it necessary to enter upon a recital of the evidence to show that there is sufficient evidence in the record to support the finding of the court that the plaintiff was the procuring cause of the sale, but it is sufficient to state that we are satisfied that the record contains sufficient evidence for such purpose.

Any one conversant with the history of real estate transactions will hardly venture to say which agent displays the greater wisdom, the one who talks much or the one who talks little; which would be the better course to pursue in each particular case becomes a matter of judgment to be exercised by the agent, and whether his judgment has been good or bad can only be determined by results, so if the sale is made, as it was in this case, this may be said to be proof of good judgment.

It may be that the purchaser would prefer to make his inquiries directly of the seller after having been introduced to the seller by the agent, and the agent after talking with the parties, or through any other information he might obtain, may come to the conclusion that it would be better for the owner of the property to do the talking. These are matters of policy with which the court has nothing to do. The only inquiry we are called upon to make is, did the agent perform some valuable service—Did he substantially assist in bringing about the object sought to be attained? To determine this we turn to the record and find that the contract was signed by the defendant, and the purchaser was produced on defendant's ranch by the plaintiff on the 3d day of March, the same day on which the contract was made. On the 17th day of the same month the defendant procured a return of the contract from the plaintiff, and on the 23d day of the same month the sale was consummated.

Considering the short space of time that elapsed between the time of the introduction of the purchaser and the consummation of the sale of the property, we find no cause to complain of lack of diligence on the part of the agent. There is some evidence that between the 3d day of March and the 17th day of the same month, the broker and purchaser discussed the prospective sale; and certainly no complaint can be made of the broker, if he became inactive on and after the 17th of the month, in view of the misleading conduct of the defendant.

As to the claim that the property was finally sold through the efforts of the seller and buyer alone, we must keep in view the fact that such efforts were made with full knowledge on the part of both seller and buyer of the agency of the broker.

This court, speaking through Chipman, P. J., in the case of Hill v. McCoy, 1 Cal. App. at page 166, 81 Pac. at page 1018, say:

"There is always a possibility that, had the broker not brought the seller and buyer together, some other broker might have done so, or the parties might have met by chance and through no agency of any broker, and hence it might be said the employed broker was not the procuring cause of the sale. But where it appears, as here, that the seller and buyer were for the first time brought together by the broker duly authorized to act for the seller, and the sale was subsequently consummated by the same seller and buyer, acting independently of the broker, the broker not having abandoned his agency, and the seller not having revoked the broker's authorization or done any act from which a revocation may be implied, we think the inference is a reasonable one, and may be drawn by the jury, that a sale under such circumstances is effected through the broker's agency as its procuring cause. Especially may this inference be drawn where both seller and buyer have negotiated with knowledge of the broker's previous employment."

There are many cases supporting the doctrine announced in this case, some of which are Roth v. Thomson, 40 Cal. App. 208, 180 Pac. 656; Phelps v. Prusch, 83 Cal. 627, 23 Pac. 1111; Dolan v. Scanlan, 57 Cal. 261; Justy v. Erro, 16 Cal. App. 519, 117 Pac. 575; Shepherd-Teague Co. v. Herman, 12 Cal. App. 394, 107 Pac. 622; Briggs v. Hall, 24 Cal. App. 586, 141 Pac. 1067.

[4] Appellant also contends that the contract is not enforceable for the reason it was not executed until after the plaintiff produced the purchaser. It appears from the record that plaintiff came to the ranch of defendant in company with the purchaser in the forenoon of March 3d, and that late in the afternoon of the same day defendant executed the contract in question.

This question involves the consideration of the purposes for which the statute of frauds was enacted. Mr. Justice Hart exhaustively reviews the authorities in the case In re Balfour & Garrette, 14 Cal. App. 261, 111 Pac. 615, and clearly points out that the better reason and great weight of authority treats the statute of frauds as a means merely of compelling the authenticating of evidence, to the end that certainty may be more readily attained and the door to perjury and misunderstanding closed. The statute is always satisfied when these purposes are subserved. The history of the English statute and the reasons for its enactment fully support this view and explain the reason for the rule.

The following language, contained in a decision from the Supreme Court of the state of Maine, and quoted approvingly by the court In re Balfour, supra, tersely and clearly states the construction to be placed upon the statute of this state: "In other words, is the writing the contract, or only evidence of it? We incline to the latter view."

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 246

GARCIA v. SAINZ. (Civ. 3925.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Sept. 30, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 27, 1922.)

1. Limitation of actions ⟸27—Action on oral promise barred by two-year statute.

Where a complaint stated a cause of action based on an oral promise made more than five years prior to commencement, it was barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 339, which limits actions on contracts, obligation, or liability not founded on an instrument in writing to two years.

2. Money lent ⟸7(3)—Evidence insufficient to support finding for plaintiff.

In an action for money lent, evidence held insufficient to support finding for plaintiff.

3. Evidence ⟸80(1)—Law of foreign state presumed to be same as law of forum.

In an action for money lent, where plaintiff urged that as the transaction wherein the loan was made occurred in Arizona, and since defendant was not shown to have been in California prior to the filing of the complaint, a different rule as to limitation should apply, in the absence of proof to the contrary, the law of Arizona applicable to the facts must be deemed to be the same as that of California.

4. Account stated ⟸1—Defined.

An account stated is a document—a writing—which exhibits the state of account between parties and the balance owing from one to the other, and, when assented to, either expressly or impliedly, it becomes a new contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Account Stated.]

5. Account stated ⟸19(3)—Evidence failed to show an account stated.

Where the only evidence in support of an action on account stated was that plaintiff stated, when defendant paid him the last $12, he would soon have some means whereby he would be able to pay, and there was no exhibition or inspection of the alleged book account, and nothing was said as to what the balance was, the evidence was insufficient to show an agreement, based on an open mutual current book account, showing a specific balance due, which defendant agreed to pay.

6. Limitation of actions ⟸53(1) — Account stated barred by four-year statute.

The time within which an action on account stated should be brought, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 337, is within four years from the date of the last item of account.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; M. W. Conkling, Judge.

Action by J. A. Garcia against Federico A. Sainz. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

M. C. Atchison, of Calexico, for appellant.

Alfred Blaisdell, of Calexico, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The complaint herein contains three counts, by the first of which it is alleged that on August 15, 1915, plaintiff, at the special instance and request of defendant, loaned to him the sum of $1,000, upon which defendant, on November 15, 1915, paid $60, and on December 1, 1916, paid $12, and the further sum of $12 on March 1, 1919. By the second count it is alleged that plaintiff, on August 15, 1915, gave to defendant a check for $1,000, upon which the latter obtained said sum of money and promised to return the same, but has refused and failed to do so, save and except as to the payments thereon set out in the first count of the complaint. The third count alleges that in March, 1919, an account was stated between plaintiff and defendant, whereby it was found that defendant was indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $916, which defendant agreed to pay. In his answer defendant denies that plaintiff loaned him $1,000 as alleged, or that he made the payments thereon so alleged in the first count of the complaint; and likewise denies the delivery to him of the check for $1,000, or that he received payment thereof, and likewise denies that an account was stated between plaintiff and defendant, or that he ever agreed to pay said sum of $916 as alleged in the third count of the complaint. In addition to other affirmative defenses set up in his answer, defendant alleged that each of the causes of action stated in the complaint was barred by the statute of limitations. The court made findings in favor of plaintiff, upon which judgment was entered as prayed for, and from which defendant has appealed.

Appellant, for want of sufficient evidence, attacks the findings to the effect: First, "that there is a balance due plaintiff by defendant upon a mutual, open, and current account by and between the said parties, and based upon a book account"; second, "that on or about the 1st day of March, 1919, an account was stated between the said parties, and upon such statement a balance of $916 was found due said plaintiff from said defendant, and which amount the defendant then and there promised to pay plaintiff"; and, third, that neither of the three causes of action so alleged in the complaint is barred by the statute of limitations.

Accepting plaintiff's meager testimony in the most favorable light, it appears therefrom that on August 15, 1915, he advanced to defendant, in Arizona, the sum of $1,000 as a loan, upon the latter's oral promise to repay the same; that defendant made three payments thereon, as alleged in the complaint; that plaintiff, either at the time of making the loan or some time thereafter, entered in a pocketbook which he carried a memorandum of the $1,000 so loaned to defendant, and thereafter, upon defendant making the payment of $60 and the first $12 payment on account of the loan, on December 1, 1916, he entered the same in his book, but that prior to the making of the second payment of $12 on March 1, 1919, he had lost the book, and no entry thereof was made therein; that at about the time of the making of this last payment he had a conversation with defendant wherein the latter said he would soon have some means whereby he would be enabled to pay the balance of the $1,000 so loaned. The so-called book of account was never exhibited to nor inspected by defendant, and at the time of the alleged statement of account, the balance of which plaintiff claims that defendant agreed to pay, the book had been lost. The action was commenced on April 4, 1921.

[1-3] It thus appears that the first count of the complaint states a cause of action based upon an oral promise made more than five years prior to the commencement of the action, and hence was, as alleged in the answer, barred by section 339, Code of Civil Procedure, which limits the time within which an action may be brought "upon a contract, obligation or liability not founded upon an instrument of writing," except as provided in section 337, Code of Civil Procedure, to two years. The evidence is insufficient to support the finding complained of. Respondent, for some reason not disclosed in his brief, insists that, as the transaction wherein the loan was made occurred in Arizona, and since defendant is not shown to have been in this state prior to the filing of the complaint, a different rule should apply. In the absence of proof to the contrary, the law of Arizona applicable to the facts in the case must be deemed to be the same as that of this state. O'Sullivan v. Griffith, 153 Cal. 502, 95 Pac. 873, 96 Pac. 323; Fox v. Mick, 20 Cal. App. 599, 129 Pac. 972. Assuming that upon the uncertain allegations of the complaint testimony might have been offered tolling the statute and thus extending the time within which plaintiff might enforce his claim, no evidence of such character was presented.

What we have said as to the first cause of action is likewise applicable to the second cause of action.

[4, 5] The third cause of action is based upon an alleged account stated, wherein it was found that defendant was indebted to plaintiff, as shown by the latter's books, in the sum of $916, which sum the defendant agreed to pay. Conceding, but not holding, that the testimony is sufficient to show that the transaction had between plaintiff and defendant with reference to the loan constituted a book account, we are clearly of the opinion that the evidence fails to show that an account was stated between them. "An account stated is a document—a writing—which exhibits the state of account between parties and the balance owing from one to the other, and when assented to, either expressly or impliedly, it becomes a new contract." Coffee v. Williams, 103 Cal. 550, 556, 37 Pac. 504, 506; Gardner v. Watson, 170 Cal. 570, 574, 150 Pac. 994. Since it was lost, the alleged account book was not produced in evidence, and there is no testimony as to the character of the entries relating to the transaction. The last payment of $12, made about March 1, 1919, was not entered therein. An account stated constitutes a new agreement whereby the parties between whom there are reciprocal debits and credits fix and determine the amount due from one to the other. Outwaters v. Brownlee, 22 Cal. App. 535, 135 Pac. 300. The only testimony in support of respondent's contention is that of plaintiff, wherein he says that when defendant paid him the last $12 he stated that he would soon have some means whereby he would be able to pay plaintiff. There was no exhibition or inspection of the alleged book account, and nothing was said as to what such balance was. The plaintiff says:

"I told him [defendant] I needed money, and he told me he was soon going to have business where he could get some money and he would pay me."

The effect of plaintiff's testimony is that some five years prior to the commencement of the action he loaned defendant $1,000 upon his oral promise to repay it, and in some form, undisclosed, he made an entry with reference to it in a pocketbook which he carried, and thereafter, upon defendant making two cash payments on the loan, likewise made note of them, and that later, upon importuning defendant for payment, the latter declared his inability to pay the same, but hoped to get into some business that would enable him to liquidate the indebtedness. The testimony is insufficient to show an agreement between plaintiff and defendant based upon an open, mutual, and current book account that a specific balance was due from one to the other, and which the defendant agreed to pay. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Carmichael, 178 Cal. 446, 173 Pac. 999.

[6] Moreover, conceding the testimony sufficient to show an account stated, as found by the court, the time within which an action thereon should be brought, as provided in section 337, Code of Civil Procedure, is four years, running from the date of the last item of account so entered, which, according to plaintiff's testimony, was the payment of $12 made on December 1, 1916, more than four years prior to the institution of the action. Hence the cause of action was, as alleged in the answer, barred by the statute of limitations.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 200

FEDERAL CONST. CO. v. ENSIGN, Superintendent of Streets. (Civ. 3984.)

(District of Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Sept. 27, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 23, 1922.)

1. Evidence ⟹21—Matter of common knowledge that appurtenances for flow of sewage are seldom constructed in street.

It is a matter of common knowledge that, though sewers are usually laid in streets, the outlets, flush tanks, septic tanks, and other similar appurtenances which take care of the sewage flowing through and from sewers are seldom, if ever, constructed in the streets.

2. Municipal corporations ⟹277—Improvement Act held to authorize construction of sewage disposal plant outside city limits.

Improvement Act of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 730), empowering city councils to construct sewers in streets or in, over, or through property or rights of way owned by the city, with outlets, flush tanks, septic tanks, and other appurtenances, authorizes a city to construct a sewage disposal plant on property owned by it two miles outside of the city limits connecting with the city sewer system through a line over a right of way owned by it.

3. Municipal corporations ⟹438—Local assessments rest upon special benefits to property assessed.

Special benefits to the property to be assessed—that is, benefits received by it in addition to those received by the public at large—is the equitable and just foundation upon which local assessments rest, and no assessment can be made upon any land on any principle other than that of special benefits actually or presumptively received.

4. Municipal corporations ⟹412—Improvement by local assessment must be public and permanent.

To justify a local assessment under the theory of benefits to property, the improvement must be a public one and permanent.

5. Municipal corporations ⟹439—Effect on market value of property assessed fairest test of special benefit by local improvement.

There is no fairer test of special benefit received to an improvement constructed by local assessments than that which determines the existence and amount of such benefit by the effect of the improvement upon the market value of the property to be assessed.

6. Municipal corporations ⟹495—Courts will not inquire into quantum of special benefits where all property so benefited.

Where, in a local improvement district, each and every parcel of land enjoys a special benefit when shared by the general public, the courts will not inquire into the quantum of special benefit which will accrue to the property owners.

7. Municipal corporations ⟹495—Extent of benefits received by local assessments peculiarly within province of assessing authorities.

If, from the nature of the improvement, it can be seen that the lots to be assessed are susceptible of some substantial benefit from it, the question of the extent of the benefit received is one which, in the absence of fraud, gross, injustice, or demonstrable mistake, rests peculiarly in the determination of the assessing authorities, and their action will not be interfered with by the courts.

8. Municipal corporations ⟹417(1)—Construction of sewage disposal plant held local improvement, although local assessment district included entire city.

Where a city, in order to construct a sewage disposal plant outside of the city limits, constituted one district for local assessments, and it appeared that every lot within the city was specially benefited, the enterprise did not thereby cease to be a local improvement, so that the work could not be paid for by special assessment.

9. Municipal corporations ⟸406(1)—Limitation on power of local assessment enumerated.

The only limitation upon the power of local assessments is that the improvement shall be a public one, that it shall confer a special benefit upon the property to be asessed, and that the apportionment of the assessments shall be made upon some basis that is uniform and free from unjust discrimination.

Application by the Federal Construction Company for a writ of mandate to be directed to H. W. Ensign, as Superintendent of Streets of the City of Dinuba, to compel him to formally execute a contract for sewer work. Writ granted.

W. E. Simpson and Gallaher, Simpson & Hays, all of Fresno, for petitioner.

Arthur M. Ellis, of Los Angeles, for defendant.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Petitioner, to whom the board of trustees of the city of Dinuba awarded a contract for the performance of certain public work, brings this proceeding in mandamus to compel respondent, as the city superintendent of streets, to execute the contract.

The city of Dinuba, a municipal corporation of the sixth class, is provided with a complete sewer system. It owns a parcel of land outside of and distant about two miles from its corporate limits, on which it has constructed a sewage disposal plant, consisting of a septic tank and its appurtenances, constructed some years ago for the disposal of the city sewage. That part of the municipal sewer system which lies within the corporate limits of the city is connected with the septic tank by a main sewer line, owned and maintained by the city, and extended to the outside parcel of land on which the septic tank is situated.

So greatly has the population of the municipality increased since the construction of the present septic tank, that the existing sewage disposal plant, of which the tank is the principal constituent, is now wholly inadequate—so much so that the sewage from the city overflows the septic tank, and the effluent therefrom flows into and contaminates the water in certain irrigating ditches which are being used to irrigate nearby farms, orchards and vineyards, thus creating a nuisance which menaces the health of the surrounding community. So serious is the situation that the farmers and others whose irrigating systems are now being polluted by the effluent from the city's present insufficient sewage disposal plant threaten to and will enjoin the city from using the existing inadequate septic tank unless new and adequate tanks be immediately constructed by the city. Should the city be thus restrained, it will be practically impossible for any of its inhabitants to make use of any part of the city's sewer system. To meet so grave a situation the city board of trustees proposes to construct on the parcel of land two miles distant from the city limits—the land on which is now located the present inadequate septic tank—a complete sewage disposal plant, consisting of reinforced hydraulic concrete settling tanks, with outlets, connecting sewers, conduits, and appurtenances. In other words, the proposed work is, as stated in petitioner's brief, "the reconstruction of the present sewage disposal plant, in order that adequate provision may be made for meeting the requirements of the city." With this purpose in view, the city officials inaugurated proceedings under the Improvement Act of 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 730). That act makes the cost of the work authorized thereby payable by special assessments, assessed either upon the lots and lands fronting the improvement, in proportion to frontage, or, in proportion to benefits received, upon the lots and lands within an assessment district to be described in the resolution of intention. In the instant case, the board of trustees, deeming the contemplated improvement of more than local or ordinary public benefit, established an assessment district coextensive with the area of the municipality, and sought to make the expense of the improvement chargeable upon substantially all of the lots and lands within the city, excepting the streets and other public highways in the city and such lands as are owned by the county, the city, or the school board.

The proceedings thus inaugurated by the city trustees progressed through the various legal stages provided by the Improvement Act of 1911, to and including the award of the contract to petitioner as the successful bidder. Respondent, upon whom, as the superintendent of streets, the statute imposes the duty of entering into a formal written contract with every successful bidder, refuses to enter into any contract with petitioner, placing his refusal on the ground that the Improvement Act of 1911 does not contemplate work of the character here proposed. Hence this mandamus proceeding.

Respondent's first point is that work to be done on property lying outside of a municipality's corporate limits, even though such outside property be owned by the city, is within neither the letter nor the spirit of the act.

Section 2 of the Improvement Act of 1911 (omitting parts not essential to the question in controversy) reads:

"Whenever the public interest or convenience may require, the city council is hereby authorized and empowered to order the whole or any portion or portions, either in length or width of any one or more of the streets, avenues, lanes, alleys, courts, places or public ways of any such city graded or regraded to the official grade, * * * and to order the construction or reconstruction therein of sidewalks * * * sewers * * * conduits and channels for sanitary and drainage purposes, * * * with outlets, cesspools, manholes, catch basins, flush tanks, septic tanks, connecting sewers * * * and other appurtenances; * * * and the construction or reconstruction in, over or through property or rights of way owned by such city, of * * * sewers * * * for sanitary and drainage purposes, * * * with necessary outlets, cesspools, manholes, catch basins, flush tanks, septic tanks, connecting sewers * * * and other appurtenances, * * * and to order any work to be done which shall be deemed necessary to improve the whole or any portion of such streets, avenues, sidewalks, lanes, alleys, courts, places, or public ways or property or rights of way of such city."

As will be noticed, the act declares that the legislative body of any city is authorized to order "the whole or any portion * * * of any one or more streets * * * graded * * * and to order the construction or reconstruction therein [i. e., in such streets] of * * * sewers * * * with outlets, * * * flush tanks, septic tanks, connecting sewers * * * and other appurtenances." The act does not say that the "outlets, flush tanks, connecting sewers * * * and other appurtenances" which may be constructed or reconstructed with the sewers shall be constructed or reconstructed in the streets, nor even that they shall be constructed within the city's corporate limits. On the contrary, the Legislature, in seeming recognition of the fact that every municipality may be confronted with its own peculiar engineering problems respecting the disposal of its sewage, has wisely refrained from saying that the outlets, flush tanks, etc., which are authorized to be constructed "with" the sewers shall be constructed in any particular place or locality. Indeed, the Legislature, recognizing, apparently, that it often is necessary to leave to the local authorities a wide latitude of discretion respecting the place or places where the outlets, flush tanks, etc., and even the sewers themselves, may be constructed, has specifically declared in this same section of the act that the city authorities shall have the power to order the construction or reconstruction of sewers, with necessary outlets, flush tanks, etc., "in, over or through property or rights of way owned by such city," without in any wise attempting to place any restriction upon the place or places where such city-owned property or rights of way shall be located.

[1, 2] It is a matter of common knowledge that, though the sewers are usually laid in streets, the outlets, flush tanks, septic tanks and other similar appurtenances which take care of the sewage flowing through and from sewers are seldom, if ever, constructed in the streets. Indeed, we cannot imagine a case where scientific engineering would sanction the construction of a settling tank or a septic tank in a street of such a municipality as the city of Dinuba, for the purpose of taking care of the sewage flowing from the city's entire sewer system, The construction of such outlets, flush tanks, septic tanks, etc., on lands lying outside of the city limits is not at all uncommon in this state. And when the act declares that city councils may construct sewers in streets, or in, over, or through property or rights of way owned by the city, with outlets, flush tanks, septic tanks, and other appurtenances, it undoubtedly contemplates the possible, if not probable, construction of such adjuncts to the city's sewer system as flush tanks, etc., upon any convenient and appropriate parcel of land or right of way owned by the city, even though such land or right of way be located without the city's corporate limits.

Counsel for defendant says that the Improvement Act of 1911 is essentially a "street improvement act," and that therefore no improvement may be made of property situated outside the city's corporate limits. The object and true scope of such work as that under consideration here is not the improvement of the land upon which the proposed settling tanks, etc., are to be constructed. The proposed improvement is for the benefit of the inhabitants of the city and their lots and lands. Existing conditions are such that it is absolutely necessary that the present sewer system shall have a larger and a more adequate sewage disposal plant. To make the present sewer system of any real benefit to the lot owners and other inhabitants of the city of Dinuba, a larger sewage disposal plant must be constructed No natural outlet for the city's sewage can be found within the city's corporate limits. Nor does it appear that the municipality owns any property within its corporate limits that is suitable for the erection thereon of an adequate sewage disposal plant; and if the city does not own any such property within its boundaries, then obviously it is absolutely requisite that its sewer system be extended some distance beyond the city limits, and there be connected with suitable flush tanks, etc., in order properly to dispose of the city's sewage. But it does not follow, because that is the case, that the assessments which may be made to pay for this work will be made for an improvement outside of the city. The construction of larger and more suitable flush tanks on the city's outside property is not an improvement for that property, but is one for the benefit of the inhabitants of the city and the lots and lands therein—an improvement rendered necessary by reason of the geographical condition of the land upon which the city is located. The power given by the Improvement Act of 1911 to construct sewers within the incorporated limits of the city would be a useless one indeed if the system of sewers within the city could not be connected with some outlet or with some sewage disposal plant; and, should we hold that this act does not give the city power to extend any part of the municipal sewer system beyond the city's corporate limits, when it is necessary to do so in order to obtain an outlet or to connect with a suitable sewage disposal plant, such a narrow interpretation would defeat the obvious intention of the Legislature in passing the statute. In Shreve v. Town of Cicero, 129 Ill. 226, 21 N. E. 815; Cochran v. Village of Park Ridge, 138 Ill. 295, 27 N. E. 939, and Maywood Co. v. Village of Maywood, 140 Ill. 216, 29 N. E. 704, cases arising under local improvement acts the Illinois Supreme Court, having occasion to consider a similar question, held that, where no suitable outlet for a sewer can be found within the municipality, its extension to land beyond the city's corporate limits is for the benefit of the sewers within the city, and for the exclusive use and benefit of the municipality and its inhabitants, and is therefore within the purview of the statute. To the same effect is Mullins v. City of Little Rock, 131 Ark. 59, 198 S. W. 262, L. R. A. 1915B, 262.

Respondent cites us to Thompson v. Hance, 174 Cal. 572, 163 Pac. 1021, a case arising under the Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 147, as amended), and involving a city's power under that statute to construct tunnels for the use of pedestrians and vehicular travel. In that case the court held that, when the Vrooman Act speaks of such instrumentalities as tunnels, etc., it means such as are "used in connection with the improvement of streets," and that such tunnels as are intended to be independent subterranean avenues for travel, and not mere auxiliaries for the proper drainage of surface streets, are not such street improvements as are provided for by the Vrooman Act. There is nothing in that case which conflicts with the views expressed herein respecting the construction of the Improvement Act of 1911. In the first place, as was pointed out by the court in the Thompson Case, 174 Cal. 576, 163 Pac. 1021, there is a material difference between the punctuation which divides the clauses of the Vrooman Act and that which separates the corresponding clauses of the act under consideration here. In the next place, the purpose of the Vrooman Act, as declared in its title, is to provide for work done upon "streets, lanes, alleys, courts, places and sidewalks and for the construction of sewers within municipalities," whereas, according to the title of the act here under consideration, its purpose is not alone to provide for work "in and upon streets, avenues, lanes, alleys, courts, places and sidewalks within municipalities," but also to provide for work "upon property and rights of way owned by municipalities," and, as we have pointed out, the act places no limitation upon the location of such city-owned property or rights of way. Finally, there is a vast difference between separate and independent structures, such, for example, as subterranean tunnels for travel, and auxiliary plants or other appurtenances, such as settling tanks intended for the disposal of a city's sewage. Such sewage disposal plants are not independent structures, but are necessary and essential ancillary adjuncts—accessories used in connection with and as an indispensable constituent of the entire municipal sewer system, of which only the sewers, as a general rule, are laid in the city's streets. And, though such sewage disposal plants be situated outside of the city's corporate limits, they still are but adjuncts of, or, as the act says, "appurtenances" to, the sewers which are laid in the streets.

By subdivision 10 of section 20 of the act under consideration it is provided that the assessment diagram "shall show each separate lot, piece or parcel of land, the area in square feet of each of such lots, pieces or parcels of land, and the relative location of the same to the work proposed to be done, all within the limits of the assessment district." Because of this provision it is claimed that, since the work in the instant case is to be done outside of the assessment district, the statute cannot be followed, and that therefore it was not intended to cover such a case as this. The argument is based upon the assumption that the language just quoted requires the assessment diagram to show that the work is "within the limits of the assessment district." We do not so construe this provision of the act. As we understand it, it means that all the lots and parcels of land within the assessment district, and their relative location to the work to be done, shall be shown on the assessment diagram. In order to show the relation of the work to the lots to be assessed, it is not necessary that the work to be done, as well as the lots, shall be within the assessment district.

For the foregoing reasons, we are of the opinion that respondent has shown no basis for his contention that the Improvement Act of 1911 does not embrace such work as is contemplated by these improvement proceedings.

This brings us to a consideration of respondent's second point, which is that, by reason of certain constitutional limitations upon the power to levy special assessments to pay for local improvements, the reconstruction and enlargement of a sewage disposal plant, intended to take care of all the sewage flowing through and from a city's entire system of sewers, cannot be made the subject of a local improvement, to be paid for by special assessments on all the privately owned lots and parcels of land situated within the municipality.

It is not claimed that special assessments may not be levied to pay the cost of reconstruction work as such. Nor could such claim be maintained if made. The Legislature, in the act under consideration, has expressly authorized the construction or reconstruction of sewers, septic tanks, etc. That the Legislature possesses the power to authorize reconstruction work is no longer a debatable question in most of the jurisdictions of this country. Power to make local improvements is a continuing one, which may be exercised from time to time as the needs of the municipality may require, and the city authorities, not the courts, are to judge of the necessity therefor. According to the clear weight of authority, if such an improvement combines the requirements of benefit to the public at large and exceptional local benefit to the property which is sought to be assessed, the same considerations which make it proper to levy local assessments for the original improvement make it equally proper to levy such assessments for any improvements to take the place of the original one. 25 R. C. L. p. 103; 1 Page and Jones on Taxation by Assessment, §§ 380 and 381. What we understand respondent to claim is that in this case the reconstruction work is of such a character that it is not of special benefit to the lots or lands within the city of Dinuba, but is of general benefit to the community at large, and therefore should be paid for by general taxation, and not by special assessments.

[3, 4] Special benefits to the property to be assessed, that is, benefits received by it in addition to those received by the public at large, is the equitable and just foundation upon which local assessments rest; and, under our system of government, no assessment can be made upon any land on any principle other than that of special benefits actually or presumptively received. The elements which an improvement must possess in order to justify a local assessment based on the theory of benefits are certainly two in number, and possibly three. The first is that the improvement must be a public one; that is, it must be one which confers a general benefit upon the public at large, and which, therefore, the public, acting through its government, may construct without the consent of the particular individuals affected. An improvement which lacks this element is essentially a private improvement; and, no matter how useful or advantageous it may be to the owners of private property, the public cannot compel its construction, nor can it pay for it by funds raised by the exercise of the sovereign power of taxation. Spring Street Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 170 Cal. 30, 148 Pac. 217, L. R. A. 1918E, 197; 1 Page and Jones on Taxation by Assessment, § 283. The second element essential to a valid local assessment is that the improvement must confer an especial and local benefit upon the property which is to be assessed It is possible that it will suffice if, from the nature of the work, the property can be presumed to have received an especial benefit. See 4 Dillon on Municipal Corporations (5th Ed.) § 1440. Unless, however, there be some local benefit, actually or presumptively received, the improvement may be public in character, so that the expense thereof may be borne by general taxation, but a local assessment, levied on the basis of benefits, cannot be made therefor, since the underlying principle of such assessments is that the improvement, aside from the mere general advantage resulting to the community at large, will result in some special benefit to the particular lot owners whose lands are assessed—a special benefit to the assessed lands in which the general public does not participate. 1 Page and Jones on Taxation by Assessment, § 284. It is, however, no objection to the validity of an assessment that the improvement benefits the public, provided it also confers an especial local benefit upon the property to be assessed. Improvements of this sort necessarily must have a dual aspect—an aspect of general benefit to the public as well as one of peculiar local benefit to the lot owners. To invalidate the assessment the general public benefit must be the only result of the improvement. A third element, which is insisted upon in some jurisdictions is that of permanency. 1 Page and Jones on Taxation by Assessment, § 285. In the instant case we are concerned only with the second element—that which demands that the improvement shall confer on the assessed property an actual, or at least a presumptive, local and especial benefit.

Whether all of the privately owned lots in the city of Dinuba will be specially benefited by the proposed improvement, and whether it is a "local improvement" as that term is generally understood when considered in connection with special assessments, are questions which, it must be confessed, are of serious concern; for, so far as we are advised, the appellate courts of this state never have had occasion to deal with an improvement of the nature of that which confronts us here. However, the guiding principles are few and well established, and we are convinced that their proper application to the facts of this case must lead to a decision favorable to the exercise of the power to levy special assessments to pay for the proposed reconstruction of this sewer disposal plant.

As we view the problem, it presents two aspects: (1) Is the nature of the work such that we can see that it is possible for it to especially benefit all the privately owned lots and parcels of land within the confines of the city, in addition to any general benefit which may result to the public? (2) Does the fact that the assessment district embraces all of the privately owned real property within the city necessarily deprive the enterprise of the character of a "local improvement"?

Addressing ourselves now to the first question: We think it clear that not only will the lot owners be specially benefited by the proposed improvement, but that the benefits to be derived by them as lot owners will exceed any that the general public will receive —much more so, in fact, than in the case of the improvement of a public street or other highway. Where a street is paved or otherwise improved, the beneficial use thereof may be enjoyed, not only by the owners of lands within the city, but by the nonowners of real property in the city, and likewise by the citizenry of the state generally. It is evident, therefore, that, where a street or other highway is paved or otherwise improved, the benefits accruing to the lot owners are much less, in proportion to the advantages accruing to the general public, than is the case here. Practically all of the benefits to be derived from the enlargement of a city's sewage disposal plant will redound to the lot owners of the city, as lot owners, and little, if any, will be received by the general public. With but few exceptions it is the inhabitants of a municipality who enjoy the benefits which are derivable from a city sewer system designed to carry off the sewage from the various residences, factories, buildings, and other structures within the municipality. Practically every inhabitant of a city either is the owner of the land on which he resides or on which he pursues his vocation, or he is the tenant of the owner, or is the agent or servant of such owner or of such tenant. And, since it is the inhabitants who make by far the greater use of a city's sewer system, it is to them, as lot owners or as tenants, or as the servants or agents of such lot owners or tenants, that the advantages of actual use will redound. But this advantage of use means that, in the final analysis, it is the lot owners themselves who will be especially benefited in a financial sense. If the inhabitant who makes use of the city's sewer system happens to own the lot which he occupies, then, manifestly, he will be directly and immediately benefited as a lot owner. He will be benefited as an inhabitant, in that he will enjoy the use of the sewer, and, as a lot owner, he will be benefited in a financial sense, in that the value of his lot will be enhanced by reason of the sewer facilities. And the lot owners who, instead of occupying their lots, rent them to others, will also, as lot owners, be directly and immediately benefited financially by a municipal sewer system. For, if the inhabitants using the city sewer system be tenants, or the agents or servants of tenants, then the landlords to whom the tenants pay the rent will be benefited financially as landowners. It seems clear that the market value of each and every parcel of real estate within a city's confines would be much less without than with a municipal sewer system, and that the market value of each and every parcel of land within the city must be substantially enhanced if there be a complete sewer system adequate to care for all of the city sewage.

[5] There is no fairer test of special benefit received than that which determines the existence and amount of such benefit by the effect of the improvement upon the market value of the property to be assessed. 2 Page and Jones on Taxation by Assessment, § 653. See, also, Doyle v. Austin, 47 Cal. 359. If, then, the farmers whose lands are now being polluted by the effluent from the present sewer system shall carry out their threat to enjoin the use of that system on the ground that its present use constitutes a nuisance, thus making it impossible for the inhabitants of the municipality to make any substantial use of any of the sewers within the city's confines, the result will be that the whole existing sewer system will become useless. Should such a calamity befall the inhabitants of the city of Dinuba, the market value of all the real properties within the city necessarily would be considerably reduced. On the other hand, should the city's sewage disposal plant be reconstructed and enlarged in the manner contemplated by the proposed improvement, the market values of all the lands within the city, barring extraneous causes, must necessarily be kept at their present level, if not actually and substantially enhanced. But, whether the improvement shall tend to enhance the land values or merely to keep them at their present level, the lot owners, as lot owners will necessarily receive direct and immediate special benefits in which the other members of the community do not and cannot participate.

[6] In view of these considerations, it is manifest that the nature of the work is such that we cannot say that it is impossible to confer any special or peculiar benefit on the lots to be assessed. On the contrary, it is obvious that each and every lot within the confines of the municipality will enjoy a special benefit not shared by the general public. This being so, the courts, in the absence of glaring injustice, or of fraud or mistake on the part of the city trustees, will not inquire into the quantum of special benefit which will accrue to the lot owners.

[7] The established rule in this state is that, if, from the nature of the improvement, it can be seen that the lots to be assessed are susceptible of some substantial benefit from it, the question of the extent of the benefit received is one which, in the absence of fraud, gross injustice, or demonstrable mistake, rests peculiarly in the determination of the assessing authorities, and their action will not be interfered with by the courts. The right to make assessments of this character is referable, in a general way, to the sovereign power of taxation. But it would be inconsistent with the proper exercise of that power, and would tend to a manifest embarrassment of the public in the prosecution of these public improvements, if, on each assessment, the lot owner were entitled to have the question judicially determined whether or not he would be benefited by the proposed improvement in an amount commensurate with the assessment on his lot. This doctrine is forcefully stated by the Oregon Supreme Court as follows:

"It is asserted with substantial unanimity and great clearness by the courts in this country, as well as by text-writers of erudition and learning, that, unless the nature of the case precludes it, the power to determine the confines of a taxing district for any particular burden is purely one of legislative discretion, and that the question of benefits accruing by reason of improvements contemplated is regarded as one of fact, which the Legislature is always presumed to have considered and settled by the enactment. * * * As has been indicated by some of the foregoing references to the authorities, the Legislature may, instead of fixing and prescribing the taxing district itself, refer the matter to commissioners or local boards or bodies for their ascertainment and determination; and in such case the substituted bodies possess and exercise legislative functions, and their action must be deemed as conclusive upon the subject as if the Legislature had exercised the authority directly. Cooley, Taxation (2d Ed.) 640." King v. Portland, 38 Or. 402, 63 Pac. 2, 55 L. R. A. 812.

The same doctrine is announced by the United States Supreme Court in Spencer v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 356, 8 Sup. Ct. 921, 31 L. Ed. 763, Parsons v. District of Columbia, 170 U. S. 45, 18 Sup. Ct. 521, 42 L. Ed. 943, and Williams v. Eggleston, 170 U. S. 311, 18 Sup. Ct. 617, 42 L. Ed. 1047, and has been repeatedly enunciated by our own Supreme Court. Thus, in Hadley v. Dague, 130 Cal. 220, 62 Pac. 504, Mr. Justice Harrison, speaking for the court, said:

"The principle upon which the expense is charged on the property in that district is that that property has received a particular benefit. But, as was said by Mr. Justice Temple in Lent v. Tillson, 72 Cal. 428: 'The benefit is not the source of the power.' Nor does the validity of the assessment depend upon the ability to show that the property assessed was specifically benefited by the amount of the assessment or received that particular amount of benefit. Courts will uphold an assessment made upon such legislative authority, even though the benefits are not shown to be identical with the burden."

See, also, Larsen v. San Francisco, 182 Cal. 8, 9, 186 Pac. 757.

[8] It only remains to consider whether the fact that all the lands within the city will be benefited deprives the enterprise of the character of a "local improvement," so that the work may not be paid for by special assessment. By establishing an assessment district coextensive with the city, the city's board of trustees must be deemed to have proceeded upon the theory that practically all of the privately owned lands within the municipality will be specially benefited by the proposed improvement. The question which presents itself, therefore, is this: Does an improvement cease to be "local" when its benefits extend to all the lands within the confines of the municipality? This question has been variously answered. In some states, notably in Illinois, it is held that, if the benefit be shared by all the lands in the municipality, the improvement cannot be regarded as local. Thus, in Village of Morgan Park v. Wiswall, 155 Ill. 262, 40 N. E. 611, it was held that an improvement which is of general benefit to all the real property in the city is not a "local improvement" within the meaning of the Illinois Constitution. Other states, adopting what we may appropriately term the Arkansas doctrine, hold that the fact that the benefits of the improvement extend to all the lots and lands throughout the city does not of itself deprive the enterprise of the character of a "local improvement," and that, therefore, an assessment district may be made of the entire city, and all the privately owned lots therein may be assessed to pay for the improvement. Crane v. City of Siloam Springs, 67 Ark. 36, 55 S. W. 955; Matthews v. Kimball, 70 Ark. 451, 66 S. W. 651, 69 S. W. 547. See, also, in this connection, Shibley v. Ft. Smith, etc., District, 96 Ark. 410, 132 S. W. 444; Mullins v. Little Rock, supra; Johns v. Road Improvement District, 142 Ark. 73, 218 S. W. 389; Solomon v. Wharf Improvement District, 145 Ark. 126, 223 S. W. 385; Bennett v. Johnson, 130 Ark. 507, 197 S. W. 1148; Minnesota, etc., Improvement Co. v. Billings, 111 Fed. 972, 50 C. C. A. 70; Kane v. Wedell (Cal. App.) 202 Pac. 340, and McGarry v. Ellis (Cal. App.) 202 Pac. 463.

Though it may be difficult to lay down a test which shall have an unvarying application to every state of facts, it seems clear that there can be no sound reason why the magnitude of the project or the extensiveness of the area to be assessed should have any decisive bearing on the question, provided the included area will derive a special benefit apart from that enjoyed by the public as a whole. In other words, the size of the assessment district presents only a question of degree in the enjoyment of the special benefits, and is not necessarily decisive that the benefit is general in its results Bennett v. Johnson, supra. In Johns v. Road

Improvement District, supra, the Arkansas Supreme Court says:

"We have never decided that the mere inclusion of the whole of a county in a district is void. On the contrary, we have held that the whole of a county may be included if the improvement is a single one and affects all the lands of the county. * * * The test is not the extent of the area included in the district, but the singleness of the authorized improvement and the relationship to it of the included territory as to benefits to accrue from the improvement."

[9] Aside from such general inhibitory provisions as, for example, are to be found in the Bill of Rights, the California Constitution contains no direct and express limitation upon the power to levy special assessments for local improvements. The legislative will in this state is therefore supreme, so far as any direct constitutional limitation is concerned. In this respect our Constitution differs from that of Illinois. In the Illinois Constitution of 1870 it is expressly declared that the Legislature may vest the corporate authorities of cities, towns, and villages with power "to make local improvements by special assessment." Article 9, § 9. This provision of the Illinois Constitution has been held by the courts of that state not only to be a grant of the power to authorize special assessments as therein set forth, but also to be an inhibition prohibiting the Legislature from conferring the power in any way other than as therein set forth. In California the only limitations upon the power, or, more accurately speaking, the rules which the municipal authorities must observe, are that the improvement shall be a public one, that it shall confer an especial benefit upon the property to be assessed, and that the apportionment of the assessments shall be made upon some basis that is uniform and free from unjust discrimination.

A definition of a "local improvement" which seems to have commended itself to the courts of many jurisdictions, and which meets with our unqualified approval, is that given by the Arkansas Supreme Court in Crane v. City of Siloam Springs, supra:

"If we look for the technical or legal meaning of the phrase 'local improvement,' we find it to be a public improvement, which, although it may incidentally benefit the public at large, is made primarily for the accommodation and convenience of the inhabitants of a particular locality, and which is of such a nature as to confer a special benefit upon the real property adjoining, or near the locality of the improvement."

There is nothing in this definition to exclude the idea of an improvement district embracing the entire city; and we can perceive no sound reason for holding that the fact that the rise in value is common to all the real estate within a municipality should prevent the benefit from being sufficiently peculiar for local assessment purposes. It would be a matter for regret if the law as worked out by the courts respecting the constitutional power of the Legislature should be found to have taken so scholastic a form, when dealing with the definition of the term "local improvement," that an assessment for an improvement which benefited 99 per cent. of the real property within a city might be upheld, whilst one which benefited 100 per cent. of the urban real estate could be paid for only by general taxation. The Arkansas Supreme Court, in the Crane Case, makes a forceful presentation against any such narrow limitation upon the legislative power, saying:

"No express limitation is found in the Constitution forbidding the Legislature from authorizing such an equitable apportionment of the assessment in case of an improvement affecting all the real estate of the city, and none should be adduced by implication through a narrow and technical line of reasoning; for this would not only be contrary to the usual rule of allowing the largest liberty in matters of local concern, but, if we should find such a limitation, it would puzzle us to say at what point the power of the Legislature would stop. Could it authorize an assessment for an improvement affecting nine-tenths or ninety-nine hundredths of the real property of the city, but not for one affecting the whole city? If a city has a hundred streets, may the Legislature authorize the council to place 99 of them in an improvement district for the purpose of laying water pipes along them or for improving them, and yet not authorize such a district covering all the streets for such a purpose? What could be the object in making such a limitation, and why make such a distinction? We do not see any reason, nor do we believe that the constitution contains any such limitation upon the power of the legislature."

In Matthews v. Kimball, supra, the court says:

"The only limitation as to the character of the improvement is that it must be a local improvement and of a public nature; that is local to the city and the inhabitants thereof [italics ours], and public to the extent that it shall be free to the public under such proper regulations as may be adopted for its control, management and preservation, by the city council."

Although not giving direct consideration to this question, one of the District Courts of Appeal of this state (Division 1, First Appellate District), as well as the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, has indirectly passed upon it by holding that the legislative body of a municipality may create an assessment district coextensive with the boundaries of the city and assess all of the privately owned real property situated therein. Kane v. Wedell, supra; McGarry v. Ellis, supra; and Minnesota, etc., Improvement Co. v. Billings, supra. Since such an assessment district may be upheld only upon the theory that all of the privately owned lands within the city are especially benefited by the improvement, the cases last cited become authority for the proposition that an improvement is none the less a "local improvement," and the benefits accruing therefrom are none the less "special" merely because the improvement benefits all the lands within the confines of the municipality.

Our views upon this branch of the case may be summarized thus: It is demonstrable that the proposed improvement will tend to increase, or at least to stabilize, the market values of all the real properties within the city, thus conferring a financial benefit upon every lot owner, so that the lot owners of the city, as lot owners, will be benefited by the improvement. Such benefits are "special," since the benefits which landowners receive from a public improvement by virtue of their ownership of real properties may be regarded as special, even though the improvement be constructed in part for the benefit of a greater number of persons, all of whom, including the lot owners, are in fact benefited thereby. 2 Page and Jones on Taxation by Assessment, p. 1118. Since the receipt of special benefits, actual or presumptive, by the property to be assessed, is the sole underlying principle of, and the one fundamental justification for, special assessments, there can be no sound reason why all of the lots within a municipality may not be assessed if all of them are specially benefited. The fact that the benefit is common to all of the lots within the city is not a determining factor; it is, indeed, a false quantity in the problem.

This disposes of the questions raised in opposition to the issuance of the writ.

It is ordered that respondent, H. W. Ensign, as superintendent of streets of the city of Dinuba, forthwith execute with the Federal Construction Company the contract referred to in the petition herein, that he approve the bonds referred to in the petition, and that he fix a time for the commencement and completion of the work to be done under that contract; also that petitioner recover its costs.

We concur: WORKS, J.; CRAIG, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 283

PEOPLE v. PASSAFIUME. (Cr. 883.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 5, 1922.)

1. Criminal law ⟸775(6)—Instruction as to defense of alibi held not prejudicial.

An instruction regarding the defense of alibi, that, "while you are not to hesitate at giving this as a defense full weight, * * * still you are to scrutinize the testimony offered in support of an alibi with care, that you may be satisfied that a fabricated defense is not being imposed upon you," held not erroneous, since it contains no statement of distrust of the defense, or any warning that it should not be fairly and properly considered.

2. Criminal law ⟸786(2)—Instruction as to accused's testimony held not reversible error.

An instruction that testimony of the accused was to be weighed and measured according to the same standard as any other witness, held not reversible error.

3. Criminal law ⟸1172(6)—Inapplicable instructions harmless when guilt clearly established.

Where defendant's guilt was clearly established, the giving of instructions not applicable to the evidence will not be held prejudicial error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Russ Avery, Judge.

Joseph Passafiume was convicted of assault with a deadly weapon. From judgment of conviction and order denying new trial he appeals. Affirmed.

Guy Eddie, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CONREY, P. J. Defendant was charged with the crime of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder. He was convicted of assault with a deadly weapon. He appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

That the victim of the assault—a police officer named Delaney—was shot by some person at the time and place described in the evidence is a fact established beyond dispute. The defendant was positively identified by witnesses as the man who did the shooting. His defense was that of an alibi by introducing testimony tending to prove that he was at another place at the time of the assault, and therefore could not have been guilty of this crime.

[1] It is conceded that the evidence is sufficient to sustain the verdict. But it is contended that the defendant was seriously prejudiced by erroneous instructions of the court to the jury. In the questioned instruction concerning the defense of alibi, the court said:

"While you are not to hesitate at giving this as a defense full weight—that conclusive effect to which, when established, it is justly entitled, either as entirely satisfying you of the innocence of the defendant or as creating the reasonable doubt which entitles the defendant to an acquittal—still, you are to scrutinize the testimony offered in the support of an alibi with care, that you may be satisfied that a fabricated defense is not being imposed upon you."

It is claimed that this instruction is similar to that criticized by the Supreme Court in People v. Levine, 85 Cal. 39, 22 Pac. 969, 24 Pac. 631. It differs substantially from the instruction considered in that case, and also from the instruction condemned by the Supreme Court in People v. Smith, 207 Pac. 518. The instruction given in the present case does not contain the language which was disapproved in those two decisions. It does not contain any statement expressing distrust of the defense in question, or any warning that it should not be fairly and properly considered by the jury, so far as justified by the evidence. The objection urged by appellant is without merit.

[2] The defendant testified as a witness in his own behalf. The court gave an instruction stating the manner in which the testimony of a defendant is to be weighed and measured, viz. according to the same standard as the testimony of any other witness. This instruction is almost precisely in the same words as that considered by the Court of Appeal in People v. Fritz, 201 Pac. 348. In that decision, and in others there cited, it was declared to be bad practice for a trial judge to single out the testimony of any witness, especially if the witness be the defendant, and instruct with particular reference to his testimony. But it was further pointed out that the giving of an instruction in that form which nevertheless correctly states the law is not a ground for reversal of the judgment. Appellant has not here contended that the instruction did not correctly state the law.

[3] The only other points made by appellant relate to two instructions which he claims should not have been given because there was no evidence sufficient to warrant the giving of such instructions. In view of the record, which clearly and satisfactorily establishes the guilt of the defendant, we think that the giving of these instructions, even if they were not applicable to any evidence in the case, cannot be said to constitute prejudicial error.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 219

McGOWAN v. BURG BROS. (Civ. 4270.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division One, California. Sept. 28, 1922. Modification Filed Oct. 16, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 27, 1922.)

1. Vendor and purchaser ⟸116—Purchaser not required to tender performance where vendor fails to perform.

Under a contract whereby defendant agreed to convey four lots to plaintiff in consideration of plaintiff erecting an apartment house of a certain value within a certain time, plaintiff to execute and deliver in escrow a deed reconveying the property, where defendant actually conveyed only three lots, and agreed to convey the other within 30 days, but failed to do so, tender of performance by plaintiff was unnecessary before suing to rescind the contract.

2. Appeal and error ⟸1051(1)—Where evidence conclusively showed agency, admission of agent in testimony as to agency was harmless.

Where, in an action to recover the value of certain property conveyed to defendant on account of the purchase price of certain lots, the evidence conclusively showed that the person negotiating the contract was an agent of defendant, admission of the agent in testimony as to the agency was harmless.

3. Principal and agent ⟸158—That corporation received no proceeds of agent's fraud held no defense to liability for such fraud.

That a corporation received no proceeds from fraud committed by its agent is no defense to an action for such fraud.

4. Exchange of property ⟸8(4)—Evidence held to prove value of property traded to defendant.

In an action to recover the value of certain real property conveyed to defendant on account of the purchase price of certain lots, evidence held to prove the value of the property.

5. Evidence ⟸474(18)—Evidence by owner as to value of land without qualifying as an expert held admissible.

In an action to recover the value of certain property conveyed to defendant on account of the purchase price of certain lots, evidence by plaintiff that the market value of the property was $5,000 was admissible, though she did not qualify as an expert, where she testified on cross-examination that the property had cost $3,250 six years prior to the trial, that she had expended further sums for street work, which brought the cost up to $4,300, and that she had been offered $4,500 for the property.

6. Evidence ⟸474(18) — Qualifications of owner of property to testify as to its value not as strict as those of a stranger.

An owner of property is not required to prove his qualifications, in order to testify as to the value of property, in the same degree as a stranger.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Katharine McGowan against Burg Bros. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

William T. Kearney, of Richmond, and Edward C. Harrison, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Greene & Sinclair, of Berkeley, and Thos. H. Reed, of Ann Arbor, Mich., for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. This action was brought to recover the sum of $2,000 alleged to have been paid to defendant, together with the value of certain real property conveyed to it on account of the purchase price of certain real property conveyed to it on account of the purchase price of certain lots. Plaintiff recovered judgment for the sum of $7,000, and defendant appeals.

The case presents the situation of plaintiff being stripped of her possessions, the evidence disclosing the fact that the whole transaction here involved amounted to nothing more than a scheme of actual fraud and deceit, though not so charged; plaintiff contenting herself with merely alleging a failure of consideration for her payment and transfer.

The facts as disclosed by the record show that an unconscionable advantage was taken of plaintiff incompatible with the idea of honesty and fair dealing. They are as follows:

Defendant, Burg Bros., is a corporation engaged in the real estate business; E. J. and C. H. Burg are brothers, and practically control the corporation. In the conduct of such business defendant corporation acquired a tract of land in Richmond, Contra Costa county, for sale and subdivision. The corporation had in its employ for a number of years as a salesman one O. W. H. Pratt. To further the sale of this particular subdivision it instructed Pratt and its other agents, to offer three lots free of charge to any person who would at his or her own expense construct an apartment house thereon at a cost of not less than $18,000. To carry out this scheme defendant secured title from the owner of the tract of three designated lots. A person willing to take advantage of the offer was found, but after installing a foundation he abandoned the project. Thereupon defendant concluded to offer four lots for the same purpose and upon the same terms.

On or about the 16th day of November, 1916, Pratt approached Katharine McGowan, the plaintiff herein, and proposed to her that she take such lots, but misrepresented to her the terms upon which the property could be acquired. He failed to disclose to her that defendant was willing to convey the lots to any one without charge who would make the required improvement, but on the contrary informed plaintiff that the corporation wanted the sum of $7,000 for the property. Pratt had, previous to this time, sold for plaintiff a lot owned by her in Berkeley, for the sum of $1,200, and had received the further sum of $450 from her, which, together with the sale price of the Berkeley lot, he reinvested in two lots situated in Richmond. Pratt informed plaintiff that he had sold these Richmond lots for her, and had in his possession the sum of $2,000, the proceeds received therefrom. Plaintiff was advised by Pratt that defendant would accept this sum, together with a conveyance by her of a piece of property she owned in Los Angeles, and which she valued at the sum of $5,000, in exchange for the four lots. In the form given by Pratt plaintiff accepted the offer, and she thereupon, in pursuance thereof, conveyed to one W. F. Faulkner, sales agent of defendant, this real property in Los Angeles.

In further consummation of the transaction the parties entered into and executed an agreement, reciting that Burg Bros. had conveyed to plaintiff the four lots in question, and that she had executed and delivered to one A. Sutter in escrow her deed reconveying said lots to Burg Bros. upon the understanding that, if she did not, within 120 days from date of the agreement, erect an apartment house of the value of $18,000 upon the property, Sutter, the escrow agent, was to surrender the deed to Burg Bros.

Another condition of the agreement provided that, in the event of a violation by plaintiff of any of its provisions, Burg Bros. was entitled, upon 5 days' notice to Miss McGowan, to take possession of the premises, and the lots were thereupon to revert to them.

Concurrently with the execution of this agreement another contract was entered into between the same parties, which recited that Burg Bros. had actually only deeded to plaintiff three of the four lots specified, and they agreed, within 30 days from January 5, 1917, to deed to her the fourth lot. Thereafter plaintiff made repeated demands upon defendant to make such conveyance in conformity with this agreement. Burg Bros., however, never tendered to Miss McGowan a deed to this lot within the time limited in the agreement, and in fact never tendered the same to her at all, in consequence of which plaintiff refused to go on with her contract.

Thereafter, and on or about the 15th day of May, 1917, notwithstanding its failure to tender this deed, and ignoring the demands therefor by plaintiff, Burg Bros. took down from the escrow agent the deed to the three lots left in escrow by plaintiff, without giving her the 5 days', or any, notice required by the agreement.

Prior thereto, and shortly after the agreements above recited were entered into between the parties, Pratt hurried to Los Angeles and made a quick sale of the property conveyed by plaintiff to Faulkner, defendant's sales agent, for the sum of $3,500, but which he claimed after paying certain expenses netted him but $3,295. At the same time he acquired title to another lot owned by plaintiff in Los Angeles, but which is not involved in this controversy.

[1] Counsel for defendant, while admitting that plaintiff has been defrauded, assigns various grounds for reversal of the judgment. It is first contended that the findings are insufficient to support the judgment for the reason that there is no determination of tender of performance on the part of the plaintiff. A complete answer to this contention is that no tender was required to be made by her to the escrow agent until the deed to the fourth lot was tendered by defendant. Plaintiff was unable to make a tender of such deed to that agent until she herself had received one from defendant.

[2] Insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings is also alleged. It is claimed that the evidence falls far short of proving that Pratt was acting as the agent of Burg Bros. in the transaction of his business with Miss McGowan. At the time of the oral argument of the case it was conceded by respondent that there might be some merit in this contention in so far as it related to the sale of the lot in Berkeley and the lots in Richmond which Pratt had disposed of for plaintiff's account, and in order to prevent further delay counsel for respondent consented to a modification of the judgment in the sum of $2,000, the amount covering these transactions. With reference to the sale of the Los Angeles property, however, the evidence is sufficient to show that Pratt was the agent of defendant. Aside from his testimony upon the subject, even assuming it to have been inadmissible, the sales agent Faulkner and E. J. Burg, the secretary and manager, both testified that Pratt was the agent of the corporation, and the evidence of the entire transaction shows conclusively that he was acting as such in making the sale. The alleged error in admitting Pratt's testimony to this effect was therefore harmless.

[3] Complaint is also made that the evidence also fails to show that any of the money or property here claimed was received by defendant. It is true that E. J. Burg so testified, but, even assuming his testimony to be true, it avails defendant nothing, for, as above recited, both Pratt and Faulkner were the agents of the corporation in the transaction, and the corporation was liable for their acts. Aside from this the evidence shows that Burg was familiar at all times with the entire transaction, and that the corporation did receive at least a portion of the proceeds derived from the sale of the Los Angeles property. There is therefore no merit in this claim.

[4] The same may be said of the further contention that the evidence is insufficient to prove the value of this property. Proof was made of the price which the parties put upon the property in making the exchange. The amount for which the property was sold at forced sale was shown, as was also the estimate of the market value put upon it by plaintiff. It is true that in actions of this character a plaintiff is not entitled to treat the amount for which the property was taken in exchange as a payment, as its value, but is limited in his recovery to the actual market value of the property at the time of the transaction. Blahnik v. Small Farms, etc., 181 Cal. 379, 184 Pac. 661. Nor does the price obtained at a forced sale as here determine such value. Montgomery v. Sayre, 100 Cal. 182, 34 Pac. 646, 38 Am. St. Rep. 271.

[5] We have, however, remaining the testimony of plaintiff herself that the market value of the property was $5,000. While this testimony was objected to and should have been rejected for the reason that the witness had not qualified, no proper foundation having been made to show knowledge on her part upon this subject, counsel for defendant himself cured the error. On cross-examination he brought out the facts upon which plaintiff based her opinion. She testified, in response to his questions, that the property had cost her $3,250 some six years prior to the trial, that she had expended further sums for street work, which brought this cost up to about $4,300, and that she had been offered $4,500 for the same. This testimony on her part as owner shows that she was familiar with its value and qualified to testify upon the subject.

[6] An owner of property is not required to prove his qualifications in the same degree as a stranger. Port Townsend Southern Railway Co. v. Nolan, 48 Wash. 382, 93 Pac. 528.

And, finally, it is contended that the evidence shows that plaintiff repudiated her contract. We do not so understand it. On the contrary it does show beyond question that she at all times during the life of the contract demanded a deed to the fourth lot, which was never tendered to her. We do not deem further discussion of the case necessary.

Other questions have been raised for the first time upon oral argument, a discussion of which would answer no useful purpose. It is plain that defendant breached its contract in not tendering its deed to the lot as it was required under its contract to do, and withdrew its reconveyance from the escrow agent without giving plaintiff the 5 days' notice required to be given her, notwithstanding that she was not in default. A forfeiture cannot be enforced in this manner.

For the reasons given, the judgment is modified by striking therefrom the sum of $2,000, together with the interest on such sum. As so modified, it will stand affirmed.

We concur: ST. SURE, Justice pro tem.; KERRIGAN, J.

59 Cal. App. 259

PEOPLE v. JO FONG et al. (Cr. 601.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 30, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 27, 1922.)

1. Criminal law ⟸1159(3) — Conviction on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed.

Where the evidence was conflicting, and the jury returned a verdict of conviction, it was not within the power of the reviewing court to declare that the jury should have accepted defendants' testimony in preference to that of the people.

2. Homicide ⟸253(1)—Conviction of murder of Chinaman in conspiracy forming part of tong war sustained.

In a prosecution for first degree murder of a Chinaman, evidence held to support a conviction based upon a finding that the killing was the culmination of a conspiracy previously formed between all the defendants, and which was part of a program mapped out by a Chinese tong in a war with another tong.

3. Criminal law ⟸372(4)—Evidence of shooting of another held proper to show conspiracy of defendants.

In a prosecution for murder of a Chinaman by members of a rival tong as part of a tong war, evidence that, at the time of the killing, another member of the tong to which deceased belonged was shot at, held proper as tending to show a preconceived and prearranged design on the part of defendants to act in concert in destruction of members of decedent's tong.

4. Homicide ⟸163(1)—Evidence in tong war killing that defendants were active members of a tong held proper.

In a prosecution for murder of a Chinese member of the Suey Sing tong by members of the Hop Sing tong, in a conspiracy forming part of a tong war, the district attorney was properly permitted to show that defendants were active members of the Hop Sing tong and occupied official positions therein.

5. Homicide ⟸163(1) — Whether defendants were highbinders, properly shown in Chinese tong war killing.

In a prosecution for murder of a Chinaman through a conspiracy forming part of a tong war, where the prosecution had shown that defendants were members of the Hop Sing tong and deceased a member of the Suey Sing tong, and that hostilities existed between the two tongs, it was proper for the district attorney to go fully into the question whether defendants were gunmen or members of the highbinders branch of the Hop Sing tong.

6. Witnesses ⟸337(4), 372(2)—Cross-examination of defendant held proper as showing interest and to impeach denial of participation in shooting.

In a prosecution for murder of a member of the Chinese Suey Sing tong by members of the Hop Sing tong, as part of a tong war, it was proper cross-examination for the district attorney to ask one of the defendants as to his connection with the Hop Sing tong, and the highbinders branch of that organization, since, he having denied complicity in the commission of the crime, and the existence of a feud between the tongs having been shown, such cross-examination tended to show interest and also to impeach the statement of defendant that he did not participate in the shooting.

7. Criminal law ⟸656(3)—Remarks of court reciting evidence already received held not error.

In prosecution for murder of a member of the Chinese Suey Sing tong by members of the Hop Sing tong, it was not error for the court, in ruling on an objection to a question by the district attorney to defendant whether he belonged to the "binders" society of the Hop Sing tong, to state that the word "binders" is an abbreviation of the word "highbinders" and that evidence had been introduced tending to establish the existence of a tong war, but that it was for the jury to say whether such fact had been proven, the court having the right, in ruling upon objections, to state the evidence already received.

8. Criminal law ⟸720(9)—Remarks of prosecutor that existence of tong war had been established held supported by evidence.

In a prosecution for murder occurring in a Chinese tong war, remarks by the district attorney that the existence of a tong war had been established held not error, the remarks being warranted by the evidence.

9. Criminal law ⟸722(3)—District attorney's reference to defendants as gunmen held justified by evidence.

In a prosecution for the murder of a member of a Chinese tong by members of another tong, a reference by the district attorney, in argument, to defendants as gunmen held justified by the evidence, and by the theory of the case advanced by the prosecution.

10. Criminal law ⟸404(3)—Empty cartridge shells found a week after killing held admissible.

In a prosecution for the murder of a member of a Chinese tong by members of another tong during a tong war, it was not error to receive in evidence cartridge shells found a week after the homicide in the stove of a gambling house wherein defendant had placed them on the night of the killing, the objection that another might since have placed the shells in the stove going to the weight, rather than to the competency, of the evidence.

11. Homicide ⟸169(2) — Legitimate reasons for presence of defendants at place of killing properly shown.

In a prosecution for murder of a member of a Chinese tong by members of a rival tong, who interposed an alibi in defense, evidence by witnesses other than defendants tending to show that they went to the town of the killing on legitimate business held admissible.

12. Criminal law ⟸400(10)—Testimony explaining presence of defendant on scene of crime held not best evidence.

In a prosecution for murder of a member of a Chinese tong by members of a rival tong, it was not error to exclude evidence of one of the defendants that he came to the city where the crime was committed in response to a letter requesting him to come and take employment, the letter itself being the best evidence, and no showing being made that it was not in possession of defendant.

13. Homicide ⟸339 — Exclusion of evidence explaining defendant's presence at scene of shooting, if error, held harmless.

In a prosecution for the murder of a member of a Chinese tong by members of another tong, where defendants interposed an alibi and sought to explain their presence in the city of the killing, the exclusion of such evidence, if error, held not prejudicial, a showing having been made that defendants were upon the scene of the crime.

14. Criminal law ⟸1156(3) — New trial on newly discovered cumulative evidence discretionary.

Where a motion for new trial is merely based on the ground of newly discovered evidence which is cumulative of evidence presented, it is within the discretion of the trial court to say whether the motion shall be granted, and such discretion will not be interfered with on review unless clearly abused.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; Eugene P. McDaniel, Judge.

Jo Fong, Gin Wah, Tom Yu, Wong Ai, and Lee Ping were convicted of murder in the first degree, and, from the judgment and a denial of a new trial, each appeals. Affirmed.

Le Compte Davis and A. F. MacDonald, both of Los Angeles, W. E. Davies, of Marysville, and Bond & Deirup, of Chico, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The appellants and one Fred Fong were jointly informed against by the district attorney of Yuba county, in the superior court of said county, for the crime of murder, alleged to have been committed on the 30th day of July, 1921, and were jointly tried under said information. At the conclusion of the taking of the testimony on behalf of the people, the information, in so far as it concerned Fred Fong, was dismissed, and said defendant discharged. The jury found each of the other defendants guilty of murder of the first degree, but in each case fixed the punishment at imprisonment in the state prison for life. Section 190, Pen. Code.

Each of the defendants appeals to this court from the judgment of conviction and the order denying him a new trial. All the appeals are based upon the same record, which appears here according to the alternative method.

The party whose life is alleged to have been unlawfully taken by the defendants was a Chinese by the name of Ng Shea Wah, also known as Sing Binney. The homicide occurred at the Chong Wo Company store on the northwest corner of First and C streets in the city of Marysville, near the hour of 10 o'clock p. m. of July 30, 1921. The building in which the tragedy occurred is in the Chinese quarters of said city.

The defendants set up an alibi, claiming that they were not present at the scene of the shooting at the time that it occurred. A vast amount of evidence was received both against and for the defendants. It would subserve no useful purpose to enter into a detailed recapitulation herein of the testimony received. It will be sufficient to state generally the facts which the jury could well have drawn from the testimony as produced by the people and upon which, obviously, they founded their verdicts against the accused. In this connection, it may be stated that counsel for defendants in their opening brief, at the outset thereof, virtually admit that the testimony upon the question of the guilt of the defendants is in pronounced conflict, but declare that the jury would have been equally justified upon the evidence as a whole in finding the defendants not guilty, as they were in reaching the conclusion which is responsible for these appeals, and that for this reason certain rulings of the court, in admitting certain testimony and certain alleged misconduct by the district attorney in his argument to the jury, must be held to have been so prejudicial to the substantial rights of the accused as to require this court to declare that but for such errors a different result would have been reached as to each of the defendants. In the concluding part of their brief, however, said counsel declare, with much emphasis, that "the evidence of the plaintiff [meaning the people], taken at its best, is absolutely insufficient upon which to base verdicts of guilty against certain if not all of the defendants." And this is the point first urged and discussed in their briefs. We may as well at this place express the opinion that, after a careful examination of the testimony, as it is presented here, there is sufficient evidence supporting the verdicts as returned, albeit it is to be conceded there is a positive and direct conflict upon this proposition between the testimony given in behalf of the people and that presented by the defendants in support of their asserted alibi.

The facts as revealed by the testimony of witnesses introduced by the people may thus be stated: The deceased and the defendants were members of rival tongs or Chinese societies, the former of the Suey Sing tong and the latter of the Hop Sing tong. The headquarters of the Marysville branch of the Hop Sing tong were in a building adjoining the store in which the deceased was killed. On the night of the 30th of July, 1921, between the hours of 9 and 10 o'clock, the sheriff of Yuba county had occasion to visit the Chinese quarters of the city of Marysville on official business. He took his seat on a bench, with two Chinese who were acquaintances of his, in front of the Hop Sing building. He remained there for about 20 or 25 minutes, engaged in conversation with the Chinese sitting beside him. During that time Jo Fong, one of the defendants, was seen to come from the Hop Sing tong building to the sidewalk and stand and look about for a short time and then return to the building. Jo Fong repeated this conduct some three or four different times while the sheriff was sitting on the bench in front of said building. Shortly before 10 o'clock, whether prior to or after the sheriff left the place where he had been sitting and engaged in conversation with the Chinese does not clearly appear, the deceased stepped into the store of Chong Wo, which, as we have seen, adjoins the Hop Sing building. After the sheriff had left Chinatown, Jo Fong stepped out of the Hop Sing building and went to the store of Chong Wo and looked in and thereupon retraced his steps to the Hop Sing building, went inside and immediately returned to the sidewalk, followed by the other defendants. Tom Yu, Wong Ai, and Lee Ping took a position on the sidewalk near said store and Jo Fong and Gin Wah stepped to the door of the store and immediately began shooting at the deceased. At the time this occurred there were in the store Chin Yook, the manager, Mrs. Wy Lung, Wong Shea, and the deceased, Ng Shea Wah, who, when attacked, was engaged in counting some money which he desired and intended to deposit with Chin Yook. Some four or five shots were fired, three of which entered the body of the deceased, one passing through the upper lobe of the right lung and another entering at the juncture of the clavicle and the breast bone and shattering "the inner end of the clavicle, the carotid and jugular vessels, and piercing the right lung and making its exit to the right three inches from the tenth dorsal vertebræ. The death of Ng Shea Wah followed almost instantly. The wounds were inflicted by Luger bullets from 9 mm. Luger shells. Wong Shea received a bullet wound in the neck and also one in the leg, but these wounds were not fatal. Chin Yook positively identified Jo Fong and Gin Wah as two persons who entered the store together, with weapons in their hands. He testified, though, that as soon as the shooting began he dropped down under the counter and that he saw Jo Fong firing his weapon but did not see Gin Wah do any shooting. Mrs. Wy Lung witnessed the shooting and testified that Jo Fong and Gin Wah did it. Immediately after the shooting ceased, Jo Fong and Gin Wah hurriedly left the store and with the revolvers still in their hands ran toward the door of the Hop Sing tong building at 113½ C street. Gin Wah was in the lead and got inside the door first. Jo Fong ran a few doors further on and then ran back to the Hop Sing building and attempted to open the door through which Gin Wah had just previously passed, but found it locked. He thereupon, so a witness testified, ran to No. 115 C street to the door of Hong On Wo and went in, thus disappearing from the street.

One Wah Poon, a member of the Suey Sing tong, just before Jo Fong and Gin Wah made their appearance in the store of Chong Wo, left said store, where he had been for some minutes, and started east on C street. Just as he was about to pass Tom Yu, Lee Ping, and Wong Ai, who were standing on the sidewalk near the Chong Wo store, the sound of the shooting was heard. Wah Poon started to run, when he was shot at, according to his own testimony, by Wong Ai. He ran down C street toward the levee, and, according to the testimony of Wah Poon and other witnesses, he was pursued by Tom Yu and Lee Ping, who shot at him several times, wounding him in one of his legs. Wah Poon fell to the ground and the pursuing Chinese fled in another direction. It is in evidence that immediately after the shooting Wong Ai ran into a gambling house on C street near the Hop Sing building and took the empty cartridges from his revolver and threw them into a stove; that he reloaded his revolver and said he was going to kill "those Suey Sing s—n of b—ches." It should here be stated that the objection of the defendants to this testimony was sustained as to all the defendants except Wong Ai and that the objection to the testimony relating to the pursuit of Wah Poon was sustained as to all the defendants except Tom Yu, Wong Ai, and Lee Ping.

Shortly after the shooting, the officers found Jo Fong sitting between some barrels and the wall of a building in an alley back of the Quong Hop Wo store, between First and Second, C and D streets. The barrels shielded Jo Fong from observation, but a careful search revealed his presence to the officers, and he was then placed under arrest. The officers also found on top of one of the barrels a .38 Smith & Wesson special blue seal revolver, which was introduced in evidence and identified by the officer making the arrest as having been the weapon he found at that time. The weapon was fully loaded. That same night and a short while after the shooting Wong Ai was arrested in the store of Sing Fat, near the corner of Third and C streets. The officers then went to the Hop Sing building and found the door at the head of the stairway locked. A Mr. Wallace was with the officers and opened the door with a pass key. The officers then passed through several rooms in the building and finally came to a room the door leading into which was locked. They knocked, but no response was made, and the officers then "kicked in" the door and found the room in darkness. Searching the room, however, they found Gin Wah and Lee Ping, fully dressed, sitting on a "board arrangement" made for a couch, and placed them under arrest. They found no weapons on these defendants or in the room. The officers went to the Quong Hop Wo Company store about 12 o'clock at night. They knocked at the back door but received no response. Then one of the officers unlocked the door with a pass key. They passed through the kitchen to another room and knocked on the door but received no response. It was a small room used for sleeping purposes. In that room they found Ah Lee with three or four other Chinese. In the adjoining room they found the defendant Tom Yu with two other Chinese, and Tom Yu was placed under arrest. A search was made of the room and they found a grip containing a 7 millimeter Luger revolver, a .32 automatic Colts revolver and a package of 9 millimeter cartridges, which, however, cannot be used in a 7 millimeter revolver. Just outside of the door of the room in which Tom Yu was found the officers picked up a .32 caliber Smith & Wesson special revolver.

The above statement of the facts is, as before suggested, taken from the testimony of witnesses, several of whom testified to having been eyewitnesses to the tragedy and other circumstances immediately connected therewith. There were in addition to these facts a number of corroborating circumstances brought out by evidence produced by the people. Among these reference may be made to the testimony of a Chinese witness that, about a week after the homicide occurred, he went to the gambling house and examined the stove into which witnesses had testified Wong Ai had thrown some empty cartridges, and therein found several empty shells, which were introduced in evidence.

As already stated, the defendants each claimed and testified that, although in the city of Marysville on the night of the homicide, he was not present at the Chong Wo store when the shooting took place, but was at some other place in said city. Wong Ai stated that, at the time of the shooting, he was not at the store of Chong Wo, but was in the building at First and C streets in which he at that time resided. He said there were five other Chinese in the room with him and that they heard the shots fired and that one of the Chinese immediately closed the front and the rear doors to the building. After that all of them went back to the room in which they were sitting when the shots were fired and sat down. He stated that one of the Chinese present with him at the time telephoned for an automobile and that the machine drove up to the building and he with the other Chinese were driven to the Sing Fat store. He admitted having a revolver on him at the time of his arrest, but stated that, having heard the shots and not knowing what the shooting meant, he put the revolver on his person just before getting into the automobile.

Jo Fong stated that he was a resident of Colusa, but went to Marysville on the 28th day of July, 1921, in response to a letter from a Chinese residing in Sacramento, Lee Gnin by name, requesting Fong to meet him (Lee Gnin) in Marysville on that day. He admitted having been in Marysville on the night of the 30th of July, 1921; that early in the evening of the 30th he went to the electric railway station near the Western Hotel, Second and D streets, in the city of Marysville, to see if his friend had arrived from Sacramento, and that upon going to the station he learned that the train had already passed through. He then, so he stated, started back towards Chinatown on Second street, and walked as far down as C street, when he observed a personal acquaintance by the name of Jo Tuck standing in front of a Japanese store on the opposite side of Second street; that he hailed Jo Tuck and at the same time crossed Second street and stood talking with Tuck until the shots were heard and the firing had ceased; that he thereupon walked up as far as Fourth street and returned "home by way of an alley"; that he attempted to get into his place of abode by way of a back door, but the door was locked; that he thought he heard some noise at the door and "did not know whether they were Americans or Chinese coming through the door," so then "I took the gun out of my pocket and put it in a barrel and put a brick on it. Then it happened two policemen came out of that door, and I ducked behind the barrel." He denied ever owning or using a Luger revolver, and declared that he carried the weapon that he attempted to hide in the barrel because he had money and valuables on his person and was apprehensive that some one might try to rob him.

Gin Wah testified that he had been a resident of Colusa about three months before the time of the trial, and that he went to Marysville on the 27th of July, 1921, and that he was there on the night of the homicide; that his object in going to Marysville was to be present at the election of a president of the Hop Sing tong. At the time the shooting took place, he said, he was in the Hop Sing tong building, sitting out on the upper porch with several other Chinese. When the firing began he and the other Chinese stood up and looked over the porch toward the direction from which the sound of the shots proceeded. He said he saw two men run out of the Chong Wo store but that he did not know who they were.

The defendant Lee Ping stated that he resided at San Jose, and in the month of July, 1921, went to San Francisco, and from there to Marysville, arriving at the latter place about 1 o'clock p. m. on the day of the homicide. On arriving in Marysville he went to a butcher shop conducted by a Chinese named Wong and a relative of Tom Yu. He and Tom Yu were together at the butcher shop for a while and then went to the Hop Sing tong headquarters, and that he was with Tom Yu, Gin Wah, and other Chinese sitting on the upper porch of the Hop Sing building when the shooting occurred. He stated that he never was in Chong Wo's store and that he did not have a weapon on him that night.

Tom Yu testified that his home was at 140 Waverly place, San Francisco, that he was a cook by occupation, and that he, in company with Lee Ping, left San Francisco on the 30th of July, 1921, and went to Marysville, arriving there a little after the noon hour. He stated that he went to Marysville in response to a letter from one Wong York asking him to go to that city to work for him. He stated that he and Lee Ping early in the afternoon went to the Hop Sing tong building and were out on the upper porch with other Chinese for a short while; that thereafter he went to Quong Hop Wo's place, leaving Lee Ping, Gin Wah, and another Chinese on the porch of the Hop Sing tong building. He had a drink of tea at Quong Hop Wo's, and, being tired from the long ride that he had had that day, retired to bed a few minutes before 10 o'clock; that after he had lain in bed for a few minutes he arose and stood by a table smoking, when he heard a number of shots fired; that one Toy Din, who was also in the building, closed the door and he with other Chinese remained in there for about half an hour, after which he left the building and went to see his friend and cousin, Wong York, at Fong On's. He found Fong On's place closed, and he finally returned with some other Chinese acquaintances, whom he had met on the street, to the Quong Hop Wo building, where he was arrested.

The testimony of each of the defendants was corroborated by the testimony of other witnesses. As to the circumstance of the pursuit and shooting of Wah Poon, there was testimony introduced by the defendants to the effect that the parties who assaulted said Wah Poon, after the assault was committed, ran to an automobile stationed near First and D streets, jumped into it, and that the machine was driven rapidly across the bridge spanning the Yuba river.

[1] It will thus be noticed that there is a decided conflict in the evidence upon the ultimate question in the case. It was, of course, a matter entirely with the jury to decide upon which side the truth prevailed. It was within the exclusive province of the jury to determine the question of the truth or the falsity of any testimony brought to their attention, and the verdicts returned stand as indubitable evidence that the jury believed the witnesses for the prosecution and disbelieved the testimony offered in support of the alibi set up by each of the defendants. Obviously, this court cannot say that the jury reached an erroneous conclusion from the testimony. In other words, it is not within either the province or power of this court to declare that the jury should have accepted the testimony presented by the defendants in support of their claim of an alibi in preference to the testimony presented by the people tending to establish their guilt. But it is argued that the testimony fails to show that Tom Yu, Wong Ai, and Lee Ping were in any way connected with the commission of the crime. It is true that it is not shown by the testimony that the defendants named took part in the actual act of killing the deceased. But, as shown, there is testimony that Jo Fong, after having looked into the store of Chong Wo, immediately went into the Hop Sing building and returned to the sidewalk, followed by the other defendants, one of whom accompanied him to the door and took part in the shooting and the other three, armed with weapons, stood on the sidewalk near the door leading into the store, as if on guard.

[2] From this testimony, and the further testimony that a Suey Sing man who had just left the Chong Wo store was pursued and shot at by Tom Yu, Wong Ai, and Lee Ping, and wounded by a bullet from a pistol in the hands of some one of the three, the jury could have justly inferred, as undoubtedly they did infer, that the killing of Ng Shea Wah was the culmination of a conspiracy previously formed between all the defendants. Indeed, no one could read the entire testimony in this case without coming to the conclusion that there was on in the city of Marysville what is commonly known as a tong war between the Hop Sing society and the Suey Sing society, and that the killing of Ng Shea Wah and perhaps the intention to kill other members of the Suey Sing tong were part of the program mapped out by the Hop Sing tong men. The jury could have regarded as a circumstance of singular importance as in proof of a conspiracy between the defendants to take the life of Ng Shea Wah the conduct of Jo Fong, during the time that Sheriff McCoy was sitting on a bench in front of the Hop Sing building, in stepping out several different times from said building to the sidewalk, remaining in front but a second or so and then returning to the inside of said building, and then, after the sheriff had left the bench, going to Chong Wo's store, looking in and thereupon returning into the Hop Sing building and immediately going back to the sidewalk and thence to the Chong Wo store, followed by the other defendants.

[3] Of course, none of the defendants was on trial in this case for the assault upon Wah Poon, but the fact that said assault was made upon a member of the Suey Sing society by three of the men who immediately followed Jo Fong from the Hop Sing building after the latter looked into the Chong Wo store, and that it occurred almost simultaneously with the shooting of Ng Shea Wah, was important and proper in that it tended in some measure to show a preconceived and prearranged design on the part of the defendants to act in concert in the destruction of the life of the deceased or any other member of the Suey Sing tong with whom they might come in contact. The fact is emphasized, however, that while a number of weapons of a different make were found either in the possession of the defendants or in the rooms in which they were apprehended after the homicide, no 9 mm. Luger revolver, by means of which the killing was accomplished, was found in the possession of the defendants or in the rooms in which they were arrested. But this was a matter for the jury to consider and account for in their deliberations upon the evidence. The jury had the right to and probably did conclude that the weapon with which the homicide was committed was disposed of by the party using it after he had fled from the scene of the tragedy.

The remaining assignments involve attacks upon certain rulings whereby certain evidence was allowed to go before the jury. These will now be considered.

[4] 1. Upon the theory that the shooting of the deceased was the outcome of a feud existing between the Hop Sing tong and the Suey Sing tong, the district attorney sought and was permitted to show that the defendants were members of the first-named tong and were active in the prosecution of its general purposes, it having been shown that the deceased was a member of the Suey Sing society. As before observed, there was received into the case some testimony which afforded the inference that the two tongs were previously to, and at the time of, the homicide hostile to each other to a fighting point. The very fact of the killing of a member of the Suey Sing tong by members of the Hop Sing tong, and the further fact that Wah Poon, also a member of the Suey Sing tong, was pursued and shot by members of the Hop Sing tong at the very time the homicide occurred in Chong Wo's store, themselves constitute very strong circumstances as in proof of the existence of a feud between the two tongs. Furthermore, the statement by Wong Ai that they would kill all Suey Sing men, referring to them by an opprobrious epithet, while not evidence as against the other defendants in so far as the proof of the crime charged in the indictment was concerned, was, nevertheless, some evidence of the fact that a general war was on at the city of Marysville between the two Chinese societies named. And there was other testimony further tending to show that a very bitter hostile feeling existed between the two tongs. It was therefore proper that the district attorney should have been permitted to show that the defendants were active members of the Hop Sing tong and occupied official positions therein, as was true at least as to one of them. But it is objected that the district attorney was allowed to go so far as to question witnesses as to whether the defendants were gunmen or members of the highbinders branch of the Hop Sing tong. One of the witnesses for the prosecution, a member of the police force of San Francisco, testified that he had seen one or two of the defendants quite often, one being the defendant Jo Fong, at the meeting of the "binders" organization of the Hop Sing tong in San Franscisco, by which undoubtedly he meant "highbinders" organization. It is now and has been for many years a matter of such common notoriety that there are what are known as Chinese highbinders that the definition of the term "highbinder" has been given in Webster's New International Dictionary in part as follows:

"A more or less loosely organized band of Chinese criminals in the Chinese quarter of an American city, who are frequently hired as bravos to commit assassinations or other outrages."

It is also equally a matter of common knowledge that the Chinese tongs generally maintain in connection with their organizations "highbinder branches" thereof composed of Chinese who are willing to execute orders made by the tongs for the killing of members of hostile tongs whenever differences arise between them, and such extreme measures are conceived to be necssary by the tongs to accomplish in full their purposes.

[5, 6] We can, therefore, perceive no good reason why the prosecution in this case, having shown that the defendants were members of one of these Chinese tongs and the deceased a member of another, and that hostilities existed between the two tongs, should not have been permitted to go fully into the question whether the defendants were or were not professional highbinders or men who were professionally engaged in the business of carrying out such infamies of the tong to which they belonged as they were required or employed to do by such tong. A specific objection is made, however, that the questioning of Jo Fong by the district attorney as to whether he was a member of the Hop Sing tong and of the highbinders branch of that organization, was not cross-examination. The defendant testified in chief that he was not present at the scene of the homicide at the time it occurred and declared that he had no connection whatever with the commission of that act. This amounted to an explicit denial of his guilt of the crime with which he was charged. We think that, in view of the testimony as to the existence of a feud between the tongs here in question, as above explained, and in view of the further fact that the defendant denied his complicity in the commission of the crime charged, it was proper cross-examination for the district attorney to ask said defendant as to his connections with the Hop Sing tong and whether he was a member of and active in the "binders" branch of that organization. The cross-examination was pertinent as tending to show interest and also as tending to impeach the statement of Jo Fong that he was not present at and participated in the shooting. People v. Rozelle, 78 Cal. 84, 20 Pac. 36; People v. Fong Ching, 78 Cal. 169, 20 Pac. 396; McGarry v. People, 2 Lans. 227, 19 Am. Rep. (footnotes) 348; State v. Bartmess, 33 Or. 110, 54 Pac. 167, 171; State v. Gallo, 18 Or. 423, 23 Pac. 264; People v. Fealy, 33 Cal. App. 605, 165 Pac. 1034.

2. It is next contended that the court and the district attorney were guilty of misconduct in the presence of the jury because of certain remarks made by those officers, the former in ruling upon the objection by counsel for the defendants to the testimony last above referred to and the latter in his argument before the jury. The court in ruling upon the objection by counsel for the defendants to the question propounded on cross-examination by the district attorney to Jo Fong whether he (said Fong) belonged to the "binders society of the Hop Sing tong on the 30th of July, 1921," stated that "the word 'binders' is an abbreviation of the word 'highbinders,' which is the word in common use and which is commonly understood." The court further said that there had been evidence introduced tending to establish the proposition that a so-called tong war existed in Marysville on the night of the homicide, but that it was for the jury to say whether that fact had or had not been proved. Counsel excepted to this statement by the court and the latter proceeded:

"I could base the claim upon the statements and admission of counsel themselves in court, as to one circumstance, if I desired to argue the matter with counsel, but I am not passing upon the ultimate fact as to whether or not it has been proven. That is for the jury to say. I say there has been evidence, circumstantial evidence as well as some other evidence, to establish the fact that at the time of the shooting there was an outbreak which has been described as a tong war between the Hop Sing and the Suey Sing societies in the City of Marysville. Whether it was or not, that is a matter for the jury to determine."

[7] First taking up this particular assignment, we have to say that we see nothing in the remarks of the court which were improper or which were calculated wrongfully to prejudice the rights of the accused. A trial court has the right—indeed, it is often necessary to do so, when ruling upon objections to proffered evidence—to state the evidence which has already been received. And this is all that the court in this instance did, taking the pains, however, to repeatedly declare that whether the fact to which the evidence stated by him related was or was not proved was a matter for determination by the jury. The remarks by the district attorney objected to by counsel for the defendants were made while that officer was arguing the case to the jury, and were to the effect that "the first great fact in this evidence is that the gunmen from other towns came to the local headquarters." The prosecutor went on to say that it had been proved conclusively that there was a tong war and "that a tong war did break out on that night," referring to the night of July 30, 1921; that that fact was established by the circumstance of the shooting by Hop Sing tong men of a Suey Sing tong man on the street at about the time of the killing of Ng Shea Wah, referring to the shooting of Wah Poon. He then proceeded to say that, if the jury desired to say "now and forever there shall be no more tong wars in the city of Marysville, God knows this evidence is overwhelming and you can put a stop to tong wars," etc.

[8, 9] We shall not attempt to follow the argument of counsel against the propriety of the remarks of the district attorney as above indicated. It is sufficient to say that we are of the opinion that the district attorney in making the criticised remarks was well within his rights as the prosecutor of the case. The evidence, as has been shown, clearly warranted the theory that a tong war existed in Marysville on the night of the 30th of July, 1921, and that the tragedy herein involved was the direct result thereof, and the prosecuting attorney was authorized to descant upon that theory, amplify it, and present it to the attention of the jury as fully as he thought it necessary to do so, so long as he did not transcend the record or lug thereinto any fact or facts which were not shown or reasonably inferable from the testimony. His reference to the defendants as "gunmen" was undoubtedly justified by the fact as it was established by the evidence. And the theory advanced by him that they were professional "gunmen" of the Hop Sing tong was and is clearly deducible from the evidence as a whole, and it was therefore not improper for him to advance that theory in his argument to the jury.

[10] 3. It is objected that the court erred in receiving in evidence the cartridge shells which were, about a week after the homicide, found in the stove in the gambling house and which, it was shown, were placed therein by the defendant Wong Ai on the night of the killing of Ng Shea Wah. The argument presented here against the legal propriety of the ruling admitting in evidence said shells is that it was not shown that the circumstance of finding the shells in the stove was in any way connected with the defendant Wong Ai; that so long a time elapsed from the time that Wong Ai was seen to have put shells in said stove and the time of finding the same therein, that other persons, who were shown to have had access to the place where the shells were found, might have placed them in the stove. We think the circumstance constituted competent evidence and that the objection thereto goes to the weight rather than to the competency thereof. It was for the jury to determine, upon all the other circumstances connected with the circumstance of the placing of the shells in the stove and the finding of them therein one week after Wong Ai had placed shells in said stove, whether he did place said shells in said stove, and if they so found, to pass upon the weight or significance of the fact as one among such others as in their judgment tended to connect Wong Ai with the commission of the crime. It may here be stated that the court allowed the testimony of this circumstance as to Wong Ai, but sustained an objection to it as to the other defendants.

[11-13] 4. It was sought to be shown through the witness Wong York, the owner of a butcher shop at the city of Marysville, that some days prior to the homicide he addressed a letter to Tom Yu, at San Francisco, where the latter resided, and requested him to come to Marysville and take employment in his (Wong York's) butcher shop, and that, in response to that letter, said defendant went to Marysville on the day of the homicide, arriving there early in the afternoon of said day. The court sustained the objections of the district attorney to that testimony. The theory of the prosecution seems to be that the defendants, who resided elsewhere than in Marysville, went to that city for the express purpose of committing the crime charged in the information, and we think that testimony by witnesses other than the defendants themselves tending to show that the defendants went to Marysville on legitimate business at about the time of the homicide would have been proper, but in this particular instance the purported letter would have been the best evidence of the fact which Wong York was asked to testify to, and there is no showing that the letter was not in the possession of the defendant Tom Yu at the time of the trial and at the time this proof was sought to be made. Nor is there any evidence of the contents of the letter, and it is therefore impossible for us to say whether the letter really contained the request claimed for it by the defendants or was a letter upon some other subject. At any rate, it appearing that the defendant was in Marysville that day, and there being testimony that he was one of the parties who went with Jo Fong and Gin Wah to the place where the homicide occurred, we think the ruling of the court, even if erroneous, was without prejudice.

5. We have in effect disposed of the point that the court erred in allowing testimony describing the pursuit and shooting of Wah Poon. The contention of the defendants is that the testimony related to an independent and different crime from that with which the accused were charged. As before stated, the two transactions occurred almost at the same instant of time and were participated in by the persons who followed Jo Fong from the Hop Sing building to the place where the shooting occurred, the three defendants who attacked Wah Poon being stationed on the sidewalk near the store, from which circumstance the jury were entitled to draw the inference that the two occurrences were a part of the same general scheme of the Hop Sing defendants to attack Suey Sing men.

6. The point under this subdivision relates to the alleged misconduct of the district attorney in his argument to the jury. It is not necessary to specifically consider this point, inasmuch as what we have had to say above, relative to the charge that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct in his argument, is equally applicable to the point now under consideration.

7. The last point is that the court erred in not granting the motion of the defendants for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. The motion was made upon the affidavit of one of the attorneys for the defendants, and therein it was stated that one Edward Oscar Heinrichs of Berkeley, a firearm expert, had been, prior to the commencement of the trial of this case, called to the city of Marysville by the district attorney of Yuba county for the purpose of having him examine the Smith & Wesson revolver found in the possession of Jo Fong at the time of his arrest and which was introduced in evidence at the trial, and determine whether the same, at the time of the homicide, bore any evidence of having recently been discharged; that, notwithstanding that said Heinrichs did go to Marysville and make the examination requested by the district attorney, the latter officer did not subpœna and introduce him as a witness in the case; that the affiant learned after the trial of this action that said Heinrichs, upon examining the said Smith & Wesson revolver, informed the district attorney that if he were called as a witness in the case he would be compelled to testify that said weapon had never at any time been fired since it was cleaned; that said Heinrichs told affiant that when he learned that the case had been tried he was surprised that the district attorney did not call him as a witness; that affiant requested said Heinrichs to make an affidavit involving the facts here set forth, but that Heinrichs refused to do so on the ground that he did not feel it would be ethical for him to make such affidavit; that if a new trial be granted in this case the defendants will upon a retrial subpœna and have present in court and so produce the testimony of said Heinrichs.

[14] The defendants introduced certain expert witnesses who testified that the said Smith & Wesson revolver bore no evidence of having been recently fired at the time it was taken possession of by the officers on the night of the homicide. The evidence of Heinrichs would have been merely cumulative, and it is well settled that, where a motion for a new trial is merely based upon the ground of newly discovered evidence which is cumulative of evidence which was presented at the trial, it is entirely within the discretion of the trial court to say whether such motion shall or shall not be granted, and, where in such case such court has refused to grant it, the reviewing courts will not interfere with the order, unless it clearly appears that there has been an abuse of discretion. We have examined carefully all the points urged for a reversal, and our conclusion is that the verdicts should not be disturbed.

Accordingly, the judgments and the orders appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

190 Cal. 88

WATTERSON v. OWENS RIVER CANAL CO. (L. A. 6700.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 10, 1922. Rehearing Denied Dec. 7, 1922.)

1. Appeal and error ⊂=1210(1)—Reversal of judgment remands cause for new trial.

The effect of the reversal of a judgment on appeal was to remand the cause for a new trial.

2. Limitation of actions ⊂=130(2)—New action cannot be begun after reversal where limitations have run, where plaintiff by amending complaint had been granted substantially same right.

After reversal of a judgment on appeal on return for retrial, where plaintiff was permitted to amend his complaint and was thus granted the same rights which he could have obtained by commencing a new action under Code Civ. Proc. § 355, which provides that a new action may be begun within one year after reversal, and having been granted the right and relief and proceeded to trial on his amended complaint, and having failed to establish cause of action asserted by it, he cannot, after the statute of limitations has run on his cause of action, avail himself of section 355, by commencing a new action on the identical cause of action embraced in his former suit.

3. Judgment ⊂=345—Judgment of abatement of action set aside only on motion for new trial or on application under statute.

A judgment of abatement is a final judgment and terminates an action, and the trial court has no authority to set it aside, or to revive action, except on motion for new trial or on application for relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Inyo County; William D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by T. G. Watterson against the Owens River Canal Company. From judgment for defendant, and an order denying motion to set aside judgment and permit plaintiff to file an amended complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 42 Cal. App. 372, 183 Pac. 816.

Richard S. Miner and P. W. Forbes, both of Independence, for appellant.

L. C. Hall, of Bishop (A. H. Swallow, of Bishop, of counsel), for respondent.

RICHARDS, Justice pro tem. There are two appeals presented for our consideration in this case: One an appeal from the judgment; the other appeal from an order refusing to set aside the said judgment and permit the plaintiff to file an amended complaint. A review of the history of the litigation is essential to the proper determination of both appeals. The litigation arose out of the construction, alteration, and repair of the Owens river canal in the county of Inyo. A written contract had been entered into between the defendant herein and one Snyder, for the performance of said work for the stipulated price of $19,000; said Snyder was required by the terms and conditions of said contract to furnish an undertaking for the due performance of said work, and the plaintiff herein became his surety upon such undertaking. The contract with Snyder was not recorded. Snyder, having failed to perform, the plaintiff took over the work remaining to be done under said contract and completed the same. Having done so, he undertook to assert a lien for the amount due for his said work under the provisions of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing that, in the absence of the recordation of such a contract it—

"shall be wholly void, and no recovery shall be had thereon by either party thereto; * * * and in such case the labor done and materials furnished by all persons aforesaid, except the contractor, shall be deemed to have been done and furnished at the personal instance of the owner, and they shall have a lien for the value thereof."

In his complaint for the foreclosure of said lien, the plaintiff alleged that, after the failure of said Snyder to perform said contract, an agreement had been entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant, by the terms of which the former was to proceed to complete the work done under said contract, and said plaintiff demanded a personal judgment against the defendant for the amount expended by him in completing said work under said new agreement between himself and the defendant and for the foreclosure of his lien under said section of the Code. The plaintiff recovered a judgment in his favor in said action. The defendant took an appeal from such judgment, which appeal came before the District Court of Appeal for the Second district for hearing and was, on July 29, 1914, determined by said court, at which time said judgment was reversed (Watterson v. Owens River Canal Company, 25 Cal. App. 247, 143 Pac. 90); the court holding that the plaintiff as the surety of said Snyder, and standing in his place in the performance of said contract was not entitled to claim or assert a lien under the provisions of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure any more than his principal, Snyder, would have been. The court further stated that the plaintiff's right of recovery, if any, for the value of the labor and materials furnished by him in the completion of said work, was merely a right to recover a personal judgment therefor under like limitations as would have been binding upon his principal, Snyder, and that he would be limited in such recovery by the contract price named in the written contract, after adjustment of all additions and deductions due to changes in the work as it progressed, and also after allowing the proper credits for payments made by the owner.

A petition for rehearing was denied by this court September 26, 1914, and the remittitur upon said appeal was filed in the superior court on October 1, 1914. Thereafter, and on March 13, 1915, the plaintiff moved the trial court for leave to file an amended complaint in said action, setting forth with much of detail therein in several counts the alleged agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant for the completion of said work after the abandonment by Snyder of the said contract. The motion of the plaintiff for leave to file this amended complaint was denied on March 16, 1915. On the 24th day of April, 1915, the plaintiff again moved to amend his former complaint by striking out those portions thereof which referred to his appeals and foreclosure of a lien under the provisions of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure. His complaint as thus amended consisted in the plaintiff's asserted right to recover a personal judgment upon the basis of his alleged agreement with the defendant, by the terms of which he was to complete said work. It was upon the complaint as thus amended that the action was brought to trial a second time, before a jury, in the course of which the plaintiff presented certain evidence as to the existence of said subsequent agreement between himself and said defendant for the completion of said work. At the conclusion of the plaintiff's case the defendant moved for a nonsuit upon several grounds, among which was the ground that the evidence introduced by plaintiff in support of his alleged cause of action wholly failed to prove the existence or making of any contract by and between the plaintiff and the defendant, as alleged in the plaintiff's complaint and upon which his cause of action was based. The trial court granted the defendant's said motion for nonsuit, and in addition thereto instructed the jury to return a directed verdict in the defendant's favor, and, in accordance with such instruction, the jury returned such verdict, and a judgment in favor of the defendant was entered thereon. An appeal was taken by the plaintiff from this judgment to the District Court of Appeal for the Second district, and upon hearing therein said judgment was affirmed on July 24, 1919. Watterson v. Owens River Canal Co., 42 Cal. App. 372, 183 Pac. 816.

On June 18, 1915, within one year after the filing of the remittitur upon his first appeal, above noted, reversing the original judgment in the case, and a few days before the taking of his second appeal, the plaintiff herein commenced the present action by the filing of a complaint containing several counts, for work and labor alleged to have been performed for the defendant and for materials furnished at its special instance and request. In order to avoid the plea of the statute of limitations and to attempt to bring the case within the provisions of section 355 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the plaintiff set forth in his complaint herein the fact of the commencement of the prior action and in general terms the nature of said action and the history of the proceedings therein up to the time of the commencement of this action, including the fact of the reversal of the said former action upon the first appeal therein. He then proceeded to aver that said first action—

"involved and still involves the same identical work, labor, materials, and money which are mentioned and involved in the present action and that the same identical cause of action set out in the complaint in said first action is also set out in the complaint in this action."

To this complaint the defendant interposed a demurrer upon the general ground, and also upon the ground that there was another action pending between the same parties for the same cause of action. The trial court sustained this demurrer on the special ground, with leave to amend, whereupon an amended complaint was filed embracing substantially the same allegations concerned in the prior action as those contained in the original complaint, and particularly the averment that said first action involved the same identical work, etc., which are mentioned and involved in the present action, and that the same identical cause of action set out in the complaint in said first action is also set out in the amended complaint in this action. To this amended complaint the defendant again interposed a demurrer upon the same grounds, which the trial court again sustained. Thereafter the plaintiff moved the court for leave to file a second amended complaint embracing practically the same allegations as those contained in the two former complaints, and the same averment as to the identical nature of the present action in relation to the former action. The motion to file this second amended complaint was denied by the court, which at the time of doing so made a minute order "that the action abate and that a proper judgment be entered thereafter." The above order was made on July 3, 1919. On August 26, 1919, the court entered a judgment of dismissal of the present action. On October 22, 1919, on motion of the plaintiff, the court set aside said judgment of dismissal and in place thereof ordered a judgment of abatement of the present action, and such judgment was entered in accordance with said order on January 31, 1920. It is from said judgment of abatement that the first of these appeals has been taken. On March 11, 1920, and prior to taking said appeal, the plaintiff herein moved to set aside the judgment of abatement thus entered, upon the ground that the former action, which had been pending at the time of the commencement of this action and the time of filing or proposed filing of the several complaints herein, had been terminated by the filing of the remittitur in the second appeal therein on September 24, 1919, showing the affirmance of the judgment of nonsuit therein. The plaintiff also at the same time made a motion for leave to file a further amended complaint in the present action. The trial court denied both of said motions, and it is from its order in that regard that the second of these appeals has been taken.

Upon his appeal from the judgment of abatement, based, as it was, upon the pendency of the former action, the appellant insists that under the express provisions of section 355 of the Code of Civil Procedure he was entitled to commence and maintain the present action, notwithstanding the pendency of the former action. Said section provides:

"If an action is commenced within the time prescribed therefor, and a judgment therein for the plaintiff be reversed on appeal, the plaintiff, or if he die and the cause of action survive, his representatives, may commence a new action within one year after the reversal."

This, the plaintiff contends, is precisely what he has done, and having done so, the plea of another action pending should not have failed to abate the action, which, under this section of the Code, he was expressly authorized to institute. We are of the opinion that the plaintiff, if he was ever in a position to avail himself of the provisions of the section of the Code of Civil Procedure last above quoted, for the purpose of commencing and maintaining the present action, is no longer in a position so to do.

[1, 2] The effect of the reversal of the judgment in the plaintiff's favor upon the first appeal was that of remanding the cause to the trial court for a new trial. Stein v. Leeman, 161 Cal. 505, 119 Pac. 663; Davis v. Le Mesnager, 155 Cal. 520, 101 Pac. 910; Glassell v. Hansen, 149 Cal. 511, 87 Pac. 200; Falkner v. Hendy, 107 Cal. 54, 40 Pac. 21, 386; Hayne, New Trial and Appeal, vol. 2, p. 1716. Upon the return of the said cause for retrial, the plaintiff moved the court for leave to amend his former complaint therein so as to eliminate therefrom all reference to his assertion and foreclosure of a lien and to leave said action one for the recovery of a personal judgment based upon the plaintiff's alleged later agreement with the defendant for the completion of the work to be done under the Snyder contract. Being thus permitted upon his motion to amend his former complaint in this regard, he was granted thereby substantially the same rights and the same relief which he might otherwise have obtained by the commencement of a new action under the provisions of section 355 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and, having been granted that right and that relief, and having proceeded to trial upon his said amended complaint in said former action, and having presented his proofs therein, and having failed thereby to establish his cause of action as asserted in his said amended complaint, and having suffered a judgment of nonsuit therein, he cannot now be permitted, after the statute of limitations has run upon his said cause of action, to avail himself of the provisions of section 355 of the Code of Civil Procedure by commencing a new action based, as he repeatedly alleges in his various complaints filed therein, upon the same identical cause of action as that embraced in his former suit.

A brief history of the origin and application of section 355 of the Code of Civil Procedure will serve to show that it can be given no application to the facts of this case. Section 355 of said Code was originally enacted as section 26 of an act defining the time for commencing civil actions, passed April 22, 1850, in which it appears in substantially its present form. It was evidently taken from the commissioner's Code of Civil Procedure, reported in that year to the Legislature of the state of New York, wherein it appears as section 588 thereof, but which upon its adoption was numbered section 104 of the New York Code of Civil Procedure. The provision had its origin in the English statute of 21 James I, c. 16, wherein, although more quaintly phrased, it appears in substance as later ingrafted upon the New York Code. Subsequently to its insertion in the Code of Civil Procedure in New York as section 104 thereof, it was amended so as to have application only to cases wherein a judgment was reversed on appeal without awarding a new trial, or where the action was terminated in any other manner, either by a voluntary discontinuance or a dismissal of the complaint for neglect to prosecute the action, or a final judgment on the merits. In most of the states of the Union, similar provisions, evidently derived from the same original source, are to be found. Some of these are general in terms, as is our statute, and others contain various limitations; as, for example, in the state of Vermont it is provided that, if an action commenced within the time limited is abated, or fails through an insufficient service of process, or by unavoidable accident, the plaintiff may commence a new action within a year after the termination of the former one. So, also, in the state of Kansas the statute provides that if in an action commenced within due time the judgment for the plaintiff should be reversed, or, if the plaintiff fail in said action otherwise than upon the merits, a new action may be begun within a year after such reversal or failure. There is a similar provision in the state of Oklahoma, while in the state of Michigan the statute is in substantially the same form as that in the state of Vermont. Provisions similar in form to that contained in our own Code are to be found in the statutes of Alabama and Mississippi. In fact, the statutes of most of the states contain the like provision in one form or another, and there have been many decisions construing these various statutory enactments. It is not necessary to review these various statutes or the decisions construing them, since it has never been held, so far as our investigation has gone nor so far as we are referred by counsel to any case, that this provision, however varying its form, has been given application to a case wherein the judgment in favor of the plaintiff is reversed upon appeal, and the cause remanded for a new trial, and where, after such reversal, the plaintiff has sought and obtained leave to amend his complaint so as to set forth the same cause of action which he seeks later to assert through a new action commenced after the statutory time; and in which former action and after such amendment the plaintiff has proceeded to trial and has been permitted to present all of his available evidence and has there been nonsuited through the failure of his proofs. To permit thereafter the institution of a new action based upon the same identical cause of action would be to permit a violation of those other provisions of the statute which enable a defendant to defeat such an action by a plea in bar or by the plea of another action pending in the event such former action has not already been terminated. We are satisfied that section 355 of the Code of Civil Procedure was not available to enable plaintiff to avoid the plea of the statute of limitations or the plea of another action pending in the instant case.

[3] The plaintiff upon his second appeal insists that the trial court was in error in denying his motion to set aside the judgment of abatement therein, after it appeared that the former action had been terminated by the affirmance of the judgment upon the second appeal, and was further in error in refusing to allow him leave to file a third amended complaint. There is no merit in either of these contentions. The judgment of abatement was a final judgment and terminated the action. 1 C. J. 26, 27; Klamath Lumber Co. v. Bamber, 74 Or. 287, 142 Pac. 359, 145 Pac. 650; Brown v. Fletcher's Estate, 146 Mich. 401, 109 N. W. 686, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 632, 123 Am. St. Rep. 233; Crane v. French, Adm'r, 38 Miss. 503; Emry v. Chappell, 148 N. C. 327, 330, 62 S. E. 411. The trial court had, therefore, no authority to set said judgment aside or to revive said action, except upon motion for a new trial or upon application for relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Having, therefore, properly denied the plaintiff's motion to set aside said judgment of abatement upon the grounds stated, it follows that the court was not in error in refusing the plaintiff's application for leave to file a third amended complaint; and it is not, therefore, necessary for us to consider whether or not the plaintiff's proffered third amended complaint stated a cause of action. All other points discussed are without merit.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; LENNON, J.; WASTE, J.; WILBUR, J.; LAWLOR, J.

---

190 Cal. 97

FEDERAL MUT. LIABILITY INS. CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (S. F. 10147.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 15, 1922.)

1. Master and servant ⟸417(1)—Compensation award reviewable without second rehearing.

Under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act, a party affected by a decision of the Industrial Commission on a rehearing may apply for a writ of review without applying for a second rehearing, though the decision on the rehearing is based on additional testimony.

2. Master and servant ⟸361—Compensation award against general employer's insurer authorized.

Where a stevedore company, a corporation organized by lumber companies, furnished lumber handlers to one of the lumber companies under an arrangement by which the stevedore company retained the right to hire and discharge the men, carried them on its pay roll, and paid their wages with money paid by the lumber company, furnishing a sum equal to the wages, plus a percentage as a recompense to the stevedore company and an additional sum equal to the estimated premium for workmen's compensation insurance of the men carried on the stevedore company's pay roll and working in the lumber company's yards, subject to its entire direction, held, that the men were general employees of the stevedore company and special employees of the lumber company, and that the stevedore company's compensation insurance carrier was liable for injuries to one of the men while in the course of employment.

Shaw, C. J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Application for certiorari by the Federal Mutual Liability Insurance Company to review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission awarding compensation to Sarah W. Simmonds for the death of her husband, Richard E. Simmonds. Award affirmed.

Cooley, Crowley & Lachmund, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

A. E. Graupner, of San Francisco (Warren H. Pillsbury, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

Walter H. Linforth and Carroll S. Bucher, both of San Francisco, for Pope & Talbot and London Guarantee & Accident Co.

LAWLOR, J. This is a proceeding in certiorari instituted by petitioner, Federal Mutual Liability Insurance Company, a corporation, to review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission in favor of respondent Sarah W. Simmonds, allowed as compensation for the death of Richard E. Simmonds, said respondent's husband.

Decedent had, for a number of years prior to 1916, been employed as a lumber handler for Pope & Talbot, a corporation, one of the respondents herein. From June 1 to July 26, and from August 15 to November 21, 1916, stevedore strikes occurred, during which strike periods decedent left his employment. Because of these strikes certain lumber dealers, including Pope & Talbot, on July 26, 1916, organized the "American Stevedore Company," a corporation. Together with the other lumber companies, Pope & Talbot entered into an agreement with the stevedore company whereby Pope & Talbot agreed to hire all the stevedores used by it "from and through the said American Stevedore Company," and the stevedore company agreed to do all in its power to furnish and supply all the men required by Pope & Talbot to do its work. The term "stevedore," as used in the agreement, was intended to include, and did include, lumber handlers such as decedent, and decedent resumed work under the agreement a few days before the second strike ended. The stevedore company carried the men hired under the agreement upon its pay rolls, paid their wages, and billed Pope & Talbot at regular intervals. Pope & Talbot paid to the stevedore company a sum of money equal to the wages paid the stevedores used by them, plus 10 per cent. on their wages as a recompense to the stevedore company; also a sum of money estimated to be the amount of the premium upon the workmen's compensation insurance of the stevedores carried on the stevedore company's pay roll and working in Pope & Talbot's yard. The latter amount was paid by the stevedore company to petitioner, who was its compensation insurance carrier. Pope & Talbot paid a separate premium to respondent London Guarantee & Accident Company for workmen's compensation insurance covering its regular employees carried on its own pay roll, not including the men covered by the agreement with the stevedore company. The agreement between the stevedore company and Pope & Talbot was not formally renewed subsequent to May 18, 1918, but the parties to it by mutual understanding continued to operate under its provisions.

For the first few months of operation under the agreement, during and after the second strike, the stevedore company exercised immediate direction and control over the hiring and discharging of the stevedores carried on its payrolls, requiring the foreman of any of the lumber companies to procure its consent to the hiring of individual stevedores. When labor conditions became normal, the stevedore company ceased to exercise immediate direction and control over such hiring and discharging, leaving it to the discretion of the foremen, but it retained the right to resume such direction and control whenever it elected to do so. In practical operation, a lumber company's foreman could hire additional men and place them upon the pay roll of the stevedore company, or a lumber company might request the stevedore company to furnish it more men, in which case the stevedore company hired the men, placed them on its pay roll, and sent them to the lumber yard. The stevedore company could transfer the men from one yard to another, but decedent was never taken from the yard of Pope & Talbot. Stevedores were also furnished by it to lumber yards which had not participated in its organization, and to work on ships as well as in the yards.

When decedent returned to work after the second strike, he applied at the yard of Pope & Talbot and was put to work by its foreman. His name was placed and carried on the pay roll of the stevedore company and was not carried on that of Pope & Talbot. His time, together with that of the other stevedores, was kept by Pope & Talbot's foreman, turned into its office, and by it sent to the office of the stevedore company. The stevedore company furnished Pope & Talbot blank pay roll sheets for this purpose. Decedent's work was done solely in Pope & Talbot's yard, under the direction of its foreman and in the course of its business. On August 9, 1919, he was instantly killed in a collision between the booms of two cranes in Pope & Talbot's yard; there being no question but that his death occurred in the course of and arose out of his employment.

In addition to finding the acts substantially as we have given them, the Industrial Accident Commission found that decedent was in the joint employ of the stevedore company and Pope & Talbot; that the former was his general and the latter his special employer; that, as both companies carried workmen's compensation insurance, both should be discharged; that, as the premium upon the insurance for stevedores working under the agreement was paid by Pope & Talbot to the stevedore company and paid by the latter to its own insurance carrier, who had received the premium in full, and no portion of the premium was paid by Pope & Talbot to its own insurance carrier, respondent London Guarantee & Accident Company, or claimed by it, the death benefit of $4,900 should be paid by petitioner. Pursuant to such findings the award of that amount was allowed, petitioner being given credit for $1,062.33 it had paid before it declined to make further payments upon the ground that decedent was not an employee of the stevedore company.

[1] Respondent urges preliminarily that petitioner should have applied for a second rehearing of the cause before the Industrial Accident Commission before seeking a writ of review from this court. This contention is based on the fact that after the first hearing and the allowance of the award the Commission granted a rehearing, where the award was affirmed but at which further testimony was received. It is insisted the Commission should have been given an opportunity to reconsider its decision based upon this additional testimony. This point is without merit. That the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act (Stats. 1917, p. 831) contemplates that additional testimony may be given upon a rehearing is shown by the statement that (page 874, § 64 [e]):

"If at the time of granting such rehearing it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Commission that no sufficient reason exists for taking further testimony, the Commission may reconsider and redetermine the original cause without setting a time and place for such further rehearing. * * *

"(f) If after such rehearing and a consideration of all the facts, including those arising since the making of the order, decision or award involved, the Commission shall be of the opinion that the original order, decision or award * * * is * * * unwarranted, or should be changed, the Commission may abrogate, change or modify the same."

It is further provided that any party affected thereby may apply for a writ of review within 30 days after the rendition of the decision on the rehearing. Such a course was followed in the case at bar, which is therefore properly before this court.

[2] Petitioner's first contention is that decedent was not shown to be an employee of the stevedore company. With reference to this claim it is asserted that, as it was found decedent was working under the sole direction and control of Pope & Talbot's foreman and for its benefit, he was solely its employee. Several authorities are cited in support of this claim, and petitioner contends the case at bar is distinguishable from Employers' Liability Assurance Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 179 Cal. 432, 177 Pac. 273, cited by respondents, which case also involved the relation of general and special employment, and in which several of the authorities cited by petitioner were discussed. In considering this question it is necessary to review the evidence herein to some extent.

William O'Callaghan, yard foreman for Pope & Talbot, testified as follows:

"Q. Did you hire Richard Simmonds? A. Yes, sir. * * * Q. Who did you hire him for? A. For the American Stevedore Company. I hire all the men that come there. First when I went to work I hired for Pope & Talbot. * * * Q. Who did you hire them for? A. To work in the yard. It is understood they all have to work for the American Stevedore Company. They all know that."

He further stated that since 1916 all the men hired under the agreement are carried on the pay roll of the stevedore company; that at the time decedent went back to work after the strike there was a crowd of men hired; that "I told the lot of them—I guess he was in the same crowd—that they had to go there [to the stevedore company] before they went to work at all," and that "they could go to work, but they had to go to the American Stevedore Company for their money when pay day came"; that, when any one was hurt, the accident reports were made out and sent to the stevedore company; "they ain't our employees."

H. J. McPhee, manager of the stevedore company, testified the function of that company was to furnish labor rather than direct the performance of the work; that one of the stevedore company's foremen must have consented to decedent's going to work; that all men had to be approved by the stevedore company before they were hired; that there were a number of instances where the stevedore company vetoed the return of men to the yards, although the yards were willing to take the men on again; that the stevedore company had such a right, but did not exercise it unless special circumstances were presented; that the actual authority to hire and discharge was in the stevedore company, although, as the yards began to run more smoothly after the labor troubles, it let the yard foreman "have most of the say." He, as well as C. E. Helms, secretary of Pope & Talbot, stated he regarded the stevedore company as an independent concern, and not a dummy of Pope & Talbot.

Keeping in view the contract between Pope & Talbot and the stevedore company, already referred to, it cannot be held the finding that decedent was a general employee of the stevedore company was erroneous. Nor can it be questioned that he was a special employee of Pope & Talbot. The evidence shows he worked in its yard exclusively, subject to its entire direction and control in the performance of his duties.

Petitioner contends that as to the stevedores in the lumber yards the stevedore company was but a paying agency, and points out that the record shows it did not move the men from yard to yard, or interfere with the selection of men by the various foremen, whereas, with respect to the men working on ships, it hired, discharged, and moved them about from ship to ship and exerted such control over them as would constitute it their employer. But, as already indicated, the evidence shows the stevedore company had the same power to regulate the employment of men in the lumber yards and merely by its acquiescence allowed the yards to exercise it. It was held in Tucker v. Cooper, 172 Cal. 663, 667, 158 Pac. 181, 182, that, "where the defendant [employer] has the right of control, it is not necessary that he actually exercise such control." Petitioner argues that, if decedent be held to be an employee of the stevedore company, "then employment agencies may be held to be building the railroads and running the sawmills and logging camps of their patrons to whom they send employees." We do not apprehend that any such result would follow. The stevedore company was organized to furnish stevedores, under the terms of the agreement. It paid them, it had the right to move them from one yard to another, and it had ultimate control over both their hiring and discharge. Such an organization is entirely different from an employment agency, and it is apparent from the record that it was intended to be so.

In this respect the case is similar to Employers' Liability Assurance Company v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, save that there the foreman who directed the work was hired by the general employer. That fact cannot distinguish the case, for there it was found the foreman was also under the direction and control of the special employer. It is insisted that in that case the general employer participated in the labor performed by the special employer, but the findings show that this participation was "by virtue of the contract existing between it [the general employer] and defendant [the special employer]." Such a finding would be equally true of the instant case, for the contracts between the respective employers were practically the same in both cases.

In that case the authorities bearing on the liability of such employers were carefully considered, and, while an award against insurance carriers of both employers was there affirmed, the court said:

"If we follow our own action in Ayer v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra [S. F. No. 8106, in which a petition for a writ of review was denied], and the decision in the District Court of Appeal (Second District) in Kirkpatrick v. Industrial Accident Commission, 31 Cal. App. 668 [161 Pac. 274], holding the general employer liable, and the Massachusetts court in the Scribner Case [231 Mass. 132, 120 N. E. 350], holding the special employer, we reach the same conclusion as the New York court did in De Noyer v. Cavanaugh, supra [221 N. Y. 273, 116 N. E. 992], holding both or either liable."

We consider the reasoning of that case sound, and, although petitioner insists that, if decedent was a joint employee, the award should be against both insurance carriers, the case at bar is one where it is proper to hold one employer only.

It is apparent the parties to the agreement intended that the stevedore company should be liable for injuries resulting to employees hired under the agreement, and that the stevedore company recognized it was under such a liability. This clearly appears from the fact that it included such employees, together with decedent, in the pay roll which it sent to petitioner, upon which its premium was based, and that these men were not intended to be included in the compensation insurance carried by Pope & Talbot. The accident reports concerning such men were sent to the stevedore company, and McPhee testified that, as far as he knew, petitioner paid the compensation for them. In answer to the question, "Did you intend that insurance as a protection to the American Stevedore Company or as a protection to Pope & Talbot, or both?" he replied, "Well, to the American Stevedore Company I figured it, and of course we protected Pope & Talbot when they employed them through us."

It is contended the Commission had no power to make an award against petitioner solely upon the ground that it received a premium, based, in part, upon decedent's earnings, and that "petitioner, unwittingly, was paid premiums on persons not employees of the stevedore company," and Employer's Liability Assurance Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 187 Cal. 615, 203 Pac. 95, is cited in support of the proposition that "a surety company is not estopped to deny liability upon a void obligation by reason of the fact that it has executed the same and received the benefits thereof." However, decedent was shown to be in fact an employee of the stevedore company, and it is not claimed the policy issued by petitioner was not intended to cover decedent, but only that he should not have been included on the ground that he was not an employee of the stevedore company.

This being so, petitioner, as insurance carrier for the stevedore company, should pay the award. It was said in Employer's Liability Assurance Company v. Industrial Accident Co., 177 Cal. 771, 171 Pac. 935, that—

"The right of the commission to make an award against the insurer, where the validity of the policy was conceded, has never been questioned. If the Commission may, in any case, make an award against one who has agreed to stand in the employer's place and protect him against claims by his employees, it must have the power to determine all questions of law and fact upon which the liability of the alleged insurance carrier depends."

It follows there was no error in the action of the Industrial Accident Commission in releasing respondent London Guarantee and Accident Company.

The award is affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, J.; WILBUR, J.; WASTE, J.; RICHARDS, Justice pro tem.

I dissent: SHAW, C. J.

59 Cal. App. 305

CHRISMAN v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR FRESNO COUNTY. (Civ. 4322.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 10, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 7, 1922.)

1. Indictment and information ⟹159(1)—Indictment may be amended without resubmission to grand jury.

Under Pen. Code, § 1008, the district attorney may, with leave of court, amend an indictment after the defendant has pleaded, without submitting it to the grand jury, if indictment can be amended without prejudice to the substantial rights of the defendant, notwithstanding sections 940 and 944, requiring an indictment to be found by a grand jury and prescribing the methods by which an indictment must be found.

2. Indictment and information ⟹159(2)—Amendment of indictment without resubmission to grand jury held not to impair defendant's substantial rights.

Where indictment charged that the defendant, with intent to cheat and defraud named person, falsely represented to him that he (the defendant) was the owner of a certain order for the payment of money drawn by such person, and that he would cancel the order if such person gave him a specified amount of money, that by means of such representations defendant obtained such sum, though he had assigned the order to third party, the amendment of the indictment by adding other allegations that defendant at no time after assignment to third party was the owner of the order and that he did not cancel it or deliver it to named person without resubmission of indictment to grand jury, proper.

Application for writ of prohibition by F. M. Chrisman against the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Fresno. Writ denied.

C. K. Bonestell, of Fresno, for petitioner.

B. W. Gearhart, Dist. Atty., and H. J. Carling, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Fresno, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Petitioner has asked this court for a writ of prohibition restraining the superior court from proceeding with his trial upon an amended indictment charging him with grand larceny, embezzlement, and obtaining money by false pretenses. When the original indictment was filed the defendant interposed a demurrer. This indictment was in nine separate counts, the first three charging grand larceny, embezzlement, and obtaining money by false pretenses, and all relating to the same transaction, alleged to have occurred on November 1, 1921. The fourth, fifth, and sixth counts charged a commission of the same crimes in connection with a transaction alleged to have occurred on November 21, 1921. The seventh, eighth, and ninth counts charged the commission of the same crimes in relation to a transaction alleged to have occurred on December 5, 1922. The demurrer was sustained as to the third, sixth, and ninth counts—the three counts charging obtaining money by false pretenses. It was overruled as to all other counts. In the same order, allowing the demurrer to these three counts, the trial court directed the district attorney to file an amended indictment. Within the time allowed such an amended indictment was filed by the district attorney without submission to the grand jury, and after the disposition of the pleas and motions interposed thereto the cause was set for trial upon the indictment as amended.

In this proceeding for a writ of prohibition the question is whether the trial court has jurisdiction to proceed with the trial of the defendant upon the amended indictment. The position of petitioner is that the trial court is without jurisdiction to proceed because the amended indictment was not resubmitted to the same or any grand jury, nor was it presented by the foreman of any grand jury to the court, but was filed by the district attorney with the county clerk. The argument in support of the petition is that all indictments must be found by the grand jury, must be presented by their foreman in their presence to the court, and filed by the clerk; also that indictments cannot be amended in matters of substance by the district attorney, but that the cause must be resubmitted to the grand jury and a new indictment found by them.

[1] The Code requires that an indictment must be found by a grand jury. Pen. Code, § 940. Section 944 of the Penal Code prescribes the method by which an indictment must be found by the grand jury. It is to be presented to the court by the foreman and filed with the clerk. These provisions relate to an original indictment or to one that has been amended in matters of substance after resubmission to a grand jury. But section 1008 of the Penal Code authorizes the district attorney to amend an indictment without leave of court before the defendant pleads and provides:

"Such amendment may be made at any time thereafter, in the discretion of the court where it can be done without prejudice to the substantial rights of the defendant."

The clear purpose of the quoted portion of the section is that the district attorney may with leave of court amend an indictment after the defendant has pleaded without submitting the same to the grand jury. The formalities of presentation and filing contained in section 944, Penal Code, do not apply to an indictment amended in this manner.

Section 1008 of the Penal Code confirms the right of the district attorney upon leave of court to file an amended indictment without resubmission to the grand jury. This he may do if it can be done without prejudice to the substantial rights of the defendant, provided that the amendment has not changed the offense charged. Now the amendments complained of did not come within the inhibitions of the statute. In the first place, in each of the three counts, the demurrer to which was sustained, it is alleged that they describe the same offense alleged in the two preceding counts charging grand larceny and embezzlement. The demurrers to those counts having been overruled, the defendant was required to go to trial upon them, and the district attorney might, if he so desired, have dismissed the counts of obtaining money under false pretenses without amendment. It is thus apparent that when the trial court directed the district attorney to amend that did not prejudice the substantial rights of the defendant.

[2] The original indictment alleged that the defendant with intent to cheat and defraud one Adriani falsely represented to him that he (the defendant) was the owner of a certain order for the payment of money drawn by Adriani upon the California Associated Raisin Company, in favor of the Clovis Box Company, and that he (the said defendant) could and would cancel the order and deliver the same to Adriani if the said Adriani would deliver to him the sum of $470.72; that through said false representations and fraudulent pretenses the defendant obtained the said sum from Adriani, though at the time he had sold and assigned by indorsement said order to the California Pine Box Distributors of Fresno; that the said Adriani believed said false and fraudulent representations; that defendant knew them to be false and fraudulent; and that by means thereof, with the intent to cheat and defraud said Adriani, the defendant obtained from Adriani the sum mentioned. The amendment consists in the addition of the words, that at no time after defendant had sold and assigned said order was he the owner, nor did he have the same in his possession, and that he did not cancel same or deliver it to said Adriani. Though it may be that the failure of the defendant to fulfill his promise to cancel the order and deliver the same to Adriani was an essential allegation to the charge of obtaining money by false pretenses, it is apparent that the addition of such allegation by amendment to the indictment did not change the offense charged. People v. Rippe, 32 Cal. App. 514, 163 Pac. 506.

The petition is denied, and the writ discharged.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

59 Cal. App. 302

PEOPLE v. PARISH. (Cr. 853.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 9, 1922.)

1. Physicians and surgeons ⟸6(1)—"Diagnosis," within Medical Practice Act, may be established by acts and conduct as well as by representations to patients; "practice of medicine."

While one who does not diagnose does not practice medicine within the meaning of the Medical Practice Act, prohibiting the practice thereof without a certificate from the State Board of Medical Examiners, diagnosis may be established by acts and conduct, as well as by representations to patients as to the nature of their ailments.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First Series, Diagnosis; First and Second Series, Practice of Medicine.]

2. Physicians and surgeons ⟸6(10)—Evidence of use of physical means in adjusting vertebræ held sufficient from which to infer "diagnosis."

In a prosecution for practicing medicine without a license, evidence that defendant used physical means in adjusting the vertebræ of witnesses held sufficient from which to infer that he made a diagnosis in connection with his treatment of prosecuting witness, it being impossible to dissociate diagnosis from the practice of the art of healing by any physical, medical, mechanical, hygienic, or surgical means.

3. Criminal law ⟸814(1), 1172(6)—Abstract instructions inapplicable to issues are erroneous, but not ground for reversal unless prejudicial.

Instructions containing abstract propositions of law inapplicable to the issues are erroneous, but not ground for reversal, unless the party complaining may reasonably be regarded as having been prejudiced thereby.

4. Criminal law ⟸761(3) — Instruction, in prosecution for practicing without license, to disregard suggestions that chiropractors cannot procure license held to assume that defendant made such claims.

In a prosecution for practicing a system of treating the sick without a certificate from the State Board of Medical Examiners, where defendant's only defense was that he was not guilty of practicing any system requiring a certificate, an instruction to disregard any statement or suggestions that chiropractors or practitioners of any other system of healing cannot procure a license to practice it, and argument that the Board of Medical Examiners had discriminated against defendant held reversible error, as assuming, without support in the evidence, that defendant had tried to convince the jury that he had attempted to secure a license and had claimed discrimination against him.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

A. H. Parish was convicted of practicing medicine without a license, and he appeals. Reversed.

Ray E. Nimmo, of Los Angeles, and Frank D. Parent, of Inglewood, for appellant.

U. S. Webb. Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Charles D. Ballard, of Los Angeles, for the People.

CRAIG, J. The defendant was convicted of "practicing a system and mode of treating the sick and afflicted without a valid, unrevoked certificate from the State Board of Medical Examiners." He appeals from the judgment pronounced and order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1, 2] Appellant first claims as a ground for reversal that the evidence fails to disclose any diagnosis of disease by the defendant and that one who does not diagnose does not practice medicine, within the meaning of the Medical Practice Act (St. 1913, p. 722). Appellant is entirely correct as to this abstract proposition of law. People v. Jordan, 172 Cal. 399, 156 Pac. 451. Appellant stresses the point that defendant at no time made representations to those seeking treatment as to the nature of their various ailments or that he would cure them. This is offered to show an entire lack of diagnosis. But diagnosis may be established by acts and conduct as well as by any representations which might be made to a patient. People v. Jordan, supra, has decided that it is impossible to dissociate diagnosis from the practice of the art of healing by any physical, medical, mechanical, hygienic, or surgical means. There is evidence in this record that the defendant used physical means in adjusting the vertebræ of witnesses. Hence, under the Jordan decision, the jury might lawfully have drawn the inference that defendant made a diagnosis in connection with the treatment of this witness Stewart.

[3, 4] The following instruction is assigned as reversible error:

"You are instructed to disregard any statement or suggestions of counsel that chiropractors, or the practitioners of any other system of healing the sick, cannot procure a license to practice their system of healing in this state. And you are further instructed that it is no defense in this case for the defendant to argue or attempt to argue to you that the Board of Medical Examiners of this state has discriminated against him. And in this connection you are instructed that the law of the state, besides other forms of license, provides for the issuance of a certificate which entitles the holder thereof to practice the chiropractic system of healing the sick. All that is required of the applicant for such a license is that he present to said Board proof that he is possessed of the education required by the law.

"If the practitioner of any system or mode of the healing art, including chiropractic, has been by the Board of Medical Examiners of this state denied any right, he has his proper and adequate remedy therefor in another forum, and the jury in this case may not pass upon the same."

There is nothing in the record to show that defendant had ever attempted to secure a license to practice chiropractic or any other system of healing, or that his counsel had ever attempted to suggest that such a license could not be procured, or that the Board of Medical Examiners had ever discriminated against him. Instructions containing abstract propositions of law inapplicable to the issues involved are erroneous. 12 R. C. L. 782; People v. Tapia, 131 Cal. 647, 63 Pac. 1001; People v. Thompson, 115 Cal. 160, 46 Pac. 912. They are not ground for reversal unless it appears that the defendant may reasonably be regarded as having been prejudiced. However, such is clearly the result of the instruction of which complaint is here made. It injects a false issue into the case. The only issue presented by the defendant's evidence was the defense that he had not been guilty of practicing any system or mode of healing requiring him to have secured a certificate. A fair interpretation of this instruction requires the construction that it assumed that the defendant had tried to convince the jury that he had attempted to secure a license to heal the sick. It is apparent that the jury may have considered it their duty to assume this to have been the fact, and that they may well have regarded that circumstance as material and determinative of the issue as to whether or not the defendant actually did practice a system of treating the sick and afflicted. The instruction also assumes that the defendant had claimed discrimination against him by the Board of Medical Examiners. Being aware that there was no evidence to support such a charge, the jury might easily be prejudiced against him because of having made so false and base a calumny. This would, of course, prevent that fair consideration of the evidence upon the material issues to which every defendant is entitled. It is unnecessary to point out in greater detail the prejudicial character of this erroneous instruction.

The judgment must be reversed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; WORKS, J.

59 Cal. App. 296

PEOPLE ex rel. WEBB, Atty. Gen., v. HEIKEN, County Treasurer.
(Civ. 2540.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 7, 1922.)

Drains ⊂=85—County treasurer held not authorized to accept warrants in lieu of cash payments of assessments.

Under St. 1919, p. 1095, § 15, authorizing cash payment of drainage district assessments levied by the reclamation board under St. 1911 (Ex. Sess.) p. 117, as amended by St. 1913, p. 252, and St. 1915, p. 1338, within 30 days after the assessment list is filed, to the county treasurer, who shall deposit the amount received with the state treasurer, and St. 1919, p. 1096, § 17, requiring the reclamation board to fix the amount unpaid at the end of such period as the basis of the call for an election to ascertain whether such unpaid portion shall be met by a bond issue or by calls made by the board, only payments in cash may be credited to the landowners, and the county treasurer cannot accept warrants in lieu thereof.

Application by the People of the State of California, on the relation of U. S. Webb, Attorney General, for writ of mandate requiring Fred H. Heiken, as Treasurer of the County of Sutter, to deposit certain moneys with the State Treasurer. Writ granted.

Frank Freeman, of Willows, for petitioner.

Arthur Coats, Dist. Atty., of Yuba City, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The application was for a writ of mandate to require respondent, as county treasurer of Sutter county, to deposit with the state treasurer in cash a certain amount of money claimed to have been collected by respondent on account of a certain assessment, No. 6, for the benefit of the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district fund.

Section 15 of "an act to authorize the issuance and sale of bonds of the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district based upon assessments levied by the reclamation board upon lands in said district," approved May 27, 1919 (Stats. 1919, p. 1092), provides as follows:

"At any time within thirty days after said assessment list has been so filed in the office of the county treasurer as provided in section fourteen hereof, the whole amount of such assessment upon any tract of land therein separately assessed may be paid in cash to the county treasurer and thereupon the county treasurer shall issue his receipt therefor and shall indorse the fact and date of such payment upon the assessment list, and thereupon the lien of such assessment upon such tract of land shall cease. The report of such payment shall be made by the county treasurer at once to the secretary of the reclamation board, and the amount so received by the county treasurer shall, within thirty days after the receipt thereof by him, be deposited by him with the state treasurer and shall be by said state treasurer safely kept and credited to the construction fund of said assessment."

In the argument this act of 1919 was designated as the "Bonding Act," and the Act of 1911 (Stats. 1911 [Ex. Sess.] p. 117), as amended in 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 252) and 1915 (Stats. 1915, p. 1338) as the "Reclamation Board Act," and in this opinion we may so distinguish them.

It is agreed by both parties that the vital question involved is whether the county treasurer was authorized by said Bonding Act to take warrants in payment of the assessment in lieu of actual cash.

We agree with petitioners that the so-called "Bonding Act" is supplementary to said "Reclamation Board Act," that the two must be construed together, and that the special feature of the former is the provision affording an alternative method for the raising of the money with which to pay an assessment already levied under the provisions of the latter act, and that when this method is adopted, contemplating the issue and sale of bonds, the proceeds of which are to be used for the payment of that portion of the entire assessment remaining unpaid at the close of the 30-day period mentioned in said section 15, the clear intent of the Legislature is that only such payments may be credited to the landowners as have been made in cash, and that the difference between such amount and the amount of the levied assessment shall constitute the extent of the bond issue. This method of procedure is a substitute for that of "calls" in the Reclamation Board Act, the procedure therein contemplating the payment of the assessment in cash or warrants in installments at the option of the reclamation board.

Section 17 of the Bond Act provides that the amount of the assessment remaining unpaid at the expiration of the 30-day period shall be determined by the reclamation board, and an order fixing the same be made and entered in the minutes, and there is no provision in the Bond Act that said unpaid portions, or any part thereof, of the assessment may be paid at any time, or in any manner, other than is provided by said section 15 of that act. It is apparent that said order determines the amount that constitutes the basis of the call for an election to ascertain whether the remaining portion of the assessment shall be met by the issuance of bonds or by calls to be made by said board, and, manifestly, the statute contemplates that no payment shall be made subsequent to the making of said order until the result of said election has been determined. We think it equally apparent, as already stated, that said statute contemplates that any payment made within said 30 days by the property owner or after said election, must be paid in cash, and the county treasurer is not authorized to accept warrants for the same.

We see no necessity for an elaborate review of the various sections of these two acts, nor for any comment upon the well-settled rules of construction to which our attention has been invited by respondent. It is sufficient to say that, in our opinion, there is no provision made in said Bond Act for the payment of the assessment by the property owner except as provided in said section 15, nor is any person authorized to accept payment thereof except as provided in said section, and that the method therein prescribed was clearly intended to be exclusive.

The foregoing is a brief statement of the reason which impelled us to order the peremptory writ to issue herein.

---

59 Cal. App. 309

KRIEG et al. v. CRAWFORD et al. (Civ. 4303.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 11, 1922.)

1. Partition ⟸12(5)—Widow with life estate and son with undivided interest in fee held not entitled to maintain partition.

A widow with a life estate in the homestead, and her son with an undivided fractional interest in the fee, are not joint tenants or tenants in common, so as to entitle them to have the homestead partitioned under Code Civ. Proc. § 752.

2. Appeal and error ⟸193(9)—Where complaint states no cause of action, objection can be raised for first time on appeal.

Where in partition proceedings the complaint on its face failed to state a cause of action, an objection thereto can be raised for the first time on appeal.

3. Partition ⟸95 — Decree setting apart a homestead is a judgment in rem not subject to collateral attack.

Decree in partition setting apart a homestead is in the nature of a judgment in rem, and can be successfully attacked only upon the same grounds as a judgment in personam may be annulled, and such judgment is not subject to collateral attack.

4. Partition ⟸116(1)—Leasing of homestead by widow after partition held not to defeat her life estate.

In an action of partition held, the decree setting apart a homestead to the widow for life vested in her an unconditional life estate not subject to defect by any condition subsequent, and hence a lease by the widow of her interest in the homestead property did not defeat her estate therein.

5. Homestead ⟸145—Bringing mistaken action for partition and sale held not to forfeit widow's life estate.

A mistake by a widow in bringing an action for a partition and sale of the homestead property, to which relief she was not entitled, did not operate to effect a forfeiture of her life estate in the homestead or enlarge the estate of defendants therein.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Lawrence Krieg and Margaret Krieg against Maria Crawford and others. From a judgment for defendants and for plaintiff Lawrence Krieg, both plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Tum Suden & Tum Suden, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Edgar D. Peixotto, of San Francisco (Cleveland R. Wright, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents Crawford and others.

Sawyer & Sawyer and F. W. Sawyer, all of San Francisco, for respondents Krieg and others.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from an interlocutory decree in a partition suit. By said decree certain land in San Francisco was ordered to be sold and the proceeds divided in fractional parts among the defendants and the plaintiff Lawrence Krieg.

The plaintiffs alleged that Margaret Krieg was the owner of, and in possession of, a homestead right for life in the said land, granted to her by a decree of the superior court of this state, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, in proceedings in the matter of the estate of her deceased husband; that plaintiff Lawrence Krieg was the owner of an undivided one-fifth interest in fee simple absolute in said land, subject to the life estate of said Margaret Krieg. It was alleged, further, that the various defendants were, respectively, the owners in fee simple absolute of fractional shares in the remainder after the expiration of the life estate, and the court was asked to partition the property, and, if partition in kind be found to be impracticable, that a sale be ordered and the proceeds thereof directed to be invested for the benefit of Margaret Krieg during her life, and the principal distributed to the defendants as their interests might appear after the expiration of the life estate.

Defendants answered setting up that Margaret Krieg had not been residing on the property in question for a long time prior to the commencement of the action; that she was not at the time of the commencement of said action the head of a family; that she had abandoned, terminated, and surrendered the homestead and all her rights thereunder. They asked for partition of the property among themselves and plaintiff Lawrence Krieg.

The trial court found that Margaret Krieg claimed under an order of the superior court in the proceedings in probate in the matter of her deceased husband's estate; that by said order the property in controversy was set apart to Margaret Krieg as and for a homestead for and during the term of her natural life, and as and for a homestead unto Lawrence Krieg, minor son of decedent, during the term of his minority, or up until October 16, 1920; that by the decree of distribution in said estate, said property was distributed to the defendants and Lawrence Krieg, in the proportions prescribed by the will of decedent, subject to the homestead for life in Margaret Krieg; that Lawrence Krieg has arrived at his majority; that Margaret Krieg has not, for a long time prior to this action, occupied the premises as a homestead; that she is no longer the head of a family, and that she has abandoned, terminated, and surrendered the homestead and all rights thereunder, and has no further right, title, or interest in the property. Upon these findings the trial court made an order for a sale of the premises and a distribution of the proceeds among the defendants and Lawrence Krieg, excluding Margaret Krieg from participation in the distribution.

The plaintiffs admitted in open court that Margaret Krieg was not, at the time of the commencement of this action, nor for a long time prior thereto, occupying the land and premises described in the complaint and sought to be partitioned, as and for a home, but that she had rented out the said premises to tenants who were then and there paying rent therefor and occupying the same as such tenants. These admissions, together with the order setting apart the homestead, the decree of distribution, etc., in the matter of the estate of Anton Krieg, comprise all the evidence in the record.

[1, 2] It is beyond question that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the remedy which they sought. Section 752, Code Civ. Proc. Plaintiffs were neither joint tenants nor tenants in common with the defendants. They are not entitled to have the property partitioned. Mills v. Stump, 20 Cal. App. 84, 128 Pac. 349. Appellants' contention that defendants waived this objection by their failure to raise it, specifically, is without merit. The complaint on its face does not state a cause of action in this state. Such an objection is not waived by failure to make it in the trial court, but may be taken advantage of for the first time upon appeal.

[3, 4] But a decision of this question does not meet the problem presented upon this appeal, because the trial court went further than to deny the prayer of the plaintiffs; it gave to the defendants such affirmative relief as absolutely destroyed the homestead right of Margaret Krieg in this property. Such action was based upon the finding that Margaret Krieg had abandoned her homestead rights. We are thus confronted with the questions: Does a widow, to whom there has been set apart by decree of the superior court a homestead for life out of the separate estate of her husband, forfeit that homestead if she fails to continuously reside thereon, but holds possession of the property through her tenants? Is there any forfeiture or abandonment evidenced by the joinder of the widow with the owner of an undivided interest in the fee, in seeking a partion of the homestead property?

We are of the opinion that both of these questions must be answered in the negative. The decree of the superior court, setting apart to Margaret Krieg a homestead for life, vested in her estate in the property. Fealey v. Fealey, 104 Cal. at page 360, 38 Pac. 49, 43 Am. St. Rep. 111; Estate of Moore, 96 Cal. 522, 31 Pac. 584. It was an unconditional estate and was not subject to be defeated by any condition subsequent. A decree setting apart a homestead is in the nature of a judgment in a proceeding in rem and can only be successfully attacked in equity upon the same grounds as a judgment in personam may be annulled. Fealey v. Fealey, supra, 104 Cal. at page 360, 38 Pac. 49, 43 Am. St. Rep. 111. Such a judgment is not subject to collateral attack. Otto v. Long, 144 Cal. 144, 147, 77 Pac. 885. The order setting apart a homestead to Margaret Krieg for life, being a judgment in rem and binding upon all persons (Kearney v. Kearney, 72 Cal. 591, 15 Pac. 769), and having the effect of vesting in her, absolutely, the estate thereby set apart to her, it would seem, as a natural consequence, that such an estate could not be defeated by the happening of some condition subsequent such as occupation of the property by her tenants. It is needless to point out the incongruities that would arise if, after the vesting of title to the homestead for life, the widow was to be subjected to continual suits to divest her of this right upon various allegations of fact relied upon to evidence and abandonment. Her vested right would be in constant peril and its retention would depend upon her vigilance not only with regard to her own conduct but with regard to making proof thereof in a court of law. Such a condition would be repugnant to the absolute estate vested in her by the operation of the decree.

[5] As to the effect of Mrs. Krieg's action in seeking a partition of the property, we know of no theory upon which such action could divest her of a vested right. She was simply mistaken as to one of the incidents of her estate, and the trial court would have been justified in so holding and denying her prayer for partition and sale of the property. But her mistake in this regard cannot have the effect of working a forfeiture of her life interest in the homestead property, nor enlarge the estate of the defendants therein.

The judgment in the present case is in conflict with the decision in this state as to the nature of the estate conveyed to a widow by a decree in a probate proceeding setting aside to her a homestead, and in conflict with the settled rule regarding the finality and binding effect of such a decree

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 286

McCREADY v. BULLIS. (Civ. 3959.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 6, 1922. Rehearing Denied Nov. 3, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 4, 1922.)

1. Waters and water courses ⟸158(4)—Landlord's contract to sink artesian well on property construed.

Where land leased for agricultural purposes was known to be valueless unless water was supplied for irrigation, and landlord agreed to provide a well from which tenant might obtain water, the contract must be construed in the light of the parties' knowledge and understanding of conditions present, and it is not unreasonable to say that the agreement in fact was that the well which landlord agreed to sink should produce a quantity of water adequate for the purposes intended.

2. Damages ⟸5 — "General" and "special damages" defined.

Damages are either general or special; general damages are such as the law implies or presumes to have accrued from the wrong complained of; special damages are such as really took place and are not implied by law.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, General Damages; Special Damages.]

3. Damages ⟸142—Facts out of which special damages arise must be pleaded.

The facts out of which special damages arise must be averred in the complaint.

4. Damages ⟸23—On breach of contract offending party is held for such damages as it may be inferred ordinarily result.

On breach of contract the offending party can only be held for such damages as it will be inferred may ordinarily result considering the contract terms; and if there are special circumstances under which the contract was made, because of which damage results from the breach, these must have been made known to the party committing the breach at the time the contract was entered into.

5. Waters and water courses ⟸158½(1)—Rule of general damages for landlord's breach of contract to produce water for irrigation stated.

Where land was leased and the landlord required to sink an artesian well on the property in ample time for irrigation requirements of the tenant, if the landlord failed to make land available for use by producing sufficient water thereon, tenant's general damage would be the rental value of the land.

6. Landlord and tenant ⟸48(2)—Special damages incurred in moving implements to leased land by tenant not in contemplation of the parties.

Where, in tenant's action against his landlord for failure to perform conditions of the lease, there was no evidence to show at the time of making lease landlord understood the circumstances that required tenant to bring his farming equipment from a distant point to the leased land, it cannot be said that special damages incurred on that account were in contemplation of the parties.

7. Contracts ⟸274—Party rescinding contract cannot claim benefits.

If a party to a contract elects to rescind it, he cannot then continue to claim benefits of it: he cannot go on and perform it, nor can he claim compensation for loss of profits.

8. Waters and water courses ⟸158½(1)—Rule of damages when tenant stands on breach of lease by landlord stated.

Where by a lease it was required that landlord sink an artesian well on the property to provide water for irrigation, and the tenant, being ready to perform, was prevented from securing benefits intended under the lease by reason of the landlord's failure to complete the well, tenant was entitled to abandon effort at further performance of the lease and recover damages for the breach, which should include profits of which there might be a reasonable expectation.

9. Landlord and tenant ⟸48(2)—Rule of damages for tenant's loss of "profit on crops" stated.

Where a tenant was entitled to recover as for profit on crops, that profit would mean net profit, to produce which there should be deducted as a charge all sums expended in the production or attempted production of the crops, including rental and the reasonable cost of bringing the crops to maturity and marketing them.

10. Landlord and tenant ⟸48(2)—Right of recovery for prospective profits on future crops on breach of lease is question of evidence.

On breach of a lease by landlord, the right of tenant's recovery for prospective profits on a future crop is no less than on a crop planted, but the profits on crops to be grown in the future may be difficult to establish with any certainty, and because of that difficulty may be classed as speculative, and hence not recoverable.

11. Waters and water courses ⟸158½(1)—Where crop damage compensated tenant for such expense, deducting hog feed purchased was improper.

In tenant's action for landlord's failure to sink an artesian well for irrigation purposes, where the crop damage would compensate him for such expense, it was improper to make allowance for cattle and hog feed purchased.

12. Waters and water courses ⟸158½(1)—Tenant's alleged losses in sale of hogs not attributable to landlord's breach of contract to irrigate.

In tenant's action against landlord for failure to sink an artesian well to irrigate the land, where his investment in live stock was not induced by any dependence on the prospect of securing the land and water for irrigation, and hogs had long before that been plaintiff's property, whose business was that of hog breeder, loss on account of difference between the value of the hogs and the price obtained by him cannot be attributable to breach of the contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by A. W. McCready, Jr., against W. S. Bullis. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed in part, and affirmed in part.

John E. Biby and Harry C. Biby, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Chandler P. Ward and Stephens & Stephens, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Defendant has appealed from a judgment allowing a recovery to the plaintiff of the sum of $5,977 as damages.

On the 2d day of October, 1917, defendant, being the owner of a certain 70 acres of land in Los Angeles county, entered into a written contract of lease whereby he let the same to the plaintiff for a period of three years. As rental therefor plaintiff was to pay the sum of $1,200 for the first year, and, as is stated in the lease, "for the remaining two years the sum of $1,500." By a term of the lease it was required that the lessor should sink an artesian well on the property "of at least 12 inches' diameter from which water may be pumped by the lessee should said well not flow; the said well to be sunk in the spring of 1918 in ample time for the requirements of the lessee, and to be located as agreed upon by the parties hereto. Lessor also agrees to equip said well with a good and sufficient electric motor or gasoline engine and water pump." It appeared in evidence that the land was of agricultural nature, and that, except for a small portion thereof, crops could not be raised without irrigation. At the time of the making of the lease there was an old well, engine, and pump on the property, which the defendant stated to plaintiff would probably not be sufficient for the purposes desired, and for that reason it was agreed (the lessor himself writing in the condition) that a new well should be sunk at the lessor's expense. Early in the year 1918 the lessee complained to the lessor that the well was not being sunk expeditiously. However, a well was completed in May, 1918. At this well there was installed a pump and an engine, but the well, upon being tested, failed to produce water in quantities sufficient for irrigation purposes. That such was the fact appears to have been conceded by the lessor, who at a later date caused a second well to be sunk. To the second well a pump was attached but no means of operating the same were connected with it, and in October, 1918, the lessee, whose crops had failed for lack of water, abandoned the land, possession of which was resumed by the lessor. As a matter of fact, the second well, when subjected to a test subsequent to the time when the lessee abandoned the land, was found to produce ample water for the irrigation of the seventy acres.

[1] Appellant's first contention, construing the terms of the lease, is that his engagement regarding the sinking of the well did not require that any specific amount of water be produced; in other words, that if the well produced any water at all the condition of the lease was satisfied. Such a conclusion might be suggested by a consideration of the bare language used in the lease, but the contract must be construed in the light of the knowledge of the parties and their understanding of the conditions present. It was shown that the land was leased for agricultural purposes; that it was known by both parties to be valueless for such purposes unless water was supplied for irrigation. With these conditions in mind, the lessor agreed to provide a well from which the lessee might obtain water. In the light of the circumstances, it is doing no violence at all to the expressions used in the contract to say that the agreement in fact was, as from the intention of the parties, that the well which the lessor agreed to sink should produce a quantity of water adequate for the purposes intended. The fact that the court found, as it did, that 50 miner's inches of water were required to properly irrigate the land, need not be analyzed by comparison with the evidence, for it is plain enough that no amount of water approaching an adequate supply was ever produced from any well up to the time the lessee elected to abandon the property after his crops failed.

On the subject of damages appellant objects to several items included in the judgment of the court on the ground that the same are not proper damages to be recovered, partly because of their particular nature and partly on the ground that such damages (in view of the fact, as appellant asserts it to be, that there had been a rescission of the contract) could in no event form the basis of a judgment.

The various items of damage which entered into the judgment may be summarized briefly as follows: For moving equipment and implements from adjoining county, $400; rental paid to defendant for year 1918, $1,200; paid for cattle and hog feed because of failure of crops, $600; for preparing land for crops other than for alfalfa and barley, $286; net profit which would have been made on alfalfa and barley crop in 1918, $781; loss sustained by sale of hogs and equipment, $2,610; paid for installing equipment, $100.

[2, 3] The damages allowed were all in their nature special damages. They were not such as naturally and necessarily arose from the failure of appellant to supply with water the ground leased to respondent.

"'Damages are either general or special. General damages are such as the law implies, or presumes to have accrued from the wrong complained of. Special damages are such as really took place and are not implied by law. * * *' 1 Ch. Pl. 395." Stevenson v. Smith, 28 Cal. 102, 87 Am. Dec. 107.

"When the damages are special—that is, such as do not necessarily arise, or are not implied by law, from the act complained of—the facts out of which the damages arise must be averred in the complaint." L. T. Co. v. S. & W. W. R. Co., 41 Cal. 562; Mitchell v. Clarke, 71 Cal. 163, 11 Pac. 882, 60 Am. Rep. 529.

[4] A further principle of the law of contracts is that, upon breach committed, the offending party can only be held for such damages as it will be inferred may ordinarily result, considering the contract terms, and that, if there are special circumstances under which the contract was made, because of which damage results from the breach, these special circumstances must have been made known to the party committing the breach at the time the contract was entered into.

"If those special circumstances were wholly unknown to the party breaking the contract, he, at the most, could only be supposed to have had in his contemplation the amount of injury which would arise generally, and in the great multitude of cases not affected by any special circumstances for such a breach of his contract." Wallace v. Ah Sam, 71 Cal. 197, 12 Pac. 46, 60 Am. Rep. 534; Page on Contracts, vol. 3, §§ 1580, 1581.

The opinion in the case last cited further declares that, where special damages are allowed upon breach of contract they are "awarded upon the theory that the parties who contracted with a full knowledge of the facts, circumstances, and objects of the agreement, may well be supposed to have had in contemplation all the proximate and natural results flowing from its breach."

[5] Plaintiff's general damage, assuming that his lessor failed to make the land available for the intended use by producing water thereon sufficient for irrigation, would be the rental value of the land. He makes no claim on that account, other than to demand the return of the $1,200 paid as rental for the first year of the term.

[6] In stating his first item of damage plaintiff alleges that "he expended the sum of $400 in moving his equipment and implements to said property." The evidence did not support this allegation, for by the plaintiff's testimony it was shown that his "farming implements, hog wire, posts, a wagon and a team of mules" were brought down in a motortruck by the plaintiff with the assistance of an employee. These things were brought from a point about 100 miles distant. While it was admitted by the answer that the use for which the land was leased included the raising of hogs and cattle, there was no evidence to show that at the time of the making of the lease the defendant understood the circumstances that required plaintiff to bring his farming equipment from such a distant point. That not being understood, it cannot be said, under the rules above declared, that special damages incurred on that account were in contemplation of the parties. Conceding that the cost of moving the property described was recoverable as damages, the proof does not meet the allegations of the complaint, because it was not shown that plaintiff expended any sum on that account; if he chose to recover the value of his own services and for the use of his vehicle, the facts respecting such matters should have been particularly alleged.

[7] The allowance of some of the other items of damages, as specified by the court in its findings, proceeds from two theories, which are conflicting. If it be concluded under the facts that there was a rescission of the contract, then the parties would be entitled to be placed in statu quo. To work this result the plaintiff would have been entitled to recover all of the rental paid. If he recovered the rental paid, he could not recover expectant profits, for, by a rescission, all contractual terms are put at an end, and there can be no damages for an alleged breach in such circumstances.

"If a party to a contract elects to rescind it, he cannot then continue to claim the benefits of the contract. He cannot go on and perform it nor can he claim compensation for loss of profits of it." Sedgwick on Damages (9th Ed.) vol. 2, § 655a.

[8] If the party merely stands upon the breach committed by the other, as was the case here, and being ready on his part to perform, but being prevented from securing benefits intended to be derived under the contract by reason of the act of the second party, he in that event is entitled to abandon effort at further performance and recover damages for the breach, which, under the facts of this case, should include profits of which there might be a reasonable expectation. Anvil Mining Co. v. Humble et al., 153 U. S. 540, 14 Sup. Ct. 876, 38 L. Ed. 814; Wald's Pollock on Contracts (3d Ed.) p. 351; Cox et al. v. McLaughlin et al., 54 Cal. 605.

[9] Plaintiff in framing his complaint evidently did not intend to rely upon claim of

rescission, notwithstanding he demanded the return of the rental, which the court allowed him. If he was entitled to a recovery as for profit on crops, that profit would mean net profit, to produce which there should be deducted as a charge against the plaintiff all sums expended in the production or attempted production of the same, including rental and the reasonable cost of bringing the crops to maturity and marketing them. To allow to the plaintiff recovery of rental in such a case is to allow him more than a net profit on crops; in other words, it allows to him a net profit plus the rental paid. It requires no argument to show that such a judgment cannot be justified. Rice v. Whitmore, 74 Cal. 619, 16 Pac. 501, 5 Am. St. Rep. 479; Teller v. Bay & River Dredging Co., 151 Cal. 209, 90 Pac. 942, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 267, 12 Ann. Cas. 779.

[10] There is no less a right of recovery for prospective profits on a future crop than on a crop planted and which may not mature because of acts committed by a defendant constituting a breach of the contract. The question becomes more a question of evidence; that is, profits on crops to be grown in the future may be difficult to establish with any reasonable certainty, and, because of that difficulty, may in particular cases be classed as speculative, and hence not recoverable. Such is the trend of the decisions. Crow v. San Joaquin Irrigation Co., 130 Cal. 309, 62 Pac. 562, 1058. In the opinion in the case of Shoemaker v. Acker, 116 Cal. 239, 48 Pac. 62, the court comments on the subject further as follows:

"An examination of the authorities will show that the cases in which future profits were rejected as 'speculative' or 'too remote' were cases where the asserted future profits were entirely collateral to the subject-matter of the contract, and not consequences flowing in a direct line from the breach of such contract. * * * But, where the prospective profits are the natural and direct consequences of the breach of the contract, they may be recovered; and he who breaks the contract cannot wholly escape on account of the difficulty which his own wrong has produced of devising a perfect measure of damages. * * * Contracts for the purchase and sale of future crops running through a series of years have been recognized as valid."

In Rice v. Whitmore, supra, the Supreme Court approved the giving of an instruction which allowed the jury to estimate the net value of a crop which had not been planted, and in the same case approved an instruction advising the jury that there could be no recovery for the loss of the labor of the plaintiff or for the use of his teams. Where the action for prospective profits on crops not planted is brought to trial after the years during which such crops might have been grown have passed, the available evidence to establish the net value of such crops is clearer, in that the weather, market, and other surrounding conditions can all be shown to a certainty in the proof; whereas in a case where the evidence is based upon assumed future conditions the result is naturally and necessarily highly speculative. The court, as has been stated, allowed $781 for profit on the crop of alfalfa and barley. The item $286 allowed for preparation of ground not planted to crops is not shown to be the equivalent of the net profit on all crops intended to be planted, except the hay and barley, for the court omitted to find what, if any, such net profit would have been, although the plaintiff alleged it. The profit might have been of a less sum, or there might have been no profit. Appellant insists, too, that only a portion of $286 is shown to have been expended or incurred on account of the work alleged, but, because of what has just been stated, the evidence need not be analyzed to that particular point.

[11] In order to ascertain the net value of the crops planted which might have been grown during the year 1918, the total rental of $1,200 paid, together with other production and marketing costs, should have been deducted from the gross amount. It was improper to make allowance of $600 for cattle and hog feed purchased, for the crop damage would compensate plaintiff for such expense.

[12] Appellant objects to the item of $2,610 allowed by the court as damages accruing on account of the difference between the value of plaintiff's hogs and the price obtained by him when he sold them in August, 1918. Plaintiff alleged in his complaint that, because of the failure to obtain water and feed on the land leased from the defendant, he was compelled to sell his "stock," and that the best price obtainable was $2,765, while the value of the property was $5,375. The evidence showed that plaintiff had for several years prior to the time he leased defendant's ground been engaged in the business of hog raising at his father's ranch in another county. He had acquired the lot of hogs in the course of that business, and did not purchase them especially for the purpose of stocking the defendant's land. He testified that he took the hogs off the latter land on August 28, 1917; that he sold first a part of them, after advertising the sale, and removed the remainder, numbering about 20, to another ranch, to the owner of which he finally sold them. From all that can be gleaned from the record, it would appear that the plaintiff obtained a reasonable market price for his hogs. The investment in the live stock was not induced by any dependence upon the prospect of securing the defendant's land and the water for irrigation, for the hogs had long before that been the property of the plaintiff, whose business, in part at least, was that of a hog breeder. So it cannot be said that the loss under this item was directly attributable to the defendant's having breached his contract. Further than that, it cannot be concluded from the evidence, for it is wholly short of establishing any such condition, that had the plaintiff been furnished the water which it was agreed should be furnished him, and consequently had continued in the hog-raising business, he might not have suffered by the sale of his stock in due course of that business precisely an equivalent amount of loss. Admitting that the evidence was sufficient to establish the value of the hogs at the time they were sold (which appellant contends it was not), the facts established were not sufficient to prove recoverable damage.

Appellant further contends that the item of $100 was not proven. The testimony as to that item admits of the reasonable inference that the defendant expended the money in hiring help to do the work. It admits also of the inference, taken in connection with the evidence on other branches of the case, that the outlay resulted in a loss properly chargeable as a damage resulting to the plaintiff.

For the reasons given, defendant is entitled to a new trial as to the issues of damage.

The judgment is reversed as to all amounts of damage and costs allowed by the court. It is otherwise affirmed. The superior court is directed to retry all issues as to damages and to enter such a new judgment as the facts justify and as may be consistent with the conclusions herein expressed. Appellant will recover costs on appeal.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 299

PEOPLE v. SALISBURY. (Cr. 893.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 9, 1922.)

1. Infants ⇐20 — Information held not to charge offense of contributing to delinquency of child.

An information alleging merely that accused had sexual intercourse with a female 19 years of age, who was not his wife, does not charge the offense of contributing to the delinquency of a minor under Juvenile Court Law, § 21, providing that a person committing an act which causes or tends to cause or encourage any person under the age of 21 to become delinquent within the meaning of section 1 of the act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

2. Criminal law ⇐1186(4)—Conviction based on information not charging offense not cured by harmless error clause of Constitution.

Const. art. 6, § 4½, providing that no judgment shall be set aside for any error as to procedure unless the error has resulted in a miscarriage of justice, does not apply where, in a prosecution for a misdemeanor, the information is so defective that no crime is charged, and where accused properly urged his objections thereto, although the evidence would have sustained the verdict as to some offense under the statutes.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Frank A. Salisbury was convicted of contributing to the delinquency of a minor, and appeals. Reversed.

Farnsworth, McClure & Burke, of Visalia, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

CONREY, P. J. The charge against the defendant is contained in an information whereby the defendant was accused by the district attorney of the crime of misdemeanor, to wit, contributing to the delinquency of a minor, committed as follows:

"The said Frank A. Salisbury on or about the 8th day of March, A. D. one thousand nine hundred and twenty-one, at the county of Tulare, state of California, and before the filing of this information, did willfully and unlawfully have and accomplish an act of sexual intercourse with and upon one Mary Schlotthauer, a female under the age of twenty-one years, to wit, of the age of about nineteen years, the said Mary Schlotthauer not being then and there the wife of the said Frank A. Salisbury, contrary to the form, force and effect of the statute in such cases made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the People of the state of California."

It is, of course, apparent that this information did not charge the crime of rape, or any other offense denounced by the Penal Code. Although it does not appear by any statement in the record that the proceedings were under the Juvenile Court Law, or that the defendant was tried before the superior court sitting as a juvenile court, it is claimed on behalf of the people that the prosecution was for an offense committed under the provisions of the Juvenile Court Act (St. 1915, p. 1225). Section 21 of that act provides, among other things, that any person who shall commit any act which causes or tends to cause or encourage any person under the age of 21 years to come within the provisions of any of subdivisions 1 to 13, inclusive, of section 1 of this act, or contributes thereto, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor; "and the superior court, sitting as a juvenile court, shall have original jurisdiction over all such misdemeanors." According to section 1 of the Juvenile Court Law, and subdivision 11 thereof, any person under the age of 21 years "who is leading, or from any cause is in danger of leading, an idle, dissolute, lewd or immoral life" is a person to whom the act applies.

---

[1] Appellant contends that by the information he was not charged with any offense under these provisions of the Juvenile Court Law. He insisted upon this objection at all stages of the proceedings. He made this objection by demurrer to the information, by motion to strike out and vacate the information, and by motion in arrest of judgment. In all of the analogous cases to which we have been referred in which judgments of conviction under this law have been brought up for review, it has been definitely charged that the alleged acts of the defendant tended to encourage the minor to become a person of the character described in section 1 of the Juvenile Court Law, or words of equivalent import have been used. In the absence of any such allegations in the charge presented in this case, it unfortunately results that the information fails to charge facts sufficient to constitute any crime. Although she was under the age of 21 years, the woman in this case was more than 18 years of age; that is to say, above the age of consent. But so far as shown by the information, the act described may have been accomplished by force and violence and wholly against her will. And on this assumption the case for the people is not aided, since it is conceded that the information was not sufficient to charge the crime of rape. In People v. Cruse, 24 Cal. App. 497, 141 Pac. 936, following the statement of testimony tending to show that a forcible rape had been committed, this court held that upon that evidence alone the offense of contributing to the dependency of the girl named would not appear to have been committed. The court said:

"Upon the case thus made, viewed in the light of this evidence introduced by the prosecution, it would seem that the girl was not a dependent or delinquent child, for it could not be properly said that, with the disposition thus ascribed to her and the fact that the act of intercourse committed with her was accomplished by force and against her will, there was danger of her 'growing up to lead an idle, dissolute or immoral life.' It might as well be said where, for instance, a married woman is assaulted and outraged and she chances to be under the age of 21 years, that she thereupon becomes a delinquent person and that the perpetrator of the outrage could be prosecuted as one having caused the woman to become of that character."

[2] We deem it unnecessary to discuss other errors relied upon by appellant. The fact that the evidence would have sustained the verdict if the information had described the commission, by defendant, of a criminal offense, does not entitle the state to an affirmance when the information is so defective that no crime was charged, and particularly when, as in this case, the objections made by the defendant were continually urged upon the attention of the court. Under such circumstances, section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution does not apply to the case.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

59 Cal. App. 394

MOORADIAN v. MARKARIAN.

MARKARIAN v. MOORADIAN.

(Civ. 4286.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 23, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 22, 1922.)

Appeals from Superior Court, Fresno County; D. A. Cashin, Judge.

Separate actions by D. J. Mooradian against Garabed Markarian and by Garabed Markarian against D. J. Mooradian, tried together by stipulation. Judgment in both cases for Markarian, and Mooradian appeals. Affirmed.

Everts, Ewing & Wild and J. R. Fitch, all of Fresno, for appellant.

Gallaher, Simpson & Hays, of Fresno, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Two actions were, by stipulation, tried together, one brought by the appellant against respondent for the cancellation of a promissory note; the second, by respondent against appellant for collection of the same note. Respondent obtained judgment in both cases. In his answer to the second case appellant alleged that the note had been taken by him in payment for the first installment of the purchase price of a piece of property which he agreed to sell to the respondent; that an agreement of sale was executed by both parties wherein it was agreed that the note should be canceled and declared void; that respondent thereafter entered into possession of the premises, but had failed to pay the interest due on the 1st day of December, 1920, and had thereafter abandoned the property.

The trial court found that the agreement which was executed by the parties was merely a preliminary agreement which expressly called for a final agreement, and which contemplated further negotiations for the purpose of agreeing upon the terms, conditions, and provisions to be included in the final contract; that this preliminary agreement was not delivered to respondent, but was by the appellant delivered to his own attorney with instructions to said attorney to prepare a final agreement. The trial court also found that the allegations relating to the taking of possession by respondent were not true.

On this appeal appellant attacks the findings relating to the manner in which the preliminary agreement was executed and delivered and also the finding that the preliminary agreement contemplated further negotiations. As to the first, appellant refers to the testimony of the witness Ohanian, in which he said that he understood that he was acting as attorney for both parties and not for the appellant alone; but respondent points to the testimony of the appellant in which he said that Ohanian was his attorney. On the other issue the evidence is even less conflicting; the testimony of appellant showing that as to several important matters future negotiations were to be had.

Appellant does not attack the finding that respondent did not enter into possession, but does refer to some testimony of the appellant himself, brought out upon inquiry of the trial court, from which it might have been found that this allegation of the answer was true. The testimony is not positive or convincing, and we assume the trial court rejected it. We find substantial evidence in the record to support the findings under attack.

Judgments affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

190 Cal. 113

SCHURMAN v. LOOK. (Sac. 3392.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 20, 1922.)

1. Appeal and error ⊂=757(3) — Presumption that appellant has printed such evidence as he intends to rely on.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, providing that the parties must print in their briefs or in a supplement appended thereto such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court, it will be presumed that appellant has done so.

2. Appeal and error ⊂=766—Motion to compel appellant to print additional evidence denied, as respondent can print same.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, providing that the parties must print in their briefs or in a supplement appended thereto such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court, respondent may print such portions of the evidence as he intends to rely on, and it is sufficient to state the substance of the evidence only; hence a motion by respondent to compel appellant to print additional evidence will be denied.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Martha Schurman against Halleck Hart Look. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Motion by defendant to require plaintiff to print additional evidence in her brief. Motion denied.

Irving D. Gibson, of Sacramento, for appellant.

C. E. McLaughlin and W. F. Renfro, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The motion of the respondent, Halleck Hart Look, to require the appellant to print additional evidence not in his brief is denied.

[1, 2] The Code provides that—

"In filing briefs on said appeal the parties must, however, print in their briefs, or in a supplement appended thereto, such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court." Code Civ. Proc. § 953c.

The appellant, it must be presumed, has done so. The respondent may print in his brief such portions of the record as he relies on. It is proper to add that in doing so it is not necessary for him to print every part of the record. It is sufficient for him to state the substance of the evidence. For illustration, where the evidence is produced by question and answer, he may give only the answer, where it sufficiently explains the question to which it was presented. In this way the respondent can very much abridge the evidence he desires to have presented. Other methods of abbreviation will doubtless occur to the respondent.

SHAW, C. J., and WILBUR, LENNON, SLOANE, and LAWLOR, JJ., concur.

---

190 Cal. 105

In re CARROLL'S ESTATE.

GEORGESON v. STEINHOFER et al.

(S. F. 10228.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 15, 1922.)

Appeal and error ⊜1140(8)—Remittitur required by judgment of District Court of Appeal held properly filed in such court.

Judgment for claim against an estate was affirmed by the District Court of Appeal, on condition of remittitur of a portion of the claim within 30 days from filing of the opinion, and within the time attorneys for the respondents sent a release of such sum to the clerk of the District Court of Appeal, stating it was their desire to release such portion of the judgment, and the clerk returned the release, stating that the matter of release should be taken up with the lower court. Thereupon the attorneys filed a similar release with the clerk of the lower court, and that court made an order reciting the due filing of the release with it, and subsequently made order that the executor pay the claim as so reduced. Held that, since the appellate court, under Const. art. 6, § 4, had exclusive jurisdiction of the case during the 30 days specified, its order required the remission to be filed in that court, and that this was done by respondents by filing release with the clerk of that court, although he returned it, and although respondents filed release in the lower court, this not constituting withdrawal of the tender of release in the appellate court, so that the order requiring the payment of the claim as reduced was proper, the reference in the findings supporting it to the filing of the release in the lower court being properly construed as surplusage, and not impairing the efficacy of the findings as a whole that there was a proper remission.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; Denver Sevier, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Alice M. Carroll, sometimes called Alice M. Perry. From an order directing F. W. Georgeson, executor, etc., to pay a certain sum from the moneys of the estate to Bertha Steinhofer and another, the executor appeals. Affirmed.

H. C. Nelson and Puter & Quinn, all of Eureka, for appellant.

W. Ernest Dickson, of Eureka, for respondents.

LENNON, J. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court of Humboldt county, directing the executor of the last will and testament of Alice M. Carroll to pay to Bertha Steinhofer and Herman Steinhofer, respondents herein, the sum of $2,024.43, less the sum of $69.43, from the moneys of said estate. The facts are as follows:

Alice M. Carroll, sometimes called Alice M. Perry, died testate in the county of Humboldt on or about August 20, 1917. F. W. Georgeson, the appellant herein, was duly appointed the executor of her last will and testament, and at all times since then has been and is now the duly qualified and acting executor. During the course of the administration of said estate Bertha and Herman Steinhofer, the respondents herein, presented a claim to said executor for certain services and expenditures claimed to have been made by them for and on behalf of said deceased. Said claim was rejected and disallowed by said executor. Thereafter the said claimants, the respondents in the present case, filed an action in the superior court of the county of Humboldt against the appellant herein as the executor of said estate. A trial of said cause was had with a jury, and a verdict rendered in favor of the plaintiffs and against the said executor in the sum of $2,024.43. Judgment was accordingly duly entered on said verdict for said sum in favor of the plaintiffs, who are respondents here. Upon an appeal from the judgment thus rendered and entered in the case the District Court of Appeal for the Third Appellate District, in its opinion rendered and filed October 15, 1921, after disposing of the points made in support of the appeal, ordered and directed that if the plaintiffs in that action, who were the respondents upon the appeal taken therein, "within 30 days from the filing of this opinion, remit in due and proper form the sum of $69.43 of the amount awarded them by the verdict and judgment, * * * the said judgment shall stand as affirmed, but if the plaintiffs fail or refuse within said time to remit said sum * * * from said judgment, then the judgment appealed from will stand as reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial." 202 Pac. 350.

Thereafter on October 19, 1921, the attorneys for the respondents upon that appeal wrote, addressed, and mailed a letter to the clerk of said District Court of Appeal, which letter was to the effect that inclosed therein was a release by respondents of said sum of $69.43 from said judgment, and that it was the desire of respondents "to release that portion of the judgment in accordance with the suggestion of the appellate court." The letter referred to requested the clerk of the appellate court to advise the writer whether or not the release inclosed therein was in proper form. The release inclosed to the clerk was signed by the attorney for the plaintiffs in the action, and also signed and acknowledged by the plaintiffs. It was appropriately captioned with the title of the court and cause. It was addressed to the appellate court and, after reciting the fact of the rendition of the said court's opinion and the direction therein for a remittance of a portion of the judgment therein referred to, proceeded to and did declare that "in pursuance of said opinion and direction, we, the plaintiffs above named, do hereby remit and release from the amount of said judgment the sum of sixty-nine and forty-three hundredths ($69.43) dollars."

The letter and the release were received in due season by the clerk of the appellate court, who shortly thereafter returned the release to the attorney for the plaintiffs, accompanied by a letter which stated that the release was returned for the reason that the clerk was "instructed by the court to return the same to the attorney for the plaintiffs." The letter last referred to further stated that the clerk had been directed by the appellate court to inform the attorney for plaintiffs that the matter of remitting a portion of the judgment should "be taken up with the superior court of Humboldt county," in which court the judgment was originally made and entered. Following the receipt of the letter last referred to and the return of the release from the clerk of the appellate court, the attorney for the plaintiffs in the action on October 26, 1921, filed with the clerk of the superior court of Humboldt county a release executed and acknowledged by the plaintiffs, which was substantially the same as the release forwarded in the first instance to the clerk of the appellate court. On October 27, 1921, the said superior court made and entered an order in the action in question, which, after reciting the facts of the making and entering of the original judgment, the direction of the appellate court for a remission of a portion thereof, and the filing, in said superior court, of the plaintiff's written consent to a remission from the judgment of the sum of $69.43, directed that the said judgment be accordingly modified of record by deducting therefrom the sum so remitted. Thereafter on March 3, 1922, the superior court of Humboldt county, in response to a proceeding instituted in that court by the plaintiffs in the original action, now the respondents here, made and entered an order in the estate of said Alice M. Carroll, directing the defendant in said action, now the appellant here, as the executor of said estate, to pay to said plaintiffs the sums called for by the judgment in controversy, less the sum of $69.43, which had been remitted therefrom in keeping with the direction of the appellate court. It is from this order of the superior court that the appeal is taken.

The remittitur in the case came down from the appellate court and was filed with the superior court on the 15th day of December, 1921. No contention is made that the appellate court did not have the power to make the affirmance or reversal of the judgment conditional upon the waiver or nonwaiver of a portion of the judgment appealed from. It is contended, however, in support of the present appeal, that no remission of the judgment was made in "due and proper form," as required by the opinion of the appellate court, and that as a consequence the judgment appealed from was in effect reversed. This contention is based solely upon the fact that the remission was not filed with the appellate court within the time limited by the opinion of that court. It is argued in this behalf that, inasmuch as the appellate court retained jurisdiction of the action until the remittitur came down and was filed with the superior court, the filing of the remission in the superior court was a vain and useless thing, which, in the absence of jurisdiction in that court to proceed at all in the premises until the remittitur came down, could not be made the predicate for modification of the judgment. Conceding this contention to be correct, still it is not conclusive of the question of whether or not the plaintiffs made, in due and proper form, a remission of the judgment in controversy as directed by the appellate court. It is not uncommon for reviewing courts to make a conditional order, as was done in the instant case, that the judgment be affirmed upon the requirement that the respondents consent to remit a portion of the judgment. Paige v. O'Neal, 12 Cal. 483; Doll v. Feller, 16 Cal. 432; Smith v. Johnson, 23 Cal. 64; Hooper v. Wells, 27 Cal. 11, 85 Am. Dec. 211; Crowthers v. Rowlandson, 27 Cal. 377; Lally v. Wise, 28 Cal. 539; Carpentier v. Gardiner, 29 Cal. 160; Pinkerton v. Woodward, 33 Cal. 557, 91 Am. Dec. 657; Tarbell v. C. P. R. Co., 34 Cal. 616; Kinsey v. Wallace, 36 Cal. 462; Kline v. Central Pacific R. R., 39 Cal. 587; Hodapp v. Sharp, 40 Cal. 69; Mahoney v. Middleton, 41 Cal. 41; Salstrom v. Orleans Bar Gold Mining Co., 153 Cal. 551, 96 Pac. 292. Ordinarily, the reviewing court may in its discretion order that the remission be filed in the reviewing court, or direct the court below to make the requisite order for a modification of the judgment upon the going down of the remittitur. Pinkerton v. Woodward, Crowthers v. Rowlandson, Kinsey v. Wallace, and Salstrom v. Orleans Bar Gold Mining Co., all supra. It would appear, therefore, that there is no fixed or uniform rule as to where, whether in the reviewing or trial court, the remission of judgment should be filed; but in whatever court the remission is directed to be made the judgment becomes automatically and permanently affirmed or reversed, as the case may be, upon the performance or nonperformance of the condition. Durkee v. Garvey, 84 Cal. 590, 24 Pac. 929.

In the instant case the order for a remission of the judgment did not designate the court in which the remission should be filed. The remission, however, was directed to be made within 30 days after the filing of the opinion of the appellate court. The appellate court retained jurisdiction of the case on appeal for 30 days following the filing of the opinion (Const. art. 6, § 4), and the superior court would not be reinvested with jurisdiction of the case until the going down of the remittitur, which, in the ordinary course, would not issue until the expiration of 60 days from the filing of the opinion (Rule XXXIV of Rules of Supreme Court, 177 Cal. lxi, 176 Pac. xiv). In short, there was no court, other than the appellate court, which had jurisdiction of the action during the time designated by the opinion of that court within which the remission was to be filed. In re Jessup, 81 Cal. 408, 472, 21 Pac. 976, 22 Pac. 742, 1028, 6 L. R. A. 594; Niles v. Edwards, 95 Cal. 41, 30 Pac. 134. It would appear, therefore, that the conditional order of the appellate court should be construed to mean that the remission of the judgment should be filed in that court. This, we take it, is what the plaintiffs in effect did.

The return of the release of the judgment by the clerk of the appellate court to the attorney for the plaintiffs in the original action, with directions to present the same to the court below, was tantamount to a refusal to file the release in the appellate court. It will be noted that the release was not refused filing by the clerk of the appellate court because of any formal defect therein, nor because of a failure to pay any fees which might be required for its filing with the appellate court. While counsel for the plaintiffs did not in his letter to the clerk of the appellate court, in which was inclosed the release, request in so many words that the release be filed with the records of that court, nevertheless, the very nature of the release itself, the fact that it was addressed to the appellate court and made specific reference to the opinion of that court concerning the conditional order of affirmance, coupled with the statement in the letter of the counsel for plaintiffs that the release had been executed and forwarded to the clerk of the appellate court for the purpose of conforming to the direction of the appellate court, was in effect a request for a filing of the release with that court. The fact that counsel for the plaintiffs in his letter to the clerk of the appellate court expressed his anxiety to have the release executed in proper form did not militate against his tender of the release to said clerk for filing, nor does the act of the clerk of the appellate court in returning the release to counsel for plaintiffs upon the theory that it should have been filed in the court below operate to make the tender of a filing with him in the first instance ineffective. Nor does the fact that counsel for plaintiffs filed a release in the court below constitute a withdrawal of the tender for filing of the release in the first instance with the clerk of the appellate court. All of the circumstances attending the forwarding of the release to the clerk of the appellate court indicate that it was the intention of the counsel for plaintiffs to have the release filed with the records of the appellate court, and a paper is filed of record, in contemplation of law, when it is delivered to the proper official, with the intention that it shall become part of an official record, and the filing thus made is not impaired by the clerk's failure or refusal, without good cause, to receive and record the same as filed in the records of his office. Smith v. Biscailuz, 83 Cal. 344, 21 Pac. 15, 23 Pac. 314; Howell v. Slauson, 83 Cal. 539, 23 Pac. 692; Rollins v. Wright, 93 Cal.

395, 399, 29 Pac. 58; Edwards v. Grand, 121 Cal. 254, 256, 53 Pac. 796; Thomason v. Carroll, 132 Cal. 148, 152, 64 Pac. 262; Hoyt v. Stark, 134 Cal. 178, 66 Pac. 223, 86 Am. St. Rep. 246; Dillon v. Superior Court, 24 Cal. App. 760, 142 Pac. 503; People v. Marsh, 30 Cal. App. 424, 430, 159 Pac. 191; Tregambo v. Comanche Mills, 57 Cal. 501; Keller v. Gerber (Cal. App.) 193 Pac. 809; Hart v. Forgeus, 184 Cal. 327, 193 Pac. 764; Reed v. Curry, 35 Ill. 536; Grubbs v. Cones, 57 Mo. 83, 84; Bensley v. Haeberle, 20 Mo. App. 648; Aultman v. Utsey, 33 S. C. 611, 12 S. E. 628; Poole v. Poindexter, 72 Kan. 654, 83 Pac. 126; Bade v. Hibberd, 50 Or. 501, 93 Pac. 364.

While the order appealed from seems to have been based in part upon a purported finding that the remission in question was made in the superior court of Humboldt county on the 27th day of October, 1921, nevertheless, the findings, as a whole, upon which the order appealed from must ultimately rest may be fairly construed in support of the order to mean that the lower court found that the remission in due and proper form from the judgment of the amount designated by the court of appeal was made within the 30 days designated in the opinion of said court. The reference in the findings to the filing of the release in the superior court of Humboldt county as of the 27th day of October, 1921, may be taken as surplusage and ignored without impairing the efficacy of the findings as a whole to support the order appealed from. The findings thus construed are amply supported by the evidence. This is so because the superior court had before it, so the record shows, at the time of the making of its findings and the order appealed from, all of the evidentiary matters pertaining to the execution and forwarding in the first instance of the remission by the plaintiffs in the original action to the clerk of the appellate court. The findings as a whole, therefore, may be fairly said to have been made and based upon the tender to the clerk of the appellate court of the filing of the remission which, as we have said before, was equivalent to an actual filing.

Upon the filing with the clerk of the appellate court the judgment automatically became affirmed, and nothing further was needed to be done to make the affirmation final, but the sending down of the remittitur. This was done in due course on December 15, 1922, and the lower court, having thereupon regained jurisdiction, had jurisdiction to make the order appealed from.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; LAWLOR, J.; WASTE, J.; WILBUR, J.; RICHARDS, Justice pro tem.

190 Cal. 114

PRESS PUB. CO. et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al.

GENERAL ACCIDENT, FIRE & LIFE ASSUR. CORPORATION, LIMITED, OF PERTH, SCOTLAND v. SAME.

(L. A. 7197, 7198.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 22, 1922.)

1. Master and servant ⟸361—Term "contract for hire" within Compensation Act defining "employee" construed.

The term "contract for hire," as used in Workmen's Compensation Act, § 8a, defining an "employee," means a contract for personal service as is indicated by the fact that the basis of compensation provided by the act is the amount of wages earned.

2. Master and servant ⟸405(2)—Compensation claimant held under contracts for personal service.

Circumstances surrounding the employment of compensation claimant, injured by the overturning of his motorcycle, held to warrant the inference that he was under contract for personal service to carry cream for a creamery, and likewise under a contract for personal service to a publishing company for the delivery of papers along the same route; it appearing that he was paid fixed wages, and was subject to discharge for unsatisfactory service.

3. Master and servant ⟸367—Employer's power to terminate employment incompatible with relationship of independent contractor.

The power of the employer to terminate the employment at any time is incompatible with the full control of the work usually enjoyed by an independent contractor, and is a strong circumstance to show the subserviency of the employee.

4. Master and servant ⟸405(2)—Existence of power of control determined from circumstances.

In the absence of any express terms affirming or negativing the power of control and direction, its existence must be determined from the reasonable inferences to be drawn from all the circumstances surrounding the making of the contract of employment, considered in conjunction with the nature of the contract and the duties ordinarily to be performed thereunder.

5. Master and servant ⟸367—Control test of status of employee or independent contractor.

It is not the actual exercise of control, but the right of control, which is important in a determination of whether or not the status of an employee or independent contractor exists, and one of the means of ascertaining whether or not this right to control exists is the determination of whether or not, if instructions were given, they would have to be obeyed.

6. Master and servant ⊜367 — Compensation claimant held an "employee," and not one engaged in "transfer business" as an "independent calling."

Where compensation claimant purchased his motorcycle when he undertook the service of carrying cream for a creamery and delivering papers for a publisher, and the carrying of packages for patrons along the route when requested by them was merely incidental to the other service, and the amount he received for the incidental service was trivial in comparison with his regular wages, it cannot be said that he was engaged in the conduct of a "transfer business," and therefore in pursuit of an" independant calling" within Civ Code, § 2009, so as to defeat his claim as "employee" within the Workmen's Compensation Act, § 8(a).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Employee.]

7. Master and servant ⊜375(1)—Compensation claimant delivering newspapers held within scope of employment.

Compensation claimant, injured by the overturning of his motorcycle carrying cream for a creamery and newspapers for a publishing company, held within the scope of his employment as to the company, though he was on one road instead of another; it appearing that either road was a reasonable road to be used, in the absence of instructions to the contrary.

In Bank.

Applications for writ of review by the Press Publishing Company and others and by the General Accident, Fire & Life Assurance Corporation, Limited, of Perth, Scotland, to annul an order of the Industrial Accident Commission of California and others, awarding compensation to Leon Benefiel. Award affirmed.

Geo. H. Moore, of Los Angeles, for petitioner Press Publishing Co.

Joe Crider, Jr., of Los Angeles, for petitioner General Accident, Fire & Life Assur. Corporation, Limited, of Perth, Scotland.

A. E. Graupner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

LENNON, J. This is a proceeding by petitioners, General Accident & Fire Assurance Company, insurer of Lucia K. Hicks, owner of a creamery in Santa Barbara, and the Press Publishing Company, a newspaper published in that city, and its insurer, Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation Limited, of London, England, to have annulled the award made by the Industrial Accident Commission to Leon Benefiel for injuries found by the Commission to have arisen out of and in the course of his joint employment by said Lucia K. Hicks and the Press Publishing Company. The liability for compensation was apportioned according to the ratio which the wages Benefiel received from each employer bore to the sum total of the wages he received from both. On behalf of General Accident & Fire Assurance Company, insurer of Lucia K. Hicks, it is contended that Benefiel was, at the time of the injury for which compensation was awarded, not an employee of Lucia K. Hicks, but an independent contractor, and that therefore Lucia K. Hicks was not liable for compensation for injuries received by him. On behalf of the Employers' Liability Assurance Company, insurer of the Press Publishing Company, it is contended that Leon Benefiel was at the time of injury an independent contractor and not an employee of the said company, and, furthermore, that even though it be found that he was an employee, nevertheless the Press Publishing Company was not liable for compensation, for the reason that at the time of the accident said employee was acting outside the sphere of his employment for the Press Publishing Company, and the injury was not, as found by the Commission, "in the course of" his employment. The facts upon which the Commission made its findings and based its award, briefly stated, are these:

Benefiel, a minor, was employed for some time by Miss Lucia K. Hicks, at Santa Barbara, washing milk cans and doing similar work around her creamery. During this time a portion of her milk and cream was secured from the Dabney ranch at Los Olivos, about 60 miles northwest of Santa Barbara, and, owing to the strenuousness of the trip, she was having constant difficulty in getting any one to make the trip daily for the wages she was able to pay. One of the newspaper routes of the Press Publishing Company of Santa Barbara paralleled the route to be taken to the Dabney ranch for the cream, and Benefiel made an arrangement with Miss Hicks that he should endeavor to obtain the job of delivering the papers along this route, and by combining the work of going after the cream and delivering the papers make sufficient money to compensate him adequately for the work involved. It was also expected that from occasional errands which he could perform for parties along the route, as delivering packages or filling small orders, he would earn enough to pay for the gasoline and oil for his motorcycle to be used in the work. A satisfactory arrangement was consummated with the Press Publishing Company whereby he was to deliver papers, some in bulk and some single copies, between Santa Barbara and the Dabney ranch, and Benefiel thereupon purchased a motorcycle with a side car attachment and commenced his joint duties.

Benefiel's work for Miss Hicks consisted in carrying ice and empty cream cans daily from Santa Barbara to Los Olivos and bringing back the cream from the farm there. For this work he was paid $6 a day, regardless of the amount of cream carried and regardless of whether he used his own motorcycle or used Miss Hicks' automobile. If, however, he used her automobile the arrangement was that she was to receive the money he earned on the trip by performing the incidental errands. Benefiel's work was always satisfactory, and Miss Hicks gave him no directions as to the time he was supposed to leave or the route he was to take, except that it was understood that he should have the cream back from the Dabney ranch to the dairy by 3:30 or 4 o'clock in the afternoon in time for the bottling.

The duties of Benefiel for the Press Publishing Company consisted of his calling for the papers at their office early in the morning and delivering them along the route. Every morning before leaving he was supposed to look for slips upon which were written instructions from the Press Publishing Company as to the names of new subscribers and those dropped from the subscription list. For this service he was paid a flat rate of $15 a week, and was paid at the same time and in the same manner as the carriers engaged upon each of the other routes of the Press Publishing Company. No directions were given him as to the time he was supposed to start nor as to the road he should take in reaching the commencement of the route. He was, however, supposed to start sufficiently early in the morning to have the last papers delivered at Los Olivos by 12 o'clock noon. While there seems to have been no complaint of his services by the Press Publishing Company, he was subject to being discharged by it at any time that his services should prove unsatisfactory.

There are two roads going out of Santa Barbara which he could use, both of which unite outside of the city and join the state highway. The Hollister road is better paved from the newspaper office to the state highway than is the Modoc road, which is, however, a little shorter and closer to Benefiel's home and the dairy. As he had no duties to perform until after the junction point of the two roads with the state highway, he was equally starting upon his route when using either of the two roads. Owing to the rattling of the milk cans in the empty side car, it was his practice to go to the dairy the night before and bring the empty cans to his home. The next morning he would go to the ice plant and procure the ice for icing the milk, and get his bundles of papers from the office, then stopping at home, he would load on the empty milk cans and leave by the Modoc road on his daily trip.

On the morning of February 11th, Benefiel, after getting the ice and papers and stopping at his home for the empty milk cans, started out the Modoc road from home as usual. While proceeding along that road at a point shortly before its intersection with the Hollister road, his motorcycle overturned in passing an automobile, and he was very seriously injured. At the time of the injury he was carrying in his side car the empty milk cans and ice for the creamery, the papers of the Press Publishing Company, and a storage battery for a garage along his route. An application for adjustment of claim was filed by Benefiel with the Industrial Accident Commission against Miss Lucia K. Hicks and her insurance carrier, the General Accident Fire & Life Insurance Corporation, and the Press Publishing Company, and its insurance carrier, the Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation. The Industrial Accident Commission awarded compensation against both insurance companies, dismissing the employers because of their insurance. The separate writs of the two insurance companies having been consolidated for briefing and the facts upon which the award was made being practically the same, both cases will be considered and decided in this opinion.

[1] An employee is defined by section 8 (a) of the Workmen's Compensation Act (Stats. 1917, c. 586, p. 831) to be:

"Every person in the service of an employer as defined by section seven hereof under any appointment or contract of hire or apprenticeship, express or implied, oral or written."

A "contract of hire" means a contract for personal services, as is indicated by the fact that the basis of compensation provided by the act is the amount of wages earned. Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 807, 810, 159 Pac. 721.

[2] That Benefiel was under a contract for personal services to Lucia K. Hicks to carry ice and empty milk cans daily from Santa Barbara to Los Olivos and bring back the cream from the farm there, and likewise under a contract for personal services to the Press Publishing Company for the delivery of the Morning Press on route 19 between Santa Barbara and Los Olivos, is, in our opinion, a fair inference from the surrounding circumstances of his employment as is shown by the undisputed evidence. As to his arrangement with Miss Hicks, the fact that Benefiel was previously employed by her, rendering personal services in and around the creamery, the fact that the work to be performed was not a particular transaction, but contemplated a continuity of service, the fact that his payment was not a specified recompense for a specified result, but was proportionate to the amount of labor involved, rather than for the amount of cream carried, all support the inference that Benefiel was an employee rather than an independent contractor. There is no direct proof of any actual control exercised over Benefiel in the performance of his duties. It is an admitted fact, however, that he was required to have the cream at the creamery in Santa Barbara by 3:30 or 4 o'clock in time for bottling. It is also an admitted fact that Miss Hicks had the power to discharge him at any time his services should prove unsatisfactory, and this undoubtedly gave her the potential power of control.

[3] This power of the employer to terminate the employment at any time is a strong circumstance tending to show the subserviency of the employee, since it is incompatible with the full control of the work usually enjoyed by an independent contractor. Perhaps no single circumstance is more conclusive to show the relationship of an employee than the right of the employer to end the service whenever he sees fit to do so. 14 Ruling Case Law, p. 72. Moreover, the fact that Miss Hicks had agreed that, in case Benefiel was unable to use his motorcycle, she would furnish him with an automobile to make the trip, indicates that it was his personal services for which she contracted.

[4] As to the services rendered for the Press Publishing Company, they were of an essentially personal nature. It was understood that the services were to be rendered by Benefiel himself. The Press Publishing Company retained control of its route, and hired carriers to deliver its papers, and Benefiel was hired on the same terms, treated in the same manner, and paid in the same way as the other carriers. It is not contended by the Press Publishing Company that Benefiel bought the papers himself and resold them, or that he could have sublet the route. It is insisted, however, that there was no power of direction or control over Benefiel by the Press Publishing Company, which power was essential to establish the status of Benefiel as an employee. The existence or nonexistence of this power of direction, and control cannot be determined from the terms of the contract, since nothing is expressly said therein as to this right. In the absence of any express terms affirming or negating the power of control and direction, its existence must be determined from the reasonable inferences to be drawn from all of the circumstances surrounding and attending the making and execution of the contract, considered in conjunction with the nature of the contract and the duties ordinarily to be performed thereunder. The circumstances attending the hiring of Benefiel warrant the inference that he was subject to the direction and control of the Press Publishing Company in the performance of his work. The most significant fact in this regard, and one which points towards the relation of employee rather than to the status of an independent contractor, is the fact that Benefiel was hired on the same terms as the other carriers, and the Press Publishing Company had the right to exercise the same direction and control over Benefiel as it did over the other carrier boys, concededly employees. While it is true that Benefiel was "on his own time" as to the time of starting, nevertheless his work was required to be finished at Los Olivos by 12 o'clock noon. He was also required to look each morning at the Press Publishing Company's office for slips concerning the addition of new subscribers or the discontinuance of old ones. If any complaints were made by patrons, he would be required to note and remedy the defective delivery.

[5] As previously indicated, it is not the actual exercise of control, but the right of control—that is to say, the potential power of control—which is important in a determination of whether or not the status of an employee or independent contract exists. Claremont Country Club v. Industrial Accident Commission, 174 Cal. 395, 163 Pac. 209, L. R. A. 1918F, 177. One of the means of ascertaining whether or not this right to control exists is the determination of whether or not, if instructions were given, they would have to be obeyed. In the instant case, it is undisputed that the Press Publishing Company had the power to hire and the power to discharge its carriers for unsatisfactory service, and in this regard Benefiel was in no better position than the other carriers. This power of discharge made obligatory any instructions given, for it gave to the Press Publishing Company the power to require obedience to those instructions and insured their being carried out. As was held in Western Metal Supply Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 407, 417, 156 Pac. 491, 495 (Ann. Cas. 1917E, 390):

"The real test by which to determine whether a person is acting as the servant of another is to ascertain whether, at the time when the injury was inflicted, he was subject to such person's orders and control and was liable to be discharged by him for disobedience * * * or misconduct."

The fact that Benefiel furnished his own transportation does not, of course, affect his status as an employee. Eng-Skell Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 44 Cal. App. 210, 186 Pac. 163. The fact that Benefiel was paid a weekly salary which was proportionate to his labor, the fact that he delivered papers to individuals and not only in bulk, as well as the fact that a continuity of service was contemplated rather than a definite specified job, also support the conclusion that Benefiel was an employee of the Press Publishing Company.

[6] The term "employee" has been held to be synonymous with the word "servant." Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 807, 810, 159 Pac. 721. And servant as defined by section 2009 of the Civil Code is one "who is employed to render personal service to his employer, otherwise than in the pursuit of an independent calling, and who in such service remains entirely under the control and direction of the latter who is called his master." It is insisted by both petitioners that because of the fact that Benefiel owned his own motorcycle, paying personally for its upkeep, gasoline, oil, etc., and also because of the fact that he carried packages and filled small orders for persons along his route in order to defray the expenses of his machine, it must be held that he was engaged in an independent calling, viz., in the conduct of a transfer business, and that it was in pursuit of this calling that he contracted both with Lucia K. Hicks and the Press Publishing Company. These facts, however, must be taken and considered in conjunction with the other facts of the case, which show, in substance, that Benefiel was not "engaged in the transfer business." Previous to his employment by Miss Hicks and the Press Publishing Company, Benefiel did not own a machine, and attempted no transfer service of any kind. His motorcycle was purchased only at the time he undertook the service of delivering the cream and papers, and the carrying of packages was merely incidental to his main employment of performing his duties for them. Benefiel did not hold himself out to the public generally for messenger service, nor had he any place where calls could be left for him. He only performed small errands for patrons along his route when requested by them. He never allowed this incidental service to interfere with his main work, and never made more than the one trip during the day, which trip was made primarily in the performance of his duties as an employee of Miss Hicks and the Press Publishing Company. The amount which he received for this incidental service was trivial in comparison with his regular wages. It amounted at most only to enough to pay for the upkeep of his machine, and in the event that Benefiel had been discharged by either Miss Hicks or the Press Publishing Company there would have been no incidental business remaining to warrant him in making the trip. In view of the fact that the work for Miss Hicks and the Press Publishing Company was not incidental to this other business, but, on the contrary, this other work was merely incidental to their work, it cannot be said that Benefiel was engaged in the conduct of a "transfer business," and therefore was in pursuit of an independent calling at the time of the accident. The case of Flickenger v. Industrial Accident Commission, 181 Cal. 425, 184 Pac. 851, 19 A. L. R. 1150, cited in support of the contention that Benefiel was an independent contractor is readily distinguishable from the instant case. All the circumstances of that case pointed to an independent business of trucking carried on by the injured person prior to the accident which produced the injury, from a regular place of business, where the injured person received calls and made contracts for hauling and held himself out to the public generally as engaged in that business. Obviously, that case is not analogous to the instant case.

[7] We cannot agree with the separate contention of the Press Publishing Company that Benefiel at the time of the accident was outside the scope of his employment as to them merely because he was on the Modoc road after having gone to his mother's home for the empty milk cans. Although there is evidence that the Hollister road is the better paved road, there is also evidence that the Modoc road was shorter, and, furthermore, that due to bumps on the Hollister road it made but little difference to a motorcyclist which road he took. Either road, therefore, was a reasonable road to use for the purpose of the Press Publishing Company's business, and, in the absence of definite instructions to the contrary, Benefiel was equally in the course of his employment when upon either road. It is not denied that the Press Publishing Company was aware of and acquiesced in the practice of Benefiel to take the Modoc road. There is no showing that the newspaper carriers were not privileged to select the road which they would take in reaching the commencement of their route for the delivery of papers to the first customer, and admittedly they were in the course of their employment from the time of procuring the papers from the newspaper office until they had completed their deliveries. At the time of the accident any deviation which Benefiel had made for the purpose of performing duties for others than the Press Publishing Company had been completed, and he was at that time engaged in the performance of his duty of carrying the papers in bulk preparatory to their delivery to individual customers.

The award of the commission may be annulled only if there is no substantial evidence in support of its findings. The award is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; SLOANE, J.; WASTE, J.; LAWLOR, J.; WILBUR, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 364

MORRIS v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

(Civ. No. 4301; S. F. 10107.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 17, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 14, 1922.)

1. Eminent domain ⇐107—No right of recovery for injury to business.

Damage to that form of property known as business or the good will of a business is damnum absque injuria, and does not form an element of the compensating damages to be awarded under Const. art. 1, § 14, providing that property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation.

2. Eminent domain ⇐277—Demand to board of supervisors for damages from street improvement necessary.

Failure to present a demand to the board of supervisors of San Francisco for damages incident to public street improvements is a bar to an action therefor, under San Francisco Charter, art. 2, c. 2, § 8.

3. Eminent domain ⟸281—Acceptance of award of damages forecloses right of action.

Acceptance by owner of leasehold in the city of San Francisco of an amount awarded by the board of public works as damages occasioned by a street improvement barred an action to recover damages, where the ordinance under which the improvement was made provided for those dissatisfied with an award a remedy by appeal to the board of supervisors within 20 days after publication of notice of award.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Oregon E. Morris against the City and County of San Francisco. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed in District Court of Appeal, and hearing denied in Supreme Court.

George Lull, City Atty., and Charles S. Peery, Asst. City Atty., both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Wm. M. Abbott, Wm. M. Cannon and K. W. Cannon, all of San Francisco (Enid Childs, of counsel), for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued the city and county of San Francisco for damages to her business as a hotel keeper, caused by the construction by the city under contract of a public improvement known as the Stockton street tunnel. The suit was based upon a claim filed with the board of supervisors as required by the charter. The items of damage specified in the claim were:

| | |
|---|---|
| Value of business lost and destroyed..... | $35,000 00 |
| Loss and injury to credit..... | 5,000 00 |
| Loss on account of expense of conducting business from May 1, 1913, to December 31, 1913..... | 5,802 82 |
| Loss of profits during same period..... | 4,500 00 |
| Loss of value of time and services during same period ..... | 2,500 00 |
| | $52,802 82 |

The complaint alleged that—

The $35,000 item accrued from the total loss and destruction of plaintiff's business of conducting the hotel; that the $5,000 item accrued from the loss of credit with her bank and with merchants with whom she had been dealing; "that immediately upon the commencement of said work [construction of the tunnel], and by reason thereof, the plaintiff's said hotel business commenced to decrease, * * * and said hotel was by the plaintiff conducted and operated in order to preserve her said business and for the purpose of preventing the same from becoming lost to her, at a continued money loss from the time of the commencement of said work up to and including the 31st day of December, 1913."

The expense of the conduct of her business over the gross income for that period was alleged to be $5,802.82. The loss of profits during the same period was alleged to be $4,500; and the reasonable value of her services in conducting the hotel during the same time was alleged to be $2,500.

In addition to the items specified in the claim, damages to the amount of $1,795.58 were alleged to have been suffered because the plaintiff laid out that sum in repairs and replacements of the furniture, carpets, and linens used in the hotel. The plaintiff did not pray recovery of this sum, and for that reason and because it was not included in the claim presented to the supervisors, no further consideration need be given to the allegation.

The action is not based upon any claim of negligence on the part of the city or its contractor, the plaintiff's theory being that the city, "acting by and through its officers, agents, contractors, and employees thereunto duly authorized and empowered," constructed the tunnel and approaches thereto for street purposes and for purposes of public travel, and that, during the course of construction, ingress to and egress from the hotel was interrupted by the maintenance of excavations, barriers, trestlework, and temporary buildings, and the view from the hotel was obstructed, while the noise arising from the prosecution of the work both in the daytime and in the nighttime disturbed her patrons, and caused many of them to leave. Parenthetically it should be said that the allegations of the complaint are confined to acts occurring between May 1, 1913, and December 31, 1913, when plaintiff voluntarily abandoned her lease, and no claim is made that any damage would accrue to plaintiff's property or business after the work of construction was completed. In other words, the whole claim is based upon a temporary discomfiture arising during the progress of a public improvement, and whether the improvement would be a permanent benefit or injury is not alleged.

The defendant answered, denying the material allegations of the complaint, and set up a separate defense, alleging that the proceedings for the construction of the tunnel were had under an ordinance of the city and county providing for the prosecution of the work under contract and the levy of an assessment upon the private properties benefitted, such assessment to cover the entire cost of the project. Section 4 of this ordinance provided that—

"Any owner of property or persons interested therein claiming that such property would sustain damages if the proposed tunnel construction is completed, may file with the board of public works * * * a petition showing the fact of such ownership, or interest therein, * * * and the estimated amount of damages which the property would sustain by the proposed tunnel construction if completed." (Emphasis added.)

Section 5 of the ordinance provided that after the claims for damages had been adjusted, the board of public works should estimate the total amount of damages, together with the costs of construction of the tunnel, and assess the private property within the district a sufficient amount to pay the whole. It was alleged in the answer that pursuant to the terms of this ordinance the plaintiff presented her claim to the board of public works, setting out her interest in the property described in her complaint and the damage such interest would sustain by the construction of the tunnel, that said claim was duly approved by the board, and that the city had paid the plaintiff before the commencement of the action the full amount of the claim, $6,166.

The trial proceeded upon the issues so framed. Plaintiff's case consisted of evidence of the value of her business, its profits and losses and the value of her own time. It was shown that her lease to the premises had but a year to run from the commencement of the construction of the tunnel—May 1, 1913, to May 1, 1914—and, over the objection of defendant, testimony was admitted to the effect that she had a verbal promise of renewal. The defendant moved for a nonsuit upon the ground, among others, that damages were not recoverable for the loss to plaintiff's business, but that the only damages recoverable on account of the construction of the public improvement were those caused to the leasehold, which had already been paid. The trial court denied the motion, and permitted plaintiff to file an amendment to her complaint, alleging that by reason of the acts of defendant her "leasehold interest and hotel business" was of the value of $35,000 on April 26, 1913. In support of the amendment additional testimony was taken over defendant's objection, and a general verdict for $5,000 was returned by the jury. From the judgment upon the verdict the defendant prosecutes this appeal.

[1] Appellant points to a fact that cannot be successfully denied—that respondent's case was one for damages to her business, and not one for damages to her leasehold interest. In this connection reference is made to the allegations of the complaint that no action or proceeding of any kind had been commenced against plaintiff for the purpose of assessing or ascertaining the compensation to be made for the damage to her business or property, as alleged in the complaint, and that—

"neither the defendant nor any one else has ever made or paid to the plaintiff * * * just or any compensation for the damages to her said business or property hereinabove alleged." (Emphasis added.)

There can be no doubt that such was the theory upon which respondent went to trial—that her business as proprietor of the hotel was damaged by the construction of the tunnel without compensation to her. The case was framed on the guaranty of section 14 of article 1 of the Constitution, providing that—

"Private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having first been made to, or paid into court for, the owner."

But in Oakland v. Pacific Coast Lumber, etc., Co., 171 Cal. 392, 153 Pac. 705, the Supreme Court held that damage to that form of property known as business or the good will of a business is damnum absque injuria, "and does not form an element of the compensating damages to be awarded." Respondent had therefore no right of recovery except for the injury to her leasehold interest. It was for this reason that the amendments were made to the complaint after the motion for a nonsuit was denied, and that evidence was taken to show injury to the leasehold interest.

[2] But to this appellant answered that no claim had been presented to the supervisors covering damages to the leasehold interest, and that full payment of all damages suffered had been made. The necessity for the presentation of a demand to the board of supervisors, as required by the San Francisco charter, has been determined by unquestioned authority. San Francisco Charter, art. 2, c. 2, § 8; Crim v. City and County, 152 Cal. 279, 281, 92 Pac. 640; Bancroft v. San Diego, 120 Cal. 432, 438, 52 Pac. 712; Bigelow v. Los Angeles, 141 Cal. 503, 507, 75 Pac. 111; Spencer v. Los Angeles, 180 Cal. 103, 119, 179 Pac. 163; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Rolph, 184 Cal. 557, 560, 194 Pac. 1005. That the demand which was presented to the board and upon which the suit was predicated did not include a claim for damage to the leasehold appears from the demand itself and from the allegations of the complaint. This demand being one for damages to the business, the supervisors were not required to allow it, and the failure to present a proper demand for damages to the leasehold is a bar to the action upon that item. Cases cited above.

[3] In addition to this it appeared without conflict that respondent had been paid $6,166 after an award by the board of public works in response to a claim which she had presented to that board for damages to her interest in the property. This claim was presented in accordance with the terms of the tunnel ordinance adopted by the board of supervisors. The only damages which the board of public works could allow under the ordinance were those contemplated by the Constitution and the statutes for injury to private property taken or damaged for public use. Under the rule of Oakland v. Pacific Coast Lumber, etc., Co., 171 Cal. 392, 153 Pac. 705, damages to the business of respondent could not be considered. The ordinance itself called for claims from "any owner of property or persons interested therein." The interest of respondent was her leasehold. For this she had been fully compensated before the action was commenced. If she was dissatisfied with the award made by the board of public works, the ordinance provided a remedy by appeal to the board of supervisors within 20 days after the first publication of the notice of the award. But she accepted payment from the city of the amount awarded, and thus foreclosed her right of recovery in this action.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition for a rehearing is denied. We withhold our approval of that portion of the opinion which declares that no demand was presented to the board of supervisors for a claim for damages to the leasehold. In our opinion the claim so presented included damages to the leasehold, as well as other damages. But the items of damage which it is claimed were damages to the leasehold were included in the claim for damages which was allowed by the board of public works and paid to the respondent.

SHAW, C. J., and LAWLOR, SHURTLEFF, SLOANE, LENNON, WASTE, and WILBUR, JJ., concur.

---

59 Cal. App. 345

McLEAN v. MOOSER et al. (Civ. 4238.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 16, 1922. Rehearing Denied Nov. 14, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 14, 1922.)

1. Pledges ⟸6 — Pledgor must have title or right to pledge.

Where persons assuming to pledge property had no title to the property, nor authority from the owner to pledge or transfer it, there was no legal pledge.

2. Appeal and error ⟸1036(6)—Where pledgors admitted legal title to pledged property in another, allowing such other to intervene to establish title, held not prejudicial.

In action on note, where defendants set up a pledge of jewels and claimed right to have them sold and the proceeds applied to the payment of the note, defendants were not prejudiced by overruling their demurrer to a complaint in intervention by the owner of the jewels setting up title thereto, where it appeared from the undisputed evidence and was admitted by defendants that intervener was the owner of the jewels.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Arthur T. McLean against Louis H. Mooser, Jr., and another, in which Florence B. Mooser intervened. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Philip S. Ehrlich, of San Francisco (Simeon E. Sheffey, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants.

John Guthrie Heywood, of San Francisco (Frederick L. Berry, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent and intervener.

LANGDON, P. J. This appeal is taken by the defendants from a judgment against them in an action upon a promissory note for $1,598, signed by them jointly, payable to Messrs. Dudley and McLean and by them assigned to plaintiff.

The complaint was the usual one to recover upon a promissory note. The answer alleged that at the time of the execution of said note it was secured by a pledge of certain jewels; that the original payees of the note sold said jewels for a sum in excess of the amount of the note, and have refused to account to defendants for the sale or to pay over the surplus to defendants; that no notice was given by the pledgees to the pledgor of the time and place of the sale of the pledged property, and that the said property was not sold in accordance with the provisions of the law of this state. As a separate defense, defendants alleged the pledge of said jewels, and that said jewels were being held by said Dudley and McLean, original payees of the note; that defendants have demanded the sale of said jewels and the application of the proceeds thereof to the payment of the note, but that said Dudley and McLean have refused to comply with said demand; also that defendants have demanded a return of said pledge upon the payment of the amount of the note, and have offered to pay the amount of the note with interest upon the return of said pledged property. Defendants pray that the court order the said Dudley and McLean to return said personal property or make a sale thereof in accordance with law and account for the proceeds thereof.

The trial court made an order permitting the filing of a complaint in intervention by Florence B. Mooser. This complaint alleged that intervener was the owner and entitled to the possession of the jewels in controversy; that Messrs. Dudley and McLean and Louis H. Mooser, Jr., and Louis H. Mooser,

Sr., on or about the 14th day of July, 1919, without intervener's consent and wrongfully, came into the possession of said personal property, and took said personal property from the possession of said intervener; that intervener had never allowed, permitted, or consented to or authorized any person whomsoever to assume the apparent ownership of said personal property for the purpose of making any transfer of any character whatever of said property; that intervener had demanded of Messrs. Dudley and McLean the return of said personal property, which had been refused, and, thereafter intervener had commenced an action in claim and delivery in the superior court in and for the county of Placer, state of California, against said Dudley and McLean, and had recovered possession of said personal property. A certified copy of said judgment in claim and delivery was attached to the complaint in intervention. It was then alleged:

"That intervener is informed and believes and therefore alleges that it is the intention of the defendants, Louis H. Mooser, Jr., and Louis H. Mooser, to wrongfully possess themselves of said personal property and unlawfully withhold and detain the same from the possession of intervener, to her damage in the sum of $1,600.

"Wherefore, intervener prays that the defendants, and each of them, take nothing by this action; that your intervener be adjudged to be the owner and entitled to the immediate possession of said personal property."

The trial court found the execution and delivery of the note; that it had not been paid; that it was not secured by the pledge of the jewelry mentioned in defendant's answer; that the intervener was, at all times mentioned in the complaint, ever since has been, and now is, the owner of said personal property; that Messrs. Dudley and McLean and said defendants, Louis H. Mooser, Jr., and Louis H. Mooser, on or about the 14th day of July, 1921, without intervener's consent and wrongfully, came into the possession of said property, and took said personal property from the possession of the intervener; that on the 12th day of July, 1921, said Dudley and McLean still unlawfully held and detained said property from the possession of the intervener, and claimed to hold the same as security for the payment of said promissory note; that intervener did not at any time allow, permit, consent to or authorize any person whomsoever to assume the apparent ownership of said personal property for the purpose of making any transfer or disposal of the same, and that said intervener did not deposit said property with said Dudley and McLean by way of security for the payment of said promissory note. The facts regarding the recovery of the possession of said property by said intervener are found in accordance with the allegations of the complaint in intervention. It is recited in the findings that up to the time of the filing of the complaint, the defendants Mooser had attempted to wrongfully possess themselves of said property and to withhold the same from intervener. Judgment was given against the defendants upon the promissory note, and the intervener was adjudged to be the owner and entitled to the possession of the jewelry.

[1] Appellant argues two matters upon appeal. The first is that the evidence shows that the property was pledged with Dudley and McLean as security for the payment of the note. Extracts from the testimony are called to our attention. They are entirely without significance so far as a reversal of this judgment is concerned. The most that can be said for the appellants is that an attempt was made by defendants and Messrs. Dudley and McLean to pledge these jewels as security for the payment of the promissory note of the defendants. But their action was void of legal effect, because they had neither title to said property nor control of the same for the purpose of pledge or transfer, nor for any other purpose. Appellants admit in their brief:

"It is true and conceded by the appellants that both appellants and respondent knew that the jewels belonged neither to appellant nor respondent. It is also conceded that with reference to the rightful owner of the property that no transaction could be had without her consent that would in any way bind her or affect her rights."

It is further stated by appellants in their brief:

"Now, it is contended by appellants, since both parties were dealing with the jewels knowing exactly what the facts were, it was within their power to make the payment of the note by appellants dependent upon the use of the jewels as collateral for the payment of the note or upon any other condition that they saw fit. The jewels belonged to Florence B. Mooser, it is conceded."

It being conceded that the jewels were the property of the intervener, and it being found that she never gave to any one authority to pledge or transfer the same, and that intervener did not at any time allow, permit, consent to, or authorize any person whomsoever to assume the apparent ownership of said personal property for the purpose of making any transfer or disposal of the same, it follows that no legal pledge was ever made of the jewels, and the trial court was correct in its finding upon this question.

There is no evidence or finding to the effect that the parties intended to make the obligation of the note contingent upon the acquiescence of Florence B. Mooser in the attempted pledge of her property. If such had been the case, the taking of the note would have been an entirely idle proceeding, as the money would have been repaid without resort to the note had the proceeds from the sale of the jewels been applied to the loan, and the note would have been unenforceable if the proceeds of the jewels had not been so applied.

[2] The other objection made by the appellant is that the complaint in intervention does not state a case for intervention, and that the demurrer to said complaint, filed by the defendants, should have been sustained. This is because the intervener had possession of the property which she claimed, and no judgment depriving her of the possession or title thereto could have been given in an action to which she was not a party. Reliance is placed upon the cases of Horn v. Volcano Water Co. et al., 13 Cal. 62, 73 Am. Dec. 569; Moran v. Bonynge, 157 Cal. 295, 107 Pac. 312; Elliott v. Superior Court, 168 Cal. 727, 145 Pac. 101; Raey v. Butler, 69 Cal. 572, and others. Conceding that the facts did not show a case entitling Florence B. Mooser to intervene in the action, we fail to see how the error in this matter was prejudicial to the defendants. The most that could be said is that by the adjudication that the intervener was the owner and entitled to the possession of the jewels the defendants are precluded from contending with her as to the ownership and right to possession of said property, and that intervener had no right to have that question settled in the present action. If defendants had any shadow of a claim to the jewels, there might be some merit to their contention, and they might be justified in desiring to litigate that question with Florence B. Mooser at some other time and under other circumstances. But in view of their admission that the jewels are the property of Florence B. Mooser, and the undisputed evidence in the record to this effect, there is no cause to reverse the present judgment because it contains a provision establishing this fact judicially against said defendants.

We find no prejudicial error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 361

MEYERCORD CO., Inc., v. CLARK WISE & CO. et al. (Civ. 4256.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 17, 1922.)

Sales ⊂⊃52(7)—Evidence held to sustain finding that price charged was not in excess of the market value.

In seller's action for price of decalcomania transfers, defended on the ground that seller procured the order by false representations that the price agreed upon was the reasonable and market value, evidence that about 75 per cent. of decalcomanias used in the United States were supplied to the trade by the plaintiff, that its schedule of prices practically established the market value thereof, and that the price charged defendants was the same as that charged others, held to sustain finding that price charged defendants was not exorbitant and excessive and was not in excess of the market value.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by the Meyercord Company, Inc., against Clark Wise & Co. and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Samuel T. Bush, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Ernest K. Little, of San Francisco, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. This action is one in assumpsit for goods sold and delivered in the agreed sum of $450, representing the value of some 7,200 decalcomania transfers.

Defendants by their answer denied any indebtedness in a greater sum than $165.05, and alleged that the contract was procured by fraudulent representations. Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff for the full amount prayed for, and defendants appeal.

It appears from the evidence that plaintiff corporation is a manufacturer of what is known as decalcomania transfers, which are designs or printed figures on specially prepared paper so manufactured as to be permanently affixed to furniture or wood.

Defendants are copartners engaged in the piano and musical instrument business, and use transfers indicating their firm name which they affix to the fallboards of pianos and talking machines. They were desirous of securing some of these articles in their business, and accordingly one of the officers of defendant company wrote to the plaintiff corporation that they were in the market for decalcomania transfers. The parties had transacted business together for a period of over 30 years. Upon receiving this communication plaintiff sent its representative to interview defendants. Samples were submitted, and, after a discussion concerning the price, an order was obtained from defendants for 2,500 each of two sizes of transfers at an agreed price of 6½ cents per transfer. The agreement was reduced to writing, and it provided that the order was not subject to countermand. About a month thereafter defendants advised plaintiff that there must have been some mistake concerning the price, as they had received quotations from other firms at a much lower figure than their agreement with plaintiff called for, and in this communication they requested plaintiff, in the event that there was no mistake, to cancel the order. In reply thereto plaintiff informed defendants that it had telegraphed to its representatives to get in touch with them and explain the difference in price to defendants' satisfaction. The representative called, but no adjustment was had between the parties. Shortly thereafter the entire order, including an overage of some 2,200 transfers, was received by defendants. A lengthy correspondence was thereafter entered into between the parties which resulted in plaintiff agreeing to allow a discount of 15 per cent. from the invoice as rendered. Defendants refused to pay any sum in excess of $168.05. Negotiations for a settlement were thereupon ended, and the present suit followed.

By their answer defendants alleged that at the time they gave their order the representative of plaintiff assured them that the price agreed upon for the goods was the reasonable and market value thereof, and they further alleged that they relied upon these representations and did not know otherwise, and that the statements were false and plaintiff knew that the price was exorbitant and excessive, and that it was a deliberate and willful overcharge. Plaintiff claims that the contract was fair and reasonable.

No question is here raised as to the overage. Plaintiff was willing to accept the return of the transfers not included in the order, and to accept the amount of the contract price for the number agreed upon. Defendants made no offer to return the excess quantity except upon condition that the entire contract be canceled.

It appears in evidence that about 75 per cent. of decalcomanias used in the United States are supplied to the trade by plaintiff, and that its schedule of prices practically establishes the market value of the articles. It further appears that the price agreed upon by the parties was the usual one, and that similar goods were not sold to others for a less price. The trial court found that at the time defendants gave the order for the transfers plaintiff did not state to them that the price quoted was the reasonable and market value, and that defendants did not rely upon any such assurance. It further found that the price agreed upon was not exorbitant or excessive, and that the market value of the goods was not less than the price charged. The evidence fully sustains the findings. There is therefore no merit in the defense that plaintiff procured the contract through fraudulent representations.

Appellants further claim that the evidence shows without contradiction that the representative of plaintiff made use of his printed list of prices in an improper manner in reaching the amount charged. In this behalf it is contended that the contract price was figured on a basis of running the smaller and larger decalcomanias together on a single plate, and that under such method of combination an order for 2,500 of each of the transfers would have justified a charge of but one-half of the amount made. Evidence upon the subject shows that it was not the custom to accept orders in this manner, and that the quotation was made on the usual basis and was not exorbitant. This being so, it follows that the judgment should be, and it is, hereby affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; ST. SURE, Judge pro tem.

---

59 Cal. App. 341

NEEDHAM v. SISTERS OF MERCY.
(Civ. 4096.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2. California. Oct. 16, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 15, 1922.)

Contracts ⟸289, 346(8)—Arbitrary refusal of architect's certificate renders it unnecessary; allegation of due performance of all conditions permits contractor to show arbitrary refusal of certificate.

An unreasonable, arbitrary, or capricious refusal of the architect to give the certificate required by the contract excuses the contractor from producing such a certificate as a condition precedent to the recovery of the payment due, and the allegation of due performance of all conditions on the part of the contractor is a sufficient allegation to put this matter in issue and to permit the contractor to offer evidence showing the reason the certificate had not been produced.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by Arthur E. Needham against the Sisters of Mercy, a corporation. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Garret W. McEnerney, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued as assignee of Owen McHugh upon two counts, one to recover the amount remaining due for work completed under an express written contract and under a subsequent oral contract, and another upon a quantum meruit for the work done. The trial court found in accordance with the evidence that the work was performed in compliance with the terms of the contracts and that the sum of $6,088.50 agreed to be paid under the contracts had not been paid. Judgment in that sum and interest from November 11, 1908, was awarded to the plaintiff.

---

⟸For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

While not conceding the correctness of the finding of the trial court as to the amount due under the contracts (though as to this it must be said there is no room for doubt), the defendant set up four defenses to payment: (1) That a certificate was not obtained from the architect showing that the contractor was entitled to the money sued for and that such a certificate was required by the written contract; (2) that Owen McHugh by express agreement made with the defendant through its architect and its president agreed to accept the sum of $7,000 as a full and final payment in respect to the matters then pending between them, and that in compliance with said agreement the defendant paid Owen McHugh the sum of $7,000 as a full and final payment; (3) that an accord and satisfaction arose when Owen McHugh cashed two checks aggregating $7,000 knowing that the payment thereof was made to him "as per" the architect's certificate, which described such payment as a "full and final payment"; (4) that an account was stated between Owen McHugh and defendant when he cashed said checks and appropriated the proceeds in the manner above stated.

The trial court found against all these defenses. As to the first, it found that neither the plaintiff nor his assignor had obtained an architect's certificate for the amount in suit, but that their failure to do so was excused by the arbitrary refusal of the architect to issue such a certificate. This finding was within the issue framed by the pleadings and was supported by an abundance of evidence. As to the second defense, the trial court found that no express agreement had been made to accept the sum of $7,000 as a full and final payment, and though there is some conflict in the testimony of the witnesses called upon this issue, there is very substantial and persuasive testimony in support of the finding. It need scarcely be said that the trial court was required to pass upon the credibility of the witnesses who appeared before it and that this finding cannot be disturbed on appeal.

In respect to the third and fourth defenses, the trial court found that it was not true that Owen McHugh agreed to receive the sum of $7,000 as a full or final payment, or that he agreed to or did release defendant from all or any claims against it arising out of the contract, but that, on the contrary, he received the $7,000 on account only of a balance then due him for said work. It also found that there was no accord or compromise of any claims between the parties at the time of the payment of the $7,000 or that said payment was made upon any condition that it should be a full or final payment for all work done by McHugh for the defendant.

On this appeal several attacks are made upon the findings of the trial court, namely, the conditions and circumstances of the $7,000 payment, in relation to the defenses of accord and satisfaction, and of an account stated between the contractor and the defendant. But in each and every case ample evidence appears in the record to support the finding of the trial court. The same may be said as to the authority of Father Mulligan to act as agent for the defendant in the premises.

The only point of law involved in the appeal is the right of the plaintiff to recover the amount due under the written contract, notwithstanding the failure of the architect to issue a certificate showing that amount to be due. In this connection it is necessary to refer to some of the facts of the case. The written contract was executed on November 21, 1907. Work was commenced soon thereafter, and on February 1, 1908, March 7, 1908, and April 17, 1908, the architect issued to McHugh three certificates showing, respectively, that there was due to him on account of the work done by him $2,500, $3,500, and $4,000. The defendant had paid McHugh in accordance with these certificates the total sum of $10,000 up to April 21, 1908. All work under the contract was finished by August 12, 1908. Though it was apparent, as afterwards found by the trial court, that the sum of $13,088.50 was due McHugh at the time of the completion of the work, nothing was paid to him on account thereof from August 12, 1908, until November 12th of the same year. During all this period repeated requests had been made by McHugh and his representatives upon the architect that he issue the certificate, and upon defendant for payment of the amounts due. All these requests and demands upon the architect were rejected in an arbitrary and unreasonable manner. Unreasonable and unjustifiable demands were made by the architect upon McHugh, and the failure to comply therewith was used as an excuse for the nondelivery of the certificate. The defendant refused payment solely upon the ground that the architect had not issued his certificate. In Wyman v. Hooker, 2 Cal. App. 36, 40, 83 Pac. 79, 81, the court in a similar case said:

"It is not to be presumed that the parties intended that money rightfully belonging to the contractor should be forfeited upon the arbitrary will or caprice of the architect in withholding the final certificate. Antonelle v. Lumber Co., 140 Cal. 315, 73 Pac. 966. Nor was it necessary that any excuse for not obtaining this final certificate should be set out in the complaint. It was sufficient in that behalf to allege the performance of the contract on the part of the contractor, and thereafter to prove such performance."

The rule is that an unreasonable, arbitrary, or capricious refusal of the architect to give the certificate required by the contract excuses the contractor from producing such a certificate as a condition precedent to the recovery of the payment due, and the allegation of due performance of all conditions on the part of the contractor is a sufficient allegation to put this matter in issue and to permit the contractor to offer evidence showing the reason the certificate had not been produced. The better practice, of course, is to allege the excuse for the failure to present the certificate, as in other cases of nonperformance. But the neglect to do so is not a sufficient ground for reversal when the trial of the issue has been had and a good and sufficient excuse has been proved.

Other questions raised in the briefs do not require consideration.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

59 Cal. App. 334

MILLER v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 3949.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2. California. Oct. 14, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 11, 1922.)

Executors and administrators ⇐122(2)—Special administrator entitled to sue in claim and delivery for safe and contents belonging to decedent.

Under the direct provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1415, and in view of section 1582, authorizing executors and administrators to sue and be sued for recovery of property, it is one of the duties of a special administrator to recover and take charge of the property of an estate which he represents, and he has full authority to maintain any action necessary to the performance of this duty, including an action of ordinary claim and delivery to recover a safe and its contents, belonging to decedent, in the possession of defendants.

Application by Jared H. Miller for a writ of prohibition, prayed to be directed to the Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County and others, to prevent the trial of a certain action. Writ denied.

See, also, 210 Pac. 832, 835.

McDonald & Thompson and Kimball Fletcher, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Anderson & Anderson, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. The petitioner asks for a writ of prohibition to enjoin the respondent superior court from proceeding further in an action by which Frank M. Kelsey, as special administrator of the estate of Mary Moore Miller, deceased, brought suit to recover a safe and its contents from Jared H. Miller and Cecil A. Miller. The action sought to be enjoined is an ordinary claim and delivery suit. The complaint therein alleges that the safe and its contents were the property of Mary Moore Miller during her lifetime, and were then in the possession of petitioner herein, and that since her death he has continued to hold the same from the plaintiff in that action.

It is one of the duties of the special administrator to recover and take charge of the property of an estate which he represents, and he has full authority to maintain any action necessary to the performance of this duty. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1415, 1582; In re Welch, 106 Cal. 427, 39 Pac. 805.

The petition for the writ is denied.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; WORKS, J.

59 Cal. App. 340

MILLER v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 3950.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2. California. Oct. 14, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 11, 1922.)

1. Prohibition ⇐28—Allegations in complaint in action sought to be enjoined must be assumed to be true.

On an application for a writ of prohibition to enjoin the superior court from further action in a suit at law, brought by a special administrator to secure possession and title of property of the estate, the allegations of the complaint in the action by the administrator must be assumed to be true.

2. Executors and administrators ⇐122(2) — Special administrator may sue former executor of estate for misappropriation of funds in his personal capacity.

Where a special administrator brought suit to secure possession and title of property of the estate, alleged to have been misappropriated by defendant in his personal capacity as the agent of decedent, the fact that defendant for a time acted as executor of the estate did not affect plaintiff's right to sue.

3. Executors and administrators ⇐122(2)—Special administrator may bring any action necessary to recover property of estate.

A special administrator, equally with an executor, has full authority to bring any action necessary to recover property of the estate which he represents.

4. Pleading ⇐49—Prayer for relief in part inappropriate held not to affect jurisdiction to award relief to which complaint showed plaintiff entitled.

Where a special administrator brought suit against one who had formerly been executor of the estate to recover money embezzled in his personal capacity, and in effect demanded an accounting as of an agent to his principal, that the prayer of the complaint asked that defendant be required to account "in the matter of the estate" of the deceased, which prayer was inappropriate, held not to affect the superior court's jurisdiction to direct the accounting to which complaint shows plaintiff to be entitled.

5. Pleading ⊜49 — Averments of complaint, and not prayer, determine jurisdiction.

The prayer for relief in a complaint is not determinative of the question of jurisdiction, since it is the averments of the complaint, and not the prayer, that decide such question.

6. Judgment ⊜252(5)—Accounting by agent held properly granted under prayer for general relief.

Where a complaint by a special administrator to recover money misappropriated by defendant in his personal capacity erroneously prayed for an accounting "in the matter of the estate of deceased," but also prayed general relief, an accounting as by an agent to his principal might be granted under the clause for general relief, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 580, authorizing relief consistent with the case made by the complaint embraced within the issues.

Application by Jared H. Miller for a writ of prohibition, prayed to be directed to the Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County, and others, to prevent further proceedings in a certain action. Writ denied.

See, also, 210 Pac. 832, 835.

McDonald & Thompson and Kimball Fletcher, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Anderson & Anderson, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. By this proceeding petitioner asks that the superior court, named as respondent, be enjoined from further action in a suit at law in which Frank M. Kelsey, special administrator of the estate of Mary Moore Miller, is plaintiff, and George H. Miller, Jared H. Miller, and Cecil A. Sheward Miller are defendants. The instant proceeding will be referred to as the "proceeding," and the action sought to be enjoined as the "action."

It is the theory of petitioner that the superior court has no jurisdiction to try the action. Many authorities are cited by both sides concerning certain legal phases of the case as presented for our consideration. However, the controversy centers upon a determination of the nature of the action. Petitioner insists that it is a suit for an accounting against an executor; respondent avers that it is an ordinary action by an administrator to secure the possession and title of the property of the estate which he represents. If the action is determined to be as contended by respondent, clearly the injunction prayed for should not issue. We think that respondent's contention is sound.

[1] Mary Moore Miller and Mary E. Moore were one and the same person. So much of the complaint in the action as bears upon the issue will be quoted. For the purpose of this proceeding the allegations of the complaint in the action must be assumed to be true. After first alleging that Jared H. Miller and Mary Moore Miller entered into a purported marriage, which was in fact illegal, and that thereafter until the death of the ostensible wife these parties lived together, holding themselves out as husband and wife, and that prior to said marriage Mary E. Moore owned large sums of money and property, the complaint goes on to state:

"That after the said purported marriage of the said Jared H. Miller and the said Mary E. Moore, and at the instance of herself and the said Jared H. Miller, and as this plaintiff is informed and believes and upon his information and belief alleges at the instigation of the said Jared H. Miller, a large portion of this property aggregating about the sum of $200,000 was transmitted to the said Mary E. Moore, then known as Mary Miller Moore, at Los Angeles, Cal., from time to time between the period of said purported marriage, to wit, October 13, 1915, and the date of the death of the said Mary E. Moore, to wit, the 17th day of February, 1921, and that some at least of these moneys were directly turned over to the said Jared H. Miller as agent for and trustee of the said Mary E. Moore, and were transmitted by him out of the state of California, and, without the knowledge or consent of the said Mary E. Moore, were wrongfully appropriated by him to his own use and benefit, and are now being wrongfully retained by him for his own use and benefit in at least the sum of $15,000, and in further sums, the exact amount or amounts of which are unknown to plaintiff, and that plaintiff is informed and believes, and upon such information and belief alleges, that all of said moneys so transmitted to the said Mary E. Moore, and aggregating about the sum of $200,000 were turned over by her to the said Jared H. Miller, or were received and retained by said Jared H. Miller, as her agent and trustee, to be held and handled by him as her moneys and for her benefit, but that he has wrongfully and fraudulently misappropriated and retained the same to his own use and benefit." (Italics ours.)

Then follows an allegation that Mary E. Moore turned over to Jared H. Miller the sum of $11,500. Following this is paragraph 13 of the complaint, in which it is set forth that all of the money placed in the hands of Jared H. Miller by Mary E. Moore to be handled by him as her agent, consisting of the sum of approximately $200,000 in one item and approximately $11,500 in another, "have been embezzled, misappropriated and retained by the said Jared H. Miller for his personal use and benefit," and also that Jared H. Miller has not returned said property as a part of the estate of Mary E. Moore, and has no intention of doing so.

[2] From this and other similar language it cannot be doubted that the complaint plainly alleges the receipt by Jared H. Miller of the property in question in his personal capacity. By no possible construction can it be said that he came into possession of this property as the executor of the estate of Mary Moore Miller, for the complaint states that he received the same during her lifetime and "as her agent," and "to be handled by him for her use and benefit."

Holding the property as he did as the agent of Mary Moore Miller, and refusing to account for it to her estate, his possession is no different from that of any other individual who might have in his possession property belonging to the estate of a deceased person. The mere fact that for a time he was acting as executor of the estate, as well as having been the agent of the deceased, does not alter the situation in any degree.

[3] It cannot be questioned that the special administrator, equally with an executor, has full authority to bring any action necessary to recover the property of the estate which he represents.

It is true that the complaint, in addition to the essential allegations above discussed, goes on to recite other facts, among them the death of Mary E. Moore, the appointment of Jared H. Miller as one of the executors of her last will and testament, and certain other matters of an evidentiary nature to show that Jared H. Miller possessed but little property, and that whatever he had belonged to the estate of Mary Moore Miller, and that Jared H. Miller as executor never filed an inventory or made an accounting for the property to the estate of Mary Moore Miller.

The prayer of the complaint is that "Jared H. Miller be required to forthwith account to the court in the matter of said estate of said Mary Moore Miller, deceased, for all of said moneys and properties of said estate hereinabove referred to and now in his possession or under his control and belonging to said estate of said Mary Moore Miller deceased," and for an injunction restraining him, and also his wife, Cecil A. Sheward Miller, from dealing with said money or property or transporting it outside of the state.

[4] It may be that some of the allegations in the complaint are unnecessary and evidentiary only. If this is true, it does not change the nature of the action or deprive the court of jurisdiction over its subject-matter. The petitioner lays great stress upon the fact that the prayer asks for an accounting in the estate of Mary Moore Miller, deceased, and insists that this is proof that the action is intended as one to require Jared H. Miller to render an accounting as executor of said estate. There is no foundation for this claim. Neither in the prayer nor elsewhere in the complaint is there any suggestion or demand that Jared H. Miller account in his capacity as executor. Throughout the complaint there is contained the assertion that Jared H. Miller, during the lifetime of Mary Moore Miller, his purported wife, received from her large sums of money as her agent, and that he embezzled the same, and now refuses to account to the special administrator of her estate for it. The accounting demanded is clearly asked for in his personal capacity, and in the ordinary one of an agent to his principal. It may be added that from the very nature of the situation the special administrator could not well sue Jared H. Miller for a definite sum as having been converted by him, but must first depend upon an accounting to establish the amount to which he as administrator has the right to claim possession.

[5] It is true that the prayer of the complaint asks that Jared H. Miller be required to account "in the matter of the estate of said Mary Moore Miller, deceased," etc. The complaint, having stated a good cause of action, concludes with a prayer for relief, which is in part inappropriate. Plaintiff in the action is entitled to demand an accounting, not in the probate proceeding, but in the action whose further proceeding is here sought to be enjoined. But this defect in the prayer does not affect the superior court's jurisdiction to direct the accounting to which the complaint shows plaintiff to be entitled. Of course, the prayer cannot be the subject of demurrer. Bailey v. Dale, 71 Cal. 34, 11 Pac. 804; Althof v. Conheim, 38 Cal. 230, 99 Am. Dec. 363. It is not determinative of the question of jurisdiction. Lehnhardt v. Jennings 119 Cal. 199, 48 Pac. 56, 51 Pac. 195. The entire lack of a prayer does not deprive the court of jurisdiction if the facts stated constitute a cause of action against the defendant, or, even though defective in that regard, if susceptible of amendment so as to be made to state such a cause of action. Kohler v. Agassiz, 99 Cal. 9, 33 Pac. 741; Hale Bros. v. Milliken, 142 Cal. 137, 75 Pac. 653. The prayer may be amended. The averments of the complaint, not the prayer, decide the question of jurisdiction. Hoffman v. Pacific Coast Const. Co., 37 Cal. App. 130, 173 Pac. 776.

[6] But in the instant case the prayer concludes by asking for general relief. It was stated in the early case of Rollins v. Forbes, 10 Cal. 299, that—"If the specific relief asked cannot be granted, such relief as the case stated in the bill authorizes may be had under the clause in the prayer for general relief."

This decision was based upon a construction of section 147 of the Practice Act, which is the same as section 580 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The petition for a writ of prohibition is denied.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; WORKS, J.

(59 Cal. App. 392)

MILLER et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 3948.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2. California. Oct. 21, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 18, 1922.)

Executors and administrators ⟸122(2)—Special administrator may sue to recover money of estate procured by conspiracy with executor.

Where third persons have conspired with the executor of an estate to defraud it of money, a special administrator may sue to recover the money so obtained.

Application by Jared H. Miller and another for a writ of prohibition, prayed to be directed to the Superior Court of California in and for Los Angeles County, and others, to prevent respondent from proceeding with the trial of a certain action. Writ denied.

See, also, 210 Pac. 832.

A. P. Thomson and Kimball Fletcher, both of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Anderson & Anderson, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. An action was begun in the superior court for a personal judgment against Jared H. Miller and Cecil A. Miller. The suit is based upon the claim that one George Miller presented a claim against the estate of Mary Moore Miller, deceased; that at that time Jared H. Miller was the executor of this estate, and as such approved and allowed claim, which was also allowed and approved by the judge of the probate court. It is further alleged that all of those mentioned except the judge conspired and acted together to defraud the estate of Mary Moore Miller, deceased. In this proceeding we are asked to enjoin the superior court from proceeding with that action.

The complaint contains no allegation that the executor has rendered an account. It may be that if a contest were properly interposed when Jared H. Miller's account as executor is presented for settlement, the probate court might vacate its order approving and allowing the claim, and charge the executor with the amount of it and with interest. However, under these circumstances, there is nothing in the case of Weihe et al. v. Statham et al., 67 Cal. 84, 7 Pac. 143, cited by petitioner, which declares that this is the sole remedy provided by law, especially as against joint tort-feasors, some of whom are not directly amenable to the orders of the probate court in the proceeding before it. Regardless of the right of the special administrator to sue Jared H. Miller, this action can be maintained as against Cecil A. Sheward Miller and George A. Miller. If the last-named parties have any money belonging to the estate of Mary Moore Miller, the legal representative thereof may unquestionably bring an action to recover it. Jared H. Miller himself, while executor, could have maintained such an action. The allegation of the complaint in the action sought to be enjoined, that the three defendants carried out a conspiracy to defraud the estate, and in that way have secured the money whose repayment is demanded, gives the court jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action.

The writ is denied.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; WORKS, J.

(59 Cal. App. 350)

JONES et al. v. STURZENBERG. (Civ. 2519.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 16, 1922.)

1. Taxation ⟸725 — Redemption from state includes prior delinquencies and redemption valid though auditor overlooked some such delinquencies.

Under Pol. Code, § 3817, redemption of land sold to state for delinquent taxes upon certificates and estimates furnished by the auditor in any year necessarily includes all prior delinquencies, and a redemption was valid where owner was misled, though auditor overlooked prior delinquencies in making his certificate and estimate, in view of sections 3678, 3680, 3727–3739, 3801.

2. Taxation ⟸788(1)—Conclusiveness of tax deed under statute.

The legislative intent in the enactment of Pol. Code, § 3787, was that a tax deed should be conclusive with respect only to matters not covered by section 3786, declaring its effect as prima facie evidence.

3. Taxation ⟸795—Repayment of taxes, penalties, and costs to tax purchaser condition to cancellation of tax deed.

Where the owner comes into equity asking equitable relief to remove or cancel a tax deed sale as a cloud upon his title, or to obtain a judgment which in effect will invalidate such sale or deed, the courts should refuse any relief except upon the condition that he first repay the taxes, penalties, interest, and costs justly chargeable upon the land, and which the purchaser had paid at the sale, or afterward upon the faith of it, with legal interest from the time of such payment, less rents received, if any, if the purchaser has been in possession.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; Eugene P. McDaniel, Judge.

Action by D. N. Jones and another against John Y. Sturzenberg. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, for appellants.

W. E. Davies, of Marysville (Russell W. Cantrell, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The land in controversy was assessed in 1913 to A. M. and E. L. Miller, and, the taxes thereon becoming delinquent, the land was duly sold to the state in 1914 for the sum of $50.21. In 1914 the land was assessed to E. L. Walker and Wm. T. Parker, and, on their failure to pay the taxes for that year, the land was again sold to the state in 1915, contrary to the express provisions of section 3814 of the Political Code. All subsequent taxes were allowed to become delinquent up to the year 1918, when the then owner applied to the county auditor for an estimate of the sum necessary to redeem. The auditor made the required estimate based on the purported sale to the state in 1915, inadvertently overlooking the sale to the state in 1914, and the owner paid the amount so estimated. The pleadings admit that the land is of the value of $5,000. The defendant Sturzenberg alleges in his cross-complaint that the land is worth $10,000, and there is ample evidence to support the allegation. It is further admitted by the pleadings that the consideration for the deed from Williams to Eich, hereinafter referred to, was less than $500, and that for the conveyance from Eich to plaintiffs less than $1,000. The other facts necessary to an understanding of the controversy are stated in the opinion of the trial court, which, in so far as applicable to the issues presented by the appeal, is adopted as the opinion of this court, and is as follows:

"In this suit to quiet title, the issue as to present ownership is only between D. N. and Elba L. Jones, plaintiffs and cross-defendants, upon the one side, and John Y. Sturzenberg, defendant and cross-complainant, upon the other. The former hereinafter, for convenience, will be referred to as the plaintiffs, and the latter as the defendant. All other parties, plaintiffs, defendants, cross-complainants, or cross-defendants, will be referred to by name.

"The opposing claims arise from the following facts alleged in the pleadings and shown by the record evidence: The title claimed by the respective parties traces to a common source, viz. to the parents of Frank McCarn.

"In the years 1913, 1914, 1915, 1916, and 1917, the state and county taxes on said property were unpaid and delinquent. By operation of law, the land was sold to the state for the first delinquency, but regularly assessed each year thereafter. On the 29th of July, 1918, Frank McCarn, before the property had been sold by the state, and as the person whose estate might be sold, and being the party in interest then having the right to redeem by paying to the county treasurer of Yuba county, in which county the real estate is situated, the amount of taxes, penalties, and costs due thereon at the time of the sale, with interest, together with the sums due upon subsequent assessments, and desiring to redeem said land, made application to F. H. Greely, county auditor, for an estimate of the amount to be paid in order to obtain such redemption, thus obeying the direction as to the proper procedure in such matters under section 3817, Pol. Code.

"Said auditor made out and delivered to McCarn, as directed by said section, the estimate and certificates in triplicate, purporting to specify the several and total amounts payable. The amount of money so specified was $264.50, which was paid by McCarn to Harvey D. Eich, county treasurer, who thereupon issued his receipts to McCarn, the redemptioner, who in turn delivered them as directed by statute to the auditor and state controller, obtaining from the auditor the proper receipt.

"By some inadvertence the auditor failed to include in said estimate the amount due for the delinquent taxes of 1913. McCarn believed the said $264.50, when paid, was in full payment of the sum required to redeem from all delinquencies. On October 19, 1918, McCarn conveyed said land to defendant by deed recorded November 22, 1918. This deed is the basis of defendant's claim of title. On July 8, 1919, Harvey D. Eich, as tax collector of Yuba county, purporting to act as directed by section 3771, Pol. Code, sold or attempted to sell said land for the state to one P. J. Williams, who was the highest bidder, for $167.03, the amount of taxes, costs, and penalties levied and assessed against said property for delinquent taxes of 1913, and executed a deed to said Williams on July 9, 1919, which on the same day was duly recorded. Thereafter, on February 16, 1920, said Williams deeded said property to said Harvey D. Eich, as an individual, which was recorded on February 28, 1920. Later, on April 14, 1920, said Eich executed a deed of said property to plaintiffs, which deed is duly recorded, and is the basis of plaintiffs' claim to title. * * *

"The case for plaintiffs depends upon the fact that the taxes of 1913 became delinquent and were actually unpaid at the time of the tax sale in 1919, coupled with the claim that all precedent formalities as to such a tax had been observed.

"According to the masterly and logical argument of plaintiffs' counsel, the foregoing matters last mentioned, throwing their light upon the recitals in the tax deed, establish the conclusive character of said tax deed from which plaintiffs' title is derived. That argument would control the court's view, were it not for the fact that it seems to rest upon the erroneous hypothesis that at the time of the tax sale there had been no prior redemption under section 3817 of the Political Code. Plaintiffs' counsel evidently recognized that weakness and flaw in his position, when, in his closing brief, he said: 'While it is not necessary, we desire to take a fling at section 3817 of the Political Code. Under that section counsel make the remarkable claim that a landowner may go to the county auditor and say to him in effect: "I and 10 or 12 of my predecessors in interest during the past 15 years have owned lot 5 in block 6 of range letter E, in the city of Marysville. I want you to find out if that lot has been sold for delinquent taxes during that period, and give me an estimate of the amount necessary to redeem." We say this is absurd. It is the duty of the landowner, and in this case Mr. McCarn held a mortgage upon this property in 1913 when the assessment was levied, to watch his property and pay his taxes, but, if he does not pay them, to go to the auditor and specify the year of the sale and ask for an estimate, and not try to make the county auditor a searcher of records, and that is what the section means. "The county auditor shall, on application of the person desiring to redeem, make an estimate on the amount to be paid," etc. The application to redeem from what? Undoubtedly to redeem from a certain definite sale.'

"The above reasoning ignores the first sentence of section 3817, which, in part, is as follows: 'In all cases where real estate has been sold, or may hereafter be sold, for delinquent taxes to the state, and the state has not disposed of the same, the person whose estate has been or may hereafter be sold, his heirs, executors, administrators, or other successors in interest, shall, at any time after the same has been sold to the state, and before the state shall have disposed of the same, have the right to redeem such real estate by paying to the county treasurer of the county wherein the real estate may be situated the amount of taxes, penalties, and costs due thereon at the time of said sale, with interest on the aggregate amount of said taxes at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum; and also all taxes that were a lien upon said real estate at the time said taxes became delinquent; and also all unpaid taxes of every description assessed against the property for each year since the sale,' * * * etc.

"The rest of the section need not be quoted. There was only one sale to the state. And a fair interpretation of the section fairly discloses that, when any taxes have become delinquent upon property, and by operation of law the property is deemed sold to the state, a taxpayer may apply to the auditor for the certificates and estimates of the total amount necessary fully to redeem the property from all outstanding delinquencies. The certificates in evidence, Cross-Complainant's Exhibits 1, 2, and 3, recite as follows: 'I, F. H. Greely, county auditor in and for said county and state aforesaid, do hereby certify that the foregoing statement contains a full and correct estimate of the amount necessary to redeem the within described real estate, made in accordance with the provisions of section 3817, Political Code, as amended March 20, 1905.'

"Upon payment of the money specified in the certificates and the giving of the receipts by the officers to the taxpayer, any deed or certificate of sale that may have been made to the state shall become null and void, and all right, title, and interest acquired by the state under the tax sale shall cease and determine.

[1] "If this section is to be given any effect, it means that the redemption upon such certificates and estimate in any year necessarily includes all prior delinquencies. It must be given such effect if it be the auditor's duty to make the estimate and to give the certificates. That duty clearly is imposed upon the auditor. San Diego Investment Co. v. Shaffer, 137 Cal. 323, 70 Pac. 179; Boyer v. Gelhaus, 19 Cal. App. 320, 125 Pac. 916.

"The auditor must keep informed concerning the status of taxes and delinquencies upon every parcel of land on the assessment book. Section 3678, Pol. Code, says in part: 'The recorder must, at the time he furnishes the abstract of mortgages to the assessor, furnish said officer with a complete and true statement of all property which has been redeemed under or by virtue of any sale made to the state for delinquent taxes, together with a complete and true statement of all property sold to the state and remaining unredeemed.'

"In Yuba county the offices of auditor and recorder are both held by the same person. Section 3680, Pol. Code, provides as follows: 'Whenever property has been sold for taxes and remains unredeemed, upon each subsequent assessment the assessor shall enter upon the assessment book, immediately after the description of the property, the fact that said property has been sold for taxes and the date of the sale. Upon all bills or estimates of or for taxes accruing on said property subsequent to the date of said sale, and prior to the redemption of said property or the execution to the state of a deed therefor, shall be distinctly and legibly written, printed, or stamped the words 'Sold for taxes,' and also the date of such sale.

"Sections 3727 to 3739, Pol. Code, prescribe minutely the auditor's duties in relation to revenue.

"Under section 3801, Pol. Code, after land has been sold for delinquent taxes, the tax collector must furnish to the auditor a complete printed list of all such lands sold, and 'thereupon the auditor shall enter upon the assessment book of the current year, immediately after the description of the property, the fact that said property has been sold for taxes and the date of such sale.'

"With the mandate of this section obeyed, it is apparent that the auditor has at all times under his eye the information he is required to furnish a taxpayer who applies to him for the estimate and certificates for the redemption of property under section 3817, Pol. Code. To the extent that the auditor must examine such assessment book and obtain from it the data upon which to base a correct estimate, the law makes him 'a searcher of records.'

"All the foregoing citations show that the auditor's records at all times contain, or presumably contain, all the information required which he should give to an applying redemptioner.

"In the recent case of Skidmore & Kramer v. George C. West, as treasurer, etc., 59 Cal. Dec. 494, it is held that:[1] 'It is the duty of the proper county officers under the provisions of the Political Code relating to the assessment and collection of taxes, before and after delinquency, when required by the board of supervisors, to furnish all the data necessary to show the amount of unpaid taxes, penalties, etc., upon land deeded to the state, and the amount of land so deeded, together with such other information ascertainable from their respective books and records as the supervisors deem necessary for their enlightment in exercising their authority in the premises.' The matter just quoted is from the syllabus.

"If, at the command of the supervisors, every county officer may be compelled to furnish data and information, why should a section like 3817, Pol. Code, which declares it to be the duty of the auditor to give a taxpayer similar information, be held invalid. The case of San Diego Investment Co. v. Shaffer, supra, supports this view, and does not compel the taxpayer to specify a particular delinquent tax sale. When Frank McCarn, in the case at bar, received from the auditor and treasurer the estimate, certificates, and receipts, and paid to the treasurer the amount found by the auditor to be the correct amount required for redemption, the property in equity became redeemed from all prior delinquent sales to the state, because in the transaction the auditor was the authorized agent of the state. It follows that, while the deed of Eich to Williams is prima facie evidence under section 3786, Pol. Code, that '6. The property was not redeemed,' that prima facie evidence was completely overthrown by the evidence in the case showing compliance on the part of McCarn with the mandate of section 3817, Pol. Code. McCarn had a right to rely on the estimate. He was ready, willing, and able to pay all delinquencies. Having been misled by the erroneous estimate given him by the authorized agent of the state, he is entitled in equity to receive the full benefit of his attempted redemption.

[1] New opinion substituted on rehearing, see 198 Pac. 497.

"The argument as to the conclusive character of the tax deed herein under section 3787, Pol. Code, does not apply herein, nor to any case where there has been a redemption under section 3817, Pol. Code. Careful consideration in this regard has been given to the case relied upon by counsel, viz. Bank of Lemoore v. Fulgham, 151 Cal. 234, 90 Pac. 936, but the equitable principle underlying the suit at bar, and more explicitly stated in cases hereinafter cited, was not involved in the Bank of Lemoore Case. That case simply held that the failure upon the part of officers to comply with certain statutory formalities, such as stamping upon receipts, etc., the words 'Sold to the state,' would not overthrow a tax deed, certain recitals in which are made conclusive evidence of performance of some formalities by section 3787, Pol. Code.

[2] "The legislative intent in the enactment of section 3787 was that the deed should be conclusive with respect only to matters not covered by section 3786 of the Political Code, declaring its effect as prima facie evidence. McDonough v. Cooper, 179 Cal. 384, 177 Pac. 153; H. S. Dist. v. Escondido Seminary, 130 Cal. 128, 62 Pac. 401; Bruschi v. Cooper, 30 Cal. App. 682, 692, 159 Pac. 728, 734; State of California, by John S. Chambers, v. Royal Con. M. Co., 31 Cal. App. Dec. 132.[2]

"The principle controlling the suit at bar has been well stated in the Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, vol. 27, p. 755, as follows: 'If the owner of land, or a party having an interest therein, in good faith applies to the proper officer for the purpose of paying the taxes thereon, and payment is prevented by the mistake or fault of such officer, as, for example, where a tax is omitted from the list made out by the officer, the attempt to pay is considered in most jurisdictions, as the legal equivalent of payment in so far as to discharge the lien and bar a sale for nonpayment.' The text is supported by numerous decisions.

"Again, in 37 Cyc. p. 1160, the rule is thus stated: 'Where a property owner in good faith applies to the proper officer to pay his taxes, and is furnished with a statement, certificate, or information as to the amount of taxes due, on which he relies, but which is incomplete or erroneous by reason of the mistake or fraud of the officer, and he pays all that is demanded of him, this will be equivalent to full payment, so far as to invalidate any subsequent sale of the property for the omitted taxes.' This text also is supported by numerous decisions.

"Even in the absence of such a statute as section 3817, Pol. Code, the equitable principle should furnish ample protection to the taxpayer who has been misled by the mistake of an officer charged with the duty of keeping the books and giving to the taxpayer information of their contents concerning his taxes.

"The courts' decisions in other states frequently rest upon statutory foundations similar to section 3817, Pol. Code. In commenting upon such decisions, the Supreme Court of Wisconsin said: 'These decisions are founded on the ground that the treasurer is the legal custodian of the books, and possesses full and authentic information, and it is his official duty to furnish it; that the landowner cannot get the necessary information in any other way, and is not bound to search the books for himself, and that landowners almost always do, and rightfully may, depend on information thus received; and that the party cannot be involved in loss of his land by the mistake of the officer.' Gould v. Sullivan, 84 Wis. 659, 666, 54 N. W. 1013, 1015, 20 L. R. A. 487, 492 (36 Am. St. Rep. 955).

"Such reasons strongly apply here. The defendant and his immediate predecessors in interest paid all taxes on the land involved for the years 1914, 1915, 1916, 1917, and 1918; the defendant Sturzenberg, after the time of purchase from Frank McCarn, and being a nonresident of this state, and never having received any notice of any proposed sale by the state, rested securely in the belief that all taxes were paid. This belief can be traced to its foundation in the erroneous estimate and certificate furnished by the auditor to Frank McCarn. The sale of the land for nonpayment of taxes in arrears when such estimate and certificates were furnished and not included by mistake of the auditor could and cannot divest the title of the defendant.

"Justice Shaw, in the case of Beck v. Edmison et al. (Cal. App.) 193 Pac. 158, decided September 14, 1920, said: "In order to divest an owner of his property by a sale thereof for taxes the law requires a strict compliance with every statutory provision enacted for his benefit.' Section 3817, Pol. Code, is such a provision, and was not complied with by the officer charged with the duty of compliance. Hence defendant's title is good, while plaintiff has no title.

[3] "This conclusion, however, is subject to the statement and rule which are emphasized and followed in the case of Beck v. Edmison, supra: 'Defendants, however, did not restrict themselves merely to a defense of their title, but, as they were entitled to do, by answer asserted title in themselves, and prayed for affirmative relief, thus bringing themselves within the rule announced in Holland v. Hotchkiss, 162 Cal. 366, 123 Pac. 258, L. R. A. 1915C, 492, which is that where the owner comes into equity asking equitable relief to remove or cancel a tax deed or sale as a cloud upon his title, or to obtain a judgment which, in effect, will invalidate such sale or deed, the court should refuse any relief except upon the condition that he first repay to the tax purchaser, * * * the taxes, penalties, interest and costs justly chargeable upon the land, and which the purchaser had paid at the sale, or afterward upon the faith of it, with legal interest from the time of such payment, less rents received, if any, if the purchaser has been in possession.'

[2] For opinion of Supreme Court, see 202 Pac. 133.

"In the instant suit, plaintiffs have been in actual possession since April 14, 1920. The reasonable rental value is shown to be $1 per acre per annum. The plaintiffs should be charged with the rental during occupancy, and credited with the amount paid by Williams at the tax purchase, namely, $167.03, with interest thereon at 7 per cent. per annum to date of decree herein. Defendant is entitled to a decree as prayed for, declaring the tax sale void, and canceling the tax deed to Williams and the subsequent deeds of Williams to Eich, and of Eich to plaintiffs, and adjudging defendant the owner of the land upon his making the repayment as hereinbefore indicated, and quieting his title thereto."

In addition to the authorities cited in support of the proposition that the owner seeking to redeem was justified in relying on the auditor's estimate, the following may be noted: O'Connor v. Gottschalk, 148 Mich. 450, 111 N. W. 1048; Menasha Wooden Ware Co. v. Thayer, 150 Wis. 611, 137 N. W. 750; Beck v. Meroney, 135 N. C. 532, 47 S. E. 613; Ford Lumber Co. v. Bartlett, 32 Idaho, 638, 186 Pac. 709.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 370

DUNNE et al. v. WHITE et al. (Civ. 2493.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 18, 1922.)

1. Justices of the peace, ⊜44(8)—Have jurisdiction of actions on contract in which amount claimed, exclusive of interest, is less than $300.

It is no objection to the jurisdiction of the justice court that the amount claimed in an action on a contract exceeds $300, if the amount claimed, exclusive of interest, is less than such sum (Code Civ. Proc. § 112).

2. Appeal and error ⊜1091(2)—Appellate court must assume, in absence of bill of exceptions on appeal from superior court, that justice court rendered judgment for sum alleged in complaint set out in judgment roll.

To ascertain whether the justice court had jurisdiction of an action on a contract as limited by Code Civ. Proc. § 112, the appellate court, on appeal from the superior court on a judgment roll, consisting only of the complaint, answer, and judgment, findings having been waived under Code Civ. Proc. § 670, must assume, in the absence of a bill of exceptions containing the evidence, that the justice court's judgment was for the amount alleged in the complaint, and that it followed and conformed to the allegations thereof.

3. Justices of the peace ⊜44(8)—Complaint stating cause of action for amount within justice's jurisdiction sufficient, though prayer asks for attorney's fee.

A complaint, stating a cause of action for $280 and interest on a promissory note, brings the case within the jurisdiction of the justice court, under Code Civ. Proc. § 112, though the prayer asks for an attorney's fee, where no fact is alleged showing plaintiffs' right thereto; the body of the complaint controlling.

4. Appeal and error ⊜846(6)—No legal proposition presented by judgment roll, where findings were waived and no objection made to form of judgment or sufficiency of complaint.

On appeal on the judgment roll, where findings were waived under Code Civ. Proc. § 670, and no claim was made that the judgment was not in proper form or the complaint insufficient, no legal proposition was presented.

5. Justices of the peace ⊜44(7)—Justice court having jurisdiction can issue writ for amount of judgment, though statutory affidavit was not in record.

A justice court, having jurisdiction of an action on a promissory note, held authorized to issue a writ of attachment for the sum claimed or any less amount exceeding $10, exclusive of interest, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 866, though the affidavit required by section 538, was not in the record; the appellate court assuming that it conformed to the allegations of the complaint.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; Eugene P. McDaniel, Judge.

Action by Thomas H. Dunne and another against L. E. White and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. E. Davies, of Marysville, for appellants.

Arthur J. De Lorimier, of Marysville, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The action was upon a bond, executed by appellants, to prevent the levy of a writ of attachment issued out of the justice court of Marysville township in the county of Yuba, in an action wherein respondents herein were plaintiffs and one W. C. Trefry was defendant. The plaintiffs therein obtained judgment against said Trefry in the sum of $280 principal sum and $24.93 interest, and costs of suit. Execution on said judgment was issued and returned unsatisfied. Whereupon this suit was brought in the superior court of said county of Yuba upon said bond to recover the amount of said judgment. The appeal is from the judgment on the judgment roll. Said undertaking was in the following form:

"(Title of court and cause.)

"Undertaking to Constable to Prevent Attachment.

"Whereas, the above-named plaintiffs have commenced an action in the justice's court of Marysville township, county of Yuba, state of California, against the above-named defendant, claiming that there is due to said plaintiffs from said defendant the sum of $304.93, or thereabouts, and thereupon an attachment issued against the property of said defendant as security for the satisfaction of any judgment that may be recovered therein; and whereas, the constable of said Marysville township is about to levy upon certain property and effects of said defendant under and by virtue of said writ of attachment; and whereas, the said defendant is desirous that said property shall not be attached and seized by said constable, by virtue of said writ: Now, therefore, we the undersigned, residents and householders in the county of Yuba, state of California, in consideration of the premises, and also in consideration of said property above mentioned not being attached or seized by said constable by virtue of said writ of attachment, do hereby jointly and severally undertake in the sum of $650, and promise that if the plaintiffs shall recover judgment in the said action, defendant will, on demand, pay to plaintiffs the amount of whatever judgment may be recovered in said action, together with the percentage, interest, and costs, and as required by the terms of the judgment, and if defendant shall not so pay, we will.

"L. E. Hite. [Seal.]
"J. D. Poole. [Seal.]

"Dated the 13th day of August, 1921.

"State of California, County of Yuba.—ss.:

"L. E. Hite and J. D. Poole, whose names are subscribed as the sureties to the above undertaking, being severally duly sworn, each for himself, deposes and says: That he is a resident and householder of the county of Yuba, state of California, and is worth the sum in the said undertaking specified as the penalty thereof, over and above all his debts and liabilities, exclusive of property exempt from execution.

L. E. Hite.
"J. C. Poole.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me, this 13th day of August, 1921. Waldo S. Johnson, Notary Public in and for the County of Yuba, State of California. [Seal.]"

The sufficiency of the complaint is not questioned by appellants, nor, indeed, is any defect therein apparent. The answer denied "each and every, all and singular, the allegations in said amended complaint contained," and for a further and separate defense alleged:

"(a) That on or about the 10th day of August, 1921, in an action then pending in the justice court of Marysville township, county of Yuba, state of California, wherein Thomas H. Dunne and J. B. Dunne were plaintiffs, and one Walter C. Trefry defendant, the said justice court issued a writ of attachment, a copy whereof is hereunto attached, marked Exhibit A, and made a part hereof.

"(b) That said writ of attachment was delivered to the constable of said Marysville township, and on or about the 13th day of August, 1921, the defendants herein did make, execute, and deliver to said constable their bond and undertaking in the sum of $650 to prevent the said constable from levying upon the property of the said Walter C. Trefry, the defendant in said action, under and by virtue of said writ of attachment.

"(c) That said bond is the subject of this action and a copy thereof is hereunto attached, marked Exhibit B, and made a part hereof.

"(d) That it appears on the face of said writ of attachment that the amount claimed by plaintiffs is and was the sum of $304.93, which said sum is and was in excess of the jurisdiction of the said justice court of said Marysville township. That neither said justice of the peace of said township, nor the said justice court of said township, had any jurisdiction to issue said writ of attachment for said sum of $304.93 as aforesaid, and by reason thereof the bond herein sued on is wholly void."

[1] It is no valid objection to the jurisdiction of the justice court that the amount claimed exceeds the sum of $300, provided the action is upon a contract, and the amount claimed, exclusive of interest, is less than $300. Section 112, Code Civ. Proc.; Bartnett v. Hull, 19 Cal. App. 91, 124 Pac. 885; Bradley v. Kent, 22 Cal. 170; Solomon v. Reese, 34 Cal. 28.

[2] To ascertain whether said justice court had jurisdiction of the action, as thus limited by section 112 of the Code of Civil Procedure, we are confined to an examination of the judgment roll, since there is no bill of exceptions, and the appeal was not taken by the "alternative" method. The judgment roll herein consists of the amended complaint, the answer, and the judgment; findings having been waived. Section 670, Code Civ. Proc. The complaint alleges that, in the said action in the justice court, judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs therein for the sum of $280, "together with $24.93 interest on the said sum, together with plaintiffs' costs, amounting to $7." The intendments are, of course, in favor of the jurisdiction of the superior court, and in the absence of the evidence we must assume that the proof showed that such was the judgment of the justice court, and that it followed and conformed to the allegations of the complaint in said action. In other words, if the jurisdiction of the superior court to render the judgment in this action depended upon the jurisdiction of the justice court in the other case, we must take it for granted, in the absence of anything in the record to the contrary, that the evidence at the trial herein showed such jurisdiction in the justice court. This proposition is evidently sound, and is not disputed by appellants, and we therefore pursue it no further.

[3] There is, however, printed in the transcript what purports to be a copy of the complaint, demurrer, and answer that were filed in said cause in the justice court. If we may consider the copy of said complaint, it is apparent that a cause of action was stated for $280 and interest on a promissory note, thus bringing the case within the jurisdiction of the justice court. It is true that in the prayer of the complaint plaintiffs asked for an attorney's fee, but no fact was alleged showing that they were entitled to any such fee. We must look to the body of the complaint to ascertain the jurisdiction, and therein we find that the justice court properly entertained the action.

[4] But it is apparent, as before stated, that these pleadings in the justice court cannot be considered because not authenticated as the law requires. The truth is that, since findings were waived, and no claim is made that the judgment is not in proper form, or that the complaint is insufficient, no legal proposition is presented by the judgment roll for discussion.

[5] The justice court having jurisdiction of the cause, the amount being composed of $280 principal and $24.93 interest, undoubtedly had authority to issue a writ of attachment for said sum. It is true that the amount for which the writ is issued is determined by the affidavit required in section 538 of the Code of Civil Procedure (De Leonis v. Etchepare, 120 Cal. 407, 52 Pac. 718), but said affidavit does not appear in the record, and we assume that it conformed to the allegations of the complaint, indeed was identical as to what was due. The court manifestly cannot issue the writ for more than is demanded in the complaint, since no judgment can exceed the amount so demanded. Ralphs v. Bruns, 22 Cal. App. 153, 133 Pac. 997. But where the court has jurisdiction of the action, the writ may issue for the amount claimed, or any less amount, provided that in the justice court the sum claimed must exceed $10 exclusive of interest. Section 866, Code Civ. Proc.

The foregoing is sufficient to show that the judgment must be upheld, and there is no necessity for considering other reasons urged by respondents in support of the conclusion of the trial court.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; FINCH, P. J.

(190 Cal. 146)

In re KURTZ'S ESTATE.

KURTZ v. KURTZ

(L. A. 7332.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 1, 1922. Rehearing Denied Dec. 28, 1922.)

1. Wills ⟸191—Will making no provision for one subsequently married to testator held not revoked by such marriage; "mention."

Under Civ. Code, § 1299, providing that a will is revoked by testator's subsequent marriage, if the wife survives him, unless she is provided for by marriage contract or in the will, or is so mentioned therein as to show an intention not to make such provision, a will devising testator's estate to his father or, if he died before testator, to the latter's sister, and providing that if "any person whomsoever, who, if I died intestate, would be entitled to any part of my estate," except the persons named, should assert a claim, he should receive one dollar only, was not revoked by testator's marriage the day after making the will; the wife being "mentioned" in the quoted phrase as effectually as if named therein, though she was not his wife when he made the will.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Mention.]

2. Wills ⟸489(2)—Evidence of testator's engagement to marry contestant at time of executing will and her subsequent marriage held admissible.

In a widow's contest of her husband's will, which made no provision for her and provided that if "any person whomsoever, who, if I died intestate, would be entitled to any part of my estate," except the persons named as beneficiaries, should assert a claim, he should receive only one dollar, evidence that testator was engaged to marry contestant when he made the will was admissible to show who he intended to include by such otherwise ambiguous phrase.

3. Wills ⟸488—Evidence admissible to show extrinsic facts explaining meaning of ambiguous words.

Evidence is admissible to show extrinsic facts explaining the meaning of ambiguous words appearing on the face of a will.

4. Wills ⟸191—Will held not revoked by testator's subsequent marriage to wife by whom he had unborn child at date of death.

Under Civ. Code, § 1298, providing that a will is revoked by testator's subsequent marriage and birth of issue thereof, if the wife or issue survive him, unless provision is made for the latter or they are so mentioned in the will as to show an intention not to make such provision, a will devising testator's estate to his father, or, if he died before testator, to the latter's sister, but providing that if "any person whomsoever, who, if I died intestate, would be entitled to any part of my estate," should assert a claim, he should receive only one dollar, was not revoked by testator's subsequent marriage to one by whom he had a child as yet unborn at the time of his death, in view of Civ. Code, § 29, providing that a child conceived but not yet born shall be deemed an existing person so far as necessary to its interests in the event of its birth, as such child, if born alive, would inherit a part of its father's estate.

5. Wills ⟸384—Whether wife has rights in deceased husband's estate, notwithstanding will not providing for her, cannot be presented on proponent's appeal from order denying probate.

Whether a wife has rights in her deceased husband's estate, notwithstanding a will making no provision for her, cannot be presented on proponent's appeal from an order denying probate.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

Proceedings for the probate of the will of William Kurtz, deceased, contested by Helen H. Kurtz. From an order denying probate, Leonhurt Kurtz appeals. Reversed.

W. H. Savage, of San Pedro, and B. M. Marble, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

C. L. Bogue, of San Pedro, and W. W. Orme, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, C. J. This is an appeal from an order denying probate to the will of deceased.

The will was made on June 3, 1921. The next day, to wit, June 4, 1921, the testator married the contestant.

The will was contested on the ground that it was revoked by the provisions of section 1299 of the Civil Code, which are as follows:

"If, after making a will, the testator marries, and the wife survives the testator, the will is revoked, unless provision has been made for her by marriage contract, or unless she is provided for in the will, or in such way mentioned therein as to show an intention not to make such provision; and no other evidence to rebut the presumption of revocation must be received."

The wife he married on June 4, 1921, he continued to live with as such until his death, which occurred on November 2, 1921.

The material portions of the will are as follows, to wit:

"Second. I hereby declare that I am a single man, and my only living relatives are my father, Leonhurt Kurtz, also known as Leonhurt Kurz, of the town of San Pedro, city of Los Angeles, county of Los Angeles, state of California, and my sister, Ida Dunn, of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California.

"Third. I hereby give, devise and bequeath all the property, both real and personal, of which I may be legally possessed at the time of my death, to my beloved father, Leonhurt Kurtz, also known as Leonhurt Kurz, of the town of San Pedro, city of Los Angeles, county of Los Angeles, state of California, and in the event of the death of my said father prior to the date of my own death, then, and in that event only, I hereby give, devise and bequeath all the property, both real and personal, of which I may die legally possessed, to my beloved sister, Ida Dunn, of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California.

"Fourth. I hereby generally and expressly disinherit each and all persons whatsoever claiming to be, and who may be, my heirs at law, except as such may be determined by this will, and if any of such parties or such heirs, or any person whomsoever who, if I died intestate, would be entitled to any part of my estate, shall either directly, singly, or in conjunction with other persons, seek or establish or assert any claim to my estate, or any part thereof, excepting under this will, or attack or oppose or seek to set aside the probate of this will, or impair, invalidate or set aside the provisions, or endeavor to secure or procure any part of my estate other than through or under this will; then in any or all of the above-mentioned cases and events, I hereby give and bequeath to said person or persons the sum of one ($1.00) dollar and no more in lieu of any other share or interest in my estate, and all the rest of the interest, share or property which would otherwise have gone to such person or persons by devise or inheritance, or which they might be entitled to take under any provision of law shall go, and I hereby give, devise and bequeath the same, to my said father, Leonhurt Kurtz, also known as Leonhurt Kurz, of the town of San Pedro, city of Los Angeles, county of Los Angeles, state of California, or in the event of his death prior to my death, and in that event only, I hereby give, devise and bequeath the same to my said sister, Ida Dunn, of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California."

It will be noted that by the fourth paragraph of the will the testator expressly provides that if "any person whomsoever who, if I died intestate, would be entitled to any part of my estate," except the two persons named as heirs in the previous part of the will, should "seek to establish or assert any claim to my estate, or any part thereof, excepting under this will," or shall attack or seek to set it aside, or secure any part of his estate other than through or under the will, he or they shall receive one dollar and no more in lieu of any share or interest in his estate, and all the rest of the interest which would otherwise have gone to such person by inheritance he gives to his father.

[1] This clause does not mention his wife. It is obvious, however, that she is included by the phrase, "any person whomsoever who if I died intestate would be entitled to any part of my estate." In fact, so far as appears, she and the unborn child were the only persons who are included therein. Respondent contends that because when the will was made the day before, she was not the wife of the testator, there could not have been any intention to make provision for her as his wife. No reason is perceived why the wife could not be "mentioned" by any description that would include her. Certainly it would not be necessary to mention her by name and to include her, as she was included, in the description of a class, "mentions" her as effectually as if she had been named therein. He must have contemplated that such person might establish her claim to a share of the estate, for he provides that in such event all of the share shall go to his father except one dollar. It is therefore to be supposed that his wife would be included. The fact that she was not his wife when he made the will is of no significance. He was speaking of a future event, the descent that would be cast upon his death, and he could provide for the persons who might be then interested, though not so at the time, by the statement that they should have only a part of that which they would otherwise take.

[2, 3] The appellant sought to show that at the time the will was made the testator was already engaged to be married to the contestant, as indeed would almost be presumed so short a time before; but the court sustained an objection of the respondent to the evidence. This was clearly error. It was admissible for the purpose of showing who the maker of the will intended to include by the phrase "any person whomsoever who, if I died intestate, would be entitled to any part of my estate," a phrase which, if he had not been then engaged to marry the contestant, would be somewhat ambiguous, but which would be made certain by showing the fact of such engagement. Evidence is always admissible to show extrinsic facts which serve to explain the meaning of ambiguous words appearing on the face of the will, and this evidence was admissible for that purpose.

The wife of the testator is therefore "provided for" in the will.

[4] Section 1298 of the Civil Code is as follows, to wit:

"If, after having made a will, the testator marries, and has issue of such marriage, born either in his lifetime or after his death, and the wife or issue survives him, the will is revoked, unless provision has been made for such issue by some settlement, or unless such issue are provided for in the will, or in such way mentioned therein as to show an intention not to make such provision; and no other evidence to rebut the presumption of such revocation can be received."

One of the grounds of contest was that Helen H. Kurtz, the widow, was, at the time of filing the objections to its probate, enceinte, and that the testator was the father of the child. Section 29 of the Civil Code provides that—

"A child conceived, but not yet born, is to be deemed an existing person, so far as may be necessary for its interests in the event of its subsequent birth."

This child would come in the same category as its mother; if it should be born alive, it would then inherit a part of its father's estate; in fact, it would inherit all of it that did not go to the mother, and it would be affected by the same provision, if it should set up a claim thereto, and would receive only one dollar of its share, the residue going to the father of William Kurtz.

The will should therefore have been admitted to probate.

[5] The question whether the wife has any rights in the estate, notwithstanding the will, cannot be presented on this appeal.

The order is reversed.

We concur: LENNON, J.; WILBUR, J.; SHURTLEFF, J.; SLOANE, J.; LAWLOR, J.; WASTE, J.

---

(190 Cal. 162)

BOARD OF EDUCATION OF CITY OF SAN RAFAEL v. DAVIDSON, Superintendent of Schools. (S. F. 10250.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 6, 1922.)

1. Schools and school districts ⊂=45—Public school system governed by general laws.

The organization and government of the public school system is a public matter, and governed by the general laws of the state, and in case of conflict the general laws of the state control.

2. Schools and school districts ⊂=42(2)—On annexation of outlying elementary districts to city high school district, government is by city board of education.

Under Pol. Code, §§ 1721, 1729–1732, section 1734a, as added by St. 1919, p. 396, and section 1734b, as added by St. 1921, p. 722, as followed by the charter of San Rafael, outlying and adjacent elementary school districts may be annexed to the city high school district of such city for high school purposes, and the district so consolidated is to be under the government and control of the city board of education, and the annexed territory becomes part of the city for the purpose of electing such board.

In Bank.

Petition by the Board of Education of the City of San Rafael for a writ of mandate against James B. Davidson, as superintendent of Schools of the County of Marin, to compel the calling of an election to choose a school board. Writ denied.

George H. Harlan, of San Rafael, for petitioner.

W. E. Duncan, Jr., of Oroville, J. Oscar Goldstein, City Atty., and John R. Robinson, Dist. Atty., both of Chico, amici curiæ.

Henry E. Greer, Dist. Atty., of San Rafael, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. The petitioner is seeking by writ of mandate to compel the defendant, the superintendent of schools of Marin county, to call an election to choose a school board for the government of the high school of the city of San Rafael, in said county.

Prior to 1912 San Rafael was a city of the fifth class, and, with some outlying contiguous territory, constituted an elementary school district. Within this district a high school was organized and maintained, thereby constituting the district a city high school district under section 1721 of the Political Code, which provides that—

"Any city school district which has been for a period of one year preceding the taking effect of this section established and maintained as a high school within such district, shall be deemed to be and constitutes a city high school district."

Subsequently, under proceedings duly had for that purpose, the city of San Rafael adopted a municipal charter and thereafter organized and operated thereunder. Such charter contains the following provisions relating to the organization and government of its public schools:

"Article XI. Section 1. The school department of the city of San Rafael shall comprise all the schools within the city of San Rafael the San Rafael school district, and all territory that is now or may hereafter be annexed thereto for school purposes, which shall be known as 'San Rafael school district,' and which shall succeed to all the obligations, property, rights and privileges of the San Rafael school district. It shall consist of elementary and secondary schools as now established or that may hereafter be established, and may, at the discretion of the board of education, include technical, industrial, kindergarten and night schools; provided that no school money shall be used for technical, industrial or night schools or kindergarten when such use would prevent the board of education from maintaining elementary and secondary schools as provided by law.

"Sec. 2. All territory included within the limits of the San Rafael school district, or that may hereafter be included within such limits, but not within the city limits, shall be deemed a part of said city for the purpose of holding the general municipal elections, and shall constitute one or more separate election precincts, and the qualified electors therein shall vote only for members of the board of education and on questions submitted to a vote of the people at special or general elections pertaining to school matters; and said outside territory shall be deemed a part of said city for all matters connected with the school department."

"Sec. 6. The board of education shall have entire control and management of the public schools of the city in accordance with the Constitution and general laws of the state, and is hereby vested with all the powers and charged with all the duties provided by this charter and by the general laws of the state for city boards of education."

It will be observed that these charter sections are general in their terms as applied to elementary or high schools and became applicable in their terms to all territory then included for high school purposes within the San Rafael school district, or which might thereafter be added thereto, and provided for participation of such annexed territory in the election of a board of education, and gave to such board of education entire control of all public schools in accordance with the Constitution and general laws of the state.

Thereafter, under a new section of the Political Code, section 1734b (as added by St. 1921, p. 722) relating to high school districts, and in accordance with the provisions of said section the board of supervisors of Marin county annexed to said San Rafael school district, for high school purposes only, several outlying elementary school districts and the San Rafael school district was, for high school purposes, enlarged so as to include within its exterior boundaries these outlying and independent elementary school districts which were not a part of the San Rafael elementary school district, and for elementary school purposes at least, not within the jurisdiction and control of the city board of education of San Rafael.

The question here presented is whether the school board of the city of San Rafael continues to be the governing body of the high school district as thus enlarged, or whether, as contended by petitioner a condition has arisen under which a separate high school board must be chosen under the state law as contained in section 1730, 1731, and 1732 of the Political Code. The only part of these sections important for immediate consideration is the following provision of section 1732, which reads as follows:

"Whenever the number of school districts in a high school district is increased from one to two or more, the superintendent of schools having jurisdiction of such high school district shall, within fifteen days thereafter, call an election as provided in section one thousand seven hundred and thirty, and thereafter the high school board shall be elected and organized as provided in sections one thousand seven hundred and thirty and one thousand seven hundred and thirty-one."

It is to this provision of law that petitioner appeals in this proceeding. The answer is that the state school law apparently distinguishes between 'high school districts in general and city high school districts." Section 1721 of the Political Code contains this provision:

"Whenever the term high school district is used * * * it shall, unless a contrary intent appears, be deemed to include 'union high school district,' joint union high school districts and county high school districts. Any city school district which has been for a period of one year preceding the taking of effect of this section, established and maintained a high school within such district, shall be deemed to be and constitute a city high school district."

Section 1734a as added by St. 1919, p. 396, emphasizes this distinction as follows:

"Whenever an elementary school district is annexed under the provisions of this section to any high school district having the same boundaries as a single elementary school district, except a city high school district, such high school district shall thereafter constitute a union high school district, and shall be governed by a high school board elected according to the provisions of sections one thousand seven hundred thirty and one thousand seven hundred thirty-one of the Political Code. From and after the organization of the first high school board in any union high school district formed as hereinbefore provided, all property belonging to the original high school district shall be and become the property of the union high school district so formed.

"Whenever one or more elementary school districts are annexed under the provisions of this act to a city high school district, such annexation shall be for high school purposes only. Such territory shall be deemed a part of said city for the purpose of holding the general municipal election at which any member of the board of education is to be elected, and shall form one or more election precincts, as may be determined by the legislative authority of said city, the qualified electors of which shall vote only for the board of education, and such territory shall be deemed to be a part of said city or city high school district for all matters connected with the high school thereof. * * *" (The italics ours.)

[1] The latter paragraph referring to annexations to a city high school district, it will be observed, contains the same general provisions relating to the participation of annexed territory in the election of members of the city board of education as do the charter provisions heretofore quoted. It is, of course, well settled that the organization and government of the public school system is a public matter and governed by the general laws of the state (Kennedy v. Miller, 97 Cal. 429, 32 Pac. 558), and that in case of conflict the general laws of the state control. In this case, however, no conflict exists between the state school law and the San Rafael city charter. The charter provisions by the inclusive terms used covering all grades of schools is applicable to the high school district as enlarged by annexation, and makes the new territory part of the city of San Rafael for school purposes, the city board of education its governing body, and authorizes the participation of the annexed territory in the election of such board of education.

Another section of Political Code, § 1729, relating to the annexation of a high school district to a city high school district, indicates the same intent that under such a consolidation the city district shall maintain its identity, and the governing power vest in the city board of education, in the election of which the annexed territory may participate. It is there declared:

"After any such union high school district has been so annexed to, consolidated and merged with any such high school district of any incorporated city or town, such territory of said union high school district so merged and consolidated shall be deemed to be a part of said city or incorporated town for high school purposes and for all matters connected with the high school department thereof, and for the purpose of assessing, levying and collecting property taxes for the high school funds of such city or incorporated town and for the purposes specified in sections 1880 and 1888, inclusive, of the Political Code.

"Whenever a union high school district shall be annexed to, consolidated and merged with a high school district of an incorporated city or town as hereinabove provided, the governing power and control of such union high school district shall thereafter be merged and vested in the board of education or board of school trustees of such incorporated city or town."

Our attention is called to the fact that section 1734a and section 1729 of the Political Code are directed to other methods of annexing outside territory to a city high school district than that provided by section 1734b, under which the annexation in this case was made, and that the latter section does not in terms make the city board of education the governing body of the enlarged district. On the other hand, it makes no other provision for the government of such district.

It is also suggested that under section 1734a the designation of the city board of education as the governing body of the enlarged district refers expressly to annexations under that particular procedure. We are of the opinion, however, that the various conditions under which such annexations are prescribed in these different sections are intended as parts of a uniform plan for the inclusion of outside territory in city high school districts, and should be construed together in arriving at the legislative intent as to the form of administration to be adopted in city high school districts as distinguished from districts in other county territory.

[2] We conclude, therefore, that under the state school law as followed by the charter of San Rafael it is contemplated that outlying and adjacent elementary school districts may be annexed to a city high school district for high school purposes, and that the district so consolidated is to be under the government and control of the city board of education, and the annexed territory becomes part of the city for the purpose of electing such board.

The difficulty presented here does not arise over the selection of the members of the board which shall govern the high school district, but rather as to the representation accorded the elementary schools of San Rafael. As already pointed out, the high school is placed by both the charter and the state school law under the supervision of a board of education, in the selection of which all the residents of the high school district have a voice. The city elementary school district is made subject to the same board, the choice of which may be controlled by votes in territory entirely outside such district.

However, the management of the public schools is a state affair, and school districts at most are but a state agency for that purpose, and we know of no constitutional inhibition on the Legislature to prevent the selection of city school boards for elementary schools by a different method than applies to county school districts. In any event, that question is not before us. On the point at issue it seems clear that the affairs of the San Rafael high school district are in the hands of the city board of education, and that the method of choosing that board is covered harmoniously by both the state school law and a valid provision of the city charter.

The writ prayed for is denied.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; WASTE, J.; SHURTLEFF, J.; LAWLOR, J.; LENNON, J.

59 Cal. App. 503

PEOPLE v. MARTY. (Cr. 895.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 26, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 22, 1922.)

Homicide ⊂=83—Accused held "concerned" in commission of manslaughter and to have "aided and abetted" another in such commission.

Where accused and a companion, after difficulty with Mexicans on a road, returned with a shotgun carried by the companion, to seek an "understanding" with the Mexicans, and, during the ensuing dispute, his companion shot a Mexican with the shotgun, held, that accused, having commenced the altercation which provoked the first fire from the Mexicans, was "concerned" in the crime and had "aided and abetted" his companion in its commission, within Penal Code, § 31, as to principals.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Aid and Abet; Concern.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Edward Marty was found guilty of manslaughter, and appeals from the judgment of conviction and from the court's order denying his motion for new trial. Judgment and order affirmed.

Ralph F. Graham and Russell Graham, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

WORKS, J. Appellant and one Guthrie were informed against jointly and were tried jointly for the murder of one Acencion Correa. Both were found guilty of manslaughter. The appeal is from the judgment of conviction and from the trial court's order denying appellant's motion for a new trial.

The sole point made by appellant is that the evidence in the cause was insufficient to support the verdict. The question presented is to be resolved upon a construction of section 31 of the Penal Code, which, quoting so much of it as bears upon the point, is in this language:

"All persons concerned in the commission of a crime, * * * whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission, * * * are principals in any crime so committed."

Appellant did not directly commit the crime with the perpetration of which he and Guthrie were charged, and we are therefore called upon to determine whether he was "concerned" in its commission and, if so concerned, whether he did "aid and abet in its commission."

In solving this problem we do not find it necessary to go beyond the facts stated in appellant's brief, taken together with fragments of the testimony quoted therein, and also with portions of the testimony pointed out in the brief by appropriate reference to the reporter's transcript. In fact, the point may be settled, practically, by the testimony of appellant alone. It appears that appellant and Guthrie proceeded one evening in an automobile driven by the latter to make a call in the town of Bell. On the way to that place they came to a point where a horse and wagon were standing diagonally across the road in such a way as to block the highway proper. There was a Mexican on the wagon and several others in its neighborhood. One of these Mexicans was the deceased Correa. Guthrie was forced to turn to the side of the road in order to pass the horse's head. We now take up the testimony given by appellant:

"I said to the Mexicans, 'What is the idea of taking all of the road?' and then they started to speak in high tones, and we got 15 or 20 feet from the wagon, when there was a shot fired. I could see the Mexican on the wagon * * * fire the shot. * * * I turned my head toward the filling station [which was a short distance further along the road], and then in about five or six seconds later another shot was fired. It sang past our heads. * * * I says to Mr. Guthrie, 'I wonder what their idea is? And Mr. Guthrie says, 'I don't know.' He says, 'We will stop at the filling station and get a gun.'"

They did then go to the filling station, and appellant opened the conversation with the proprietor of the place. Appellant himself testified:

"I said, 'Some Mexicans down the line shot at us without a reason, I don't know whether it is a holdup gang or not, but [sic] through a misunderstanding.'"

Guthrie then asked the filling station keeper to lend him a revolver, but the keeper handed him a shotgun instead. Guthrie and appellant at once turned back toward the place at which they had encountered the horse and wagon and passed 250 feet beyond. They then got out of their car and proceeded on foot to where the Mexicans were, about the wagon, Guthrie having the shotgun in his hands. We again take up the testimony of appellant:

"We both got out of the car and went back to where these here Mexicans were, and I said to them, 'Now, we are not hunting trouble, understand,' assuring them of our friendship, and so I says, 'What is the idea of firing at us?' They pointed out along the road and said, 'No business, no business.' I said, 'Haven't American citizens a right to drive on the thoroughfare without being fired on?'"

Thereupon, according to the testimony of appellant, an altercation commenced, during which one of the Mexicans asked for the names of appellant and Guthrie, which they refused; appellant saying that they came from good families in Whittier and that the Mexicans could take the license number on their car. We again take up appellant's own words:

"After I told him that, * * * they came towards us and started in to circling us as to take advantage of us. Mr. Guthrie told them we didn't come back to get into an argument or anything of a battle, all we wanted was an understanding. Then they kept inclosing on us, and one of them had a log chain in his hand, and we knew they had a gun. Mr. Guthrie told them to stand back, and he asked them for their names. This younger Mexican [previously mentioned in the testimony] said, 'You son of a bitch Americans!' and he ran back, and Mr. Guthrie told him several times to keep his hand off his gun, which he drew from the wagon, and as he drew this gun Mr. Guthrie shouldered the shotgun and told him to lay down his gun, and when this Mexican leveled the gun Mr. Guthrie fired."

Several shots were then discharged in rapid succession, at least three of them coming from the shotgun in the hands of Guthrie. The fire of the latter killed Correa and wounded another of the Mexicans. It is worthy of note that at the time of these unfortunate occurrences appellant was 21 years of age, while Guthrie was but nineteen.

Appellant, in support of his contention that his conduct did not bring him within the terms of section 31 of the Penal Code, cites several cases to the effect that one who merely stands by while a companion commits a crime cannot be said to have aided and abetted in its commission. Here, however, appellant did much more than merely stand by. He commenced the altercation which provoked the first fire from the Mexicans. When Guthrie said, "We will stop at the filling station and get a gun," appellant made no remonstrance. On the contrary, when they reached the station, he opened the conversation with the keeper. When Guthrie asked for a revolver, appellant made no remonstrance, and when the shotgun was taken by Guthrie he made none. In defiance of all the dictates of prudence, he willingly, if not with avidity, returned with Guthrie to the wagon. That he was earnestly interested in this foolish attempt to come to an "understanding" with the Mexicans is sufficiently demonstrated by the fact that, backed by the influence of the gun in Guthrie's hands, he opened the conversation with the Mexicans and kept it up for some time. He must have been regarded by them, and justly, we think, as an aggressor. We are forced to conclude that it was only a fortuitous circumstance that the shotgun was in the hands of Guthrie. Basing our view upon the testimony of appellant alone, we cannot say that the result would have been different if the filling station keeper had placed the gun in appellant's hands instead of in those of Guthrie. We are convinced that appellant was "concerned" in the crime and "aided and abetted" Guthrie in its commission. If he did not do so, we do not see what conduct on his part could have made him an aiding and abetting principal, unless he had actually held the weapon while Guthrie pulled the trigger.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

---

59 Cal. App. [illegible]

PEOPLE v. SUTHERLAND. (Cr. 906.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 24, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 22, 1922.)

1. Gaming ⟹98(1)—Conviction of bookmaking held sustained by evidence.

In prosecution for recording and registering bets, as the offense is defined in Pen. Code, § 337a, subd. 4, evidence held to sustain conviction.

2. Criminal law ⟹478(1)—Officers held competent to testify to bookmaking paraphernalia.

In prosecution for recording and registering bets, as the offense is defined in Pen. Code, § 337a, subd. 4, it was proper to admit the testimony of two police officers, identifying documents found in rooms occupied by accused as material such as is used by bookmakers, where they testified they had had experience in ferreting out bookmakers, and had familiarized themselves with the paraphernalia ordinarily employed in that business.

3. Gaming ⟹73—Not essential to offense of bookmaking that races be actually run.

In prosecution for recording and registering bets, as the offense is defined in Pen. Code, § 337a, subd. 4, it was not necessary to actually establish that the races upon which bets were being taken were actually being run at the time.

4. Criminal law ⟹721(5)—Argument of district attorney held not improper.

In prosecution for recording and registering bets, as the offense is defined in Pen. Code, § 337a, subd. 4, assertion of district attorney in argument to the jury that not a witness had taken the stand on either side to dispute the testimony of a certain officer held not misconduct, as pointing to the jury's attention that accused had not testified in his own behalf.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. P. Cary, Judge.

Jack Sutherland was convicted of recording and registering bets. From judgment of imprisonment and from an order denying new trial, he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

E. L. Johnson and Archie C. Shreve, both of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

JAMES, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of recording and registering bets as that offense is defined in subdivision 4 of section 337a, Penal Code. He appeals from the judgment of imprisonment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

As ground upon which to base his claim for a reversal of the judgment and order, appellant insists that the evidence was insufficient to warrant a conviction; that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct in his argument to the jury; and that the court erred in admitting the testimony of two police officers who identified the various papers, cards, and documents found in the rooms occupied by appellant as being material such as is used by bookmakers.

[1-3] Disposing of the first and third objections, we are convinced that the evidence was sufficient to sustain the verdict, and that there was no error in the ruling of the court admitting the testimony objected to. Appellant at the time of his arrest was occuping three certain rooms in the city of San Diego, at the entrance of which was affixed a sign bearing the word "Brokerage." The two police officers, entering the first of the three rooms, found appellant seated at a desk and engaged in the act of writing upon a card. Leaning over the desk was a man who held in his hand some paper money, which the circumstances indicated he was about to pay to appellant. Upon the entry of the officers appellant dropped the card upon which he was writing into the drawer of the desk, which drawer was afterwards found to contain various other cards. The officers were unable to identify the particular card which appellant had been writing upon, but they testified that the cards found in the drawer were cards such as were commonly used by bookmakers in registering bets. Among other documents discovered was a race chart. In fact, all of the documentary matter discovered in the rooms seems to have been only such as might make up the working materials of a bookmaker's establishment. The arresting officers had had experience in ferreting out offenders engaged in bookmaking, and had familiarized themselves with the paraphernalia ordinarily employed in that business. Their testimony that they were so familiar with those operations, together with the evidence as to just what that experience had been, was sufficient to establish prima facie their competency to testify to the facts adverted to. It was not necessary that it be actually established that the races upon which bets were being taken were actually being run at the time. People v. Carroll (Cal. App.) 202 Pac. 885.

[4] The district attorney in his argument to the jury asserted that not a witness had taken the stand on either side to dispute the testimony of Officer Sears. Counsel for appellant protested that the statement of the district attorney amounted to misconduct, and was prejudicial to the appellant because it pointed the attention of the jury to the fact that the defendant had not testified in his own behalf. The argument did not amount to misconduct, and the district attorney was wholly within his right in using the language complained of. It would be a strange rule indeed that would prevent a prosecuting officer from contrasting the evidence and pointing to that which he believed stood without contradiction or was the most convincing. This point of appellant as last referred to is of so little merit as to call for the citation of no authorities to sustain the case of the state.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 330

JOHNSON et al. v. KRIER. (Civ. 4306.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Oct. 14, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 11, 1922.)

1. Brokers ⟸49(1)—Entitled to commission on securing executory contract of sale.

Brokers employed to make a sale held entitled to the agreed commission on securing a written "contract of sale" at a given price on stated terms of payment.

2. Brokers ⟸43(1)—Oral agreement to pay commission for sale of realty not void, where ratified in writing after procurement of purchasers.

Where an oral agreement to pay a commission for selling realty was ratified in writing after promisees procured purchasers, the bar of the statute was removed (Civ. Code, § 2310).

3. Brokers ⟸54—Seller cannot question purchaser's readiness and ability to buy after entering into valid contract of sale.

One agreeing to pay a commission for the sale of realty cannot question the purchaser's readiness, willingness, and ability to buy, after accepting him by entering into a valid contract of sale.

4. Brokers ⟸61(3)—Failure of owner's wife to sign contract held not to affect broker's right to compensation for sale of land.

It does not affect a broker's right to recover compensation for a sale of land, that, as the owner's wife did not sign the contract, it could not be specifically enforced, since the broker's action is not for specific performance, and it is also the rule that refusal of the wife of vendor to join in a deed conveying the subject of the agency does not deprive the broker of his right to compensation.

5. Brokers ⊜43(3)—Memorandum of commission agreement attached and referring to sale contract describing property held sufficient.

A memorandum of commission agreement attached, and referring expressly to a contract of sale describing the property sold, held sufficient to satisfy the statute, though the commission agreement itself did not specifically describe it.

6. Brokers ⊜64(1)—Seller not relieved from paying commission by buyer's default without agent's fault.

In the absence of a special contract making the payment of commission for selling realty contingent on the validity of the seller's title or the purchaser's performance of his agreement, the purchaser's failure, without the agent's fault, to consummate the sale, does not relieve the seller from paying the commission, whether such breach was due to his own or the purchaser's fault, his remedy in the latter case being against the purchaser at law.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

Action by C. H. Johnson and another, doing business as Johnson & Temple, copartners, against Peter Krier. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Lamberson & Lamberson, of Visalia, for appellant.

C. B. Wooster, of San Jose, for respondents.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment against him for $2,000, in an action to recover that amount upon a written agreement to pay the same as a commission for the sale of certain land in the county of Tulare, state of California.

The trial court found that on or about December 1, 1920, the plaintiffs, acting at the special instance and request of the defendant, sold to one Lowell M. Washburn and Virginia Washburn, the real property described in the complaint herein. That said sale was evidenced by a written contract of sale, dated December 1, 1920, and executed by the said defendant and the said buyers, Lowell M. Washburn and Virginia Washburn. That thereupon, the said defendant made, executed, and delivered to plaintiffs an agreement in words and figures as follows, said agreement being written on the back of the above-mentioned contract of sale and signed by the said defendant:

"I hereby agree to pay Johnson and Temple a commission of $2,000 for the making of the within sale. Dated December 1, 1920. P. Krier."

There also appears a further finding that said commission has never been paid to the plaintiffs, and judgment for the same followed.

[1] The first contention of the appellant is that the contract between himself and the Washburns was not a sale, but a contract to sell, and that plaintiffs have not earned a commission upon a "sale" by securing merely a contract of purchase and sale which was to ripen into an executed sale in the future. There is no merit in this contention. The agreement appearing in the record is somewhat lengthy, and there seems to be no necessity of setting it out fully herein. It is entitled "Contract of Sale," and provides in part:

"This agreement, made and entered into this 1st day of December, 1920, by and between Peter Krier and Margaret Krier, his wife, parties of the first part, and Lowell M. Washburn and Virginia Washburn, his wife, parties of the second part, witnesseth: That the parties of the first part hereby agree to sell to the parties of the second part and the parties of the second part agree to buy that certain property situate in the county of Tulare, state of California, and more particularly described as follows, to wit."

Then follows a description of the property, a statement of the price ($47,000), the terms of sale, the security to be deposited for the unpaid portion of the purchase price, and provisions relating to other details of the arrangements between the parties. The said contract was signed by Peter Krier, Lowell Washburn, and Virginia Washburn.

The cases of Phelps v. Prusch, 83 Cal. 626, 23 Pac. 1111, and Gunn v. Bank of California, 99 Cal. 352, 33 Pac. 1105, settle the question raised by the appellant. In the last-cited case it is said:

"It is, of course, well settled that when a broker employed simply to negotiate a sale of real property has found a purchaser able, ready, and willing to purchase upon the vendor's terms, his right to the agreed commission is complete, and does not depend upon the final acceptance by the purchaser of a conveyance of the property sold."

Numerous cases are cited in support of this statement of the law.

[2, 3] In the present case, the agreement to pay commission was not reduced to writing before the rendition of the services by the plaintiff, but after plaintiffs had procured the purchasers, the oral agreement was ratified in writing and so the bar of the statute of frauds was removed. Section 2310, Civ. Code. The defendant accepted the purchaser by entering into a valid contract with him and cannot now raise the questions of his readiness, willingness, and ability to make the purchase. Sobaje v. Schubert, 37 Cal. App. 709, 174 Pac. 364; 4 Cal. Jur., 592.

[4] Appellant also contends that, as Margaret Krier, the wife of the defendant, did not sign this contract of purchase and sale, it is not one that could be specifically enforced by the courts. The case of Jackson v. Torrence, 83 Cal. 521, at page 537, 23 Pac. 695, is relied upon. It is true that the rule, as there announced, is that an executory contract of a married woman to convey real property, which contract has not been acknowledged in the manner provided by law, cannot be specifically enforced. But this proposition is beside the mark in the present case. This is not an action for specific performance; and it is also the rule that a refusal of the wife of a vendor to join in a deed conveying the subject of the agency does not deprive the broker of his right to compensation. 4 Cal. Jur., p. 597; Farrington v. McClellan, 26 Cal. App. 375, 383, 146 Pac. 1051; Justy v. Erro, 16 Cal. App. 519, 522, 117 Pac. 575; Goodrich v. Turney, 44 Cal. App. 516, 186 Pac. 806.

[5] Another objection of appellant is based upon the fact that the contract for the payment of commissions does not specifically describe the real property to be sold. It is contended that the memorandum in insufficient to satisfy the statute. But the memorandum of the agreement for commissions is attached to the contract for the purchase and sale, and refers expressly to said contract of purchase and sale, and the description of the property therein contained. This is sufficient.

[6] The other objections of the appellant relate to the asserted injustice of allowing compensation to plaintiffs when the sale was never consummated and the defendant has received nothing of value. The evidence appearing in the record was conflicting as to the reasons for the failure to complete the transaction. The court might have concluded that either one of the parties was to blame. Appellant, therefore, argues at some length that Washburn, the purchaser, was to blame for the abandonment of the contract. But, however that may be, it is immaterial here. If the defendant's fault was the cause of the breach, that does not relieve him from payment of the agent's commission, and, if the purchaser was at fault, defendant had his remedy against him at law. There is no contention that the plaintiff caused the breach. The agent's commission is not dependent upon the validity or invalidity of his principal's title (4 Cal. Jur., 601, § 36, and cases there cited), nor upon the performance by the purchaser of the conditions of his agreement, in the absence of a special contract making the payment of commission contingent upon these matters (4 Cal. Jur., 603, § 37).

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

59 Cal. App. 444

PEOPLE v. HUNTER. (Cr. 913.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1. California. Oct. 23, 1922.)

1. Burglary ⊂⊃41(1)—Evidence held to sustain conviction.

In prosecution for burglary in the second degree, evidence held to sustain conviction.

2. Burglary ⊂⊃46(7) — Possession of stolen property evidence of guilt.

In prosecution for burglary in second degree, where stolen property was found in defendant's possession, it was proper to advise the jury that such possession was a circumstance which, taken in connection with other testimony, was to determine the question of guilt.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. P. Cary, Judge.

Roland O. Hunter was convicted of burglary in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Gerald C. Thomas, of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

JAMES, J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of burglary in the second degree. His motion for a new trial was denied, and he was sentenced to be imprisoned in the state prison. He appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] The principal contention made by the appellant is that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict. The facts, as the evidence offered by the prosecution disclosed them to be, are as follows:

Mrs. Nettie Connelly, on the 29th of April, 1922, left her home about 4:30 in the afternoon, after closing and locking the doors of the house. She returned between 9 and 9:30 p. m. the same evening. She then found that one of the locked doors had been opened and the house ransacked. Among other articles taken was a suitcase and a suit of clothes. About 8:45 p. m. on the day mentioned defendant appeared at a loan or pawnbroker's establishment with the suitcase and the suit of clothes and offered them for sale. The pawnbroker agreed to pay $10 for the merchandise, which money he delivered to the defendant, who gave his name as Albright. While conducting negotiations for the purchase of the articles, the proprietor notified the police of the offer being made to him, and by the time he had concluded his transaction with the defendant two officers were waiting to intercept the latter. Upon being arrested, defendant told the familiar story of having received the articles from another person, believing them to be honestly possessed by the one from whom they were received. He particularized in his statement to the officers by saying that he had received them from Jack Albright, who was his father; that it had been prearranged that he was to meet the father at a particular address after selling the suitcase and clothes for him. Upon the officers going with him to the place named, they found that the number did not correspond to the character of the place that appellant had indicated, and they then proceeded to several other addresses. They were unable then or thereafter to find the person whom appellant had described as his "father." At a later time, the officers testified appellant retracted the statement as to Albright being his father, and said that his father's name was Hunter, and that Hunter had died in the Philippines.

At the trial appellant gave testimony and admitted that he was known under at least three different names, to wit, Roland Hunter, Johnny Cavanaugh, and R. O. Cashin. He admitted that he had previously been sentenced to the Ione Reformatory after conviction for robbery. The testimony and statements made by the appellant in his attempt to account for the possession of the stolen goods were of such character as to in themselves afford evidence of guilt, and the case in its facts is brought clearly within the ruling made in People v. Lang, 142 Cal. 484, 76 Pac. 232. What is said in the opinion rendered in that case furnishes ample support to the respondent's position here.

[2] We find no error in the giving or the refusing to give any of the instructions which were considered by the trial judge. All of the matters included in several proposed instructions offered by the defendant were sufficiently covered in the charge as it was given by the court to the jury. The trial judge did not transgress the rule that the court shall not instruct the jury as to matters of fact or the weight of the evidence. On the contrary, the judge used terms which advised the jury that the court did not, nor did it intend to, express any opinion as to defendant's guilt or as to the weight of evidence, or the inferences which the jury should draw therefrom. Referring to the matter of the possession of the stolen property, the court definitely told the jury that the mere possession of such property, unexplained by the defendant, was not sufficient to justify a conviction. The jury was advised properly that such possession was "a circumstance which, taken, in connection with other testimony, is to determine the question of guilt," and that "there must be, in addition to proof of possession of property stolen from the premises described in evidence, proof of corroborating circumstances tending of themselves to establish guilt." Under the instructions referred to, the court clearly left to the jury the whole matter of determining the weight to be given to all of the evidence.

The record in this case discloses nothing which indicates that the defendant was in any wise deprived of his right to a fair trial, or that by his conviction a miscarriage of justice has resulted.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We Concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 434

PALLETT et al. v. GUENTHER et al.
(Civ. 3964, 3965).

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 23, 1922.)

1. Dismissal and nonsuit ⟸60(1)—Dismissal for want of diligence in bringing demurrer to hearing sustained.

Where plaintiff has delayed for one year and four months in bringing on for hearing a demurrer interposed to his complaint, the court may dismiss for want of diligence, Code Civ. Proc. § 583, allowing dismissal in the discretion of the court, where plaintiff has failed for two years after answer to bring action to trial, limiting the court's power to dismiss only where an answer has been filed.

2. Dismissal and nonsuit ⟸81(6) — Relief against dismissal for delay in bringing action to trial held within discretion of court.

In action for relief against dismissal for delay under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, it was within the court's power to determine as to whether under all the facts and circumstances shown plaintiffs were excused for their delay in bringing the action to trial.

3. Dismissal and nonsuit ⟸60(3)—Agreement between plaintiff and his attorneys to allow suit to rest held no excuse for delay in prosecution.

A mere agreement between plaintiff and his attorneys that after the action had been commenced the matter should be allowed to rest for a while without substitution of attorneys held insufficient to afford foundation for a meritorious claim of reasonable excuse for a delay of one year and four months in bringing demurrer to hearing.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by William A. Pallett and others against August W. Guenther and others. From judgment of dismissal for lack of diligence, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

James, Pace & Smith and Herbert Freston, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Thomas Tyler Robinson and Thomas A. Sanson, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

JAMES, J. There are here presented two appeals taken by the plaintiffs, one from a judgment entered in the trial court dismissing the action for want of due diligence in the prosecution thereof, and the second an appeal taken from an order subsequently made, denying the motion of the plaintiffs for relief under the provisions of section 473, Code of Civil Procedure. By stipulation of the parties both appeals are presented together on one set of briefs.

Plaintiffs began their action, which was to settle their right to the use of certain waters and to enjoin the defendants from interfering therewith, by filing a complaint on May 28, 1919. Defendant Guenther, on March 2, 1920, served and filed his demurrer to the complaint. The demurrer was not brought on for hearing before the court, and after notice duly given said defendant on the 24th of June, 1921, presented to the court a motion to dismiss the action on the ground that the same had not been prosecuted with due diligence. One of the counsel appearing of record as attorney for plaintiffs was in court and resisted the motion, but submitted no affidavits or other evidence to excuse the delay. The motion was on the same day granted. On the 29th of July, 1921, plaintiffs, after notice given, appeared and moved the court to set aside the judgment of dismissal. The motion was based upon the records and files in the action, together with two affidavits made by two of the counsel appearing for the plaintiffs.

[1] Considering first whether the court was authorized to dismiss the action because of delay of one year and about four months in bringing on for hearing the demurrer interposed to the complaint: In the year 1905 section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure was enacted, which provided in part as follows:

"The court may in its discretion dismiss any action for want of prosecution on motion of the defendant and after due notice to the plaintiff, whenever plaintiff has failed for two years after answer filed to bring such action to trial. * * *"

The Supreme Court has definitely construed the provisions quoted, and has decided that they impose a limitation on the power of the court to dismiss only in cases where an answer has been filed; that the power of the court to otherwise and in other cases dismiss for want of prosecution exists, and that such power is governed by the rule of reasonable discretion. And, further, that a demurrer is not equivalent to an answer within the meaning of the section. Romero v. Snyder, 167 Cal. 216, 138 Pac. 1002; Overaa v. Keeney, 169 Cal. 628, 147 Pac. 466. Under the authority of the cases last cited, it must be concluded that the appeal from the judgment of dismissal is without merit.

[2] On the motion for relief under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, the affidavits submitted to the court were not contradicted, and it is the contention of appellants that, under the facts therein set forth, the court had no discretion but to grant the motion. The same rule applied in considering a motion for such relief as applied to the motion to dismiss the action; that is, the court had the right to determine as to whether, under all of the facts and circumstances shown, plaintiffs were excused for their delay, and excused, too, for not having made a showing of the same matters when resisting the motion to dismiss. The language used in First National Bank v. Nason, 115 Cal. 626, 47 Pac. 595, is applicable, where the court says:

"Each particular case presents its own peculiar features, and no iron-clad rule can justly be devised applicable alike to all."

[3] And in Raggio v. Southern Pacific Co., 181 Cal. 472, 185 Pac. 171, where the court gave a further definition to what might amount to "legal discretion." Upon an examination of the contents of the affidavits submitted on the motion to set aside the judgment of dismissal, we are unable to find anything which would furnish adequate excuse for the delay of the plaintiffs in prosecuting the action. The substance of the first affidavit was to the effect that in September, 1920, affiant (one of the attorneys for plaintiffs) had a conference with plaintiff T. A. Pallett, at which he informed that plaintiff that on account of other pressing business matters he would not be able to continue in charge of the case, and that it would be necessary for the plaintiffs to secure the substitution of other attorneys; that the plaintiff Pallett agreed and said that he would make arrangements for substitution, but that he would like to have the matter stand awhile, and that the affiant had acquiesced and had taken no further steps to move in the case. This affidavit further set forth that affiant believed:

"That said T. A. Pallett, who was acting for himself and also for his coplaintiffs in said suit, had the impression and was acting under the impression that the suit would not be dismissed for lack of prosecution until after the expiration of two years."

The further statement was contained in the affidavit that, because of press of business, affiant was unable and had "neglected" to inform Freston, one of the other attorneys engaged with affiant in the case, of the facts as hereinbefore stated, and that Freston, who had "exclusive charge of the opposition to said motion for dismissal," did not know of the arrangement for substitution of attorneys as it had been agreed upon. Freston made the second affidavit, in which he corroborated statements made in the affidavit of the first counsel, and stated further that it was not until after the hearing of the motion to dismiss the action that he had knowledge regarding the conversation had between the first counsel and Pallett. Plaintiff Pallett made no affidavit to show any diligence in attempting to get other counsel. The mere agreement between attorneys and their client that the matter might rest for awhile without substitution of attorneys being made can certainly afford no foundation at all for a meritorious claim of reasonable excuse for the delay of which the defendants complained.

The judgment dismissing the action is affirmed.

The order of the court denying the motion of plaintiffs to set aside the judgment of dismissal is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

---

(59 Cal. App. 313)

REGER et ux. v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.
(Civ. 2467.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 13, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 11, 1922.)

1. Railroads ⟸340(1)—Railroad held not responsible for baggageman's crossing signal.

A railroad company was not liable for a negligent signal to cross, causing a collision between a train and an automobile when the driver attempted to cross the track on seeing a motion, which she understood to be a signal to cross, made by a baggageman, where the evidence did not show that he had authority, either express, implied, or ostensible, within Civ. Code, §§ 2317, 2319, to act for the company in giving the signal, or that he had ever acted as a flagman at the crossing, which was not provided with a flagman.

2. Railroads ⟸340(1)—Duties of flagman beyond scope of employment of baggageman.

The discharge of the duties of a railroad flagman is beyond the scope of employment of a baggageman, and a traveler is not justified in relying on a signal of such employee from mere knowledge that he was a baggageman.

3. Railroads ⟸340(1)—Retention of baggageman giving negligent signal held not ratification of act.

Where plaintiff driving an automobile was injured in a collision with defendant's train when she attempted to cross in reliance on a signal of defendant's baggageman, his retention after the accident did not constitute a ratification of his act in giving the signal so as to render defendant liable for the consequences thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by A. F. Reger and wife against the Southern Pacific Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Geo. F. Jones, of Oroville, for appellant.
Ware & Ware, of Chico, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This appeal is from a judgment in favor of plaintiffs for damages sustained in a railroad crossing accident.

Defendant's railroad runs north and south through the city of Chico. Fifth street crosses the railroad at right angles. Defendant's depot is immediately north of the street and its west wall is 44½ feet east of the easterly rail of the main line track. Projecting from the west wall is a small extension window. From the photographs brought up, it appears that the distance from the west side of the window to the nearest rail is at least 40 feet. The accident occurred in the middle of the afternoon. As the southbound train was drifting in on the main line at a speed, according to the varying estimates of the plaintiffs' witnesses, of from 5 to 15 miles an hour, Mrs. Reger, one of the plaintiffs, approached the crossing from the east in an automobile driven by herself. The side curtains were in place. About 50 feet east of the track, where her view to the north was obstructed by the depot, she brought her automobile almost to a stop. The defendant's baggageman, R. A. Betz, who was at the north edge of the street near the main track with a baggage truck, then made a motion which she understood to be a signal to cross. Betz was facing south at the time, and the signal given was "a rotary motion with his left arm in front of his body." Betz testified that when he first saw Mrs. Reger approaching the crossing he held up his hand for her to stop, but that she did not see the signal; that he then made a gesture with his left hand to direct her attention to the approaching train, but did not signal for her to cross. Appellant concedes that the implied finding of the jury as to the nature of the gesture is conclusive under the evidence. On seeing the signal, Mrs. Reger proceeded westerly at a speed of 3 or 4 miles an hour, in low gear, until the oncoming train struck her automobile. She testified that "she knew about the time the trains were supposed to arrive there, and * * * knew this train was about to arrive because the busses and express wagons were standing there"; that she had frequently driven over the crossing and was "familiar with the tracks and trains that came through there in both directions at different times during the day"; that when Betz gave the signal to cross she "looked out of the side curtains" to the north and saw no train and then proceeded to cross; that she did not remember whether or not she again looked; that she was listening for the train, but heard no bell or whistle; that she first saw the engine when it was about 15 or 20 feet away and when the front wheels of the automobile had reached the easterly rail of the track. Other witnesses for the plaintiff testified that they heard the train whistle prior to the accident. At any time after reaching a point about 40 feet from the nearest rail there was an unobstructed view along the main line to the north. Leaving out of consideration the signal to cross, the evidence presents a clear case of contributory negligence. Koch v. Southern California Ry. Co., 148 Cal. 677, 84 Pac. 176, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 521, 113 Am. St. Rep. 332, 7 Ann. Cas. 795; Griffin v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L. R. R. Co., 170 Cal. 772, 151 Pac. 282, L. R. A. 1916A, 842; Eddlemon v. Southern Pacific Co., 41 Cal. App. 340, 182 Pac. 811.

Respondents contend, however, that Mrs. Reger was so far misled by the signal to cross that the finding of the jury on the issue of contributory negligence is conclusive on appeal. The judgment of nonsuit in the case of Koch v. Southern California Ry. Co., supra, was affirmed on the ground that the plaintiff was not justified in relying exclusively upon the implied invitation of open crossing gates and the absence of warning bell or whistle. The court said:

"While the raising of the gates justified the plaintiff in attempting to cross when he did, and while that fact and the facts that no whistle was sounded and no bell was rung are to be taken into consideration on the question of how much he must himself look and observe as he makes his way across, these circumstances do not excuse him from looking and listening and taking thought for his own safety. He cannot rely wholly upon them, and cannot recover without showing more as to his own conduct than that he so relied."

In so far as concerns the question of contributory negligence, an invitation to cross, whether direct or implied, is important only as bearing upon the quantum of care required of the traveler. Greater reliance is naturally placed in the positive signal of a flagman to cross than in the invitation which his absence from his post or the fact of open gates implies. "The fact that a flagman signals a traveler to cross does not absolutely relieve the latter from the duty of looking and listening, but that fact may be sufficient to carry the case to the jury." Elliott on Railroads (3d Ed.) § 1661. If it be conceded that Betz had authority to discharge the duties of flagman, then, under the circumstances shown, it cannot be held that Mrs. Reger was guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law. Betz testified that when he first saw Mrs. Reger she was looking south down the track; that "there was an engine standing down there, and with steam up, and she was evidently watching it." She was under the necessity of giving some attention to the automobile she was driving and to the street ahead. She listened for the train and did not hear it, though others did. She looked before attempting to cross, though from a point where she could see but 150 feet northerly along the track. "The mere fact of looking and listening is not always a full performance of the duty incumbent on the traveler, for he must also exercise care to make the act of looking and listening reasonably effective, and must usually continue to be on the lookout and exercise his faculties until he has crossed." Elliott on Railroads (3d Ed.) § 1661. "But it cannot always be said that he is guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law because he looked and listened from one point rather than another, or because he did not continue to look and listen at all times continuously for approaching trains, where he was misled by the company or his attention was rightfully directed to something else as well." Id., § 1662.

[1] Appellant contends that it is not liable for the consequences of the negligent signal because in giving it Betz was acting without the scope of his authority and not in the course of his employment. The defendant had not authorized him to act as flagman. Neither had it at any time maintained a flagman at the crossing. Respondents urge that Betz had implied authority to control traffic during the movement of trains across the street. About 125 feet south of the center line of the street there was a standpipe from which the engines of south-bound trains were supplied with water. It was the custom of such trains to stop when the engine reached the standpipe, thus blocking the street; the baggage car then standing across the center line of the street. For the purpose of loading and unloading baggage, Betz was accustomed to run his hand truck from the depot to a point where this car was expected to stop. Betz testified that he was not directed by the defendant to regulate traffic at the crossing and was not "told by anyone to do anything concerning the stopping or starting traffic across that street and crossing"; that the station agent hired him and took him to the baggageroom and told him what to do therein and to "put the baggage on the train and take it from it and keep the books right," and that "the man that was working in the baggageroom at that time showed" him what to do in connection with handling the baggage; that hundreds of machines drive up and stop from 5 to 50 feet from the track; that "very seldom a train goes by but what a machine comes up and stops"; that at the time of the arrival of the afternoon south-bound train "there is sometimes none, sometimes two or three, and sometimes six or seven"; that it is sometimes necessary for him to ask automobile drivers to back away from the track to enable him to run his truck to the baggage car. Three witnesses for plaintiffs gave testimony relative to the practice of the baggageman in signaling travelers. J. H. Bogges testified that, off and on for two or three weeks, "he had seen Betz signal persons driving along the street to stop; that he has made motions to me and I have seen him make motions to others. * * * Motions to stop." J. A. Brown testified that for a period of 18 months he had frequently seen the baggageman hold up his hand for travelers to stop, "that a train was coming, or something like that. * * * I think I have seen him motioning for people to go ahead, but I don't know for certain. * * * When he comes along with the trucks, if there is any one in the road, he generally whistles, or something like that, to get them out of the way." That he did not go out into the street to signal people especially, but that he signaled them to stop if he happened to be there; that he did not make it a practice to signal people except when he was preparing to get baggage from the train. John H. Murphy testified:

"I have seen him (the baggageman) on several occasions regulate traffic to the extent that (when) he was getting his trucks in position automobiles would come up practically opposite the first track there and he would have to move them out of the way back in the street so he could put his trucks into position in order to take baggage out of the train, and sometimes he would go out ahead and move the automobiles or wagons that was there just as the train was coming in; he would move them back and put his trucks in there, and would generally holler, 'Gang way,' or something like that. * * * I have seen a number of baggagemen there, and they had to do that. * * * I have been there at the depot day in and day out, and I have occasionally seen him regulating traffic more than once. * * * Q. The only regulation of traffic which you have seen him make was to get the people out of the way so he could get his trucks out? A. Not only people, but I have seen him regulate vehicles there. Q. Those vehicles that you speak of, was that the through traffic or the vehicles coming up for the train? A. No, it was through traffic, and the vehicles that there were there also. Q. These vehicles going along Fifth street across the track? A. Yes, sir; people going along Fifth street that intended to keep on going. Q. You do not seem to indicate that he got out back of the station? A. No, sir; he would have to move them back to get the American Express wagons up there. Q. I do not see how he regulated through traffic; if a man was going through with his automobile, did he go out and stop him on account of his truck? A. No, sir; that is not it, but they came up too close to the tracks so he couldn't get through. Q. They would stop their cars and wait for the train to pass? A. Yes, sir. Q. And he would regulate them? A. He would back them up so he could get through, if they were in his way."

Mrs. Reger testified that she had never "been stopped at that crossing or signaled at that crossing before" by the baggageman or any one else. There is no testimony tending to show that Mrs. Reger knew, prior to the accident, that Betz or any other employee of the defendant had ever signaled any traveler either to stop or to cross.

Within the scope of his authority as baggageman, Betz was the agent of the defendant. An agent has authority "to do everything necessary or proper and usual, in the ordinary course of business, for effecting the purpose of his agency." Civ. Code, § 2319. In so far as material here, Betz was expressly authorized to convey baggage to and from trains. It was his duty to run the baggage truck out into the street on the arrival of south-bound trains. The defendant was liable for his negligence in the discharge of that duty. Had a collision occurred between the automobile and the truck by reason of the negligent signal, then the negligence of Betz in giving the signal would have been the negligence of the defendant, for in that case the injury would have been caused by an instrumentality under the employee's control while being used by him in the course of his employment in the defendant's business, and the driver would have been justified in relying on the invitation to cross as a declaration that the truck would be so controlled as not to interfere with the passage of the automobile. Betz, however, had no control over the movement of trains, and no implied authority, as baggageman, to invite travelers to cross the track or to warn then against attempting to cross. In so far as any express or implied authority is concerned, a traveler would be no more justified in relying on the invitation of a baggageman as an assurance of safety from passing trains than on that of one sustaining no relation to the company. The protection of travelers at crossings is not one of the usual duties of a baggageman. His duty to travelers along the street is, not to guard them against danger from all the operations of the company, but only from those under his own control. The limit of his duty and authority in this connection is not unlike that of an engineer in charge of a train. A traveler would be justified in relying on the invitation of an engineer in control of an approaching train as a declaration that the crossing might be safely made without danger of injury from that particular train, but it would afford no assurance of safety from the movement of other passing trains, because the engineer's duty, unlike that of a flagman, is not to safeguard crossings generally, but only against the negligent operation of his own train. If travelers were justified in relying for their safety on the signals of the baggageman, on the assumption that he was authorized to act as flagman during the movements of trains, then they had a right to rely on his absence from the crossing, or his failure to signal if present, as an implied invitation to cross. But he had other duties to perform which manifestly would prevent him from at all times giving such signals, and hence they could not reasonably have understood that the giving of such signals was a part of his duty. "Where the injury has resulted from the omission or negligent performance of an act which it was no part of the duty of the master to perform, and in the doing of which no duty of the master was being performed, then the person through whose negligence the injury has resulted, whatever may be his grade or rank of employment, is not as to that act the representative of the master, and the responsibility for injury is upon the individual actor and not upon the employer." Donnelly v. S. F. Bridge Co., 117 Cal. 417, 423, 49 Pac. 559, 561.

The authority of a baggageman to act as flagman may, of course, be proved by circumstantial evidence. "One customarily permitted to act as flagman, although not employed for that purpose, may render the company liable for his negligence." Elliott on Railroads (3d Ed.) § 1651. If, though not expressly authorized, he customarily acted as flagman with the knowledge of the defendant, or for such length of time as would justify the inference that the defendant, in the exercise of reasonable oversight of the conduct of its employees, ought to have known that he was so acting, then the defendant would be liable for the negligent discharge of such assumed duty. In Walker v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 121 Mo. 575, 26 S. W. 360, 24 L. R. A. 363, 42 Am. St. Rep. 547, it is said:

"In order to make defendant liable for the act of the baggageman for acts of negligence committed not in the line of his employment, it must be shown that he either had express authority to transact the business connected with the injury, or that defendant, by its officers, knew that he, as its agent, was so engaged for such a length of time as would justify the presumption that he was authorized to so act."

The only act of negligence relied on by respondent is that of giving the signal to cross. The burden was on the plaintiff to prove, not only that the negligent signal was given, but that the baggageman was authorized by the defendant to give it. The evidence falls far short of showing, except by the most strained interpretation thereof, that the baggageman had ever acted as flagman, or that he had ever signaled a traveler to cross the track, except in the single instance involved in this action, or that he had ever signaled travelers to stop their vehicles or to back them away from the track, except for the purpose of making room for the movement of his baggage truck. The evidence does not show that Betz had authority, either express, implied, or ostensible, to act for the defendant in giving the signal to cross. "Ostensible authority is such as a principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes or allows a third person to believe the agent to possess." Civ. Code, § 2317. The evidence does not show that Mrs. Reger knew that the baggageman had been in the habit of signaling travelers to stop for any purpose. Under such circumstances, it does not appear in what manner she could have been misled into the belief that he had authority to act as flagman. "Although not originally under obligation to do so, if the company has maintained a flagman at a particular crossing for a long time and his presence is notorious, travelers have, within limits, a right to assume, when he is absent, that no train is approaching, and his absence or permanent removal, without notice to the public is negligence or at least is evidence of negligence, but where, not knowing that a flagman had usually been stationed at the crossing, the traveler's conduct was in no way influenced by his absence, such absence creates no liability." Elliott on Railroads (3d Ed.) § 1157. In the case of Hayes v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 91 Conn. 301, 99 Atl. 694, the authorized flagman, having no flag, however, signaled plaintiff to cross the track, and the plaintiff was injured in attempting to do so. The court said:

"All that Hayes knew was that the man was standing beside the crossing, and was beckoning to him as he had to another car preceding his. This is not important as bearing upon the defendant's responsibility for the acts of the flagman, but it does possess significance in judging of the measure of prudence characterizing Hayes' conduct in relying upon the signal of one who was a stranger to him."

See, also, Elias v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 226 N. Y. 154, 123 N. E. 73; Peck v. Grand Trunk Western Ry. Co., 155 Mich. 430, 119 N. W. 578. In discussing the question of ostensible authority, in Harris v. San Diego Flume Co., 87 Cal. 526, 25 Pac. 758, it is said:

"There are two essential features of an authority of this character; viz. the party must believe that the agent had authority, and such belief must be generated by some act or neglect of the person to be held."

[2] The discharge of the duties of flagman is beyond the scope of employment of a baggageman, and a traveler would not be justified in relying on the signal of such employee from mere knowledge of the fact that he was a baggageman.

[3] After the accident the defendant retained Betz as baggageman. Respondents contend that his retention constituted such a ratification of his act as to make the defendant liable for the consequences thereof, citing the case of Edmunds v. Atchison, etc., Ry. Co., 174 Cal. 246, 162 Pac. 1038, and Mechem on Agency (2d Ed.) § 475. The authorities cited do not sustain the contention, but rather the contrary. There is much plausibility in the testimony of Betz to the effect that he did not intend the gesture made as a signal to cross the track, but that he was endeavoring to call attention to the approaching train. There is no evidence that he had ever theretofore signaled travelers to cross the track or had given any signals except in connection with his movements of the baggage truck. In Edmunds v. Atchison, etc., Ry. Co., supra, it is said:

"The omission to dispense with the services of the offender, standing by itself and unsupported by any other circumstances indicating the employer's approval of his course, is never sufficient to establish ratification."

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; ANDERSON, Justice pro tem.

59 Cal. App. 447

HOPKINS v. HELLER. (Civ. 3957.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 24, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 22, 1922.)

1. Physicians and surgeons ⟸14(4)—Ordinary skill and knowledge required.

One who holds himself out as a specialist in the treatment of a certain organ, injury, or disease, is bound to bring to the aid of one so employing him that degree of skill and knowledge which is ordinarily possessed by those who devote special study and attention to that particular organ, injury, or disease, its diagnosis and its treatment, in the same general locality, having regard to the state of scientific knowledge at the time.

2. Physicians and surgeons ⟸14(1)—Duty of due care extends to subsequent treatment.

When a surgeon performs an operation, not only must he use reasonable and ordinary care and skill in its performance, but also in the subsequent treatment of the case, and it is his duty to give the patient such attention after the operation as the necessity of the case demands, in the absence of any special agreement limiting the service or reasonable notice to the patient.

3. Physicians and surgeons ⟸18(8)—Evidence held not to show negligence in extracting wisdom tooth.

In patient's action against dentist for injury from defendant's negligence in extracting a wisdom tooth, judgment for plaintiff held not supported by evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Una N. Hopkins, a widow, against Louis C. Heller. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Le Roy M. Edwards, Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, and Norman Sterry, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Henry J. Stevens, of Los Angeles, and Lloyd W. Brooke and F. G. Cruickshank, both of Pasadena, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Action to recover damages for injuries alleged to have resulted from negligence of the defendant in extracting a tooth of the plaintiff. The defendant appeals from the judgment.

On the 9th day of August, 1918, appellant was a dentist, who at that time and for a number of years prior thereto practiced exclusively the extraction of teeth. The work done on that day by the defendant for the plaintiff consisted in the removal of a small piece of tooth which had been left in the upper left jaw from a tooth that had been extracted, and in the extraction of the wisdom tooth in the lower left jaw. The alleged negligence relates to the operation of extracting the wisdom tooth. In the original complaint it was alleged that defendant negligently and carelessly failed to take or cause to be taken any X-ray photograph of the said tooth, or to request the plaintiff to have one taken, prior to the extraction of the tooth. The finding of the court was that no X-ray photograph of said tooth was taken by the defendant, or caused to be taken by him, prior to such extraction, but that the defendant did not negligently or carelessly fail to take, or cause to be taken, an X-ray photograph of said tooth prior to the extraction thereof. That element of the case, therefore, is removed from consideration on this appeal.

The remaining charge of negligence, as stated in paragraph V of the complaint, at the time of the trial and submission of the cause for decision, was:

"That said defendant extracted the said wisdom tooth of the plaintiff in a negligent and careless manner, and negligently, carelessly, and unskillfully bored into and injured the jawbone, and the nerve in the jawbone, of the plaintiff, and fractured the jawbone of the plaintiff."

After submission of the cause, it was ordered that the complaint be amended "to conform to the proof," and thereupon paragraph V was amended to read as follows:

"That the defendant extracted the said wisdom tooth in the lower left jaw of plaintiff in a negligent and careless manner, and in so extracting the said tooth defendant carelessly and negligently injured the said lower left jaw of plaintiff and the inferior dental nerve therein" —and the court so found.

It is contended by appellant that there is no evidence proving, or tending to prove, that the defendant extracted said tooth in a negligent or careless manner, or that in so extracting said tooth the defendant carelessly or negligently injured the lower left jaw or the said inferior dental nerve. Upon the 7th of August respondent arranged with appellant to have this tooth extraction done on the morning of August 9th. On the 9th she came accompanied by a friend. But this friend, Miss Garbutt, did not remain in the operating room. An anæsthetic was administered by Mrs. Heller, wife of the defendant, who was his assistant. Dr. Bullard, the physician of the plaintiff, was present at her request for the particular purpose of observing the patient during the period of anæsthesia. There were no other witnesses to the operation, which occupied about 1½ hours.

Defendant, called as a witness for the plaintiff, described the procedure of the operation substantially as follows: He first sterilized the area and then released the tissues around the tooth by loosening those tissues so as to avoid laceration of them with the forceps. He then took hold of the tooth with the forceps, and obtained only "a lateral movement from side to side." Not being able to remove the tooth, he used an instrument called an elevator. Not gaining success with the elevator, he applied the forceps again, and in so doing the crown portion of the tooth broke off. He then used a burr and burred around the back and side of the tooth. This was for the purpose of removing the process next to the tooth. This he continued to do from time to time "and then used the elevator to assist it, change of elevators." When he first applied the forceps, he ascertained that the operation was a difficult one on account of the resistance, which he attributed to the density of the process there, which made it necessary to use the burr. He decided that it was the bone which was holding the tooth in its socket—"the back part of the tooth, and back and side of the tooth, which is the densest part of the process." Finally he succeeded in extracting the tooth, all of which came out without further breaking. He then smoothed the edges of the cavity and washed the socket with phenol-sodique, aconite, and iodine.

On recovering from the anæsthetic, plaintiff was in very great agony in the left lower jaw and her face was badly swollen. Accompanied by Miss Garbutt and Dr. Bullard, she returned to her home in Pasadena. The swelling increased, and did not begin to decrease until after three or four days. There was a drawing sensation and extreme numbness after the acuteness of the first pain had gone. These and other symptoms of distress are fully described in the testimony of plaintiff. At intervals of a few days during several weeks following the operation, the plaintiff visited the defendant for treatment at his office, and he applied a mixture of aconite and iodine. At those times she complained of the soreness and pain. After about three weeks the plaintiff suggested that she thought there must be something still in the cavity and she thought she might have an X-ray of it. The defendant approved this suggestion, and thereupon the plaintiff obtained from one Dr. Wake an X-ray of her face. According to the testimony of the plaintiff, she again visited the office of the defendant, who told her that his wife had talked with Dr. Wake over the telephone relative to the plates, and that Dr. Wake said it was all right.

"Dr. Heller did not say that he had seen the plates himself. He did not ask me if I had brought the plate. I told Dr. Heller that the pain in my face continued, and that it did not improve, and he said he did not know why it continued to pain me. He said he thought he would go down in and see about it. He put on a local anæsthetic and went down in to see if he could determine the cause. I do not know whether he make any efforts to see the plate before he did this. He did not ask me to get the plate. He put on a local anæsthetic and went down into the cavity with his instrument and probed the wound. He took out clots of blood. I think the wound had healed at that time. He did not state what the significance was, if anything, of the clots of blood. He said he couldn't see why my jaw continued to hurt. He said the jaw looked all right to him in every way, and he couldn't see why it continued to hurt me. He said he was sure it was going to be all right very soon; it must be. He said I might return again if it continued to bother me. I made another visit to his office. He reiterated that he did not see why it did not get better, and he said if he were in my place—that there was no reason why it shouldn't be better—if he were in my place he would go back to the city and try and forget it; but there was no reason why it shouldn't be better. He said that sometimes it took a long time for a nerve to repair itself. He gave me no particular treatment upon this occasion. He gave me no directions, except to keep it clean, to wash out my face. I followed his directions absolutely. After the visit at which Dr. Heller opened up the wound and probed it, I continued to visit his office every few days until the middle of October. I went to his office as often as he requested me to, and the last visit was about the middle of October."

In June, 1919, plaintiff consulted Dr. Butler of Pasadena, a dentist. On his advice, and after some additional radiographs of the jaw had been taken, an operation was performed by Dr. Warren, a dental surgeon, assisted by Dr. Butler. The two teeth immediately forward of the wisdom tooth which had been removed by Dr. Heller were extracted by Dr. Warren, who then proceeded to operate upon the bone of the jaw in order to remove a condition of necrosis which had been indicated by the X-ray plates. After scraping the bone and cleaning out the wound, he applied the customary antiseptic treatments and closed up the wound. This operation resulted in very substantial relief to the patient, although the evidence shows that she had not entirely recovered at the time of the trial of this action in February, 1920.

[1, 2] The rule concerning the degree of care required of the defendant as a specialist in his branch of dentistry is correctly set forth by counsel for respondent in their quotation from Ann. Cas. 1915D, 1124, where it is said:

"One who holds himself out as a specialist in the treatment of a certain organ, injury or disease, is bound to bring to the aid of one so employing him, that degree of skill and knowledge which is ordinarily possessed by those who devote special study and attention to that particular organ, injury or disease, its diagnosis and its treatment, in the same general locality, having regard to the state of scientific knowledge at the time."

The scope and extent of the duty of a physician or surgeon is accurately set forth in the statement quoted by counsel from 21 R. C. L. p. 389, as follows:

"When the physician takes charge of a case and is employed to attend a patient, his employment, as well as the relation of physician and patient, continues until ended by the consent of the parties, or revoked by the dismissal of the physician, or until his services are no longer needed. For example, when a surgeon performs an operation, not only must he use reasonable and ordinary care and skill in its performance, but also in the subsequent treatment of the case. It is his duty to give the patient such attention after the operation as the necessity of the case demands, in the absence of any special agreement limiting the service or reasonable notice to the patient."

Basing their argument upon these authorities, counsel for respondent have made some suggestions that appellant not only was negligent in performing the operation, but that he was guilty of further negligence in his subsequent treatment of the patient, and particularly in the removal of a blood clot in the course of one of those treatments, and that the evidence so shows. But this argument is answered by the fact that the only finding of negligence that can be found in the findings of fact is the single finding to the effect that the defendant was guilty of negligence in his manner of extracting the tooth. It was in so extracting the tooth that the defendant was found to have carelessly and negligently injured the jaw of the plaintiff and the inferior dental nerve therein. That this is the limit of the negligence upon which the judgment rests is further emphasized by the fact that the complaint did not, even after the amendment, allege any negligence subsequent to the extraction of the tooth. Therefore we are brought back to the question whether or not appellant was guilty of negligence and of negligently injuring said jaw and dental nerve in the course of the operation of extracting the tooth. This question must be answered by searching the record for some evidence showing how such negligence occurred, or tending to prove facts from which the negligence affirmed by the finding may be inferred. According to the testimony of the defendant, this wisdom tooth was a normal, fully erupted tooth, and its surface was "on a line with the occlusal surface of the adjoining teeth." According to other witnesses, it was an impacted tooth, not fully erupted and the surface was not on a line with the surface of the adjoining teeth. We shall assume, in favor of respondent, that the fact was in accordance with the latter alternative. It was in connection with this fact that respondent introduced much testimony to prove her charge of negligence of appellant in failing to obtain an X-ray photograph of the tooth prior to its extraction. But this becomes unimportant, since the court found that appellant was not negligent in that particular. This finding implies the further determination that the method of procedure adopted by appellant for removal of the tooth was not shown to be different from that which he reasonably might have used after inspection of such X-ray photograph if one had been taken.

There does not appear to be any evidence that the method of procedure or technique of the operation as performed by appellant was different from that which should have been used by a skillful and careful operator in the removal of that tooth. If appellant was guilty of negligence in the operation, it was not in the choice of instruments used, nor in the order in which they were applied. If there was negligence, it must have been by some unskillful or careless use of the instruments whereby an injury was caused. Here again our attention recurs to the fact that, under direction of the court, respondent withdrew her allegation that appellant bored into or fractured the jawbone. And we do not doubt that this allegation was properly withdrawn, since there is no evidence by which it could have been sustained.

It remains true, however, that respondent suffered extremely during the days and weeks following the extraction of her tooth, and that inflammation and other symptoms of disease followed, as described in her testimony. It further appears that the X-ray photographs afterwards made showed the development of a condition of necrosis in the jawbone, and that, during the surgical operation which followed, the facts indicated by these photographs were verified. But in order to sustain the finding it must further appear that these unhappy conditions were caused by negligence of the defendant. If there be evidence from which the court could fairly infer that the injury resulted from the operation of extracting the wisdom tooth, and further tending to prove that without negligence in the performance of the operation the injury would not have occurred, then such evidence is sufficient to sustain the finding of the court. But the evidence must be such that more than a suspicion or surmise arises therefrom. The burden of proof resting upon the plaintiff requires that the evidence of negligence proximately causing the injury be evidence which leads—not merely wavers—toward the fact sought to be proved.

"If it appears that the facts and circumstances from which a conclusion is sought to be deduced, although consistent with that theory, are equally consistent with some other theory, they do not support the theory contended for." Wilbur v. Emergency Hospital Association, 27 Cal. App. 751, 759, 151 Pac. 155, 158.

The facts that shortly after August 9, 1918, necrosis of the jawbone of the plaintiff had set in, and that this necrosis increased until the time of the performance of a curetting operation in June, 1919, were established by the X-ray photographs, supplemented by the testimony of Drs. Warren and Butler, and Dr. Parker, witnesses called by the plaintiff. In response to a hypothetical question based upon evidence relating to the symptoms following the extraction of plaintiff's tooth in the manner stated, Dr. Warren said that he would attribute those symptoms to interference with the mandibular nerve—the nerve which goes through the inferior dental canal. Being then asked to say whether, in his opinion, the necrosis, assuming that it did not exist before, was, to any extent, caused by such supposed injury, he replied that it might, but it would be hard to say that it was; that there is a large number of causes for those things, such as infection, or traumatic conditions. "In the majority of cases necrosis is caused by infection more than any one cause. Other causes are lack of nutrition." He declined to give a more definite opinion as to the cause of the necrosis. The infection, he said, most probably would be through the socket of the tooth, and might occur without fault of the operator.

Dr. Parker, in response to a hypothetical question, attributed the necrosis to "mechanical injury." Further on it appeared that this referred to injury to the inferior dental nerve. This nerve, as the testimony shows, enters the jaw back of the wisdom tooth, and proceeds along through the inferior dental canal, below the roots of the teeth. There is no evidence that the defendant drilled down to that canal. It positively appears that he did not do so. If there was any mechanical injury to that nerve, it must have occurred through the severance of the tooth when it was drawn out, or through some pressure occurring in the course of the work done by defendant during the operation.

Dr. Ross Moore, a nerve specialist called by the plaintiff as a witness, in answer to a hypothetical question stating the supposed case here and inquiring about the cause of the pain or the sensation of creeping and numbness in the jaw of the plaintiff, stated that in his opinion this condition was due to an injury to the nerve which supplies sensation to the teeth of the lower jaw on the left side. Dr. Moore did not believe that numbness, on the part of the face indicated, following the extraction of a wisdom tooth, would last for a year and a half or two years afterwards unless there had been a good deal of trouble, a good deal more inflammation or inflammatory reaction or bruising than the average extraction. If such numbness did come after the simple removal, after injury to the nerve, he would expect it to clear up within a few days or a few weeks.

[3] The evidence shows that the time occupied in extraction of the wisdom tooth was unusually long, and that this extension of time resulted from the density of the process and from the fact that the crown of the tooth broke off. This made necessary the operation of burring around the tooth, to loosen the adhesion of the tooth to the adjacent process, and make better leverage for use of the elevator. All of the witnesses agreed that the breaking of a crown from a tooth is not uncommon, and frequently occurs without fault of the dentist. We have examined the testimony at length, and particularly the testimony relied upon by counsel for respondent; but we have not found any evidence tending to prove that any act done by the defendant in extracting the plaintiff's tooth was negligently done, or that he omitted to do anything therein that in the exercise of due care he should have done. The injuries suffered by the plaintiff resulted from the operation whereby the tooth was extracted. But the evidence is insufficient to prove that they resulted from negligence of the defendant in performing that operation. To sustain the judgment without proof of such negligence would be to hold the defendant as a warrantor against misfortune. But he is not thus bound. Perkins v. Trueblood, 180 Cal. 437, 181 Pac. 642.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

MEMORANDUM DECISIONS

59 Cal. App. 794

CUNEO et al. v. UNITED RAILROADS OF SAN FRANCISCO. (Civ. 4070.) District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Oct. 3, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 1, 1922.) Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Benj. K. Knight, Judge. Action by Antone Cuneo and another, as surviving partners of Cuneo & Co., against the United Railroads of San Francisco. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed. Wm. M. Abbott, Kingsley Cannon, and Ivores R. Dains, all of San Francisco, for appellant. A. P. Black and Black & Black, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This appeal is by the defendant from a judgment in the plaintiffs' favor for the sum of $1,000 damages for the destruction of an automobile truck through a collision with an interurban car. This case is as to the facts of said collision identical with the case of Noce et al. v. United Railroads, (Cal. App.) 200 Pac. 819, except that said cause was tried before a jury, while the present action was tried by the court without a jury. The former case was reversed for an erroneous instruction to the jury, but as to the question of the negligence of the defendant and the absence of contributory negligence as a matter of law the decision in that case was in favor of the plaintiffs. The reasoning and conclusions of this court as to these questions are applicable to the case at bar, and, a petition for rehearing in that case having been denied by the Supreme Court, we deem it conclusive of the instant case. For the reasons therein stated, the judgment herein is affirmed.

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

211 PACIFIC REPORTER

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

211 PACIFIC REPORTER

190 Cal. 139

C. W. CLARKE CO. v. WALKER (two cases). (S. F. 9586, 9587.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 1, 1922. Rehearing Denied Dec. 28, 1922.)

1. Brokers ⊜8(1)—Authority to buy presumed limited to effectuate a direct exchange of property between purchaser and owner.

When one person employs another to purchase property from a third person for him for a commission, it will be presumed, in absence of clear evidence to the contrary, to insure proper protection against fraud, that the authority conferred was limited to that of acting as an intermediary for the purpose of effecting a direct exchange of property between the present owner and the prospective purchaser.

2. Brokers ⊜14—Contract held to authorize broker to act as intermediary between purchaser and owner, and not to purchase and resell to purchaser.

Prospective purchaser's letter to broker, expressing a desire to purchase certain land, authorizing broker to arrange for the purchase price and retain the difference between what broker would have to pay and specified amount per acre, and referring to broker's compensation as a "commission," held to authorize broker merely to act as an intermediary between purchaser and owner of land, and not to direct broker to purchase the land and resell it to purchaser, in view of the conduct of the parties interpreting the contract as one of agency, notwithstanding provision that, "You may make your own contract with" owner.

3. Estoppel ⊜90(2)—Purchaser held not estopped from claiming that his broker, on receipt of money for the purchase, was mere depositary.

Where contract between purchaser and broker provided that, if the land was bought for less than a certain amount per acre, broker could retain the difference as his compensation, purchaser's failure to object when notice of broker's assignments of moneys due, or that might become due "on account of any services heretofore rendered by" broker, were served on him, did not estop him from claiming that broker received the moneys for the purchase of the land in the capacity of a depositary, instead of as the purchase price of land purchased by broker and resold by broker to purchaser.

Shaw, C. J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George E. Crothers, Judge.

Actions by the C. W. Clarke Company against T. B. Walker. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Arthur W. Bolton, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Peter J. Crosby and Stanley R. Stearns, both of Oakland, for respondent.

LENNON, J. Arising out of the same transaction, differing only in inconsequential details, and presented upon identical briefs, the two above-entitled cases involve the same questions of law, and may be considered in a single opinion.

In the year 1902 the state of California had selected 18,000 acres of land in Modoc and Shasta counties as indemnity school lands. Thirty-seven different persons had applied to the state for these lands in tracts not exceeding 640 acres each. The applications had been approved by the state surveyor general, payments in full had been made to the state, and the register of the state land office had issued to each applicant a certificate of purchase for the land described in his application, reciting that patent would issue to the person named therein, or his assignee, after the lands had been confirmed to the state by the United States.

One of these applicants was Wm. L. Crayton, who received his certificate of purchase in April, 1902. Concerning the land covered by this certificate of purchase Thomas B. Walker, defendant and appellant herein, wrote the following letter in the fall of 1902:

"Mr. John A. Benson, San Francisco, Cal.—Dear Sir: I desire to purchase from Wm. L. Crayton or his assigns the following land, to wit: All of Sec. 21, T. 42 N., R. 7 E., M. D. M., and containing 640 acres, at a price not exceeding three dollars and seventy-five cents an acre, which amount I agree to pay for the said land, in the manner and at the times hereinafter stated.

"It is understood that the land has been purchased by said Wm. L. Crayton from the state of California and the latter holds and owns a full paid-up certificate of purchase therefor, the title to which is based upon a state indemnity school land selection now pending before the General Land Office awaiting the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

"You may make your own contract with said Wm. L. Crayton and buy the land as cheaply as possible, and if you obtain the same for less than three dollars and seventy-five cents an acre, you may retain and have the difference between what you have to pay for the land and three dollars and seventy-five cents an acre, any profit that you may make in this matter shall be in lieu of any commission or compensation from me to you for your services herein.

"I offer to pay for the land in the following manner, to wit:

"Upon the delivery to me of the state certificate of purchase on which full payment has been made to the state of California, together with assignment of said certificate of purchase or a grant deed to the land, described in such certificate, I will pay to you the sum of one dollar and fifty cents an acre.

"Whenever the said land or any part thereof is listed to the state by the Secretary of the Interior, I will pay to you the further sum of one dollar and seventy-five cents an acre for the land so listed.

"Whenever a patent shall be issued by the state of California to Wm. L. Crayton or his assigns for the said land or any portion thereof, I will pay to you the sum of fifty cents an acre for the land so patented.

"I desire it expressly understood that I am not to pay any commission or other expenses which will make the land cost more than three dollars and seventy-five cents an acre.

"Yours, very truly, T. B. Walker."

Forty similar letters were written and delivered by Walker to Benson at the same time, varying only in the names of the applicants and description of land. Benson, who for years was engaged in the business of representing individual applicants for the purchase of public lands before the federal and state land offices, accepted Walker's proposition and carried it into effect. This appears from the following allegation of the complaint, which the trial court found to be true, to wit:

"Said contract was accepted by said Benson, who thereafter purchased the said land from said certificate holders above named for and on behalf of said defendant."

Benson then delivered to Walker the said certificates of purchase, together with instruments in writing, signed by the certificate holders, assigning the said certificates and granting the land covered by the same to the defendant. Upon the delivery of the certificates and assignments Walker paid Benson the sum of $1.50 an acre, as stipulated in the contract.

In the month of March, 1903, Benson notified Walker that he had assigned to F. A. Hyde an undivided one-half of any moneys that were then due or might become due from Walker to Benson by reason of any existing contract. On the same day Hyde and Benson notified Walker that they had assigned to C. W. Clarke their right to any moneys which were then due from Walker to them by reason of any existing contract. C. W. Clarke, in turn, assigned to C. W. Clarke Company, the plaintiff herein. Benson died in 1910.

Owing to a controversy which arose in the year 1903 over the listing of state indemnity school lands to the state of California, the listing of the lands referred to in the Walker letters did not take place until the year 1917. Shortly thereafter patents were issued by the state to the certificate holders. The sums of $1.75 and 50 cents per acre, which Walker agreed to pay upon the listing and patenting, respectively, of the lands, have never been paid, and the present suits for the recovery thereof are brought by C. W. Clarke Company. Defendant Walker appeals from a judgment adverse to him.

Defendant interposed the defense that Benson was employed as a broker or agent for Walker, and therefore was to receive the moneys for the purchase of the land in the capacity of a depositary. If this view of the case be correct, then Benson cannot, by his own arbitrary assignment, and without the consent of the vendor, compel Walker to pay to another and different person, nor can such as assignee of Benson come into court and collect for his own use the money which Benson was to receive as a depositary only. Upon Benson's death the vendor alone could enforce the obligation of Walker to pay for the land, and Benson's assignee can recover only the difference, if any exists, between the amount which Walker agreed to pay for the land and the price for which Benson obtained the said land, which sum represents Benson's commission. There is no evidence whatever of the vendor's consent to the assignments or of the purchase price of the certificates, plaintiff having relied upon the theory that the contract shows that Walker dealt with Benson, not as agent, but as a principal, authorizing Benson to purchase the land and resell to Walker, and that the moneys now sued for were due to Benson as vendor of the land.

[1] The principal issue, therefore, is the interpretation to be accorded the contract hereinbefore set forth. In the ordinary course of affairs, when one person employs another to purchase property from a third person for him for a commission, the authority conferred is merely that of acting as an intermediary or as a channel for the purpose of effecting a direct exchange of property between the present owner and the prospective purchaser. As a general rule there is no intention to authorize the intermediary to intervene as an independent unit in the transfer of title or to recognize him as a separate individual in the transaction. To insure proper protection against fraud, it will be presumed that the ordinary course of business has been followed, in the absence of clear evidence to the contrary. We are of the opinion that all of the evidence in the present suits tends to support this presumption.

[2] The contract itself, while somewhat ambiguous, contains strong indications that Benson was authorized to act merely as agent. Defendant expresses a desire to purchase from "Wm. L. Crayton or his assigns," but says nothing about purchasing from Benson; the contract provides that Benson may arrange for the purchase price and may "retain and have the difference between what you have to pay for the land and three dollars and seventy-five cents an acre," the necessary inference being that the balance of $3.75 per acre paid by Walker shall not belong to Benson, but to the persons from whom the certificates were obtained; the contract refers to Benson's "services" for Walker in obtaining the land for him, and provides for a "commission." The phrase "you may make your own contract with said Wm. L. Crayton" obviously was not intended as an authorization to Benson to purchase in his own behalf; the context in which it appears demonstrates that its meaning is limited to the fixing of the amount of the purchase price.

Moreover, by the conduct of the parties the contract was interpreted as one of agency. Thus, the written assignment of the certificates and grants of land were made out by the certificate holders directly to Walker; the complaint itself alleges, and the court found, that Benson purchased "for and on behalf of" Walker; Clarke gave Walker the following notice of the assignment from Hyde, and Benson to himself:

"You are hereby advised that on the 24th day of March, 1903. J. A. Benson assigned to F. A. Hyde an undivided one-half of any moneys that may be or become due on any account whatever by reason of any existing contract between said Benson and yourself for any services heretofore rendered by said J. A. Benson or contracted for.

"That said F. A. Hyde and J. A. Benson did on the same day assign to the undersigned their claim and right to any moneys that may be or become due to said Hyde, or both of them, by reason of any contract for any services heretofore indicated."

Also of importance is the fact that plaintiff made no attempt to prove that the holders of the certificates had ever been paid for the certificates by Benson or any of Benson's assigns, or to introduce any contract between Benson and the holders of the certificates showing the purchase price arranged for by Benson.

Plaintiff raises the point that it is unreasonable to assume that the vendors of the land would have been willing to consent to postpone the date of payment as long as was done in this case. Plaintiff should have produced evidence of that to which the vendors did consent; furthermore, at the time the sale was made there was every reason to believe that in this case, as formerly, the lands would be listed and patented within a few months, so that the date of final payment was apparently not far removed. Plaintiff also contends that no lien has been asserted by the vendors since the sale of 1902, and that this is evidence tending to show that no lien existed. In the first place, the record does not show that no claim or lien has been asserted by the vendors; in the second place, the right to assert such liens did not arise until 1917, when the lands were listed and patented, which was shortly before the commencement of the present action.

[3] Plaintiff's contention that Walker was estopped from claiming that Benson was a depositary by failing to object when notice of Benson's assignments to Hyde and Clarke were served on him in 1903 is without merit. Even if failure to object would amount to an estoppel under some circumstances, it has no such effect in the instant case, for the reason that the notice contained the statement that the assignments were made of moneys due or that might become due "on account of any services heretofore rendered by said J. A. Benson." According to the contract, if the cost of the land were less than $3.75 per acre, Benson, or his assigns, could claim the difference as compensation. It follows that Walker was in no position to object to the assignment, and therefore cannot be estopped by his failure to do so.

The view we have taken of the main issue in the case renders it unnecessary to discuss the remaining questions presented by the briefs.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: LAWLOR, J.; WILBUR, J.; SLOANE, J.

I dissent: SHAW, C. J.

Mr. Justice SHURTLEFF, being disqualified, does not participate herein.

(190 Cal. 168)

GIBBONS v. YOSEMITE LUMBER CO. et al. (Sac. 2934.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 7, 1922.)

Vendor and purchaser ⊂=232(2)—Actual residence on part and use of all of land for pasturage by one keeping other stock off sufficient to impart notice of occupancy of entire tract.

Actual residence on part and use of all of a tract of land for pasturage purposes, to which it was adapted, and maintenance of exclusive possession by keeping off others' stock, pursuant to an oral agreement to buy from owner, held sufficient to impart notice to a subsequent purchaser of exclusive occupancy of the entire tract, though, when the feed ran short on the land, the occupant permitted his stock to go on the owner's adjoining lands by agreement with the latter.

Wilbur, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by John Wesley Gibbons against the Yosemite Lumber Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

H. K. Landram, of Merced, for appellants.

F. W. Henderson, of Merced, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Justice pro tem. The following portion of the opinion of the District Court of Appeal is adopted as correctly stating the facts of this case:

"This case was formerly before the Supreme Court. 172 Cal. 714, 158 Pac. 196. The judgment of the superior court was reversed upon the ground that the finding 'that plaintiff is the owner of the land' was unsupported, the action being to quiet title. However, the Supreme Court said: 'It may be that there has been such partial performance of an oral contract to convey as would meet the defense of the statute of frauds, and that the plaintiff could establish a right to have the agreement specifically enforced. But the pleadings are not so framed as to present the issues embraced in an action for specific performance. * * * If the plaintiff desires to assert his right to have the legal title conveyed to him, his only course is to seek his relief by appropriate pleadings directed to that end, either in a new action or by application to the court below for leave to file an amended complaint.' Accordingly, plaintiff by leave of the trial court did amend his complaint, and he obtained judgment in harmony with the prayer thereof.

"The trial court found that on or about the 1st day of January, 1888, John L. Ivett, who was then the owner of the 40 acres herein involved, entered into an oral agreement with plaintiff for the purchase of said property upon the following terms and conditions: That plaintiff should forthwith enter into possession thereof, take and use the same for his own benefit, build thereon, and occupy it with his family, and for a period of two years keep off of all the grazing land of said Ivett trespassing sheep and cattle on their way to and from the mountains, and that, upon the work and labor being done by Gibbons, Ivett would convey to him said 40 acres of land; that the value of said land was not in excess of $100; that the reasonable value of said services of plaintiff exceeded said amount; that the annual injury that would have been caused to Ivett's land on account of said trespassing would be in excess of $500, had it not been for plaintiff's said services; and that the land mentioned in 1888 and for many years thereafter was adapted to and fit for no other than grazing purposes. The court further found that plaintiff took possession of said 40 acres in 1888, erected valuable improvements thereon at his own expense, moved onto the property with his family, and ever since said time has continued to live thereon and use the same to the exclusion of all other persons; that the use made by him has been for grazing purposes and according to the custom of the country in and near said land; that plaintiff performed all the terms and conditions of said agreement by him to be performed; that John L. Ivett died on or about November 9, 1890, without having made any conveyance to plaintiff; that subsequently Sophie A. Ivett, now Sophie A. Leland, became and ever since has been the administratrix of his estate; that on October 24, 1911, Yosemite Lumber Company, a corporation of Nevada, the predecessor in interest of all of the other defendants other than said administratrix, acquired the record title to the property in question, with other land formerly a part of the Ivett estate; and that the lis pendens herein was filed February 18, 1913, preceding the conveyances from said Nevada corporation.

"As to said agreement of purchase, appellants admit that the evidence is sufficient to support the finding of the court, and 'that it is now too late to argue evidence in which there is a conflict or urge the relative equities of the parties as to matters upon which the finding of the lower court is conclusive.' They contend, however, that their case is that of an innocent purchaser for value without notice of plaintiff's equities. In this connection, it is conceded, though, that notice was imputed to them of the occupancy of the land covered by the buildings, a small tract, the extent of which was not shown by the evidence. But as to the lands not so occupied by the buildings their claim is that plaintiff 'did not use or possess them in such a manner as to give notice to an innocent purchaser of the legal title such as defendant.'"

The crucial question in this case is as to whether the evidence was sufficient to establish such actual possession of the premises in question by the plaintiff as to impart notice of his rights and equities therein to the defendant as purchaser of the entire tract of which these premises were originally a portion from the estate of John L. Ivett, deceased. As to the possession by the plaintiff of that portion of said premises occupied by his dwelling house, outhouses, and corral, the evidence in the case sufficiently shows that shortly before the purchase by the defendant of the Ivett properties from the estate, the president and manager of the defendant corporation, during a visit of inspection to and over said properties, saw the buildings and improvements of the plaintiff upon that portion thereof involved in this case, and hence had actual knowledge that the plaintiff was residing upon and occupying at least that portion thereof upon which such buildings and improvements actually stood at the time of such inspection. The appellant, however, contends that, since the plaintiff was not in possession of any portion of the premises under color of title, his possession of the portion thereof occupied by his said improvement did not suffice to impart notice of his claim of ownership of the entire tract of 40 acres, which he now seeks to have conveyed to him. We are of the opinion, however, that it is not necessary to discuss the question as to whether the plaintiff herein does or does not hold under color of title, in view of our conclusion hereinafter expressed as to the nature and extent of the plaintiff's actual possession of the entire tract.

In the present case the evidence goes much farther than that of merely proving that the plaintiff was in actual possession of the limited area occupied by his dwelling, outhouse and corral, since it sufficiently appears that from the time in the year 1888, when the oral agreement for the purchase of said 40 acres of land was made between the plaintiff and John L. Ivett, the plaintiff took and held possession of the whole of said 40 acres of land, and he then proceeded and has ever since continued to put said land and the whole thereof to the ordinary and usual uses to which said land was adapted, viz., to that of grazing or pasturage purposes, that of pasturing his own cattle and horses upon said land, and that of keeping all other stock off said land. It is true that there is also some evidence that, when the feed ran short upon his own land, he permitted his stock to go on the adjoining lands of Ivett, by an agreement with the latter that he might do so; but we do not regard this latter circumstance as entitled to much significance, and certainly not as a controlling factor in determining the sufficiency of the plaintiff's possession of the land, since in reason, as well as upon authority, a possessor of land using the same for pasturage could neither be expected nor required to continuously keep his stock upon his land after its feed was gone, in order to avail himself of his rights of possession dependent upon his use of the premises for pasturage. Coryell v. Cain, 16 Cal. 573; Webber v. Clarke, 74 Cal. 11, 15 Pac. 431; Brumagim v. Bradshaw, 39 Cal. 24, 46. In the case last cited the court says:

"The general principle which underlies all this class of cases is that the acts of dominion must be adapted to the particular land, its condition, locality, and appropriate use."

The controlling factors in the instant case are: That the plaintiff was actually residing upon the land, and was actually using it for the purposes to which it was adapted, viz. that of pasturage, and that he was maintaining his exclusive possession thereof by keeping the stock of all others off the land. We are of the opinion that these facts, as shown in the evidence, sufficiently prove such actual and exclusive occupancy of the entire tract of 40 acres of the land as to amount to possessio pedis, and, as such, sufficient to impart notice to the purchaser of the plaintiff's rights and equities therein. The very early case of Sunol v. Hepburn, 1 Cal. 254, much relied on by the appellant herein, does not militate against this view. That was a possessory action, wherein the plaintiff relied for his recovery upon the fact that he had cattle on the land, which roamed and grazed at will over a much larger area; the plaintiff making no effort whatever to keep his cattle on the land, or to keep the cattle of others off it. The court properly held these facts insufficient foundation for a possessory action. In the case of Bullock v. Rouse, 81 Cal. 590, 22 Pac. 919, the court made use of the following language:

"One who uses the land for the pasturage of stock may have actual possession thereof without any enclosure, if he employs herders to keep his own stock on the land and other stock off."

We think the appellant unduly emphasizes the phrase "to keep his own stock on the land" in the foregoing extract from that case, since there was no showing therein that the party claiming possession had, either through herders or other means, prevented the escape of his own stock or the intrusion of other stock upon the land, nor that he had any dwelling or other improvements thereon other than a dilapidated fence, forming only a partial improvement. That case is, therefore, not to be taken as controlling authority in the instant case, wherein it was clearly proven that the plaintiff, by watchfulness and herding, kept the stock of all other persons off the land in question, and where, in addition thereto, plaintiff and his family was in the actual occupancy of the portion of the premises covered by his dwelling, outhouses, and corral, and that the defendant had actual knowledge of this latter fact at or shortly before the time of its purchase of the Ivett properties at administrator's sale. We think this evidence is sufficient to justify the finding of the trial court to the effect that the plaintiff was in the actual possession of the whole of said 40-acre tract at the time of the defendant's purchase, and that, this being so, it must be held to have been charged with notice sufficient to put it upon inquiry as to the plaintiff's rights or equities in the premises. It cannot, therefore, be held to have been a bona fide purchaser for value and without notice of the premises affected by this appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; LENNON, J.; WASTE, J.; LAWLOR, J.; SLOANE, J.

WILBUR, J. I dissent. As to the property unoccupied by the buildings and corrals of the plaintiff, I think the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding of notice by reason of possession, because the possession established by the evidence as to the balance of the 40 acres is not that open and visible possession indicating occupation adverse to the record title within the rule as laid down by this court in Randall v. Allen, 180 Cal. 298, 302, 180 Pac. 941. The possession maintained by pasturing stock upon the unenclosed portion of the 40 acres is not in my judgment equivalent in notice to an inclosure by fence within the rule laid down in Havens v. Dale, 18 Cal. 359, 368, where it is held that the possession to be constructive notice to a bona fide purchaser for value "must be evidenced by an actual inclosure, or something equivalent, as showing the extent and the fact of his dominion and control of the premises."

---

(190 Cal. 150)

JANEWAY & CARPENDER v. LONG BEACH PAPER & PAINT CO.
(L. A. 7271

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 1, 1922.)

1. Pleading ⟸126 — Denial of doing three things joined by "and" admission of doing any two.

Denial in answer that defendant made, executed, "and" delivered the contract leaves an admission of doing any two of the three things.

2. Pleading ⟸125—Denial of sale and delivery at a certain place insufficient.

Denial, in action for price, of sale and delivery of goods at a certain place, is insufficient; the place being immaterial.

3. Pleading ⟸124—Denial in action for price held one of correctness of footings.

Denial, in action for price, of execution of the contract, being coupled with the words "at prices therein named," amounting to a certain sum, is equivalent to a denial that the footings were correct.

4. Sales ⟸353(4) — Complaint sufficient to charge defendant as buyer for specified value if contract named no price.

Complaint, alleging that goods of a certain value were delivered to and accepted by defendant, is enough to charge defendant, even if the contract of sale did not name the price.

5. Pleading ⟸126—Denial that a certain sum had not been paid insufficient to raise issue.

Denial that $6,190.88 has not been paid is an admission that any smaller sum is unpaid, and so insufficient to raise an issue; the law disregarding trifles.

6. Pleading ⟸126—Denial as to one count in view of exception insufficient to raise issue.

Denial as to one count that $426 has not been paid, or any part thereof, excepting as set forth in paragraph 18 of the third cause of action, in view of said paragraph 18, alleging that $6,443.89, comprising the balance due on the three counts, has not been paid, nor any part of it, is an admission that any smaller sum than $6,443.88 is unpaid, and so insufficient to raise an issue.

7. Payment ⟸65(6)—Pleading ⟸376—Burden of proving payment on defendant under pleadings admitting original liability.

Defendant's admissions, by pleading, of allegations of the complaint establishing that defendant originally owed a certain sum to plaintiff for goods sold, leaves defendant with the burden of proving payment, allowing plaintiff to rest its case on the pleadings.

8. Appeal and error ⟸1170(3)—Granting motion for judgment harmless, in view of stipulation.

Any error in granting plaintiff's motion for judgment on the pleadings, when under the pleadings defendant had the burden of proof as to payment, was harmless, within Const. art. 6, § 4½, the amount paid being thereupon stipulated, and judgment entered for amount claimed, as thereby reduced.

9. Sales ⟸191—Acceptance of trade acceptances necessary for payment under option in contract.

That under option given buyer in contract for sale to give trade acceptances for the price, if agreeable to both parties, he offered trade acceptances, did not effectuate payment; the seller not accepting them.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Action by Janeway & Carpender, a corporation, against the Long Beach Paper & Paint Company for goods sold. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Scarborough & Bowen, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Bicksler, Smith & Parke, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, C. J. The appeal is from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff upon the pleadings. The complaint was in three counts. The first count alleged that on September 10, 1919, defendant made, executed, and delivered to plaintiff its contract for goods, at the prices therein named, amounting to $6,190.88; that goods of that value were sold and delivered to defendant at plaintiff's mill in New Jersey, and were accepted by defendant. The second count alleges that on October 18, 1919, the defendant made, executed, and delivered its contract for goods to the plaintiff at prices therein named, amounting to $426; that goods of that value were sold and delivered to plaintiff at plaintiff's mill in New Jersey, which were accepted by the defendant. The third count alleges that on April 25, 1920, the defendant made, executed, and delivered to plaintiff its contract for goods at prices therein named, amounting to $4,580.36; that goods of that value were sold and delivered to defendant from plaintiff's mill in New Jersey, and were accepted by defendant. In paragraph 18 of the third cause of action plaintiff alleges that by several transactions set forth therein the sum of $4,605.56 was paid by defendant on said three contracts, leaving $6,443.89 due thereon, and plaintiff alleges that the latter sum has not been paid, nor any part thereof.

The answer denied that on September 10, 1919, or at any other time, or at all, defendant made, executed, and delivered to plaintiff its contract for goods, at prices therein named amounting to $6,190.88, or any other sum, or that goods of that value, or any other sum, were sold or delivered to defendant at plaintiff's mill in New Jersey, or were accepted by him; denied that on October 18, 1919, or at any other time, or at all, defendant made, executed, and delivered its contract for goods at prices therein named, amounting to $426, or that goods of that value, or any other sum, were sold and delivered to defendant from plaintiff's mill in New Jersey; and denies that said goods were accepted by defendant; denies that on April 25, 1920, the defendant made, executed and delivered to plaintiff its certain contract, or any contract, for goods at prices therein named amounting to $4,580.36, or any other sum, or at all, or that said goods of that value, or of any other sum, were sold and delivered to defendant from plaintiff's mill in New Jersey, or were accepted by defendant. Defendant further denies that said sum of $6,190.88, or that said sum of $4,580.36, has not been paid, or that said sum of $426, or any part thereof, has not been paid, excepting as set forth in paragraph 18 of the third cause of action.

[1-4] The answers are not sufficient. They deny that defendant "made, executed, and delivered" the several contracts. Defendant may have "executed and delivered" them, or it may have "made and executed" them, and the denial would be true, and yet the defendant would be liable. By connecting the words together with the conjunction "and" it has limited its denial to a simple statement that it did not do all three of the things, leaving an admission that it did any two of them. It amounts to an admission that it executed the contract, which is all that is necessary to make it liable thereon. Kuhland v. Sedgwick, 17 Cal. 123; Castro v. Wetmore, 16 Cal. 380; Blankman v. Vallejo, 15 Cal. 644; Wise v. Rose, 110 Cal. 163, and More v. Del Valle, 28 Cal. 172. It denies that goods of the value of $6,190.88 were "sold or delivered to defendant" "at plaintiff's mill in New Jersey." But the defendant would be responsible for them if they were sold or delivered at any other place. The allegation that they were sold and delivered at that place was unnecessary and immaterial, if they were sold or delivered to the defendant at another place. The same form of denial is used as to the other counts, and they are likewise insufficient. Again, each denial of the execution of the contracts is coupled with the words "at prices therein named," and this is equivalent to a mere denial that the footings were correct, or in the last count where the denial is that the goods "at the prices therein named amounts to the total sum of $4,580.36 or any other sum, or at all," is a denial that the prices therein named footed up any sum whatever, which would be true if the contract did not set forth any prices. As the complaint was framed, it asserts that goods of that value were delivered to and accepted by the defendant, and this is sufficient to charge the defendant, even if the contract did not name the price.

[5, 6] As to the first count, the only denial of nonpayment is in these words:

"Denies that the said sum of $6,190.88 has not been paid."

This is an admission that the sum of $6,190.87 is unpaid, and as the law disregards trifles it is not sufficient to raise an issue. As to the second count, the denial is as follows:

"Denies that said sum of $426 has not been paid or any part thereof, excepting as set forth in paragraph 18 of the third cause of action herein."

The allegation of nonpayment of this item makes paragraph 18 a part thereof. Paragraph 18 alleges that the sum of $6,443.89, comprising the balance due on the three counts of the complaint, has not been paid, nor any part thereof. This is an admission, therefore, that the sum of $6,443.88 is unpaid on all the counts, and this is one cent less than plaintiff asks. The same rule regarding trifles applies.

[7-9] As to the third count, defendant "denied that the said sum of $4,580.36 or any part thereof, has not been paid." This is a good denial of the allegation of nonpayment. But the admissions of the other essential allegations of the complaint established the proposition that the defendant owed this sum of money to plaintiff for the goods sold to him. When that is established the rule of law is that it then devolves upon the defendant to prove the payment thereof. Melone v. Ruffino, 129 Cal. 518, 62 Pac. 93, 79 Am. St. Rep. 127. Consequently the plaintiff might have rested its case upon the pleadings, and awaited the introduction of proof of payment of this count. or part hereof, by the defendant. If it was technically erroneous to grant the motion, we think it was cured by what took place immediately thereafter, and was entered in the judgment. It appears therefrom that immediately after granting the motion the following occurred:

"It was then stipulated and agreed between counsel for both parties that since the complaint was filed there had been paid plaintiff certain sums which reduced the amount claimed in said complaint, including interest to the sum of $4,675."

And thereupon judgment was rendered against the defendant for $4,675 only. Evidently this allowed for payments made before the answer was filed. It also comes within the scope of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution. And, we may add, that this is evident from the argument in plaintiff's brief in regard to the affirmative defense. It sets up that the Long Beach Paper & Paint Company made the contract set forth in the third count of the complaint; that said contract gave defendant the option to give "trade acceptances" for the amount, if agreeable to both parties; that defendant gave trade acceptances accordingly, but it is entirely silent on the question whether plaintiff ever accepted them. The trade acceptances offered were payable in six installments from March to August, 1921, and from the argument it is plain that they were not accepted. There is therefore no merit in this denial.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHURTLEFF, J.; LENNON, J.; SLOANE, J.; WASTE, J.; WILBUR, J.; LAWLOR, J.

---

190 Cal. 174

PEOPLE v. MARUI. (Cr. 2431.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 7, 1922.)

1. Homicide ⟸253(1)—Evidence held to sustain conviction of murder in first degree.

Evidence held to sustain conviction of murder in the first degree.

2. Homicide ⟸232—Evidence held to prove deliberation and premeditation.

In prosecution for murder in the first degree, evidence held to prove deliberation and premeditation.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; J. A. Bardin, Judge.

T. Marui was convicted of murder in the first degree, with sentence of death, and he appeals. Affirmed.

C. F. Lacey, of Salinas, J. Sherman Woolf, of Monterey, and K. Osado, of Sacramento, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

LAWLOR, J. An information was filed against appellant, T. Marui, in the superior court of the county of Monterey, charging him with the crime of murder. He pleaded not guilty to the charge, and upon the trial the jury rendered a verdict of murder in the first degree, calling for the death penalty. In due course a motion for a new trial was interposed in his behalf and denied, whereupon judgment of death was pronounced upon him. He has appealed from the order denying his motion for a new trial and from the judgment of conviction. We have made a careful examination of the record with the view of determining whether there is any reason why the judgment of death should not be affirmed.

It appears from the record that at about 2:30 p. m. on October 28, 1921, in the city of Monterey, appellant shot Tsunematsu Shintani and his wife. The wife apparently was instantly killed, and the husband lingered for about two hours, when he died from the effect of the bullet wounds. Hemorrhage of the liver and kidneys was given as the cause of his death. This prosecution is alone for the killing of the husband.

The principals to the tragedy and many of the witnesses are Japanese. The testimony of the Japanese witnesses was taken through the medium of Japanese interpreters, and, because of this, some difficulty has been experienced in following the testimony, as it is not always clear whether the interpreter simply repeated the declarations of the witnesses or gave his own understanding of what the witnesses meant to convey. We think, however, the evidence we shall touch upon is correctly stated, is fairly reflective of the record as a whole, and is sufficient for the purposes of the appeal.

The tragedy occurred at the home of the Shintanis, which, for the preceding ten months, had been on Foam street in the city of Monterey. Appellant had been a lodger in the Shintani household for some three years, but three or four weeks before the fatal meeting changed his abode and took lodgings in the residence of Mrs. Merrill at No. 525 Lake street, in the same city. Appellant was 43 years of age, and Shintani two years his senior. The slain couple had four children.

Two of the principal witnesses were Mrs. Mitzi Natsuda and Mrs. Max Kozeni, the former residing on the opposite side of Foam street from the Shintani home, and the latter in the adjoining house nearer Pacific Grove.

---

They were friends of Shintani and his wife and acquaintances of appellant.

Apparently the killing was the result of an incident which had occurred about three weeks before. It appears that Mrs. Shintani requested appellant to purchase for her, at Goldstein's store, a pair of corduroy pants for one of her boys. The article was secured and appellant reported that it cost $2.25, whereupon Mrs. Shintani said to appellant she thought he paid too much and asked him if he had the bill. It seems that some time before she bought a similar article for another of her boys at the same store at a less figuré. Appellant appeared to regard the incident in the light of an insult, that his honor and integrity had been questioned, and thereafter that thought evidently possessed him, finally culminating in the sacrifice of the two lives. The evidence indicates that he was far more impressed with the incident than were the Shintanis, for while he seemed to be obsessed by it, making it the subject of every conversation when they met, referring to it on all occasions and expressing concern as to its effect on his standing in the Japanese community, they apparently tried to convince him his character had not been impugned; in short, their position seems to have been that the price was spoken of only because of Mrs. Shintani's purchase on the previous occasion. It might have been inferred that appellant changed his abode on account of the trouble.

According to the evidence, during the forenoon of the day of the shooting, appellant called on Mrs. Natsuda. He remained for a while, but no allusion was made to the subject which in the light of the sequel must have been uppermost in his mind. Shortly before 2:30 Mrs. Natsuda called at the home of the Shintanis and found them together with appellant in the kitchen. Two of the four children were playing on the floor. Appellant was dwelling on the "insult" which he insisted the Shintanis had offered him. Apparently they were disinclined to pursue the matter with him, for Mrs. Shintani occupied herself reading the Japanese newspaper, and at intervals the husband paid some attention to the children. Mrs. Natsuda took no especial interest in the conversation between the parties. We quote from her testimony:

"Q. Did you hear any conversation between those three after you seated yourself in the kitchen? A. Talking about those pants.

"Q. What pants? What did you hear about pants? A. Talking about those pants or trousers and regarding about the price. Mr. and Mrs. Shintani asked Marui about the bill, where is it?

"Q. What else was said? A. Then when asking about this bill Marui is very much dissatisfied about it, and Marui demanded Shintani for a written excuse and not insulting him like that again. * * * Marui asked Mr. and Mrs. Shintani to apologize to writing on the form of a letter to a form of apology which will not happen again, something like that. He is very much dissatisfied.

"Q. An apology for what? A. Well, that is, he purchased the goods for them, and they have to trust what he done for it, and as they are asking the price and they say it is kind of insulting, and therefore Marui asking to Mr. and Mrs. Shintani for apologies.

"Q. For an apology in writing? A. In writing.

"Q. What did Mr. or Mrs. Shintani say, if anything, when the defendant asked for an apology in writing? A. Mr. and Mrs. Shintani say to Marui if it is very much a necessity to do so well they might well do it, and a few conversations between them, and then Marui pulled out a pistol. * * *

"Q. Did you hear the word "thief" or "robber" used by anybody? A. Well, Marui said to the Shintanis, he says: 'You think I am a thief?' But Mrs. Shintani told Marui 'I don't think any minute you are a thief.' That is Marui said so. * * *

"Q. What did she say? A. Sorry asking for that bill; it isn't meaning to doubt you or anything like that so apologize you know Mrs. Shintani is once in a while.

"Q. She said that several times, didn't she? A. Once or twice."

Evidently appellant had come prepared to force the issue for Mrs. Natsuda had been present but 10 or 15 minutes when he arose and drew a pistol from his right-hand coat pocket. Neither of the Shintanis was armed. When Mrs. Natsuda observed appellant's movement she ran from the kitchen on to the back porch, calling to Mrs. Kozeni for help. As she reached the porch she heard the sound of two shots in quick succession. She left Mrs. Kozeni, who had appeared in response to her cries, and proceeded to the sidewalk in front of the house. About four minutes later appellant came up from behind from the other side of Foam street and said to her: "If you spread any of this news, I will kill you also." He continued on his way down the street toward old Monterey and disappeared from view. She then re-entered the house by the front door.

Mrs. Kozeni was the first to reach the Shintani house. She made her way from her yard into the kitchen, where she found Mrs. Shintani lying on the floor dead. She saw Mr. Shintani lying on the floor of the storeroom, his face turned upward. He was wounded in the body and head. Appellant was standing in the storeroom reloading his pistol. He said to her: "If you don't leave, I will shoot you." She immediately started for the door, holding her hands above her head as she took her departure. Mr. Shintani had asked her to get a doctor. She summoned Dr. H. S. Hoyt, and on his arrival the wounded man was removed to a hospital where, as already stated, he died in about two hours.

It was shown that appellant, about September 15, had purchased from a second-hand store the .38-caliber revolver with which he killed the couple, that three or four days before the shooting, in a conversation with one O. Enokida, he had declared, referring to the Shintanis, that he would shoot them, and that he had said to another man about three weeks before the tragedy that he had gone to the Shintani house intending to kill them both, but that, as Mrs. Shantani was there alone, he did not carry his purpose into effect. This was communicated to the Shintanis and Mrs. Kozeni by Enokida.

It further appeared in evidence that appellant was taken into custody at Tarpy Flat, about five miles from Monterey on the Salinas road, on November 1. He was detected hiding in the brush near a knoll, the neighbors having noticed that some one came in sight to get water. On being apprehended he inquired if Mr. Shintani was dead, and when told that both had died, he said: "I want to shoot myself." Appellant stated that when he was hiding he dreamed the Shantanis were there with him, or that he saw them in a dream. He identified a box of cartridges which had been found in his room as having been purchased by him from the second-hand store; also a .38-caliber revolver in two parts, containing two empty shells, which was found in a closet between two rooms in some shavings in the Shintani house. This evidence tended to connect him up with the revolver and cartridges, which were used in the killing. Appellant made a statement, which was taken down in shorthand, and reduced to writing, to the effect that he called on the Shintanis in order to have a final straightening up of the difficulty, and that, if that could not be done, he was determined to fight with them; that he had a revolver in his pocket when he went to the house; that they talked for a while, when he got up from the table and drew a gun; that Shintani came toward him and, putting his hand on appellant's shoulder, said: "Wait, wait. Don't do that way, we can fix up everything and settle trouble." Whereupon, he shot Shintani. The latter took hold of appellant's right arm and followed him into the storeroom, where he fell. Appellant further stated that he then tried to shoot himself, to commit suicide, but the gun would not work; that on going into the kitchen he saw Mrs. Shantani lying on the floor; that his mind was clear up to the time of the shooting, and that he had been "suspicious" of Shintani. It was testified appellant was sober.

[1] From the foregoing summary it is plain that the verdict rendered is amply supported by the evidence. The case went to the jury on the testimony of the prosecution alone. For three weeks or more appellant had dwelt on the asserted "insult" to his honor, which undoubtedly furnished the motive for the murder. No attempt was made to go into the details of the purchase of the trousers, whether the price stated was the price paid or whether there was any basis in fact for the comments made by the Shintanis in that behalf. It appears certain from the evidence that appellant felt he had been disgraced by the action of the Shintanis, and that, as they did not relieve him from the imputation which he felt had been put upon him, he resolved to kill them, and carried the intention into effect.

[2] There can be no question that the specific elements of deliberation and premeditation in murder of the first degree are fully established. His conduct in bringing up the subject at every opportunity following the pants incident, purchasing a revolver and cartridges; his declaration that on an earlier occasion he had formed the intent to kill and had proceeded to put it into effect but reconsidered when the wife alone was present; his antecedent threats; his going to the house armed on the day of the murder; and the admissions contained in his statement made to the officers—all tended to prove the deliberate and premeditated intention to take life. No question was raised on the trial as to his mental responsibility for the deed, and consciousness of guilt might be inferred from his immediate flight from the scene of the crime, and his remaining in hiding until he was apprehended.

In the conduct of the trial the court appeared to realize that appellant was in a defenseless position. The rulings on the objections of counsel were marked by a great liberality in his favor, and conserved the presumption of innocence. Not a single debatable question is presented thereby. The charge to the jury is a model of fairness and impartiality, and in the proceedings after verdict a scrupulous regard for the rights of appellant is apparent. His counsel safeguarded his rights at every turn, and spared no proper effort to save him from the consequences of his deed, and the record shows no error which demands consideration on appeal.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; WILBUR, J.; LENNON, J.; WASTE, J.; SLOANE, J.; SHURTLEFF, J.

190 Cal. 124

PABST et al. v. FINMAND et al. (Sac. 3132.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 27, 1922. Rehearing Denied Dec. 27, 1922.)

1. Waters and water courses ⟸138—Use on one fork of stream gives no prescriptive right against owner on other fork.

Use of water from one fork of a stream affords no basis for a prescriptive right against an owner on the other fork; it interfering in no way with the flow on the other fork, and so not invading the right of the owner thereon.

2. Waters and water courses ⟸138—No prescriptive right from use by upper riparian not interfering with lower owner's use in absence of notice.

Continuous use of water for the statutory period by an upper riparian owner gave no prescriptive right against a lower owner, whose use of water was never in any way interfered with thereby, and who had no notice or knowledge that the other's use was under an adverse claim, rather than under his right as riparian owner.

3. Waters and water courses ⟸138—Riparian owner entitled to reasonable amount of water.

A riparian owner is entitled to a reasonable amount of water for use on his land; such amount varying with the circumstances of each case, and also from year to year; and the rights in that respect of the several riparian owners are correlative and interdependent, so that one cannot be said to be using an unreasonable amount, demanding complaint by the others to preserve their rights, so long as enough is left for them.

4. Waters and water courses ⟸138—No prescriptive right from upper riparian owner using all the water when lower owner has no desire to use any.

For an upper riparian owner to gain prescriptive right to waters, the other party must be clearly shown to have actual notice of adverse claim, or the circumstances must be such that he must be presumed to have known of such claim; and use of all the water when the lower owner has no desire to use any of it is not enough.

5. Waters and water courses ⟸39—Return of water to original stream not a test of lands being riparian.

It is not a test of the riparian character of lands, relative to right to use of waters thereon, whether water used thereon must be returned to the original stream.

6. Waters and water courses ⟸140—Actual settlement on riparian land with intent to patent enough to protect from subsequent appropriation of water.

Actual settlement on riparian land, preceding filing of formal application in land office, with intent of acquiring title by patent, is enough to protect it from subsequent appropriation of water.

7. Waters and water courses ⟸138—Nonriparian owner's diversion at once hostile to riparian owners relative to prescriptive right.

Relative to a nonriparian owner acquiring prescriptive right to use water of a stream, his diversion of it is at once an invasion of and hostile to the rights of riparian owners, though there is no damage to their present use.

8. Waters and water courses ⟸152(6)—Burden on claimant of prescriptive right to show quantity to which he is entitled.

One claiming prescriptive right to use of water from a stream has the burden of showing the quantity to which he is entitled.

9. Waters and water courses ⟸143—Quantity acquired by prescription amount applied to beneficial use.

The quantity of water acquired by one by prescription is not determined by the capacity of his ditch or the flow therein, but is limited to amount applied to beneficial use, that is actually used and reasonably necessary for the useful purpose to which the water has been applied; the amount necessary being a question of fact in each case, and not being shown merely by amount used.

10. Waters and water courses ⟸137—No prescriptive right to continuous use from use part of time.

Prescriptive right to use continuously a certain quantity of water is not acquired by using it part of the time.

11. Waters and water courses ⟸152(11)—Judgment for prescriptive use construed for continuous use.

A judgment for a certain quantity of water by prescription, not limiting the use of the water to any particular time or season, is to be considered one for continuous use.

12. Waters and water courses ⟸152(8)—Finding of beneficial use not supported by evidence.

A finding of beneficial use of amount of water diverted and claimed under prescriptive right held not supported by evidence consisting of vague and general testimony that the amount diverted was "necessary."

13. Waters and water courses ⟸143—Carrying capacity of ditch tested at smallest point.

The carrying capacity of a ditch, relative to amount of water diverted and claimed under prescriptive right, is to be tested by such capacity at its smallest point.

On Petition for Rehearing.

14. Waters and water courses ⟸138—Use of water from above fork for use of lands on forks attributed to riparian right.

Relative to acquisition of prescriptive right by diversion of water from above the fork of a stream by one owning lands on both forks, for use thereon, all such lands are to be deemed riparian, and consequently the use of the water attributed to his riparian right.

⟸For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

15. Waters and water courses ⟸138—Diversion of water from one fork for use of land riparian to other fork hostile.

Diversion by owner of separate lands on the two forks of a stream of water from one fork for use of land riparian only to the other fork is hostile to the riparian rights of lands bordering on the fork from which the water is taken.

16. Waters and water courses ⟸138—Taking of water from stream for use on riparian land, though not at owner's water front, attributable to riparian right.

The taking by an owner of land riparian to one fork of a stream of water from such fork for use on such land is attributable to exercise of his riparian right, though the diverting ditch is at a point a short distance from his water frontage.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Modoc County; C. A. Raker, Judge.

Action by Charlie Lee Pabst and others against H. H. Finmand and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Daly B. Robnett, of Alturas, for appellants.

Jamison & Wylie, of Alturas, and N. J. Barry, of Susanville, for respondents.

LENNON, J. This action was instituted by the plaintiffs, Charlie Lee Pabst and the Priors, against H. H. Finmand and N. H. Finmand and the Cambrons, to quiet title to the waters of Eagle creek, in the county of Modoc, state of California. Eagle creek, rising in the Warner Mountains, west of the lands of both plaintiffs and defendants, flows in a single channel until just before it reaches the land of the plaintiffs, Priors, and the defendant, N. H. Finmand. There it forks and the north branch flows across the northwest corner of N. H. Finmand's lands and across the Prior lands. The south branch flows across the south portion of N. H. Finmand's lands and thence onto and across the lands of plaintiff Pabst.

The lands of the other defendant, H. H. Finmand, are not riparian to the creek. They lie to the west of the lands of the plaintiffs Priors and to the northwest of the lands of the plaintiff Pabst and the defendant N. H. Finmand, and are irrigated by means of two ditches, the "Gee" and the "Grider" ditches, which run from the main channel of Eagle creek before it forks, northerly to the lands of H. H. Finmand.

The trial court found that the lands of the defendant N. H. Finmand were riparian to Eagle creek, and that the defendant N. H. Finmand was entitled, as an appropriator, to a first right to 300 inches of the water of Eagle creek, measured under a 4-inch pressure, and that said defendant also had a prescriptive right to said quantity of water. The court found that the defendant H. H. Finmand was entitled to a first right of 200 inches of water from Eagle creek through what is known as the "Gee" ditch, and a first right to 200 inches of water through what is known as the "Grider" ditch, both under a right by prior appropriation and by prescription. Judgment was accordingly rendered and entered in favor of the defendant N. H. Finmand for 300 miner's inches of water under a 4-inch pressure, and in favor of H. H. Finmand for 400 miner's inches of water under a 4-inch pressure, for the irrigation of his lands through the Gee and Grider ditches. It is from this judgment that plaintiffs appeal.

The N. H. Finmand lands being riparian, whereas the H. H. Finmand lands are nonriparian, the rights arising from the use of water on these different tracts are necessarily based upon different principles, and for this reason these different tracts of lands will be considered separately.

As to the rights of the N. H. Finmand lands, it is conceded by counsel for defendants that the right to the amount of water awarded to the defendants by the judgment of the trial court must rest upon a prescriptive right alone. This is so for the reason that, as admitted by defendants, the right by appropriation is not supported by the evidence, and, while the trial court found that N. H. Finmand was a riparian owner, no judgment was given such defendant based upon his right as a riparian owner, and no attempt was made to apportion the waters among the plaintiffs and defendants as riparian owners.

[1] The judgment for a prescriptive right was given in favor of the N. H. Finmand lands against both the Prior lands and the Pabst lands. The N. H. Finmand lands claimed this right, and it was adjudged to those lands upon the theory that said lands had gained it by adverse use of the water which was taken from the south fork of the creek. As to the Prior lands no right could be gained by prescription. This is so because the water used on the N. H. Finmand lands was taken from the south fork of the stream, which runs below and does not border the Prior lands, where as the water diverted for use on the Prior lands is taken from the north fork of the creek, which runs by a small portion of the northwest corner of the N. H. Finmand lands and on to the Prior lands. The Prior lands, therefore, are riparian only to the north fork of the stream. A right can be gained by prescription only by acts which operate as an invasion of the rights of the person against whom the right is sought and which afford a ground of action by such party against such claimant, and it is a rule of law so well settled by decisions in this and other states as to scarcely need any citation to support it that a lower use, since it interferes in no way with the flow above, constitutes no invasion of the upper riparian owner's right, and cannot, therefore, afford any basis for a prescriptive right. Hargrave v. Cook, 108 Cal. 72, 41 Pac. 18, 30 L. R. A. 390; Bathgate v. Irvine, 126 Cal. 135, 58 Pac. 442, 77 Am. St. Rep. 158; Walker v. Lillingston, 137 Cal. 401, 70 Pac. 282; Perry v. Calkins, 159 Cal. 175, 113 Pac. 136; Miller & Lux v. Enterprise Canal & Land Co., 169 Cal. 415, 147 Pac. 567; San Joaquin, etc., v. Worswick, 187 Cal. 674, 203 Pac. 999; Peake v. Harris (Cal. App.) 192 Pac. 310.

[2] As to the Pabst lands, the N. H. Finmand lands are the upper riparian lands, and the Pabst lands are lower riparian lands. It is the contention of defendants that the continuous use of a certain amount of water each year for the statutory period of time gave to them a prescriptive right to that certain quantity of water so used by them, and this in spite of the fact that the use of the water by the lower riparian owner was never in any manner interrupted or interfered with by such use, and in the absence of any indication or bringing of knowledge home to the lower riparian owner that the upper riparian owner was claiming such right, not as a riparian owner, but adversely to him. This contention cannot be maintained. In the absence of a showing that the upper owner is using the water under a claim of prescriptive right, the lower owner has the right to presume that such owner is only taking that to which he is entitled as a riparian owner by virtue of his riparian right. Skelly v. Cowell, 37 Cal. App. 215, 173 Pac. 609; Oliver v. Robnett (Cal. Sup.) 210 Pac. 408. Such use was not hostile unless there was an actual clash between the rights of the respective owners. While there was sufficient water flowing down the stream to supply the wants of all parties, its use by one was not an invasion of the rights of the other. Anaheim W. Co. v. Semi-Tropic Co., 64 Cal. 185, 30 Pac. 623; Half Moon Bay Land Co. v. Cowell, 173 Cal. 543, 160 Pac. 675; Peake v. Harris (Cal. App.) 192 Pac. 310.

[3] A riparian owner is entitled to a reasonable amount of water for use on his riparian lands. What is a reasonable amount varies with the circumstances of each particular case and also varies from year to year, for the amount which might be reasonable in a season of plenty might be manifestly unreasonable in a season of drought. Nor is the question of reasonableness to be tested solely by the needs of the upper riparian proprietor. The rights of riparian proprietors are correlative, and the "reasonable" amount to which any one riparian owner is entitled is to be measured by comparison with the needs of the other riparian proprietors. The fact that there was always sufficient water coming down the creek for the Pabst lands with the exception of the two years prior to the trial is undisputed by any evidence offered by the defendants. And, so long as defendants left sufficient water in the stream for the use of the lower riparian proprietors, it cannot be said that they were using an unreasonable amount, and, so long as they were not using an "unreasonable" amount, the plaintiffs had no cause to complain, nor was any right of theirs invaded. Half Moon Bay Land Co. v. Cowell, 173 Cal. 543, 160 Pac. 675.

[4] The adverse use must be such as to raise a presumption of a grant of an easement as the only hypothesis on which to account for the other party's failure to complain thereof. Lakeside Ditch Co. v. Crane, 80 Cal. 181, 22 Pac. 76. In the absence of any facts showing an actual knowledge by plaintiffs of the adverse nature of defendants' claim or of any facts sufficient to create a presumption of a knowledge of that claim, it cannot be said that a failure of plaintiffs to assert their rights by bringing an action against the defendants was such a submission as could be accounted for only on the hypothesis of a grant. Indeed, defendants have not shown such an unreasonable use of the water on their lands as to put plaintiffs on notice of their claim. We do not mean to hold that a right may not be gained by an upper riparian proprietor by prescription, but to do so it must be clearly shown either that actual notice of the adverse claim of such owner has been brought home to the other party, or that the circumstances are such, as, for instance, the use of all of the water of the creek, that such party must be presumed to have known of the adverse claim. In the instant case there was nothing to indicate to the lower riparian owners that the owners of the N. H. Finmand lands were exercising, or attempting to exercise, any more than their riparian rights, and, in the absence of such indication to plaintiffs that the owners of the N. H. Finmand lands were asserting a right hostile to the rights of the plaintiffs, no prescriptive title was acquired. Even if the upper riparian owner is using all the water of the stream, still, if the lower riparian owner is not then using any and has no desire to do so, such use by the upper riparian owner would not be adverse, and, if continued five years, would not gain him a prescriptive right.

[5] Some point seems to be made of the fact that the water after use by the defendants could not be returned to the original stream, and because of this fact it is argued that said lands are nonriparian. Of course, there is no merit in this contention. The fact that the water used upon riparian lands must be returned to the original steam is not a test of the riparian character of the land. It is but an incident of the riparian use.

There is no evidence, pro and con, in this case as to whether or not the water referred to could be returned to its original source, and therefore we are not called upon to decide what would be the rule and relative rights of the parties where the water could not be returned.

[6] As to the H. H. Finmand lands the right to 400 inches of water was based by the trial court upon a title by prior appropriation and by prescription. There can, of course, be no question as to any riparian rights attaching, since these lands nowhere touch or border upon Eagle creek. Both the Prior and Pabst lands were settled prior to the appropriation of water for the H. H. Finmand lands through the Gee ditch, so the question of whether or not these lands of H. H. Finmand are entitled to a right by prior appropriation, as distinguished from a prescriptive right, through that ditch depends solely upon the question of whether the riparian rights attached to the Prior and Pabst lands as of the date of settlement upon them. It is well settled that a patent from the United States government operates to transfer title not merely from the date of patent, but, relating back, it becomes operative as of the date of the inception of the right to such land and cuts off all subsequent claims of others, whether they be to the lands or to any of the incidents thereof. Kinney on Irrigation and Water Rights, § 755. It is insisted by defendants that the date of the inception of the right is the date of the filing of the formal application for the land, and not the date of actual settlement thereon. Cases are cited by defendants in which it is held that riparian rights are protected from the filing of entry in the land office. In none of these cases, however, is the question of whether or not a mere occupancy, with the intention of taking further steps necessary for the completion of title, is sufficient to cut off subsequent rights, involved. While it is true that as against the United States the inception of the right of a settler relates only to the date of filing application, actual settlement gives to such settler a preference as to such filing, so that, as to subsequent parties other than the United States, the inception of the right is the date of settlement. In view of the fact that the rights of both the appropriator and the settler are based upon priority in time of taking the initial step, actual settlement upon the land with the intention of subsequently acquiring a completed title by patent is sufficient, we think, to create an equitable right in the land so settled upon by a bona fide settler as to cut off all intervening rights, including those of a subsequent appropriator. The right acquired by a prior appropriator relates back to the first step taken, and we are of the opinion that the right of a settler should likewise date back to the first step taken, which in this case was actual settlement, rather than to the intermediate step of filing a formal application in the land office. Sturr v. Beck, 133 U. S. 541, 10 Sup. Ct. 350, 33 L. Ed. 761; Faull v. Cooke, 19 Or. 455, 26 Pac. 662, 20 Am. St. Rep. 836; Lone Tree Ditch Co. v. Cyclone Ditch Co., 15 S. D. 519, 91 N. W. 352; Stenger v. Tharp, 17 S. D. 13, 94 N. W. 402; Redwater Land & Canal Co. v. Jones, 27 S. D. 194, 130 N. W. 85. As to the Grider ditch there is some testimony in support of defendants' contention that a right was gained through such ditch by prior appropriation. Inasmuch, however, as defendants' contention that a right by adverse user to the water of Eagle creek through both the Gee and Grider ditches must be sustained, and the quantity of water to which the defendants are entitled, whether by prior appropriation or by prescription, is limited to the quantity of water actually diverted and beneficially applied to the land in question, the solution of this question is not necessary to a determination of the rights of the parties.

[7] It is the contention of plaintiffs that there was no invasion of plaintiffs' riparian rights by the nonriparian owners of the H. H. Finmand lands by the diversion by such nonriparian owners of water which the riparian owners did not need, and therefore no prescriptive right to the use of the water could be acquired in the absence of a showing of actual damage to the lands of the riparian owners caused by a deprivation of the water. As to a nonriparian owner the riparian owner is under no duty to share the waters of the creek, and the slightest use by such nonriparian owner diminishes to some extent the flow of the stream. Obviously, there is no question of reasonable use in the sense in which that term is applied to the rights of respective riparian owners, since a riparian owner, as against a nonriparian owner, is entitled to the full flow of the stream without the slightest diminution. The initial step in the diversion of the water by the nonriparian owner is therefore an invasion of the right of the lower riparian owner, and every subsequent diversion is a further invasion of that right. Against a person who seeks to divert water to nonriparian lands, the riparian owner is entitled to restrain any diversion, and he is not required to show any damage to his use. Although no damage to the present use of the riparian owner results from the diversion, yet damage to the future use may result, and an injunction will be granted to prevent the diversion from growing into a right by the lapse of the statutory period. Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 4 Pac. 919, 10 Pac. 674; Anaheim Union Water Co. v. Fuller, 150 Cal. 327, 88 Pac. 978, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1062; Miller & Lux v. Madera Canal Co., 155 Cal. 59, 99 Pac. 502, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 391. In the instant case the adverse use of the water on nonriparian lands was continued "openly and notoriously" for a period longer than five years, and, the slightest use by the owners of these lands being notice to all the lower riparian owners that a hostile right was being asserted, a prescriptive right was acquired by such adverse use by those lands.

[8, 9] Conceding that a right to the use of a certain quantity of water had been acquired by prescription, it was necessary for defendants to show the quantity of water to which they were entitled. The quantity of water to which a person is entitled by prescription is not determined by the capacity of the ditch, but is limited to the amount applied to a beneficial use; that is, the amount actually used and reasonably necessary for the useful purpose to which the water has been applied. California, etc., Co. v. Madera Irrigation Co., 167 Cal. 78, 138 Pac. 718; Haight v. Costanich, 184 Cal. 426, 194 Pac. 26; Northern Cal. P. Co. v. Flood, 186 Cal. 301, 304, 199 Pac. 315. The amount necessary for a beneficial use is a question of fact in each case. And while, if the entire flow of water in a ditch was being beneficially used all of the time, a right to the entire flow would be acquired if it was continued for five years, manifestly the mere use alone of a definite quantity of water upon a parcel of land is not sufficient proof that the use was beneficial to its fullest extent, since it may be that more water was being used than was required for the irrigation of that particular tract, and, if so, such excess use obviously could not be termed a "beneficial use." California, etc., Co. v. Madera Irr. Co., 167 Cal. 78, 138 Pac. 718; Turner v. East Side Canal, etc., Co., 169 Cal. 652, 147 Pac. 579; Northern California P. Co. v. Flood, supra. Claimants, to gain a right to the use of a definite amount of water, must show that the quantity of water awarded them has been actually diverted, that it was applied to a beneficial use, and that the amount claimed was reasonably necessary for such use. Defendants have attempted to do this by the testimony of a qualified surveyor as to the capacity of the ditches as they enter the lands of defendants, the testimony of other witnesses that the size of the ditches has remained unchanged, testimony that the water in the ditches had run to their full capacity, that crops have been raised by irrigation, and the testimony of two witnesses, one of them the former owner of the H. H. Finmand lands, that the use of the amount diverted was "necessary" for such irrigation. There is, however, uncontradicted testimony that, although at certain seasons of the year the ditches ran to their full capacity, yet at other seasons they ran much lower. Indeed, at the time of the trial the testimony of the surveyor was that there was only 11½ inches running in the two branches of the Grider ditch through which the defendants claim a right to 200 miner's inches. And, although there is testimony that defendants used all they wanted, there is no testimony to prove the use of any specific quantity of water for any particular time. The same witnesses for the defendants, who testified that they used all of the water from the ditch on the lands, also testified that they turned it off and on just as they needed it.

[10, 11] The use of all of the water of a ditch or of a part thereof for only a portion of the time is not sufficient to give title to that quantity of water continuously. Haight v. Costanich, supra. In Northern California Power Co. Consolidated v. Flood, 186 Cal. 301, 199 Pac. 315, it was pointed out that the evidence left the question of the use of the water during the nighttime uncertain, not showing clearly whether the continuous use spoken of was during the day only or both day and night during the irrigating season, and the court, pointing out that the value of the water for irrigation was too great to permit a landowner to gain a right thereto for the entire 24 hours of each day by using the same for only half or any portion of the whole, held that he gained a prescriptive right only for the period during which he had used it continuously. In view of the fact that the judgment of the trial court in the instant case does not limit the use of the water to any particular time or to any season of the year, it must be inferred that the right was given to use the water continuously. There being no evidence of a continuous use, the finding that defendants had diverted and were entitled to 400 miner's inches without limitation as to the time of use cannot be sustained.

[12] Nor can there be said to be substantial evidence in support of the contention of beneficial use—that is, as to the amount reasonably necessary for the irrigation of the tract in question. The question of what quantity of water is reasonably required for irrigation is necessarily a complicated one dependent upon many different facts. The character of the soil, the area sought to be irrigated, the climatic conditions, the location and altitudes of the lands to be irrigated, the kinds of crops to be raised, the length of the irrigation seasons, must all be taken into consideration and weighed as well with such other circumstances as may be peculiar to each particular case. Hough v. Porter, 51 Or. 318, 95 Pac. 732, 98 Pac. 1083, 102 Pac. 728. The only evidence introduced by defendants in support of their contention that the amount diverted by them had been applied to a beneficial use and was reasonably necessary for the cultivation of the said tract of land was the vague and general testimony of the two witnesses that the amount diverted was "necessary." While conceding the difficulty of proving the quantity of water beneficially used, nevertheless, considering the complicated nature of the question and in view of the declared policy of this state to require the highest and greatest duty of water because of the immense importance to the state of the economical use of water, this testimony is not sufficient to support the finding of the court that 400 inches of water had been used and was reasonably required for the irrigation of the land in question. By mathematical demonstration 400 miner's inches of water measured under a 4-inch pressure applied for a year, which is the amount awarded by the judgment, and which it is claimed by defendants is necessary, would equal approximately 5,760 acre-feet, or over 19 feet for each acre of the 300-acre H. H. Finmand tract of land. That this amount is reasonably necessary for a beneficial use is palpably improbable. Indeed, it is conceded by counsel for defendants that the amount awarded "seems exorbitant." This court is not therefore bound to sustain a finding based on such testimony. Whited v. Calvin, 55 Or. 98, 105 Pac. 396.

[13] It is also insisted by the plaintiffs that the testimony of the surveyor as to the carrying capacity of the Grider ditch measured at the points where the two branches thereof enter the H. H. Finmand lands is not sufficient to support the finding that the amount of water as measured by the capacity of the ditches at those points was the amount of water actually diverted. This contention is based upon the testimony of the same witness to the effect that by measurements taken some distance further up the stream he estimated the maximum carrying capacity of the two ditches which branch off from the Grider ditch to be 100 inches. Obviously the carrying capacity of the ditches is to be tested by its carrying capacity at its smallest point, and not by its carrying capacity at its largest point. It is insisted by defendants that the testimony of the surveyor was in the first instance only an estimate which was corrected by his later testimony based upon actual measurements, and that his testimony in both instances referred to the capacity of the same ditches at the same point. Upon a new trial of this case it would be well to have this point cleared up.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; WASTE, J.; LAWLOR, J.; SLOANE, J.; WILBUR, J.; SHURTLEFF, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. [14, 15] The sole point presented on the petition for a rehearing, and presented for the first time, is that 160 acres of the 240 acres N. H. Finmand lands is riparian to the north branch of Eagle creek, and that therefore the taking of water from a point on the south fork of the creek below the forks of the creek, by means of a diverting ditch for the irrigation of said 150 acres, has ripened into a prescriptive right to the use of such water. It may be conceded that the 160 acres in question are shown by the record before us to be nonriparian to the south fork of Eagle creek; and it may likewise be conceded that the evidence adduced upon the whole case would support a finding that the said 160 acres are entitled to a prescriptive right to the use, through the medium of the diverting ditch in question, of such an amount of water from the south fork of Eagle creek as was actually and reasonably used and applied to a beneficial purpose.

Evidently the allegation of the defendants' cross-complaint and the finding of the trial court that all of the N. H. Finmand lands, the 160 acres mentioned and 80 acres more, were riparian to Eagle creek was made upon the theory that, inasmuch as the 160 acres were riparian to the north fork and the 80 acres were riparian to the south fork, the whole tract was riparian to the main stream. As pointed out in the original opinion, the trial court ignored the finding that all of the N. H. Finmand lands were riparian to Eagle creek, and did not attempt to base any judgment thereon. Therefore, for the purpose of a new trial, it will suffice to say at this time, upon that phase of the case which involves the issue of the prescriptive right in question raised by the cross-complaint of the defendants, that so far as the diversion of water above the fork of Eagle creek is concerned all of the lands upon both forks should be deemed riparian, and consequently the use of water diverted from above the place where the stream forks is an exercise of riparian ownership. If, however, water is diverted from one fork for use upon lands which are riparian only to the other fork, such diversion is hostile to the riparian rights of lands bordering upon the fork from which the water is taken. That is to say, if the N. H. Finmand 160 acres diverted and used water from the south fork of the creek, and said 160 acres are riparian only to the north fork, then such diversion and use is hostile to the riparian owners on the south fork and an invasion of their rights and may ripen into a prescriptive right. If, on the other hand, water which would normally flow into the north fork was by diverting dams caused to flow into the south fork and then taken therefrom for the purpose of irrigating the N. H. Finmand 160 acres, which were riparian only to the north fork, such use to the extent of the amount of water so taken would be an exercise of the riparian right to the north fork of the creek of the N. H. Finmand 160-acre tract.

[16] It should be noted, however, that the finding of the trial court in response to the issue of the prescriptive right in question grants to the N. H. Finmand lands in their entirety—the upper 160 acres and the lower 80 acres—280 inches of water of Eagle creek measured under a 4-inch pressure. The record shows that only the 160 acres would be entitled to a prescriptive right to the water of the south fork of Eagle creek, and therefore the finding of the trial court that the entire 240 acres of the N. H. Finmand lands had acquired a prescriptive right to the water of the south fork of Eagle creek is not sustained by the evidence. This is so because it appears from the evidence that 80 inches of the 280 inches of water awarded to the N. H. Finmand lands under a prescriptive right were taken from the south fork of Eagle creek and delivered upon the 80-acre tract through the medium of a second diverting ditch at a point below the ditch which diverted the water of the south fork onto the 160 acres of land. The 80 acres of land are undeniably riparian to the south fork of the creek, and, whether the water used for the irrigation of those particular acres was taken from a point where the creek bordered thereon or from some nearby point, the taking would be that of a riparian owner, and the rights of the respective parties to the water so taken are to be measured and ascertained by the rules covering and controlling the rights of riparian owners.

With reference to the question of whether or not the exercise by an upper riparian owner of his riparian right is to be deemed hostile to those below him, the question is one of fact to be tried and determined by the trial court. The exercise of the mere riparian right can never be hostile to the land below. Where, however, the use is under such circumstances as to be adverse and under a claim of right asserted against lower riparian owners, it may ripen into prescriptive title.

Rehearing denied.

SHAW, C. J., and LENNON, WARD, WASTE, LAWLOR, SLOANE, and WILBUR, JJ., concur.

---

190 Cal. 155

McCLUNG v. WATT et al. (S. F. 10019.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 5, 1922.)

1. Venue ⟸41—Individual defendant not entitled to change to county of his residence on joinder of corporation in action in county of latter's place of business.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 395, requiring that actions be tried in the county in which defendants, or some of them, reside, an individual defendant, with whom a corporate defendant, against which the complaint states or attempts in good faith to state a cause of action, is joined in an action properly brought in the county of the corporation's principal place of business, is not entitled to a change of venue to the county of his residence; the rule that plaintiff cannot deprive an individual defendant of such right by the joinder of a corporation, which, under Const. art. 12, § 16, may be sued where the contract is made or is to be performed, or where the breach occurs, being applicable only to actions brought in counties in which they could not be maintained except for the fact that one of the defendants is a corporation.

2. Venue ⟸72—Right to change to county of party's residence must be determined by defendants' status as revealed by pleadings when party claiming right first appeared.

Since a motion for change of venue to the county of a party's residence must be determined before any other judicial action, the right to such change must be determined by the status of the parties joined as defendants as revealed by the pleadings existing when the party claiming the right first appeared.

3. Venue ⟸41—Sufficiency of complaint to state cause of action against corporation sued in county of its principal place of business cannot be denied on motion for change of venue to county of individual defendant's residence, unless allegations concerning it are clearly unrelated to cause of action against individual.

The sufficiency of the complaint, in an action brought against a corporation and an individual defendant in the county of the former's principal place of business, to state a cause of action against the corporation for fraud alleged to have been practiced by the individual, and the pleader's good faith, cannot be denied on motion for change of venue to the county of the individual's residence, unless it can be clearly seen that the allegations of fact concerning the corporation are in no wise related to the facts relied on as a cause of action against the individual, and would not, in any circumstances, warrant the inference that the corporation was a party to the fraud.

4. Venue ⟸41—Allegations as to corporate defendant's implication in fraud practiced by individual defendant held not so radically insufficient to state cause of action as to entitle individual defendant to change of venue to county of his residence.

In an action brought against a corporation and an individual defendant in the county of the former's principal place of business for fraud practiced by the latter, a complaint alleging that plaintiff conveyed her property to the corporation in exchange for the individual defendant's property, that the latter was the owner of a large interest in the corporation at the time, and that the corporation obtained all the advantages and benefit of fraudulent acts and representations inducing such exchange, and knew of, ratified, and approved them, held not so inherently devoid of merit, when considered with the remaining allegations, as to be radically insufficient to state a cause of action against the corporation, and thus entitle the individual defendant to a change of venue to the county of his residence.

5. Pleading ⟸358—Allegations merely shadowing forth semblance of cause of action not sham and frivolous.

Allegations which merely shadow forth the semblance of a cause of action are proof against assault as sham and frivolous.

---

6. Fraud ⊂=30—Beneficiary of fraud liable.

The general rule is that one who accepts the fruits of a fraud with knowledge of the misrepresentations or concealments by which it was perpetrated inferentially ratifies it and is liable therefor, apart from any consideration of the theory of agency, though he did not personally participate therein.

7. Venue ⊂=41—To defeat demand for change of venue to county of individual defendant's residence, cause of action against corporation need only have been apparently pleaded in good faith and be not so glaringly and vitally defective as to be beyond correction by amendment.

To defeat a demand for a change of venue from the county of a corporate defendant's principal place of business to the county of an individual defendant's residence, it is enough that the cause of action against the corporation was apparently pleaded in good faith, and is not prima facie so glaringly and vitally defective as to be beyond correction by amendment.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Margaret McClung against J. N. Watt and another. From an order denying a motion for change of venue, defendant Watt appeals. Affirmed.

A. E. Shaw, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Fry & Wood, of Oakland, for respondent.

LENNON, J. This is an appeal from an order denying the motion of the individual defendant, Watt, for a change of venue. The city and county of San Francisco is the principal place of business of the corporation defendant, and the action was instituted there. Defendant Watt's residence is in the city of Sacramento. He demanded a change of place of trial from said city and county of San Francisco to the county of Sacramento upon two grounds: (1) That his residence was in Sacramento; and (2) that the corporation defendant was joined as a defendant solely for the purpose of having the action tried in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco.

[1] It is one of the contentions of the individual defendant, Watt, made in support of the appeal, that, even though a corporation is properly joined as a defendant in the action and sued in the county where its principal place of business is located, nevertheless the individual defendant is entitled, upon demand, to have the action tried in the county of his residence.

In support of this contention defendant Watt cites several cases in which it was held that the privilege given the plaintiff by article 12, § 16, of the state Constitution, of suing a corporation defendant not only in the county of its residence, but also "where the contract is made or is to be performed, or where the obligation or liability arises or the breach occurs," was waived by plaintiff if an individual was joined with the corporation as a defendant. Griffin & Skelly Co. v. Magnolia & Healdsburg Fruit Cannery Co., 107 Cal. 378, 40 Pac. 495; Brady v. Times-Mirror Co., 106 Cal. 56, 39 Pac. 209; Nelson v. East Side Grocery, 26 Cal. App. 344, 146 Pac. 1055. These cases held that plaintiff could not by the joinder of a corporation with an individual defendant deprive the individual defendant of his right to demand and have a trial of the action in the county of his residence. This is so because "the plaintiff may at all times avail himself of the privilege given by the section, if the only defendant in the action is the corporation; but, if he chooses to join as defendants others whose residence is in a different county, he waives the benefit of the provision. Such joining of other defendants is his own act, and he cannot in this manner deprive them of a right held by them." Griffin & S. Co. v. Magnolia, etc., Co., supra. It will be noted that in none of these cases cited by defendant in support of his contention in this behalf was the action brought, as in the instant case, in the county where the principal place of business of the corporation defendant was located. They were all cases in which the action was brought against the corporation defendant under the authority of the first two provisions of article 12, § 16, of the state Constitution, which provides that a corporation may be sued "where the contract is made or is to be performed, or where the obligation or liability arises or the breach occurs." In other words, the actions were brought in counties in which they could not have been maintained except for the fact that one of the defendants was a corporation, and this court held that the fact that one of the defendants was a corporation should not deprive an individual defendant of his right to have the action tried in the county of his residence. In the instant case, however, the action was commenced in the principal place of business of the corporation—the county of its residence. Jenkins v. California Stage Co., 22 Cal. 538; Buck v. City of Eureka, 97 Cal. 135, 31 Pac. 845; Trezevant v. Strong, 102 Cal. 47, 36 Pac. 395; Gallup v. Sacramento & San Joaquin Drainage District, 171 Cal. 71, 151 Pac. 1142. The plaintiff had a right to bring the action there, irrespective of whether or not one of the defendants was a corporation or an individual defendant. That is to say, the right of the individual defendant in the instant case is not affected by the fact that the defendant joined is a corporation rather than an individual. The rule enunciated in the cases cited and relied upon by the individual defendant, Watt, has therefore no application to a situation where the action was instituted in the county of the principal place of business of a corporation defendant properly joined with other defendants in the action.

Section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure, under which the defendant here claims the right to have the action transferred, provides that "the action must be tried in the county in which the defendants, or some of them reside." If under this section an action is commenced in the county of the residence of one of the defendants, another defendant resident of a different county does not have the right to have the action changed to the county of his residence, and this is so even though it may happen that all of the defendants join in the demand. Quint v. Dimond, 135 Cal. 572, 67 Pac. 1034; Hellman v. Logan, 148 Cal. 58, 82 Pac. 848. Concededly the corporation in the instant case, if justly joined, is a defendant in the action, and its principal place of business being, within the meaning of this section, its residence, the action, having been instituted in the county of its principal place of business, was brought "in the county in which the defendants, or some of them reside."

Precisely the same situation was presented to this court in Hellman v. Logan, supra, wherein an individual defendant attempted to have the trial changed from the county of the principal place of business of the corporation, properly joined with him, to the county of his residence. The court held that the motion for a change of venue was properly denied, saying:

"If one of the parties necessary resides in the county in which the action is begun, the action is properly begun and may be tried in that county, although the other and principal defendant resides in another county. C. C. P. 395."

This being so, the individual defendant, Watt, is not privileged to have the trial changed to the county of his residence upon the theory that an individual defendant, merely because he is an individual, has a right superior to a corporation codefendant to have the action tried in the county of his residence. The correctness of the trial court's ruling therefore depends upon a solution of whether or not the corporation, in the instant case, was justly joined as a party defendant or was joined "solely" for the purpose of giving the court jurisdiction; that is to say, whether or not the complaint states, or attempts in good faith to state, a cause of action against the corporation.

[2] The motion for a change of place of trial to the county of the party's residence must be made by the moving party and determined by the court in advance of any other judicial action in the case. Heald v. Hendy, 65 Cal. 321, 4 Pac. 27; Brady v. Times-Mirror, supra. Hence the right to a change of place of trial to the residence of a defendant must necessarily be determined by the status of the parties joined as defendants in the action as revealed by the pleadings existing at the time the party claiming the right first appeared in the action. Buell v. Dodge, 57 Cal. 645; Remington S. M. Co. v. Cole, 62 Cal. 311; Brady v. Times-Mirror Co., supra; Donohoe v. Wooster, 163 Cal. 114, 124 Pac. 730.

[3] If the complaint in the instant case attempts, in apparent good faith, to state a cause of action against the corporation defendant, the individual defendant, Watt, did not have the right to have the place of trial changed to the county of his residence. The sufficiency of the complaint and the good faith of the pleader are not to be denied, upon a motion for a change of venue, unless, at first blush, it can be clearly seen and said that the allegations of fact concerning the corporation defendant are in no wise related to the facts alleged and relied upon as a cause of action against the defendant Watt, and would not, in any event, or in any view of the case, warrant the inference that the corporation was a party to the fraud and deceit alleged to have been practiced upon the plaintiff by the defendant Watt, whereby the plaintiff was induced to exchange certain real property belonging to her for property owned by the defendant Watt.

[4] While the plaintiff's complaint does not purport by direct averments to immediately and intimately connect the corporation defendant with a personal participation in the alleged fraudulent transaction pleaded as a cause of action against the defendant Watt, it does allege:

That "plaintiff conveyed her said property in exchange for said Butte county property * * * to the defendant Valley Bond & Mortgage Company; * * * that said defendant Watt * * * was at the time of said transaction the owner of a large interest in said defendant corporation; that said corporation obtained all the advantages and benefit by reason of the fraudulent acts and representations of said defendant Watt, * * * and at all times knew of the same and ratified and approved of them."

[5] Conceding these allegations to be faulty in form, and in a measure vague and indefinite and somewhat ambiguous, nevertheless, when considered in conjunction with the remaining allegations of the complaint, even though they be strictly construed, it cannot be said that they are so inherently and utterly devoid of merit as to be radically insufficient upon which to found a cause of action. In short, it cannot be held that the allegations of the complaint concerning the corporation defendant are clearly bad and manifestly the making of a sham and frivolous plead-

ing. If the allegations in question did no more than shadow forth the semblance of a cause of action, they would be proof against assault upon the ground that they were sham and frivolous. Giles Lithographic, etc., Printing Co. v. Recamier Mfg. Co., 14 Daly (N. Y.) 475; Winn v. Waring, 2 Brev. (S. C.) 428; Hogencamp v. Ackerman, 24 N. J. Law, 133; Marshal v. Hamilton, 41 Miss. 229, 235; Walter v. Fowler, 85 N. Y. 621; Bradner v. Faulkner, 93 N. Y. 515. The allegations in question, however, make for more than the mere semblance of a cause of action, for they proceed with a degree of certainty and clarity, sufficient at least for the purpose of determining the merits of the motion for a change of venue, upon the theory that the individual defendant, Watt, as the owner of a large interest in the corporation defendant, was acting in behalf of the corporation, as well as for himself, and that said corporation defendant knowingly connived at and ratified the alleged fraudulent conduct of the individual defendant, Watt, and, with knowledge of the fraud alleged to have been perpetrated by him upon the plaintiff, ultimately became the sole beneficiary of the fruits of the fraud.

[6] Even though imperfectly pleaded, it is not difficult to spell out, from the facts alleged against the corporation defendant, a cause of action against said defendant on the ground of fraud and deceit, for the rule generally is that one who accepts the fruits of a fraud, with knowledge of the misrepresentations or concealments by which the fraud was perpetrated, thereby inferentially ratifies the fraud complained of and will be liable therefor, even though he did not personally participate in the fraud, and this is so apart from any consideration of the theory of agency. Baily v. London Guarantee & Accident Co., 72 Ind. App. 84, 121 N. E. 128; Law v. Grant, 37 Wis. 548; Green v. Des Garets, 210 N. Y. 79, 103 N. E. 964.

[7] True it is the complaint as a whole, and the allegations in question in particular, may be susceptible to special demurrer for some insufficiency of fact, as well as ambiguity and uncertainty, but whatever defects there may be in the form and phrasing of the complaint it is not so grievous but that it may be cured by appropriate allegations, founded, of course, in truth, by amendment following a ruling upon demurrer. It is enough, however, upon the hearing and determination of the demand for a change of venue, that the cause of action purported to be stated against the corporation defendant was apparently pleaded in good faith, and is not, prima facie, so glaringly and vitally defective as to be beyond correction by amendment.

We are satisfied that the facts pleaded against the corporation defendant would, in the absence of demurrer, warrant and support a judgment against the corporation defendant for conniving at and knowingly becoming the recipient of the fruits of the fraud complained of against the individual defendant, Watt. This being so, it cannot be held that the defendant Watt is the only defendant against whom the facts pleaded in the complaint would justify a judgment, and consequently it cannot be said that the joining of the corporation as a party defendant in the action was made in bad faith and for the purpose of preventing a transfer of the action to the county of the residence of the defendant Watt.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; WILBUR, J.; LAWLOR, J.; WASTE, J.; SLOANE, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 533

MARTELLO v. BELETICH et ux.
(Civ. 3663.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 30, 1922.)

1. Landlord and tenant ⇐169(10)—Findings held to show negligence in keeping automobile in house other than violation of ordinance.

In an action for damages resulting from the burning of defendant's house in which plaintiff was a roomer, findings that the house was burned by reason of the negligence of defendant, and that the fire was caused by defendant carelessly and negligently, and in violation of law, keeping an automobile in a room, amount to a determination that defendants were careless in the manner of keeping the automobile, aside from the violation of an ordinance, so that a finding that plaintiff knew it was being kept in violation of the ordinance did not defeat his right to judgment.

2. Landlord and tenant ⇐169(3)—Pleadings held to raise issue of negligence in keeping automobile in house other than violation of ordinance.

A complaint alleging that the fire which caused plaintiff's damage was caused by defendants carelessly and negligently keeping an automobile in a room in the dwelling, followed by a paragraph alleging a city ordinance making such keeping unlawful, to which an answer was filed denying the burning was caused by carelessly and negligently keeping the automobile in the room or at all, and alleging that the automobile was kept with due care, raised the issue of negligence in the keeping, aside from the violation of the city ordinance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Russ Avery, Judge.

Action by Francisco Martello against Tony M. Beletich and wife to recover damages for negligence. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

⇐For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

Albert J. Sherer and Robert Young, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Wilbert C. Hamilton and Otto C. Eigholz, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, J. This is an appeal upon a judgment roll alone. The action was one to recover for damages suffered by plaintiff through the burning of a house owned by defendants, they having rented to plaintiff a room in the dwelling, and he having been an occupant of the room at the time of the fire. Plaintiff had judgment, and the defendants appeal.

[1] The sole point made by appellants is that the findings do not support the judgment. The complaint charged in part that appellants kept an automobile under the same roof which covered the dwelling and in a place which was a portion of the building, in defiance of the terms of a city ordinance denouncing the keeping of automobiles in such places. The answers of the appellants alleged affirmatively that respondent knew at all times during his occupancy of the room that appellants kept the automobile in the place mentioned. The trial court found this affirmative allegation to be true, and the contention of appellants is that this finding required a judgment in their favor. Respondent contends, however, that he was entitled to judgment because of other findings made by the trial court. These were to the effect that the house was burned by fire "by reason of the carelessness and negligence of the said defendants herein and each of them," and that the fire was caused by the defendants "carelessly and negligently and in violation of law keeping an automobile in a room of said dwelling," the italics being ours. These two findings, it is to be observed, amount to a determination by the trial court on the facts that appellants were careless and negligent in the manner of the keeping of the automobile, entirely aside from the determination that they kept it in a certain place in violation of the terms of the city ordinance.

[2] The only difficulty in this situation is as to whether the two findings are upon issues made by the pleadings, but we have concluded that they are. This matter is not mentioned in the briefs, but we nevertheless feel it necessary to discuss it. The complaint alleges, in a separate paragraph:

"That said dwelling being burned on said date was caused by the defendants * * * carelessly and negligently keeping an automobile in a room in said dwelling."

It is to be observed that this paragraph, standing alone, is a sufficient allegation of general negligence, at least in the absence of a special demurrer. It is, however, followed by a paragraph alleging the existence of the city ordinance to which we have already referred—a circumstance which may give support to the view that the pleader intended to base his charge of negligence only upon a keeping of the car in defiance of the terms of the ordinance. The whole affair, however, is settled by the allegations of the answers. Each of these, the defendants having answered separately, contains the following, italics being ours:

"In answering * * * said complaint, this defendant denies that the burning of the said dwelling * * * was caused by the carelessly or negligently keeping of an automobile by the the defendants, in a room of said dwelling, or at all; but this defendant alleges that, on the contrary, the automobile kept upon the premises * * * was kept with due care."

With the pleadings in this condition we are convinced that the question of negligence, aside from the matter of the existence of the city ordinance, was in the case, and that the two findings we have mentioned were responsive to the issues. Respondent was therefore entitled to judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

I concur: CRAIG, J.

FINLAYSON, P. J. I concur. Even if the trial court's findings should be construed as meaning that defendants' sole negligence lay in their violation of the city ordinance, nevertheless plaintiff's knowledge that defendants were violating this police measure would not be a defense to the action. The duty imposed upon defendants by the ordinance to keep their automobile elsewhere than in a part of the rooming house was not a contractual obligation. It was an obligation imposed upon defendants by a salutary police regulation. The doctrine of the assumption of the risk does not apply. Public policy forbids that the duty which defendants owed to plaintiff to keep their automobile out of the rooming house should be waived by plaintiff's mere passive quiescence, even though with knowledge of the infraction of the ordinance. In Adams v. Cumberland Inn Co., 117 Tenn. 470, 101 S. W. 428, it was held that one who continues to occupy a room in a hotel for six months with knowledge that there are no fire escapes on the building as required by ordinance does not thereby waive a compliance with the ordinance. The doctrine is there stated as follows:

"The plaintiff did not waive the duty which the defendant owed to him under the ordinance as an occupant of the hotel, nor assume the risks incident to its occupation in its then condition. The duty of the defendant to place the fire escapes upon its hotel was not a contractual obligation, and the doctrine of assumed risks has no application to this case. The ordinance is a police regulation, made for the protection of human life, and in the interest of that portion of the public occupying hotels and lodging houses. Public policy requires that duties of this kind be discharged, and that all consequences of a failure to do so shall follow. The individuals who are affected cannot suspend the law by waiver or express contract."

---

59 Cal. App. 381

PEOPLE v. LIPS. (Cr. 826.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 20, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court, Dec. 18, 1922.)

1. Bribery ⟸11—Conviction for bribing deputy sheriff sustained.

In a prosecution of a deputy sheriff for accepting a bribe from a fugitive from justice from another state and his wife to refrain from arresting the fugitive, evidence held to sustain conviction.

2. Criminal law ⟸507(1)—Person paying bribe not accomplice of officer receiving it.

In prosecution for bribing a deputy sheriff to refrain from apprehending a fugitive from justice from another state, the wife of the fugitive was not an accomplice, although she was a party to the bribery agreement; she not being concerned with the officer in asking, receiving, or agreeing to receive the bribe.

3. Bribery ⟸1(2)—Deputy sheriff executive officer, within bribery statute.

Under Pen. Code, § 68, relating to the asking, etc., of bribes by executive officers, a deputy sheriff is to be considered an executive officer.

4. Criminal law ⟸1169(2)—Erroneous admission of evidence as to corpus delicti held harmless.

Where, in a bribery case, the corpus delicti was established by other evidence, that testimony of a detective was admitted over objection to establish the corpus delicti was harmless, if erroneous.

5. Bribery ⟸1(2)—Instruction containing erroneous statements of law properly refused.

In a prosecution for bribing a deputy sheriff to refrain from apprehending a fugitive from justice from another state, instruction incorrect in part, as stating that it was necessary for the prosecution to prove that an indictment had been returned against the fugitive, or, "if he had been tried, that the time of appeal therefrom had not elapsed," held properly refused.

6. Bribery ⟸1(2)—Charge held not sustainable as to matter which might be brought before deputy sheriff in official capacity.

Under Pen. Code, § 68, relating to bribery of a deputy sheriff to refrain from arresting a fugitive from justice against whom no warrant had been issued, the charge could not be sustained on the ground that the bribe was to influence the officer in matters which might be brought before him in his official capacity.

7. Bribery ⟸1(2)—Charge sustained as to matter pending before deputy sheriff in official capacity.

In prosecution for bribing a deputy sheriff to refrain from arresting a fugitive from another state, no warrant having been issued, conviction might be had under Pen. Code, § 68, as relating to bribery in a matter then pending before him in his official capacity.

8. Criminal law ⟸1130(5)—Points not supported by argument or citation of authority will not be considered on appeal.

On appeal from a conviction in a criminal case, points as to rulings on admissibility of evidence, and as to giving or refusing instructions, will not be considered, where not supported by argument or citation of authority.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Walter Lips was convicted of bribery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Paul W. Schenck and Richard Kittrelle, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Arthur Keetch and John W. Maltman, Deputy Attys. Gen., and Lorrin Andrews, of Los Angeles, for the People.

WORKS, J. By indictment it was charged that defendant, jointly with one W. J. Anderson, did "willfully, unlawfully, corruptly, knowingly, and feloniously ask, receive, and agree to receive of and from J. M. Furay and Mrs. Dede Furay" a certain bribe for the purpose of influencing their action officially as deputy sheriffs. The charge was based upon the provisions of section 68 of the Penal Code. Defendant was tried separately, and now appeals from a judgment of conviction rendered against him.

Appellant's first contention for a reversal of the judgment is founded upon the palpable misstatement that—

"The bribery charge in the indictment is based merely upon an agreement between Mrs. Furay and Lips and Anderson, and nowhere in the evidence is there any evidence that Mrs. Furay ever made any agreement with either Lips or Anderson."

Our quotation of a part of the terms of the indictment, made above, will demonstrate how erroneous is counsel's conception of its effect. The agreement mentioned in the charge was said there to have been made between Furay and Mrs. Furay on the one side and Lips and Anderson on the other, not merely between the latter two and Mrs. Furay. The point made by appellant upon his erroneous assumption as to the effect of the indictment is that the evidence fails to show that Mrs. Furay ever agreed to give or the officers to receive from her a bribe. This illusion, for counsel are as far afield in making the point as they are in placing an estimate upon the effect of the indictment, may be dispelled by a brief recital of salient points in the evidence. As to this question it is to be said, then, that Lips and Anderson, who were deputies of the sheriff of Los Angeles county, were assigned by their superior in the sheriff's office to the duty of locating and apprehending Furay, who was under indictment in the state of Texas for the commission of a crime in that jurisdiction. After some search the deputies found Furay at his home in Glendale. He at once attempted to escape, but was rounded up by a shot from the pistol of one of the deputies and relinquished the effort. He then had a conference with both Lips and Anderson in a room of his house. At its close Anderson came to Mrs. Dede Furay, who is the wife of Furay, and said that the latter wanted to see her. Anderson then returned with Mrs. Furay to the room where Lips and Furay were, when the latter asked Mrs. Furay, according to her testimony, how much money she could raise. She testified further:

"I asked him what he meant, how much money he had to have, and he said he had to have $20,000. He said, if he could raise that much money, they would not put him in jail. * * *"

[1] Mrs. Furay then told the three men how much money she had or could obtain, and Furay said he could borrow enough, in addition, to make up the $20,000. It was a day or two before Mrs. Furay's money could be gotten together; the officers having finally expressed a willingness to accept $10,000 as a consideration for Furay's release. In the meanwhile Lips and Anderson aided Furay to keep out of sight, he and they going to Long Beach and registering at a hotel there under assumed names. On the day when the cash was to be paid over, Lips plainly showed his desire to avoid observation. After observation seemed successfully to have been eluded, Mrs. Furay produced the money which she had said she could obtain, and the payment was made to Lips and Anderson, both Furay and Mrs. Furay being present. Some weeks after the payment was made, Lips reported to his superior officer that he and Anderson have been unable to locate Furay. Under all these circumstances it is puerile to assert that Furay and Mrs. Furay never agreed to pay or that Lips never agreed to receive a bribe. Whether the agreement was made was to be determined by the jury from all the acts of the parties. People v. Powell (Cal. App.) 195 Pac. 456. The evidence was ample upon the question, and we do not see how the jury could have reached a different conclusion.

[2] In discussing the point of which we have just made disposition, we have followed the terminology of the briefs, that point being one involving the question: Between whom was the agreement for a bribe made? In view of the next point, however, it is material to note that the charge was that Lips and Anderson had asked, received, and agreed to receive a bribe. The point to the consideration of which the foregoing statement is a preface is to the effect that, granting that Mrs. Furay was a party to the agreement made by Lips and Anderson, she was an accomplice with them, and her testimony required corroboration. This could not be so, as Mrs. Furay was in no way concerned with the officers in either asking, receiving or agreeing to receive the bribe. She was on the opposite end of the transaction. This point was fully discussed in People v. Powell, supra.

[3] Section 68 of the Penal Code, under which the charge against appellant was made, relates to the asking, etc., of bribes by executive officers, and appellant contends that he, as a deputy sheriff, was not an executive officer. It is insisted that he was a ministerial officer. If it be conceded that he was the latter, it cannot therefore be said that he was not an executive officer. Of our three branches of government, the executive, the legislative, and the judicial, sheriffs and their deputies undoubtedly belong to the first named. See Haynes v. Commonwealth, 104 Va. 854, 52 S. E. 358, and also People v. Salsbury, 134 Mich. 537, 96 N. W. 936.

[4] It is contended by appellant that the trial court erred in permitting a certain detective to testify to a conversation between him and appellant. This testimony was objected to on the ground, among others, that the corpus delicti in a criminal case cannot be established by the statements or declarations of a defendant. If it be granted that the court erred in permitting this evidence to go to the jury, a point, however, which we do not examine, it is enough to say that the corpus delicti in the present case was amply established by the testimony of other witnesses before the detective took the stand. If there was any error in receiving the testimony of the detective it was therefore harmless.

[5] Another contention of appellant is that the trial court erred in refusing to give to the jury the following instruction, a portion of which we italicize:

"I instruct you that proof that an indictment had been returned on a given date against a person in a sister state, and that a warrant of arrest had been issued thereon on a given date, is not proof that the matter was pending on any given date. The prosecution has alleged that on or about the 6th day of December, 1920, there was pending in the state of Texas an indictment against J. M. Furay. To prove this it is necessary for the prosecution to show not only that an indictment had been returned against him, but, in addition thereto, prove to you beyond a reasonable doubt that he had not been tried thereon, or, if he had been tried, that the time of appeal therefrom had not elapsed. If you have a reasonable doubt, from all the evidence, or lack thereof, whether or not an indictment was pending against J. M. Furay in the state of Texas on or about the 6th day of December, 1920, you must acquit the defendant."

This instruction was requested for the reason that the district attorney offered in evidence only the indictment found in Texas, making no showing as to what disposition had been made of it. Waiving other questions, which are worthy of consideration as bearing upon the court's refusal to give the instruction, it is enough to say that a part of it contained a statement of law which is incorrect, and which must have misled the jury if it had been given. We refer to the portion which we have italicized, the clause being based upon the erroneous assumption that an individual is not a fugitive from justice if he departs from a state after a judgment of conviction rendered against him there has become final. It was necessary for the prosecution to show only that he was a fugitive, whether under indictment pending or after final judgment of conviction. It is thoroughly settled that not only convicted persons who flee a state, but those who escape from prison while serving sentence under a judgment of conviction, are fugitives from justice within the meaning of the federal Constitution. 25 C. J. 259; Hughes v. Pflanz, 138 Fed. 980, 71 C. C. A. 234. The injection of this false element into the requested instruction was a sufficient justification of the refusal to give it, for the Supreme Court has said:

"When it is urged here that the court below erred in rejecting an instruction requested, we are justified in reversing the judgment only when it appears that it was the duty of the court to give the instruction exactly as requested. It has been repeatedly held that if any part of a single instruction ought not to have been given, the action of the trial court in rejecting the whole will be affirmed." People v. Davis, 64 Cal. 440, 1 Pac. 889.

The next point to be considered arises upon several instructions which were requested by appellant and which were refused by the trial court. These offered instructions presented the view of appellant that the evidence in the case failed to show that he was guilty of the charge made against him for the reason that there was no legal duty resting upon him to take Furay into custody. This point was made by these proposed instructions in the trial court, and it is made here because of the fact that no warrant had been issued in this state for the apprehension or detention of Furay. The question raised by appellant, to use his own words, is that "in the absence of a legal duty there can be no bribery." While the matter of the extradition of fugitives from justice, as between the states, is basically regulated by the federal Constitution, many of the states have passed laws outlining the procedure to be followed within their borders in bringing about an extradition. Particularly, they have enacted measures providing for the apprehension and detention of alleged fugitives from justice pending an investigation by the executive department of the state and a determination whether extradition shall follow. Our Legislature has passed enactments covering these matters and they are to be found in sections 1548–1556, Penal Code. Under these sections a magistrate is empowered to issue a warrant for the apprehension of a fugitive until the governor shall determine whether his warrant shall issue as a preliminary to the delivery of the fugitive to the authorities of another state. In the present instance no magistrate was asked to issue a warrant for the apprehension and detention of Furay and none was issued. Lips and Anderson were detailed for the purpose of locating and apprehending Furay after a peace officer from Texas had called upon the sheriff here, Lips' and Anderson's superior, and had stated to him that an indictment was pending against Furay in Texas, and that the offender was in California, or would soon be within the state. It was only upon this authority, if such it may be called, that Lips and Anderson acted in their connection with the Furay affair. If we grant for the sake of argument that this "authority" did not empower the officers to take Furay into custody, we are brought to the question made by appellant: Was he guilty of agreeing to receive a bribe from Furay and his wife?

[6] As we have already said, the prosecution of appellant was based upon section 68 of the Penal Code. It is contended by the Attorney General that under this enactment it was not necessary, in order to render appellant guilty of the charge made against him, that at the time his agreement with the Furays was consummated he should have been clothed with a then present authority to take the husband into custody. Not only does section 68 denounce agreements by an officer to receive bribes "upon any agreement or understanding that his vote, opinion, or action upon any matter then pending" before him shall be influenced thereby, but the language which we have quoted is immediately followed by the clause, "or which may be brought before him in his official capacity"; the italics being ours. The Attorney General says that if appellant had no authority to apprehend Furay because of the lack of a warrant from a California magistrate, that lack might have been supplied at any moment. It is argued that, if such a warrant were at any time issued and were at any time placed in appellant's hands as a deputy sheriff, the matter would then be "brought before him" in his official capacity, for it would then be his duty to take Furay into custody, and it is said that appellant's agreement to receive a bribe was therefore within the terms of section 68. Whatever may be said as to the correctness of these views in the abstract, they have no application to the actual conditions in the present case. The indictment here did not charge appellant with having agreed to receive a bribe for the purpose of influencing his action in a matter which might be brought before him. The charge, and it was made against Lips and Anderson together, as we have already remarked, was that the bribe was to be paid to them "upon the agreement and understanding that the action of them, the said defendants, upon a matter then and there pending before them in their official capacity, should be influenced thereby. * * *" We are of the opinion that this charge cannot be sustained under the clause of section 68 to the effect that agreements to receive bribes may not be made by officers when the taking of the bribe is to influence them in matters which may be brought before them in their official capacity, as a matter of that character does not come within the terms of the indictment. See 22 Cyc. 455, 456; People v. Redman, 39 Cal. App. 566, 179 Pac. 725.

[7] There is, however, another view of the Attorney General upon which we think the trial judge's rejection of the proposed instructions now under consideration may be sustained. That view is based upon a part of section 68 of the Penal Code which we have already mentioned—that part which refers to agreements to receive bribes as to matters "then pending" before officers, as distinguished from the clause which was the principal subject of our paragraph last set forth, that is, the clause as to matters which may be "brought before" officers. We think the present case falls within the clause as to matters "then pending," under the decisions of courts of other states which have taken a broad view of the subject. These authorities are substantially to the effect stated in a standard law publication as follows:

"The giving or receiving of money * * * for the purpose of influencing official conduct is not deprived of its criminal character by the fact that the action contemplated is not within the officer's jurisdiction. If he acts in his official capacity—and by this term is meant the doing of such acts as properly belong to the office and are intended by the officer to be official—the offense is complete." 4 R. C. L. p. 183, par. 13.

It is true that this statement, as well as other more specific ones which follow it in the publication mentioned, is principally supported by the citation of cases which relate to the taking of bribes upon a promise to perform some affirmative act believed to be within the line of official duty, as the promise of a legislator to vote for a measure which turns out to be unconstitutional, or void for some other reason, or as the promise of a judge to exercise a jurisdiction which he does not possess. It is true also, however, that there are cases within the broad lines of the quoted statement which are closely akin to the present one. Among these is Moseley v. State, 25 Tex. App. 515, 8 S. W. 652. In that case the accused, a constable, had arrested an individual without a warrant and had allowed him to escape in consideration of a payment of cash. The court said, in disposing of the case:

"It is insisted by counsel for defendant that the arrest and custody of John Gable by the defendant was without authority of law, and that, therefore, it was no offense for the defendant to accept a bribe to release him. We do not so understand the law. It was by virtue of his official authority that the defendant arrested and held John Gable. It matters not whether the arrest and custody were legal or illegal, the said Gable was a prisoner in the custody of the defendant, a peace officer, and was permitted by the defendant to escape, in consideration of money paid him to effect such escape. We are of the opinion that, in a prosecution for this offense, it is not permissible for the defendant to question the legality of his custody of the prisoner. Such an issue is irrelevant and immaterial. The moral obliquity of this offense is the same where the custody of the prisoner is illegal as where it is legal, and the injury to public justice is the same."

Although the Texas statute concerning bribery is different from ours, the appositeness of the above language as applied to the present case appears to us to be striking, especially in view of what the Supreme Court has said in People v. Markham, 64 Cal. 157, 30 Pac. 622, 49 Am. Rep. 700. That case related, it is true, to the part of section 68 of the Penal Code dealing with agreements to accept bribes to influence matters which might be "brought before" an officer, but the language employed by the court in quoting from the opinion of a court of another state nevertheless has a general application to the present situation. A part of the quotation is, italics being ours:

"The Legislature, I think, did not intend that the prosecution should depend upon the fact whether the officer actually had it in his power to carry out the corrupt agreement before the indictment was exhibited. It is sufficient, I think, that the subject-matter upon which the bribe was to operate existed, and could legally be brought before the officer in his official capacity. The offense consists, in contemplation of the statute, in poisoning and corrupting the fountain of justice, and although the particular deleterious consequence designed to be effected by the parties has not ensued, the state, nevertheless, has an officer corrupted, and society has lost all protection for its rights, so far as the administration of the law by him is concerned."

So it is here. Appellant had been instructed by his superior to locate and apprehend Furay, and without doubt he believed that he was acting officially as a deputy sheriff in all that pertained to his activities under the directions of that superior. His action in agreeing to release Furay was corrupt in the last degree, and we find no difficulty under the law in determining that his illicit conduct related to a matter "pending before him" in his official capacity. In penning this paragraph and those which immediately precede it we have not failed to consider People v. Schmitz, 7 Cal. App. 330, 369, 373, 94 Pac. 407, 419, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 717. In our opinion that case is readily distinguishable from the present one.

[5] Appellant states various points relating to rulings upon the admissibility of evidence and to rulings giving or refusing instructions. These points are not supported by argument or by the citation of authority. It seems a waste of time to remind appellant, and again to remind the bar, that points so made will not be considered.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 539

Petition of HARRISON. (Original 250.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 31, 1922.)

Attorney and client ⟸1—Alien cannot have admission to bar granted as of date prior to enactment of statute preventing admission.

An alien applicant for admission to the bar, who had filed his application and taken his examination before the amendment of Code Civ. Proc. § 275, by St. 1921, p. 538, permitting citizens to be admitted to the bar and providing that aliens previously admitted to practice must complete their naturalization within one year, or have their certificates revoked, became effective on July 29, 1921, is not entitled to have an order entered admitting him as of a day prior to the effective date of the amendment, since the statute covers his case, and the court cannot write exceptions therein.

Petition by Herschel R. Harrison for an order nunc pro tunc admitting petitioner to the bar. Petition denied.

Clark, Law & Clay, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

WORKS, J. Petitioner who is a British subject, being a native of Canada, in June, 1921, filed with the state board of bar examiners his application for admission to the bar. On June 29 and 30, and on July 1, 1921, he took the examination required by law in the case of such applications; and on or about September 26, 1921, the board of examiners made its orders admitting him to the bar. Unfortunately for petitioner, however, on or about July 29, 1921, there had become effective an amended section 275 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The amended section reads:

"Any citizen of the United States, residing within this state, of the age of twenty-one years, of good moral character, and who possesses the necessary qualifications of learning and ability, is entitled to admission as attorney and counselor in all of the courts of this state; provided, however, that all persons who are aliens, and who have, at the time of the taking effect of this act, been admitted as attorney and counselor and have not secured their final papers of citizenship, shall within six months after becoming entitled to final papers of citizenship be required to secure final citizenship papers, and in case of their neglect, or failure so to do, any certificate or license to practice law heretofore issued to such alien person shall after one year from date of the taking effect of this act, forfeit and become null and void, and the clerk of the Supreme Court shall forthwith revoke the same." St. 1921, p. 538.

The order of the board of bar examiners admitting petitioner to the bar was of course ineffective under the terms of this enactment, and it is for that reason that petitioner now asks an order admitting him as of a day prior to the effective date of the amendment. The petition cannot be granted. The section is direct and positive in its terms, and there is no doubt that it covers the case of petitioner. It was for the Legislature, and it is not now for us, to write exceptions into the statute, as our power is merely to judge and not to legislate.

Petition denied.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 494

SILVERTHORNE v. SIMON et al.

(Civ. 2516.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 26, 1922.)

1. Sales ⟸266—Conditional agreement to sell does not imply warranty.

An automobile lease contract providing for payment of certain rental, title to vest in lessee after payment of certain amount, does not imply a warranty as to condition of the vehicle, under Civ. Code, § 1764.

2. Sales ⟸481—Defective condition of automobile held not in issue in action by conditional vendee in default to recover from vendor taking possession.

In replevin by purchaser under automobile lease contract, whereby he was to be vested with title upon payment of certain rentals, defendants having retaken the vehicle on failure to make payment of installment, the court properly sustained defendants' objections to plaintiff's offer to prove that there was a defective rim on one wheel, plaintiff not having set up as the basis of his cause of action that the contract was incomplete or did not express the full agreement between the parties, in view of Civ. Code, § 1625, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1856; such matter not being in issue.

3. Sales ⊂=479(6)—Retaking motor truck on failure to pay rental due held authorized.

Where time was made of the essence of an automobile lease contract, whereby lessee was to be vested with title on payment of certain rentals, the lessee could not, by unconditionally tendering an amount due on the first installment, defeat lessors' right to retake the truck on default in payment of the installment, in the absence of a waiver of the default by the lessors.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by J. D. Silverthorne against G. Simon and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Thomas B. Leeper and Dunn & Brand, all of Sacramento, for appellant.

Harris & Lewis, of Sacramento, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff entered into an agreement in writing with the defendants to purchase from them a Kissel truck for the sum of $2,820, of which sum $1,215 was paid on the execution of the agreement and the balance was agreed to be paid in monthly installments of $133.75 on the 15th day of each month, commencing with May 15, 1920; that on the 15th and 18th days of May, 1920, plaintiff tendered the amount of the first installment, but that his offer of payment was refused; that on the 18th day of May, 1920, the defendants wrongfully took possession of the truck and ever since have retained possession thereof. The prayer is for a recovery of the truck or its value and damages for its detention. The answer admits the taking of the truck by the defendants and, to justify such taking, alleges that the plaintiff refused to carry out the terms of the contract. The defendants were given judgment for their costs.

The contract designated as an "automobile lease," provides for the payment of a stipulated monthly rental for the use of the truck until such payments equal the balance of the purchase price, thereupon title to vest in the plaintiff. The contract provides that title shall remain in the defendants until payment of all installments; that—

"If said second party shall make default in the payment of any of the several installments of rent when the same shall fall due, * * * then this lease shall terminate and become void, and all payments previously made by said second party hereunder shall be construed to be and applied as rental for the use of said property for the expired portion of said lease, and said second party hereby expressly waives and relinquishes to the said first party all rights to said moneys so paid, and the right of possession in and to said property, and every part thereof, shall revert to, and vest in, said first party, and said first party shall have the right without notice or service, to take said property and every part thereof and anything attached thereto, from said second party, or any other person, without legal process; said retaking, however, shall not discharge said second party from any liabilities or unpaid installments. * * * It is further expressly understood and agreed that time is expressly declared to be of the essence of this lease."

The plaintiff did not pay the first installment May 15th, as required by the contract, although the Sacramento Bank & Trust Company, holding the contract as collateral security, had notified him to make payment, but on May 17th he tendered payment thereof, on condition, however, that defendants furnish a different rim for one of the wheels; the plaintiff contending that when the truck was delivered to him there were straight side rims on three wheels and a clincher rim on the other, and that the clincher rim damaged the tire used thereon. After engaging in a heated conversation with defendant Bell, the plaintiff left without making payment of the installment. The defendants thereupon took possession of the truck. On May 19th the plaintiff made an unconditional offer to pay the first installment, but was informed that the contract had become void by reason of failure to make payment at the time provided and of the fact that defendants had exercised their right to take possession of the truck. It was finally agreed, however, that upon payment by plaintiff of certain small sums claimed by the defendants to be due them, a new contract would be executed providing for payments on the same terms as in the first and that the truck would be again delivered to plaintiff. Defendants signed a new contract, which is not set out in the record but, in legal effect, appears to have been the same as the first, and sent it to the plaintiff for his signature. The plaintiff declined to sign the new contract, but instituted this action instead. The defendants, a few months later, resold the truck for about the amount of the unpaid balance of the sum agreed to be paid by plaintiff after deducting the commissions paid by them for the resale.

[1] In the absence of circumstances excusing plaintiff's default it is very clear from the express terms of the contract that he had forfeited his right to possession of the truck, prior to the time the defendants took it from him. Appellant contends:

"That defendants by their failure to replace the defective rim were thereby first in default, and being first in default they could not forfeit the contract because of plaintiff's failure to pay the first installment."

The contract contains nothing in the nature of a warranty, and the mere conditional agreement to sell does not imply a warranty. Civ. Code, § 1764. The plaintiff introduced an order dated April 8, 1920, reading as follows:

"Customer's Deposit Receipt No. ———. The undersigned hereby orders from Simon & Bell Company one general delivery automobile, Kissel body type, with standard equipment. * * * (Here follows terms of payment, etc., not material to the issues in this case.) There are no understandings, agreements, representations or warranties express or implied, not specified herein respecting the goods hereby ordered. Taken in trade one 1919 Dodge Del. Amount of allowance $1215.

"J. D. Silverthorne.

"* * * This order subject to the approval of sales manager or general manager.

"Salesman: R. U. Spencer."

[2] April 10th the contract alleged in plaintiff's complaint was executed. The contract purports to be a complete agreement respecting the rights of the parties. Plaintiff sets it up as the basis of his cause of action without any allegation that it is incomplete or that it does not express the full agreement between the parties. "The execution of a contract in writing, whether the law requires it to be written or not, supersedes all the negotiations or stipulations concerning its matter which preceded or accompanied the execution of the instrument." Civ. Code, § 1625. The order of April 8th was admitted in evidence over defendants' objection. "When the terms of an agreement have been reduced to writing by the parties, it is to be considered as containing all those terms, and therefore there can be between the parties and their representatives, or successors in interest, no evidence of the terms of the agreement other than the contents of the writing, except in the following cases: (1) Where a mistake or imperfection of the writing is put in issue by the pleadings; (2) where the validity of the agreement is the fact in dispute. * * *" Code Civ. Proc. § 1856. If the clincher rim was not "standard equipment" as provided in plaintiff's order for the truck, he would have been justified in refusing to accept the truck or to execute the agreement of conditional sale, but having executed the agreement and accepted the truck without any objection on account of the defective rim, he could not, under the facts pleaded, refuse payment because of such defect. The court properly sustained defendants' objections to plaintiff's offer to prove the defective condition of the rim on the ground that such defect was not in issue.

[3] Appellant contends that the defendants did not exercise their option to forfeit plaintiff's rights under the contract and that therefore plaintiff's unconditional tender of the amount due on the first installment, made after the defendants had retaken possession of the truck, was effective to prevent a forfeiture. The contract provides that "said retaking, however, shall not discharge said second party from any liabilities or unpaid installments." Appellant argues that defendants' "election to retake possession merely gave them the possession and did not terminate or forfeit the contract." The contract provides that upon default "in the payment of any of the several installments of rent when the same shall fall due * * * then this lease shall terminate and become void, * * * and said first party shall have the right without notice or service, to take said property and every part thereof and without legal process." As said in Andrews v. Karl, 42 Cal. App. 513, 517, 183 Pac. 838, 840, "where time is made of the essence of the contract, terminating it upon a failure to comply strictly and punctually with its conditions, its effect is to entail a forfeiture by sheer force of the contract itself, upon the mere default of the purchaser by his failure to make payments at the times and in the manner that he obligated himself to, provided, however, that the vendor has not waived the default or consequent forfeiture." Plaintiff was in default at the time he made the conditional tender of payment, and no act of his thereafter, in the absence of a waiver of the default by the defendants, could defeat their right to retake the truck. Glock v. Howard & Wilson Colony Co., 123 Cal. 1, 55 Pac. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17. Appellant relies on Liver v. Mills, 155 Cal. 459, 101 Pac. 299, and Muncy v. Brain, 158 Cal. 300, 110 Pac. 945, to sustain his contention that he had a right to complete the purchase of the truck, notwithstanding his default. In view of the fact that time is made of the essence of the contract and that defendants did not waive the default, the cases relied on sustain the judgment rather than appellant's contention.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

(59 Cal. App. 536)

In re KNAUFT'S ESTATE.

KNAUF et al. v. STAIN et al.

(Civ. 4083.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 30, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 28, 1922.)

1. Judgment ⟸570(3)—Dismissal of proceedings to revoke probate before final submission not bar to new proceeding.

Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subd. 4, authorizing a party to dismiss his action at any time before final submission of a cause, which judgment of dismissal shall not bar the recommencement of the action on the same cause, applies to proceedings in probate for the revocation of the probate of a will.

2. Limitation of actions ⟸114—Suspension of limitations against alien enemies during war applies to probate proceedings.

The provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 354, that, when a party is an alien subject or citizen of a country at war with the United States, the time of the continuance of the war is not part of the period limited for the commencement of the action, though part of the chapter devoted to provisions respecting the time of the commencement of actions, deals with the general subject of disability, and is applicable to proceedings in probate, so that the right to institute proceedings for the revocation of a will is not limited to one year after the order of probate by Code Civ. Proc. § 1333, where the contestants were alien enemies when the order was entered.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of William Knauft, deceased. Proceeding by Carl Knauf and others against Frank Stain and another, individually and as executors, to revoke an order admitting the will to probate. From a judgment dismissing the proceedings at the request of contestants without prejudice, contestees appeal. Affirmed.

D. Joseph Coyne, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Karl L. Ratzer, Turner & Grainger, and Charles W. Fourl, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

JAMES, J. In this case the appeal is taken by the defendants from the judgment of dismissal entered on the motion of the plaintiffs. The proceeding was brought by certain alleged heirs of William Knauft, deceased, for the purpose of securing the revocation of an order admitting to probate the will of said deceased. Defendants demurred to the petition and moved to strike it from the files. The demurrer was overruled, and the motion denied.

It is recited in the judgment that the proceeding was called for trial on the 25th day of January, 1922, and that "on the 30th day of January, 1922, when said cause was reconvened for trial, and before the submission thereof, the said plaintiffs, by their counsel, in open court moved for a dismissal of said cause and petition, without prejudice, which said motion of plaintiffs was granted by the court, over the objection of the defendants thereto." The judgment dismissing the action declared such dismissal to be without prejudice to the filing of a new petition, and it is particularly to the latter condition that appellants address their complaint.

[1] It is insisted first that the court had no authority to so qualify the judgment of dismissal as to give to the petitioners the right to further prosecute a proceeding for the revocation of the probate order. It seems to be well settled under our practice that a party may at any time, before final submission of a cause dismiss the same (section 581, Code Civ. Proc. subd. 4), and that the judgment in that case will not operate as a bar to the recommencement of an action based upon the same cause (Merritt v. Campbell, 47 Cal. 542; Westbay v. Gray et al., 116 Cal. 660, 48 Pac. 800), and there seems to be no reason why the same rule is not applicable to proceedings in probate.

[2] This conclusion would seem to put an end to appellants' case here. It is urged, however, that on this appeal the appellants have the right to have considered the rulings of the court made on their demurrer and motion to dismiss. Without admitting that the orders made on the demurrer and motion are subject to review here, the points covered in the argument of appellants under that head may be briefly considered. Their demurrer was on the ground that the proceeding was started too late, having been commenced more than one year after the making of the order admitting the will to probate. Section 1333, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that, if no person within one year after the probate of the will contests the same, the order of probate is conclusive. The section concludes with the following provision:

"Saving to infants and persons of unsound mind, a like period of one year after their respective disabilities are removed."

The petitioners, in the attempt to show that they were not foreclosed from prosecuting their proceeding by reason of the above-mentioned provisions, alleged that at the time the will was admitted to probate they were subjects of and residents in the empire (later the republic) of Germany, and that a state of war then existed between the United States and that country, which war continued up to the 2d day of July, 1921, because of which condition they were unable to sooner present their petition to the court. Section 354 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides as follows:

"When a person is an alien subject, or citizen of a country at war with the United States, the time of the continuance of the war is not part of the period limited for the commencement of the action."

While this section is a part of the chapter devoted to provisions respecting the time of the commencement of actions, in its nature it deals with the general subject of disability within the particular classes defined, and is, for that reason, in its nature applicable to proceedings in probate. In the Estate of Henrichs, 180 Cal. 175, 179 Pac. 883, the Supreme Court held that an alien enemy appearing in a probate proceeding was entitled to a continuance until after peace had been declared between Germany and the United States. The court referred there to provisions of the Trading with the Enemy Act (U. S. Comp. St. 1918, U. S. Comp. St. Ann. Supp. 1919, §§ 3115½a–3115½j), and said:

"It is unnecessary to consider whether or not the alien enemy was a defendant in an action at law or in equity in a technical sense, because it was evidently the purpose of Congress to permit an alien enemy to maintain his rights in the courts of the country against an actual assault thereon, as in this case. (But see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1063, 1716.)"

The particular provision of the act of Congress referred to declared that—

"Nothing in this act shall be deemed to authorize the prosecution of any suit or action at law or in equity in any court within the United States by an enemy or an ally of enemy prior to the end of the war. * * * And provided further, that an enemy or ally of enemy may defend by counsel any suit in equity or action at law which may be brought against him." U. S. Comp. St. 1918, U. S. Comp. St. Ann. Supp. 1919, § 3115½d.

The judgment appealed from is without error and should be affirmed, regardless of the questions suggested as being involved under the rulings on demurrer and motion to strike the petition from the files.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 438

DAVIS v. FELL et al. (Civ. 3933.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 23, 1922. Rehearing Denied Nov. 18, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 22, 1922.)

1. Judgment ⟸829(3)—Judgment of federal court held res judicata as to rights under Desert Land Act.

Where in ejectment it appeared that defendant's predecessor in interest made entry of the land under the Desert Land Act (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 4674–4678), and after having made improvements contracted to sell the land to defendant, but before patent was issued plaintiff filed a contest, whereupon the entry of defendant's predecessor was declared fraudulent and preference granted to plaintiff, who had filed a homestead claim, a judgment in a suit in equity thereafter brought that the contest made by the land office was incorrectly decided in favor of plaintiff was res judicata as to the rights of the parties, notwithstanding that thereafter a patent had been granted to plaintiff.

On Petition for Rehearing.

2. Public lands ⟸110—Vested right to patent held equivalent to patent issued.

The right to a patent once vested is treated by the government when dealing with the public lands as equivalent to a patent issued.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by Moses B. Davis against Arthur S. Fell and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant named appeals. Reversed.

L. B. Stanton, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

C. L. Brown, of El Centro, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This action, as the complaint formulated it, was one of ejectment to recover possession of a tract of 160 acres of land in the county of Imperial. Damages in the sum of $3,000 as the value of the rents was also prayed for by the plaintiff. The judgment awarded the relief demanded, including the full amount of damages asked for, from which judgment the defendant A. S. Fell has taken his appeal.

In answer to the plaintiff's complaint, appellant denied the right of the plaintiff to possession of the property and alleged such right to be in appellant as successor in interest of Levi C. Vickrey, deceased. An additional defense was presented by the answer of appellant, to wit, that there had been an adjudication of the matters in controversy in an action brought by the same plaintiff against appellant in the federal District Court.

In a cross-complaint appellant joined Mary L. Vickrey, as administratrix of the estate of Levi C. Vickrey and also as for her own interest, and the prayer of the cross-complaint was that there be a determination made that appellant was entitled to possession of the property as against both the plaintiff and the Vickrey interests. Mary L. Vickrey, in her individual capacity, answered the cross-complaint and on her part asserted a right to have possession of the property. The facts as alleged constituting her defense against the plaintiff's claim were in the main identical with the facts alleged by appellant, except that she did not assert a defense based upon a prior adjudication in the same controversy.

Plaintiff's sole claim of right to possession of the land was based upon patent issued by the government of the United States on January 14, 1919, under an alleged homestead entry made by the said Davis. The further facts in connection with the circumstances under which the paper title was acquired and as they affect the appellant are these: On October 16, 1901, Levi C. Vickrey made entry under the Desert Land Act (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 4674–4678) of 240 acres of land, which was at that time property of the United States and open for entry. On April 25, 1903, Vickrey entered into an agreement with appellant to sell to appellant 160 acres of that land, and at about the same time made a contract with a man named Whipple to sell him the remaining 80 acres. Appellant immediately took possession of the 160 acres, which was arid and worthless except as it might be made productive by irrigation. Appellant made improvements thereon, obtained water, and cultivated the land, expending in such endeavors approximately $5,000. He erected fences and occupied the land as a home for a number of years continuously after receiving his contract from Vickrey, and by 1908 the land had become fully productive and was worth many times the value it had when Vickrey made his entry thereon. Appellant paid the sum of $400 to Vickrey upon receiving his contract, and he had made, in addition thereto, by June, 1909, 36 payments of $15 each. Subsequent payments of other amounts have been made. In July, 1905, Vickrey made final proof under his entry and final payment of all moneys due the government, which moneys were accepted and receipt issued. His proof as to improvements was based upon appellant's expenditures and labor. In November, 1908, plaintiff Davis filed in a local land office a contest by which he sought to have nullified the right of Vickrey to a patent, upon the ground that the entryman, before making final proof, had made an unlawful contract to sell the land to appellant. The decision of the officers of the local land office, and the decision of the commissioner on appeal, and also the decision of the Secretary of the Interior, sustained the contest, declared the Vickrey entry to be fraudulent and unlawful, and granted the right of preference to make entry to plaintiff, Davis, who on January 30, 1913, filed homestead claim. The property being occupied by appellant, Davis was unable to secure possession in order to satisy the homestead requirements, and on October 27, 1915, he commenced an action in equity against this appellant and his wife and daughter in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of California. In that action this plaintiff alleged the necessary jurisdictional facts showing the case involved a construction of the land laws of the United States so as to entitle the complainant there to pursue the remedy asked for. In that action a mandatory injunction was asked for requiring the defendant A. S. Fell (appellant here) to cease holding possession of the property. The right of the complainant in the equity suit was based wholly upon the proceedings had in connection with and subsequent to the contest made of the Vickrey entry. That action necessarily involved a consideration of the acts and decisions of the land officials which have hereinbefore been referred to. All of those things clearly appeared from the evidence heard, and the certified record of the proceedings had in the federal court, which record was offered in evidence in this action by the appellant. The court refused to admit the evidence to show the making of the former judgment, and for that error the appellant first claims the right to a new trial.

[1] It seems fairly to be inferred from the judgment of the court as made in the present case that the trial judge concluded that because the government in January, 1919 (a little more than a year after the date of the federal decree), issued its patent to plaintiff, Davis, the judgment in the federal case was not res adjudicata because the granting of the patent evidenced a new and different right in Davis from that which was considered by the federal court. In taking that position we think the trial court was in error. The effect of the federal decision was to hold that the land officials incorrectly decided the contest made by Davis, and held that the Vickrey entry and the contract of appellant were good. The court had jurisdiction to review the action of the officers of the Land Department. Gage v. Gunther, 136 Cal. 338, 68 Pac. 710; 89 Am. St. Rep. 141; Sanders v. Dutcher, 168 Cal. 353, 143 Pac. 599; McLaren v. Fleischer, 181 Cal. 607, 185 Pac. 967. Whether the questions were correctly decided is not open to discussion here. The judgment of the federal court, rendered within its jurisdiction, was subject to direct attack only. As Davis' right to a patent depended solely upon the correctness of the decision made in the contest proceeding, once those decisions were adjudicated to be null there would be no basis for the issuance of the Davis patent; hence the acquiring of such a patent would give no new right of action from that possessed by Davis when the judgment was rendered in the equity suit by the federal court. Byers v. Neal, 43 Cal. 210; Shinn v. Young, 57 Cal. 525; Thrift v. Delaney, 69 Cal. 188, 10 Pac. 475; Phelan v. Tyler, 64 Cal. 80, 28 Pac. 114. Under the federal court decree, as it related to the facts concerning the Vickrey entry, a patent should have been issued in conformity with law. It was admitted that final proof as well as money payments had been made by Vickrey; hence nothing remained in the government but the naked legal title; there was no beneficial interest left which governmental agencies had the right to control. The required act of issuing a patent was a ministerial one only and devolved as a mandatory duty upon the officers charged with the administration of the Land Department. U. S. v. Grover (D. C.) 227 Fed. 181; Witcher v. Conklin, 84 Cal. 499, 24 Pac. 302; Graves v. Hebbron, 125 Cal. 400, 58 Pac. 12; Merrill v. Clark, 103 Cal. 367, 37 Pac. 238; Sanders v. Dutcher, supra.

The question of any reciprocal rights or equities existing between appellant Fell and Mrs. Vickrey would be immaterial to the plaintiff. The whole foundation of plaintiff's right to possession of the land utterly failed when the federal court determined that his contest made as against the Vickrey entry was wrongly decided. It seems unnecessary to go to any greater length in a discussion of questions argued in the briefs as between Davis and Fell. For the error in refusing to admit the judgment records, a new trial must be ordered. At that trial it may be assumed that such record will be introduced, and that the evidence will show plaintiff to be without right to the remedy sought in this action. The case as between A. S. Fell and Mrs. Vickrey will need further attention at the hands of the trial court. It appeared here in evidence that A. S. Fell had offered to pay the remaining portion of the price agreed to be rendered to Mrs. Vickrey upon condition that she secure to him title to the land. He offers in his cross-complaint to do equity toward Mrs. Vickrey as the court may decree. It was defendant A. S. Fell's contention that he had been compelled to purchase water stock in lieu of that agreed to be delivered by his vendor. If such was the case, a proper allowance should be made as a credit. As between A. S. Fell and Mrs. Vickrey the court should adjust the account. Upon the adjustment figures being arrived at, decree should be rendered requiring the transfer of title to the land by plaintiff and Mrs. Vickrey to said A. S. Fell upon the condition that Fell should first pay to Mrs. Vickrey any amounts of money found due to her.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. [2] In his petition for rehearing filed herein respondent specially insists that the decree of the federal District Court pleaded in bar by defendant A. S. Fell was rendered without jurisdiction because the action was brought there before patent issued, and cites an opinion of a District Court judge in Northern Lumber Co. v. O'Brien et al. (C. C.) 124 Fed. 819. In that case the action was brought while the controversy as between different claimants was still pending and undetermined before the Commissioner of the Land Office. This case differs from that, for final decision had been made in the Land Department adverse to the Fell interests before the action was brought in the District Court by respondent, resulting in the decree which was pleaded in bar. As to the Fell interests, the right to a patent had accrued prior to the bringing of that action. We cite two decisions of the United States Supreme Court which are applicable and fully answer the contention made by respondent. In Stark v. Starr et al., 6 Wall. 402, 18 L. Ed. 925, the court said:

"The right to a patent once vested is treated by the government, when dealing with the public lands, as equivalent to a patent issued."

And in Barney v. Dolph, 97 U. S. 652, 24 L. Ed. 1063:

"When the right to a patent once became vested in a settler under the law, it was equivalent, so far as the government was concerned, to a patent actually issued."

The petition for rehearing is denied.

---

59 Cal. App. 499

Ex parte TUNG FONG. (Cr. 664.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 26, 1922.)

1. Criminal law ⇐996(1)—Police court can amend minutes to conform to sentence pronounced.

The police court of the city of Sacramento had authority to amend its minutes to make them recite that a judgment of guilty was rendered against defendant prior to the time sentence was pronounced against him in another case, so as to make the minutes conform to the sentence actually pronounced, whether the police court is considered as a court of record or not.

2. Criminal law ⇐1210—Police court can impose cumulative sentences under statute.

There is nothing in Pen. Code, § 669, providing for cumulative sentences under certain circumstances, which would deprive police courts of power to impose cumulative sentences within the limitation of the section.

3. Criminal law ⇐1210—Power to impose cumulative sentences given without regard to nature of offense.

The power to impose cumulative sentences is given generally, without regard to the nature of the offense of which a defendant stands convicted, and the crimes punished need not be under the same, but may be under entirely different statutes.

4. Criminal law ⇐1210—Cumulative sentence statute construed.

Pen. Code, § 669, providing for cumulative sentences under certain circumstances does not purport to prescribe the procedure for prosecutions thereunder, but merely defines and forbids certain acts and prescribes penalties for their commission.

5. Criminal law ⟸1210—To justify cumulative sentences, a second offense must have been committed after conviction of first.

Under Pen. Code, § 669, providing for cumulative sentences in order to justify a heavier penalty, the second offense must have been committed after conviction of the first.

Application by Tung Fong, also known as Tong Fong, for a writ of habeas corpus to be directed to the sheriff of Sacramento county, to secure release after conviction for violation of the state poison law. Writ denied.

Frank L. Gafney and H. T. Hiatt, both of Sacramento, for petitioner.

Hugh B. Bradford, Dist. Atty., and Markham Johnston, Asst. Dist. Atty., both of Sacramento, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. June 5, 1922, in the police court of the city of Sacramento, in case No. 1227, the petitioner was adjudged guilty of having had a preparation of morphine in his possession on the 1st day of June, 1922, contrary to the provisions of the act of 1907 and amendments thereto, regulating the sale and use of poisons. Stats. 1907, p. 124. Thereafter on the same day, in case No. 1228, he was adjudged guilty of having had a preparation of cocaine in his possession on the 1st day of June, 1922, contrary to the provisions of the act. After both convictions he was sentenced under the first charge to pay a fine of $100 and to be imprisoned in the county jail for the term of 90 days, and under the second charge he was sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail for 90 days. The judgment in the latter case provided:

"The term of imprisonment herein to commence at the expiration of the term of imprisonment imposed upon said defendant in the case of The People v. Tong Fong, No. 1227."

The court minutes of June 5th did not recite that the judgment of guilty in case No. 1228 was rendered prior to the time sentence was pronounced in case No. 1227, and October 4, 1922, on motion of the prosecution, the court amended its minutes of June 5th to recite that sentence was not imposed in case No. 1227 until after judgment of guilty was rendered in case No. 1228. Petitioner served the full term of imprisonment imposed in case No. 1227, and then filed his petition herein for a writ of habeas corpus.

Petitioner contends that the order of the police court purporting to amend its minutes is null and void. In Wildenhayn v. Justice Court, 34 Cal. App. 306, 167 Pac. 305, it was held that a justice's court, as well as a court of record, has the inherent power to amend its records so as to make them speak the truth with respect to the actual orders it has made. Article 6, § 12, of the state Constitution provides:

"The Supreme Court, the District Courts of Appeal, the superior courts, and such other courts as the Legislature shall prescribe, shall be courts of record."

[1] The Sacramento city charter, duly approved by the Legislature, provides that the police court "shall be considered a court of record, and shall have a seal." The court had authority to amend its minutes to conform to the sentence actually pronounced, whether considered as a court of record or not.

[2] It is argued that section 669 of the Penal Code, providing for cumulative sentences under certain circumstances, is not applicable to cases tried in police courts. Prior to the enactment of that section it was held that police courts had jurisdiction to impose cumulative sentences. People v. Forbes, 22 Cal. 136. Whether applicable to proceedings in police courts or not, there is nothing in section 669 which would deprive such courts of power to impose cumulative sentences within the limitations of that section. If it does not apply to such courts, then manifestly it does not curtail the powers exercised by them prior to its enactment, while if it does so apply, then it merely limits the jurisdiction of such courts to impose cumulative sentences to the cases therein mentioned, just as it does that of superior courts.

[3, 4] It is claimed that the act under which petitioner was prosecuted is a special statute containing a complete system of procedure, and that, since the act does not provide for cumulative sentences, the court had no jurisdiction to impose such. No reason appears why this act should have so provided any more than any other penal statute. The power to impose cumulative sentences is given generally, without regard to the nature of the offenses of which a defendant stands convicted. The two or more crimes referred to in section 669 need not be of the same character. The prosecutions therefor may be under entirely different statutes. The statute in question here does not purport to prescribe the procedure for prosecutions thereunder, but merely defines and forbids certain acts and prescribes penalties for their commission.

It is suggested that the offenses charged in the two complaints were in fact but a single act of possession of the two forbidden drugs at the same time, and therefore constituted but a single offense. It is not necessary to decide whether the possession of the two drugs at one time would constitute a single offense or two offenses, because the record does not show but that the defendant may have had possession of one drug at one time during the day and the other at another time.

The statute (St. 1921, p. 978, § 1) provides:

"Any person convicted under section eight of this act for having in possession any of the narcotic drugs or their derivatives mentioned therein, shall upon the first conviction be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and punished by a fine of not more than two hundred dollars, or not more than ninety days imprisonment in the city or county jail, or by both such fine and imprisonment; for the second and each subsequent offense of which said person so convicted shall be found guilty, said person shall be deemed guilty of a felony and punished by imprisonment in the state prison for not less than one year, nor more than five years."

[5] Some authorities hold that under such a statute the heavier penalty is to be imposed, although the second offense was committed before the defendant was convicted of the first. 8 R. C. L. 275. If that rule is to prevail here, then the second offense of which petitioner was convicted was a felony of which the police court had no jurisdiction. It is thought, however, that the correct rule, and the one sustained by the greater weight of authority, is that in order to justify the heavier penalty the second offense must have been committed after conviction of the first. In city of Mt. Sterling v. Buss, 216 Ill. App. 6, the ordinance under consideration provided that any person convicted of violating its provisions "shall forfeit and pay to said city the sum of twenty-five dollars for each first offense, and the sum of two hundred dollars for each and every offense thereafter." The court said:

"The words 'each first offense' include all violations of the ordinance proven on the first prosecution of a person charged with having violated it. The words 'each and every offense thereafter' have reference to subsequent violations. * * * A second offense, carrying with it a severer penalty, is not committed in law until there has been a conviction for a first offense."

In State v. Savage, 86 W. Va. 655, 104 S. E. 153, the court said:

"A defendant cannot be guilty of a second offense until it has been judicially determined that he has sinned once before."

In Commonwealth v. McDermott, 224 Pa. 363, 73 Atl. 427, it is said:

"The severer penalty is imposed by the Legislature because that imposed for the first offense was ineffectual. The second offense, carrying with it severer penalties, is therefore not committed in law until there has been judgment for the first."

See, also, People v. Bergman, 176 App. Div. 318, 162 N. Y. Supp. 443; Kinney v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. R. 500, 78 S. W. 225, 79 S. W. 570; Muckenfuss v. State, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 216, 117 S. W. 853; Hyser v. Commonwealth, 116 Ky. 410, 76 S. W. 174; Brown v. Commonwealth, 119 Ky. 670, 61 S. W. 4.

The writ is discharged, and the petition denied.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

---

(59 Cal. App. 396)

PEOPLE ex rel. DEVINE v. ELKUS et al.
(Civ. 2448.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 23, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 22, 1922.)

1. Municipal corporations ⇐56—Specific provision in Constitution controls general as to municipal powers.

The provision of Const. art. 11, § 8, providing that a municipality containing a population of more than 3,500 inhabitants may frame a charter for its own government consistent with and subject to the Constitution, applies to and qualifies every power conferred upon the chartered city; but, notwithstanding such restriction, if the municipality is given express authority by the Constitution to do a particular thing contrary to some general provision thereof, the more specific provision controls the general.

2. Elections ⇐7 — Surrender or abridgment of right to vote must clearly appear.

To justify a court in holding that the people of the state have surrendered or abridged their right to vote at all elections, their intent to do so must appear with great certainty and clearness.

3. Elections ⇐15 — Proportional representation system of voting violative of Constitution.

The provision of the Sacramento Charter adopting the Hare system of voting, that is, the proportional representation system of voting, is violative of the elector's constitutional right to vote at all elections, under Const. art. 11, § 8½; sections 6 and 8 being inapplicable.

4. Municipal corporations ⇐147—Members of city council elected by invalid method de facto officers.

Members of the city council of Sacramento elected under the proportional representation system of voting, which method of election is unconstitutional, became de facto officers whose official acts within the scope of their authority, as defined by the Charter, are and will continue to be valid until they are legally deposed from office; former officers having voluntarily surrendered their offices.

5. Municipal corporations ⇐149(1) — Offices held to become vacant after surrender.

Where members of city commission of Sacramento voluntarily surrendered their offices at the time a new charter went into effect and thereafter for a period of three consecutive months ceased to discharge the duties of their offices, the same became vacant under Pol. Code, § 996.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Proceeding by the People of the State of California, on the complaint and relation of James H. Devine, a private party, for the removal of Albert Elkus and others from office. Judgment for defendants, and relator appeals. Reversed, with directions.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., G. W. Bedeau, of Marysville, and Ray T. Coughlin, of Sacramento, for appellant.

R. L. Shinn, Devlin & Devlin, Elliott & Atkinson, and Clinton E. Harber, all of Sacramento, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. As the result of an election held on the 3d day of May, 1921, the defendants were declared elected members of the city council of the city of Sacramento. They entered upon the discharge of their duties as such and have continuously thereafter acted as such city council. This suit was instituted to oust them from office on the ground that the charter provisions under which they were elected are unconstitutional. The defendants' demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and, the plaintiff declining to amend, judgment was entered for the defendants.

The Sacramento charter provides for the election of the city council "by the proportional representation system" known as the Hare system of voting. The only question presented by this appeal is whether such proportional representation system is constitutional. Section 273 of the charter provides:

"The full name of all regularly nominated candidates shall be printed on the official ballots in the alphabetical order of the surnames. The ballots shall be marked according to the following instructions, which shall be printed at the top of each ballot under the heading of 'Directions to Voters.' Put the figure 1 opposite the name of your first choice. If you want to express also second, third, and other choices, do so by putting the figure 2 opposite the name of your second choice, the figure 3 opposite the name of your third choice, and so on. In this way you may express as many choices as you please. The more choices you express, the surer you are to make your ballot count for one of the candidates you favor. This ballot will not be counted for your second choice, unless it is found that it cannot help your first; it will not be counted for your third choice unless it is found that it cannot help either your first or your second, etc. A ballot is spoiled if the figure 1 is put opposite more than one name."

The complicated system of counting the votes and ascertaining the result of the election under the Hare system, as provided by the charter, is substantially set forth in detail in Wattles v. Upjohn, 211 Mich. 514, 179 N. W. 335, and need not be here repeated. For the purposes of this opinion it is sufficient to say that, though nine members of the city council were to be elected at large, no ballot could be or was counted for more than one candidate, whether counted as the elector's first, second, or additional choice. In the language of counsel for appellant, "when once counted it becomes dead." Candidates are elected, not by a majority or a plurality, but by a "quota or constituency" of votes. Section 274 of the charter directs the separation of the ballots into "valid" and "invalid" lots, and provides:

"(d) The whole number of valid ballots shall then be divided by a number greater by 1 than the number of seats to be filled. The next whole number larger than the resulting quotient is the quota or constituency that suffices to elect a member. (e) All candidates the number of whose votes on the first count equal or exceed the quota shall then be declared elected. (f) All votes obtained by any candidate in excess the quota shall be termed his surplus."

Elaborate provision is made for the count of second choice votes appearing on "transferable ballots," viz. surplus ballots, if any, and ballots containing first choice votes for "the candidate lowest on the poll," who is declared defeated. Third and additional choice votes are then successively counted by a similar process, where necessary to determine the result of the election, each candidate being declared elected when the number of his votes equals the quota. The count ends "when candidates to the number of seats to be filled have received a quota, * * * or when the number of continuing candidates is reduced to the number of seats still to be filled," such continuing candidates then being declared elected whether they have received the full quota or not.

Appellant contends that the charter provisions in question are in conflict with section 1, art. 2, of the state Constitution, which provides that every qualified elector "shall be entitled to vote at all elections which are now or may hereafter be authorized by law." No one would contend that a law would be valid which deprived a qualified elector of the right to vote at an election. "In this country, the right to vote is recognized as one of the highest privileges of the citizen. It is so recognized not only by the citizen, but by the law; and any attempted infringement by legislative power upon that right as granted by the constitution is idle legislation." Spier v. Baker, 120 Cal. 370, 375, 52 Pac. 659, 661 (41 L. R. A. 196). The constitutional right to vote would be a barren privilege if the Legislature could limit its exercise to one office or one proposition to be voted on. The right to vote "at all elections" includes the right to vote for a candidate for every office to be filled and on every proposition submitted. The election of nine members of the city council is the election of persons to nine offices as fully as if the offices were distinct in name and in the duties to be discharged, and it is as far beyond the legislative power to limit the elector to the right of voting for one candidate therefor as it would be in the election of state or county officers. In State v. Constantine, 42 Ohio St. 437, 51 Am. Rep. 833, the statute under consideration authorized the election of four commissioners, and provided that—

"No elector shall at any election vote for more than two persons for such commissioners, and any ballot containing the names of more than two persons for said office shall not be counted for any of the names thereon, and the four persons receiving the highest number of votes shall be declared elected."

The Constitution provided that "the election and appointment of all officers * * * not otherwise provided for by this Constitution * * * shall be made in such manner as may be directed by law" (Const. Ohio, art. 2, § 27), and that every qualified elector "shall be entitled to vote at all elections" (article 5, § 1). In holding the statute unconstitutional, the court said:

"By this article we have no doubt that each elector is entitled to vote for each officer, whose election is submitted to the electors, as well as on each question that is submitted."

In the similar case of McArdle v. Mayor, etc., of Jersey City, 66 N. J. Law, 590, 49 Atl. 1013, 88 Am. St. Rep. 496, it is said:

"On its face, this act is plainly an infringement of that constitutional provision which secures to qualified voters the elective franchise."

Like conclusions were reached in Bowden v. Bedell, 68 N. J. Law, 451, 53 Atl. 198, and In re Opinion of Judges, 21 R. I. 579, 41 Atl. 1009. In apparent conflict with the foregoing authorities is the case of Commonwealth v. Redder, 171 Pa. 505, 33 Atl. 67, 33 L. R. A. 141. The statute there held constitutional directed the election of seven judges of the superior court, and provided that "no elector may vote * * * for more than six candidates upon one ballot for the said office." Act June 24, 1895 (P. L. 212). The Constitution provided that every elector "shall be entitled to vote at all elections." Article 8, § 1. The act was upheld, by a divided court, on the ground that similar statutes in that state had been in force and undisputed for many years. In the majority opinion it is said that the construction therein given the constitutional provision "was acquiesced in by the bar, the courts, and the Legislature for a period of 35 years. * * * In view of this long-continued interpretation of our Constitution, we do not think it necessary to discuss the authorities cited from other states." In view of the grounds on which the decision was based, the case cannot be considered authority where such grounds do not exist.

The statutes considered in the foregoing cases provided for minority representation by limiting the elector's right to vote. In furtherance of the same object, some states have provided for cumulative voting by allowing the elector to cast as many votes for one candidate as there are persons to be elected, or to distribute the same among the candidates as he may see fit. The Constitution of Illinois so provides, and, of course, the provision is upheld by the courts of that state. People v. Deneen, 247 Ill. 289, 93 N. E. 437. The Constitution of this state provides for cumulative voting in the election of directors of corporations. Const. art. 12, § 12. In the absence of constitutional authorization, statutes permitting cumulative voting in public elections have been held invalid. Maynard v. Board of Canvassers, 84 Mich. 228, 47 N. W. 756, 11 L. R. A. 332; concurring opinion in State v. Thompson, 21 N. D. 426, 131 N. W. 231. In Maynard v. Board of Canvassers, the court said:

"No reason can be given why, under our Constitution, one elector should be entitled to vote twice or seven times for any particular person to represent him in the Legislature, when any other elector, who desires to exercise the right which the Constitution gives him to vote for every person allowed by law to represent him in the Legislature, is permitted to vote but once. * * * It is no answer to say that he, too, may forego the right of an elector to vote for the number of representatives which the law permits in cities entitled to more than one representative; for to do so he is compelled to relinquish a constitutional right, and his right as an elector is in this respect abridged."

Preferential systems of voting have been upheld where the elector is permitted to vote his first choice for as many candidates as there are offices to be filled, in the following cases: Adams v. Lansdon, 18 Idaho, 483, 110 Pac. 280, where the statute provided that electors must "vote for both first and second choice if there are more than twice as many candidates as there are positions"; State v. Nichols, 50 Wash. 508, 97 Pac. 728, where the elector could cast as many first-choice votes as there were positions to be filled; Farrell v. Hicken, 125 Minn. 407, 147 N. W. 815, L. R. A. 1915B, 401, where the statute provided that "no vote shall be counted on the election of commissioners unless the voters mark as many first choices as there are commissioners to be elected"; and Orpen v. Watson, 87 N. J. Law, 69, 93 Atl. 853, where the statute provided for the election of five commissioners at large and required every elector to express a first choice for each office to be filled under penalty of having his ballot declared void. In State v. City of Portland, 65 Or. 273, 133 Pac. 62, the city charter provided for the election of commissioners at large and that—"When the number of candidates is more than three times the number of offices to be filled, each voter shall have the right to vote for as many first choice candidates as there are offices to be filled, and as many second choice candidates as there are offices to be filled, and as many third choice candidates as there are offices to be filled."

The system was upheld under a constitutional provision as follows:

"Provisions may be made by law for the voter's direct or indirect expression of his first, second or additional choices among the candidates for any office." Const. art. 11, § 16.

A statute similar to the foregoing charter provisions of the city of Portland was held unconstitutional in Brown v. Smallwood, 130 Minn. 492, 153 N. W. 953, L. R. A. 1916B, 931, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 474. The court said:

"The preferential system directly diminishes the right of an elector to give an effective vote for the candidate of his choice. If he votes for him once, his power to help him is exhausted. If he votes for other candidates he may harm his choice, but cannot help him. * * * A qualified voter has the constitutional right to record one vote for the candidate of his choice, and have it counted one. This right is not infringed by giving the same right to another qualified voter opposed to him. It is infringed if such other voter is permitted to vote for three opposing candidates."

In Wattles v. Upjohn, 211 Mich. 514, 179 N. W. 335, the Hare system of voting, substantially as provided in the Sacramento charter, is declared unconstitutional. The court said:

"The Hare system limits his [the voter's] power to express his preference 'in this manner' to but one candidate of the seven, only permitting him to express a second choice for one other, and so on by numerically dwindling and weakening choices until the elector has expressed thus 'as many choices as you (he) please.' As said in the Maynard Case, 'it is not in the power of the Legislature (nor a city adopting a charter under the Home Rule Act) to give his preference or choice, without conflicting with these provisions of the Constitution, more than a single expression of opinion or choice'; and he has the right to express that single choice as to each of the officers to be elected in his district. While each voter can under the Hare system vote for all candidates to express sequential choices as provided, it is evident that his vote is primarily and positively effective for only one candidate."

At the oral argument, counsel for respondents filed a typewritten copy of the decision of the Court of Appeals of the Eighth District of Ohio, rendered May 6, 1922, in the case of Reutener v. City of Cleveland, upholding the Hare system as embodied in the Cleveland charter. The Constitution of Ohio provides that all qualified electors shall be "entitled to vote at all elections." Section 3 of article 18 of the Constitution provides: "Municipalities shall have authority to exercise all powers of local self-government." Section 7 provides: "Any municipality may frame and adopt a charter for its government and may, subject to the provisions of section 3 of this article, exercise thereunder all powers of local self-government." The court said:

"A code city may become a charter city only by determining its desires so to do by electing a commission to frame a charter under the method provided by section 8, art. 18, of the Constitution, and by ratifying at an election the plans submitted to it by such commission. When it has so adopted a charter such city has become a self-governing municipality and is henceforth constitutionally qualified to make such changes as experience suggests and in such manner as is provided by section 9 of article 18. * * * If this fifth article of the Constitution stood alone and was the sole measure of constitutional power in the case at bar, the Constantine Case might be deemed authoritative. The fifth article of the Constitution, however, is not operative when it comes in conflict with article 18."

The decision thus seems to be based upon the proposition that the chartered cities of Ohio are given the right of local self-government in the broadest sense. The foregoing authorities uniformly sustain the declaration found in section 212 of McCrary on Elections (4th Ed.) "that minority representation and cumulative voting can be provided for only by constitutional provision."

Respondents contend that chartered cities have been granted plenary authority to adopt the Hare system of voting by section 6 of article 11 of the Constitution, which empowers them "to make and enforce all laws and regulations in respect to municipal affairs, subject only to the restrictions and limitations provided in their several charters"; section 8, providing that such cities "may make and enforce all laws and regulations in respect to municipal affairs, subject only to the restrictions and limitations provided in their several charters"; and section 8½, which provides:

"It shall be competent in any charter framed in accordance with the provisions of this section, or section eight of this article, for any city or consolidated city and county, and plenary authority is hereby granted, subject only to the restrictions of this article, to provide therein or by amendment thereto, the manner in which, the method by which, the times at which, and the terms for which the several county and municipal officers and employees whose compensation is paid by such city or city and county, excepting judges of the superior court, shall be elected or appointed, and for their recall and removal."

[1] It seems plain that sections 6 and 8 are inapplicable. They relate to the powers of chartered cities, through their councils or by initiative measures, to adopt "laws and regulations in respect to municipal affairs." The power of municipalities to adopt or amend charter provisions is not subject to "the restrictions and limitations provided in their several charters" any more than the power of the Legislature to enact a law is limited by prior legislative acts, or than the power of the people to change the Constitution is restricted by existing constitutional provisions. Municipal authority to adopt the voting system in question must be found, if at all, in the provisions of section 8½. Since the authority conferred by section 8½ is made "subject only to restrictions of this article" (art. 11) it is pertinent to inquire what those restrictions are. Section 8 of article 11 provides that a municipality "containing a population of more than three thousand five hundred inhabitants * * * may frame a charter for its own government, consistent with and subject to this Constitution." This restriction applies to and qualifies every power conferred upon the chartered city. Notwithstanding such restriction, however, if the municipality is given express authority by the Constitution to do a particular thing contrary to some general provision thereof, "the more specific provision controls the general." Martin v. Election Commissioners, 126 Cal. 404, 411, 58 Pac. 932, 935.

[2] The right of qualified citizens to vote at all elections is the fundamental right upon which our government is founded. To justify a court in holding that the people of the state have surrendered or abridged that right, their intent to do so must appear with great certainty and clearness. In construing the constitutional provision under consideration, the forceful language of Chief Justice Marshall in United States v. Fisher, 2 Cranch. 358, 2 L. Ed. 304, is particularly applicable:

"Where rights are infringed, where fundamental principles are overthrown, where the general system of the laws is departed from, the legislative intention must be expressed with irresistible clearness to induce a court of justice to suppose a design to effect such objects."

The determination of the issue in this case must depend upon the construction of the provision of section 8½, empowering cities to provide in their charters for "the manner in which" and "the method by which" their officers shall be elected. In Coffin v. Board of Election, Com'rs, 97 Mich. 188, 56 N. W. 567, 21 L. R. A. 662, the court said:

"The authority to direct the time and manner in which judicial officers shall be elected and the other officers elected or appointed, does not involve the power to determine who shall constitute the electorate. The word 'manner,' it is true, is one of large signification, but it is clear that it cannot exceed the subject to which it belongs. It relates to the word 'elected.' The Constitution had already provided for electors, and when it provides that an officer shall be elected, it certainly contemplates an election by the electorate which it has constituted. No other election is known to the Constitution, and, when it provides that the Legislature may direct the manner in which an officer shall be elected, it simply empowers the Legislature to provide the details for the holding of such election."

In People v. English, 139 Ill. 622, 29 N. E. 678, 15 L. R. A. 131, in construing a section of the Constitution providing that "there may be a county superintendent of schools in each county, whose qualifications, powers, duties, compensation, and time and manner of election, and term of office, shall be prescribed by law" (Const. art. 8, § 5), the court said that the word "manner" as used in the constitutional provision "indicates merely that the Legislature may provide by law the usual, ordinary, or necessary details required for the holding of the election," and not that it may determine the qualifications of voters. The term "manner of election" has been given the same interpretation by other courts. Board of Election Commissioners v. Knight, 187 Ind. 108, 117 N. E. 565, 650; Livesley v. Litchfield, 47 Or. 248, 83 Pac. 142, 114 Am. St. Rep. 920; People v. Guden (Sup.) 75 N. Y. Supp. 347; State v. Adams, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 231. The word "manner" is more comprehensive than "method." Webster says:

"Manner is literally the handling of a thing, and has a wider sense, embracing both method and mode."

The addition of the word "method" by the amendment of 1914 cannot be held to have broadened the meaning of the word "manner" as used in section 8½. If the power given municipalities to provide for the manner of electing officers does not authorize them to prescribe the qualifications of voters, it cannot be held that it empowers them to deny electors the right to vote. Certainly, by the adoption of section 8½, the people have not "expressed with irresistible clearness" an intention to infringe and overthrow the fundamental right guaranteed by the Constitution to every qualified elector of voting at all elections. Many authorities are cited to show that the election of municipal officers is a municipal affair, but none of them go to the extent of holding that the municipality can prescribe the qualifications of voters or abridge the constitutional right of qualified electors to vote.

Counsel for respondents say, "An examination of 'Debates and Proceedings of the Constitutional Convention of 1879,' is interesting in showing the intention of the framers thereof," and then proceed to set forth in their brief parts of such proceedings, showing an intent to give municipalities a large measure of local self-government. It is equally interesting to examine the arguments for and against the adoption of the initiative amendment of 1914 to section 8½, containing the provisions on which respondents rely, and mailed to all the voters of the state, as required by law, shortly prior to the election of that year. The arguments were entirely silent as to the possibility of adopting a preferential or proportional representation system of voting under the provisions of the amendment, and it is fair to assume that the voters did not have such possibility in mind. At the same election there was submitted proposed Assembly Constitutional Amendment 19, amending section 13 of article 20, in which the following appeared:

"Provision may be made in such charters (of cities, counties or cities and counties), and by general laws in the case of other counties and municipalities, for either or both nomination for and election to office at a primary election of all or any portion of the candidates voted for at such primary election and for a preferential system of voting at any county, city and county, or municipal primary or other election. Provision for a preferential system of voting at any other primary election may also be made by general laws."

Arguments in favor of the adoption of the proposed amendment were devoted exclusively to the merits of the preferential system; but, notwithstanding the fact that no counter argument was made, the people defeated the proposed amendment by a large majority.

It would have been competent to provide in the charter for the division of the city into nine districts and the election of one member of the council from each district Had that been done, no elector would have had a right to vote for more than one candidate to represent him. The Hare system cannot, however, be upheld on the theory that, in legal effect, it divides the electorate into as many districts or constituencies as there are offices to be filled, "based on common opinion instead of arbitrary geographical lines," and that "every man's ballot is counted for one man who is his representative among the candidates on the legislative body," which would be all he could do were the city divided into nine districts, and "that therefore it cannot be said his right of elective franchise has been abridged." In Wattles v. Upjohn, supra, from which the foregoing quotations are made, the court said:

"Counsel very interestingly discusses the advantages of that theoretical method of distributing constituencies by boundary lines of opinion, belief or policy, but, however alluring in theory, such intangible, undefined theoretical demarcation by similar thought or views is not a legal substitute for what is in law recognized to be a voting constituency or geographically defined representation district, as the right of franchise has become established under our Constitution."

Counsel for respondents argue that "the right of defendants to hold office is justified also under the power of appointment." It seems so clear that the selection of the defendants was, and was intended to be, by election and not by appointment, that it is deemed sufficient to quote the language of the court in McArdle v. Mayor, etc., of Jersey City, supra, as follows:

"The argument of the counsel for the defendants in error that this is not an election, but an appointment by the Legislature of persons to perform the duties of excise commissioners, who shall be selected in the manner pointed out by the act, if sound (which it is not), would enable the Legislature to tamper with the elective franchise at its will, and the constitutional provision which was designed to secure to the qualified voters of the state the elective franchise would be made a nullity."

[3-5] It must be held that the proportional representation system of voting provided for in the charter is violative of the elector's constitutional right to vote at all elections. The power of the people of the state, by constitutional amendment, to authorize municipalities to adopt the Hare system of voting is not doubted, but it is clear that they have not done so. In reaching this conclusion, full consideration has been given to the principle that all laws are presumed to be constitutional and that they are to be declared invalid only when they clearly appear to be so. The court has also given consideration to the practical effect of holding the proportional representation system of voting unconstitutional. Having been elected and acting under color of legal authority, the defendants were and are de facto officers whose official acts, within the scope of their authority as defined by the charter, are and will continue to be valid until they are legally deposed from office. It is fairly inferable from the allegations of the complaint that the members of the former city commission voluntarily surrendered their offices at the time the new charter went into effect. If they did so and thereafter, for a period of three consecutive months, ceased to discharge the duties of their offices, the same became vacant. Pol. Code, § 996; People v. Hartwell, 67 Cal. 11, 6 Pac. 873; People v. Rodgers, 118 Cal. 393, 46 Pac. 740, 50 Pac. 668; People v. Rea, 2 Cal. App. 109, 83 Pac. 165. The affairs of the city will not be disturbed, other than such disturbance as may arise from a change of policies, if any, in the event that persons other than the defendants are selected to succeed them. Future elections of council members may be conducted under the general laws of the state, if the charter be not amended to provide a different procedure, section 2 of the charter providing that—

"Where the general laws of the state provide a procedure for the carrying out and enforcement of any rights or powers belonging to the city, said procedure shall control and be followed unless a different procedure shall have been provided in this charter or by ordinance."

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer and grant the defendants a reasonable time to answer.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

59 Cal. App. 375

SHIMIZU v. NOJIRI. (Civ. 2521.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 19, 1922. Rehearing Denied Nov. 18, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court. Dec. 18, 1922.)

1. Appeal and error ⊂⊃673(2)—Record held to show contention that written contract had been modified.

On appeal in action on contract for price of goods sold and delivered, record held to show that defendant contended below that the written contract between the parties had been modified by an executed oral agreement whereby the goods were shipped on consignment.

2. Evidence ⊂⊃445(2)—Sales ⊂⊃93—Evidence held to show abandonment of written contract, and evidence of different oral contract was admissible.

In action under written contract for goods delivered, evidence held sufficient to show an abandonment of the written contract and the substitution of an oral agreement in its stead, whereby the goods were shipped on consignment and handled on commission, and parol evidence rule did not prevent proof of a contract differing from the written contract.

3. Sales ⊂⊃358(4)—Evidence of net returns held admissible in action for price on defense of shipment on commission.

In action on written contract for price of goods delivered, evidence having been produced from which the jury were warranted in finding that the parties had agreed prior to the deliveries of the goods that the same should be shipped on a commission basis, the written contract providing no price, and that it was so shipped, the defendant should have been permitted to prove the net returns from such shipments.

4. Sales ⊂⊃358(4)—Evidence bearing on market price held admissible where contract stated no price.

In action under written contract for price of goods delivered where the written contract stated no price for the goods, and plaintiff testified that it was orally agreed at the time of the execution of the contract that he was to receive the daily market price at the time of the shipments, and there was no substantial evidence showing the market price, and it was therefore necessary to determine the price to which plaintiff was entitled from evidence of later agreements and understandings of the parties, each party was entitled to produce evidence bearing upon that question.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Action by K. Shimizu against N. Nojiri, doing business under the firm name and style of Sacramento Distributors. Judgment for plaintiff and defendant appeals. Reversed.

White, Miller, Needham & Harber, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Robert H. Schwab, of Sacramento, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The complaint alleges that the defendant became indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $7,750.35 for goods sold and delivered; that the defendant had paid $3,000 on account, and prayed for judgment in the sum of $4,750.35, the alleged balance remaining unpaid. The answer denies the allegations of the complaint, and avers that the cause of action set forth in the complaint arose out of an alleged sale of celery; that the celery was not sold to the defendant, but that "the only celery handled by the defendant for the plaintiff was on consignment and not by way of purchase"; that the plaintiff delivered to the defendant 4,618 crates of celery "on consignment to be sold on account of plaintiff on commission"; that "the defendant sold the said celery for the plaintiff on commission, and the net proceeds thereof, after deducting freight and commission, aggregated the sum of $1,311"; that the defendant paid in the plaintiff's behalf for labor, materials, and cash advanced the sum of $6,819.19. The same facts were alleged by way of cross-complaint, and the defendant prayed for judgment for the difference between the alleged amount paid out for the plaintiff and the net receipts from the sale of the celery. Verdict and judgment went for plaintiff in the sum demanded in the complaint.

There was admitted in evidence an agreement between the parties, dated January 24, 1920, containing the following provisions:

"That the buyer hereby agrees to buy and does buy from the seller, who hereby agrees to sell and does sell to the buyer the seller's entire crop of golden yellow celery, estimated to be approximately 20 acres grown upon the land situated in Sacramento township, state of California, during the entire season of 1920 and 1921. * * * Until the complete delivery of the entire crop * * * the seller * * * agrees to assume all risks of injury to or the loss of the above mentioned crop, and further agrees to pick carefully all of said crop * * * at such time as may be designated by the said buyer, and before the 15th day of February, 1921, at his entire expense, and the above said buyer agrees to pay for the above-mentioned crop on delivery at car door or platform in Sacramento City or loading station. * * * It is further agreed by both the buyer and seller that all the above crop is to be of merchantable quality and suitable for eastern shipments, free of all defects, and subject to the inspection of the said buyer who will have the right and authority to reject or accept the above crop or any part thereof. * * * This contract is hereby agreed to by both buyer and seller to pass title and constitute an absolute sale of the above crop and that no other agreement or understanding be necessary or shall in any way modify this contract, and that the money paid as part payment on this contract is to be credited when final settlement is made."

The contract is silent as to the price to be paid for the celery.

Plaintiff testified that the agreement was executed on the day it bears date; that after it was signed the defendant suggested that the price to be paid for the celery be inserted in the agreement, but that plaintiff said he wanted the daily Sacramento market price prevailing at the time deliveries were made, to which defendant orally agreed; that early in November, immediately prior to the first shipment, the parties orally agreed upon a price of $2 a crate, and that eight carloads were delivered pursuant to that understanding; that thereafter, on account of a weak market, shipments were discontinued for a time; that prior to the resumption of shipments, the parties agreed upon a price of 35 cents a dozen for the remainder of the celery and it was delivered under that agreement.

The defendant testified that early in the year 1920 the plaintiff asked the defendant to handle the former's crop of celery, and that defendant replied that he would do so, but that there was at that time no agreement made as to a sale or the terms on which the crop would be handled; that the written agreement was executed in June, at plaintiff's request, for the purpose of showing the men working for him that he had a contract for the sale of his crop; that the defendant did not have any marketing forms at the time, and therefore "used that grapevine contract"; that in August plaintiff asked $3 a crate net for the celery and defendant made inquiries personally by telephone and telegraph in an effort to find a buyer at that price but without success; that plaintiff later reduced the price to $2 and the defendant agreed to endeavor to market the celery at that price, but at no time agreed to pay $2 a crate, or any other price therefor; that the defendant told plaintiff he would handle it for plaintiff's account; that after eight cars had been shipped he advised plaintiff not to ship any more until the market improved, that there was no demand for the celery at that time; that later the plaintiff asked him to market the remainder of the crop, and defendant replied that there was no market in the east for it, but that he was willing to handle it for plaintiff; that the parties then agreed that the defendant should offer the celery at 35 cents a dozen; that thereupon shipments were resumed; that, after all the celery in controversy had been shipped, the plaintiff requested a loan of money from defendant and, upon defendant replying that no returns had been coming in and that he could not pay him, plaintiff for the first time made the claim that the celery had been sold to defendant. At the request of defendant's counsel, the plaintiff produced receipts given him for all deliveries made to defendant. They are all alike except as to dates and quantities. The following is a copy of one of them:

"Consigned Growers Receipt, No. 12307.

"Cal., Nov. 9, 1920.

"Received from K. Shimizu grower, 160 crates of celery, P. F. E. 3878. Notice. This receipt is issued to the grower for fruit delivered to N. Nojiri Fruit Company to be handled on consignment for his account.

"N. Nojiri Fruit Company."

The plaintiff testified that he could not read English and did not read any of the receipts, though he did not say that he did not know the contents thereof.

The written agreement shows that the celery was intended for the eastern market. The plaintiff made no attempt to prove the market value of the celery, relying entirely on his own testimony to establish oral agreements fixing the prices to be paid. Uncontradicted testimony produced by defendant shows that white celery is sold in the local markets and that there was no cash market value in Sacramento for golden yellow celery while deliveries were being made; that as a rule celery is not sold for cash in Sacramento, but that it is turned over by the growers to various marketing organizations on consignment; and that they sell it to the eastern trade at a "price subject to inspection and acceptance upon arrival." On cross-examination the plaintiff said that some "fellow" told him that the market price of celery was $2 a crate about the time of the first delivery. It does not appear whether such price was for white or yellow celery. It may fairly be said that there is no substantial evidence establishing the market price of celery at the times deliveries were made. The plaintiff's case, therefore, rested entirely upon his testimony to the effect that prices had been fixed by agreement of the parties. Such testimony was squarely contradicted by the defendant. The defendant further testified that the parties agreed orally upon a sale on commission. Such testimony is corroborated by the receipts given by defendant and accepted by the plaintiff, reciting that all shipments of celery were delivered to defendant "to be handled on consignment" for plaintiff's account. If the allegations of defendant's answer, which he was not permitted to prove, are true, then he had paid plaintiff more than was due him for his crop of celery, and it follows that all the terms of the oral agreement to ship on consignment had been fully performed. Such executed oral agreement, if made, whether considered as a modification of the written contract, a substitution therefor, or a method agreed upon by the parties for determining the price to be paid, was valid and binding upon the plaintiff.

The defendant offered evidence to show the amounts received by him for the celery sold and the amounts properly expended by him in marketing the same. The court sustained plaintiff's objections to the admission of such evidence. It seems clear that such rulings were erroneous and highly prejudicial. It may be true that, if such evidence had been admitted, the jury would have believed plaintiff's testimony rather than that of defendant; but the defendant had the right to introduce the evidence and have the jury pass upon it. If the evidence thus excluded be true, then the moneys expended by the defendant in marketing the celery, together with the advances made to plaintiff, exceeded the total receipts from all celery sold, and the defendant was entitled to judgment against the plaintiff. The other errors complained of, in so far as they have merit, are similar to that considered, and no useful purpose would be subserved by a detailed discussion thereof, as it is not probable that they will be repeated at the retrial of the case.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. The respondent states in his petition for a rehearing that the defendant never contended that the written contract between the parties had been modified by an executed oral agreement and that there is no evidence of such modification.

[1] At page 21 of the reporter's transcript appears the following statement made by counsel for defendant during the progress of the trial:

"The question before the jury will be whether or not this first contract was made, and, if it was made, whether the parties acted under a separate agreement, because of the condition of the market—abandoned and handled this celery wholly on a commission basis. And if the contract was made and abandoned, the question is: what was the market price of the celery?"

The court said: "Any subsequent agreement showing the price will be admissible." Again (page 53), counsel for defendant said:

"I wish to call your honor's attention to the fact that the evidence shows that * * * he (defendant) told the plaintiff that he would * * * ship this celery for him and would try to get him $2 per crate; that the celery was shipped; that presents the matter of an executed oral contract. * * * If that be true, then the matter comes within the abandonment of the contract; it is for the jury to determine whether or not they abandoned the other contract. It seems to me it is wholly up to the jury to determine."

[2-4] The defendant testified that a few days prior to the first shipment the plaintiff said "he wanted to market his celery. * * * I asked him: 'What price do you want for it?' I think he said he wanted to get $2 net to him. I told him that I will try to get, see if I can get, try to get that market price for him." That he never promised to pay $2 a crate for the celery; that he told plaintiff at that time that he would try to find a market for him, that he would handle the celery for plaintiff's account. After the shipment of eight carloads, the defendant advised plaintiff not to make further shipments until the market improved. The defendant testified that some days later the plaintiff said he desired to make further shipments of two cars a day, and "I told him if he wanted me to market them, I was willing to handle them for him. * * * He asked me how much, what price will be. I told him I will offer it 35c a dozen, just offer, is not sale—quotation, just quotation." and that the plaintiff agreed to it. As stated in the opinion, plaintiff accepted receipts for all shipments as made, reciting that the celery was "to be handled on consignment for his (plaintiff's) account." The defendant had advanced to plaintiff more than the net receipts for all the celery, according to the facts which defendant attempted to prove, and hence the oral agreement, made subsequent to the written contract, had been fully executed. The foregoing evidence was sufficient, if believed by the jury, to show an abandonment of the written contract and the substitution of an oral agreement in its stead. The written contract is silent as to the price to be paid for the celery. Plaintiff testified that it was orally agreed at the time of its execution that he was to receive the daily market price at the time of the shipments. Respondent admits in his petition that there is no substantial evidence showing the market price. Defendant produced evidence to the effect that there was no market for yellow celery. It was necessary, therefore, to determine the price to which plaintiff was entitled from evidence of the later agreements and understandings of the parties. Each party was entitled to produce evidence bearing upon that question. Having produced evidence from which the jury would have been warranted in finding that the parties had agreed, prior to the deliveries of the celery, that the same should be shipped on a commission basis, and that it was so shipped, the defendant should have been permitted to prove the net returns from such shipments.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

59 Cal. App. 555

KALL v. CARRUTHERS et al. (Civ. 2479.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 3, 1922.)

Waters and water courses ⊜262—Damages caused by percolation from rice lands to adjoining landowners recoverable.

A rice grower, who keeps water upon his lands for many months in the year, and thus causes damage by percolation to adjoining landowners, is liable as for maintaining a nuisance, under Civ. Code, § 3479.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by Frederick Kall against William M. Carruthers and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. H. Carlin and Ray Manwell, both of Marysville, for appellants.

Lawrence Schillig, of Yuba City, and Richard Belcher, of Marysville, for respondent.

ANDERSON, Justice pro tem. This is an action brought by the plaintiff against defendants, for the purpose of obtaining an injunction restraining defendants from permitting water brought from defendants' land for the purpose of irrigating rice thereon to escape by percolation or otherwise upon the lands of plaintiff. Damages are also asked for the injury.

The trial court found in favor of the plaintiff upon both issues, granting the injunction and assessing damages to the amount of $1,600.

We do not understand that appellant Carruthers (Mohomed did not file a brief) seriously contends that the evidence is not ample in support of the findings of the court. We have read the record and cannot doubt that the plaintiff was substantially damaged by reason of the escaping irrigation water; neither can we doubt that the escaping irrigation water came from defendants' lands. We think the destructive agency was clearly traceable to defendants' act in raising the water table by percolation upon adjacent lands.

The mode of establishing this fact is somewhat difficult, though interesting, but the means and methods of demonstration were placed in the hands of an expert, and were convincing to the trial court, who also viewed the lands, and, so far as we can observe, they do not call for criticism here. If more satisfactory methods existed for tracing the underground flow of the water, certainly they were not suggested to the trial court.

The main question which we are called upon to consider here is stated in appellant Carruthers' opening brief, at page 2, and is as follows:

"The point involved upon the appeal and the only one which is necessary to discuss is a rather vital one to farmers in Sutter county in the vicinity of the lands in question. Appellant owns a tract of land which is quite well adapted to the growing of rice, and he grew rice thereon during the year 1920. Respondent's land joins that of appellant, but he had growing on his land an orchard of trees and vines. Both parties irrigated their lands from water taken from the Sutter Butte Canal Company, a public utility irrigation company serving land in that vicinity. Necessarily the amount of water required by respondent for his fruit orchard was less than that required by appellant for his rice crop. As we understand the case, there is no claim made anywhere in the pleadings or findings that appellant was guilty of any negligence or wrongdoing except in so far as irrigating his land may be claimed to be a wrongful act."

Within the last decade an industry has sprung up in this state, and particularly in the Sacramento valley, which has attained such proportions that it is recognized as one of the leading agricultural enterprises of the state. It has made such strides that it is already guarded and protected by strong organizations. Millions of pounds of rice are now produced, whereas but a few years ago it was foreign to the soil. An industry which has thus made such rapid and powerful advancement for supremacy in the field of agriculture must necessarily have come into conflict with and challenged at times the enforcement of certain well-known and well-settled legal rules. In consequence of the extraordinary and unprecedented growth of this industry there is much activity in passing ordinances and seeking restraining orders, agreements, and other ways and means to control or minimize the effect of the encroachments of the operation of this industry upon the established rights of other industries.

Some of the evils complained of are the scattering of seed of obnoxious weeds, raising the water table—resulting in the destruction of all tree and plant life known as "nonwater-growing" vegetation; also causing minerals, such as alkali, to rise to or near the surface of the ground, thus destroying all plant and tree life; and the destruction of the public highways of the most permanent nature being also involved. Some of the objections to the effect of the industry have found expression in rules made for the benefit of the public health, such as rules prohibiting the collection of foul, polluted, swampy, mosquito-breeding pools.

The quantity of water used in the industry has greatly taxed the capacity of the streams and other sources of water supply; so great indeed has this become that it has been claimed that the principal waterway of the state has been so reduced at times that the ocean waters have found entrance so far up into the mouth of the channel as to affect the water for general domestic purposes, rendering it unfit for use for large numbers of the inhabitants along the river. In addition to this, further new and unprecedented conditions have arisen when the rice has matured and the time come for discharging the great volume of water, known as drainage water, which has accumulated during the rice season.

That the industry is an important one none can doubt; that it has added greatly to the material wealth of the state has been abundantly proven; and yet it may be added that the industry is only in its infancy, with a field of future development before it which is almost limitless. From what has been stated it will readily be seen that we have most unusual conditions to deal with by reason of this new industry. There can be no proper comparison made of the conditions resulting from the growing of rice with those arising from the irrigation of any other well-known product, such as alfalfa, trees, grain, etc. For the rice industry a large volume of water must be held on the ground for five or six months continuously.

The precise obligation imposed by law upon one who collects waters in an artificial reservoir is a subject of grave dispute. In Fletcher v. Rylands, L. R. 1, Ex. 265, L. R. 3, Eng. & Ir. App. 330, it was declared that no amount of diligence is a legal excuse if such water escapes and damages another. The effect of this doctrine is everywhere conceded to make every person who brings a foreign substance upon his property an insurer against all damage that may result by reason of its presence on his property.

The soundness of this doctrine has been much discussed by law writers and courts in England and in this country, and there is no case on the subject in either country so much cited and considered. This doctrine is frequently applied to other subjects, for example, the handling of explosives, setting of fires, keeping wild animals, alkali works, and numerous other subjects. But confining ourselves for the present to its relation to the water question, we think we may say the doctrine is generally accepted both here and in England, with the modification that an act of God may be interposed as a defense, such as extraordinary disturbances of the elements resulting in floods and earthquakes, in the breaking of ditches, reservoirs, etc., and this exception was declared in the recent case of Sutliff v. Sweetwater Water Co., 182 Cal. 34, 186 Pac. 766.

We find the tendency among the courts in a great majority of the cases to give effect to the rule by finding negligence in some form and putting the decision on that ground. Others give effect by characterizing the result as a nuisance, but declaring some of the acts appearing in such cases to be negligence. Still others give effect on the ground of "absolute liability," or hold the party impounding the water as an "insurer." The tendency of the courts is to avoid resting the decision upon the two latter grounds.

The great majority of the cases arise from seepage, from overflowing or breaking of ditches, reservoirs or dams; comparatively few arise from percolating or overflowing water from adjoining lands.

No essential difference is usually recognized between damages caused from surface overflow and damages caused by direct percolation, reasonably traceable, whether the construction was apparently reasonably sound originally, or apparently originally imperfect. Whether the seeping nature of the soil is known or unknown at the time of construction, the responsibility is usually held to be the same; it must be remedied by effectual intercepting trenches, by cementing, or by other means known to science. In other words, the artificial receptacle for holding the liquid, be it of whatever form or nature, must be made and maintained as nearly waterproof as human agency can reasonably and prudently make it. Otherwise, if the escaping water results injuriously by reason of the receptable failing to properly hold the water, it then falls within the category of nuisances, or under the condemnation of negligence.

The principle of negligence in some form is most frequently interwoven in the decided cases. In some of the cases it is at times difficult to determine whether it would be more accurate to say that it is not a question of negligence, and that the defendant is liable, even in case of latent defect, than it would be to say that the escape of the injurious water, in the absence of proof of inevitable accident or of the wrongful act of a third person, or of an act of God, is in itself sufficient evidence to prove negligence.

In the case now under consideration we may very properly liken the receptable holding the water on the rice to a large reservoir (or to a "pool," as described in the case of Parker v. Larsen, 86 Cal. 236, 24 Pac. 989, 21 Am. St. Rep. 30) in area, though not in depth, but being one constantly replenished in order to maintain a even depth for many months, thus keeping a perfect saturating medium on the ground to run or seep into the ground any place or anywhere that water will naturally flow; the sides and bottom of this receptable having the usual defects common to uncemented ditches, reservoirs, dams, and drains, in being not waterproof or sufficiently so to reasonably retain the impounded water.

The liability of the water to do injury if allowed to escape must be continually borne in mind by the one attempting to make artificial use of it, and his failure to bear that fact in mind may be material upon the question of his liability.

The fact that water in small quantities may be handled without doing material injury to adjoining property brings such cases

"peculiarly" under "the application of the principle that the injury itself is evidence of negligence." This is well stated in a note in 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 596, as follows:

"The persistence with which water will seek its level renders the artificial accumulation of it above the ordinary level of the surrounding country more or less dangerous, according to the quantity of water accumulated and the susceptibility of adjoining property to injury in case of its escape. The result is that there has been some tendency on the part of the courts, as represented in the case of Rylands v. Fletcher, L. R. 3, H. L. 330, 37 L. J. Exch. (N. S.) 161, 19 L. T. (N. S.) 220, to hold one who accumulates water in large quantities as an insurer. On the other hand, water may be accumulated in small quantites without material danger to adjoining property. At the same time, the very facts that that is so, and that ordinary precaution will prevent injury from the accumulated water, render the case peculiarly one for the application of the principle that the injury itself is evidence of negligence."

It will be noted in the decisions of our own state that the old maxim, "So use your own as not to injure another's property," has been so often approved in cases similar to the one at bar, and such cases have been decided by this maxim so many times, that the maxim should be decisive of this case.

"The law," says Chief Justice Parker in Thurston v. Hancock, 12 Mass. 220, 7 Am. Dec. 57, "founded upon principles of reason and common utility, has admitted a qualification to" the absolute dominion of the proprietor of lands over it, restricting him "so to use his own as not to injure the property or impair any actual existing rights of another."

Under the subject of Nuisances, Judge Cooley, in his work on Torts, says:

"If the water is so raised that by percolation the land of another is injured, the party raising it is responsible, not because he has unreasonably, negligently, intentionally, or unexpectedly flowed the land of another for his own benefit, but because he has done it in fact. The right of one to be secure against the undermining of his buildings by water, or the destruction of his crops, or the poisoning of the air by the stealthy attacks of an unseen element, is as complete as his right to be protected against open personal assaults or the more demonstrative but not more destructive, trespass of animals."

See, also, Pixley v. Clark, 35 N. Y. 520, 91 Am. Dec. 81.

Wood on Nuisances says:

"The thing done or maintained may be injurious to property, and affect the free use of it, and in that way be a nuisance."

It is stated in Cyc., under the head of Nuisances:

"Every enjoyment by one of his own property which violates the rights of another in an essential degree, constitutes a nuisance."

Section 3479 of the Civil Code of the state of California declares, among other things, that "an obstruction to the free use of property, so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property," is a nuisance.

In the case of Paolini v. Fresno Canal, etc., Co., 9 Cal. App. at page 8, 97 Pac. at page 1130, it is said:

"There may be as direct damage by this means as by overflowing the banks of a ditch, and the law will as readily redress injury resulting from the one cause as by the other when the facts satisfactorily locate the cause. The case of Shields v. Orr Extension Ditch Co., 23 Nev. 349, 47 Pac. 194, is illustrative of the principle, and was a case where the injury was caused wholly by percolating water coming from a ditch. So, also, is the case of Parker v. Larsen, 86 Cal. 236, 21 Am. St. Rep. 30, 24 Pac. 989. It was there said, 'Where one brings a foreign substance on his land he must take care of it, and not permit it to injure his neighbor. The law on the subject is tersely expressed in the maxim, "Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas."'" (Italics ours.)

The foregoing case fully approves the doctrine declared in the case of Parker v. Larsen, supra. The case of Parker v. Larsen, supra, was not predicated upon a finding of negligence in so many words, as an examination of the original record will reveal, but there was a finding of damage. Speaking of this case in Sutliff v. Sweetwater Water Co., 182 Cal. 37, 186 Pac. 767, the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Olney, says:

"The case was one coming directly within the maxim, 'Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas.' Of this character, also, is Parker v. Larsen, 86 Cal. 236, 21 Am. St. Rep. 30, 24 Pac. 989, where the defendant permitted the water in a ditch which he had constructed on his land to percolate through the ground from the ditch on to his neighbor's land, saturating and injuring it."

The case of Parker v. Larsen is cited with approval in Mallett v. Taylor, 78 Or. 208, 152 Pac. 873. The syllabus of the Oregon case declares:

"A person who by artificial means causes water to percolate through the soil to the injury of his neighbor, does so at his peril, and is legally responsible therefor irrespective of negligence." (Italics ours.)

The conditions denounced by our Supreme Court in Parker v. Larsen, supra, while identical with the case here on principle, were much less aggravated and damaging than are those of the case under consideration; there the water was permitted to stand "two or three times each summer," whereas in this case it is allowed to stand continuously part of the spring, all of the summer, and part of the autumn season.

Other decisions bearing upon the question are: Howell v. Big Horn Basin Colonization Co., 14 Wyo. 14, 81 Pac. 785, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 596; Reed v State, 108 N. Y. 407, 15 N.

E. 725; Scott v. Longwell, 139 Mich. 12, 102 N. W. 230, 5 Ann. Cas. 679; Gorham v. Gross, 125 Mass. 232, 28 Am. Rep. 226; Pixley v. Clark, 35 N. Y. 520, 91 Am. Dec. 72; Richardson v. Kier, 34 Cal. 63, 91 Am. Dec. 681; Tormey v. Anderson-Cottonwood Irrigation District (Cal. App.) 200 Pac. 814; Galbreath v. Hopkins, 159 Cal. 297, 113 Pac. 174; Hoffman v. Tuolumne County Water Co., 10 Cal. 416; North Point Consolidated Irrigation Co. v. Utah & Salt Lake Canal Co., 16 Utah, 246, 52 Pac. 168, 40 L. R. A. 851, 67 Am. St. Rep. 607; Wilson v. New Bedford, 108 Mass. 261, 11 Am. Rep. 352; Sylvester v. Jerome, 19 Colo. 128, 34 Pac. 760; Esson v. Wattier, 25 Or. 7, 34 Pac. 756; Shields v. Orr. Extension Ditch Co., 23 Nev. 349, 47 Pac. 194.

Mr. Justice Peckham in one of the leading cases (Pixley v. Clark, supra) ably states the rights of adjoining property owners and their reciprocal duties in the development of their respective interests, as follows:

"The defendants' counsel says that the defendants had the right * * * to use this dam to use their water power, 'and all that can be legally required of them is, that they shall exercise it so as not to injure directly or unnecessarily the lands of their neighbor'; also, he says, that 'if one do a lawful act on his own premises, he cannot be held for the injurious consequences unless it was so done as to constitute actionable negligence.' These, like many general propositions, are plausible; but as applied to this case in the sense they are sought to be used, neither of them is law, and never was. Take the first. Is any such principle found in any case, or stated by any elementary writer, as that you have a right to use your water power, and build a dam for that purpose, and if necessary to that end, you may flow and drown your neighbor's land provided you do not do so 'unnecessarily,' that you may do it so far as is necessary to the full and profitable enjoyment of your water power, even though you flow and destroy his farm?

"The other proposition is very similar. Was it ever held or pretended that you might build a dam and flow another's land provided you were guilty of no want of care or skill in its construction? In fact, the better dam you make, the more skillful and perfect its construction, the more water you restrain and throw back, the greater the damage to the adjoining landowner. These are sound maxims, applied to many cases, but not to all. The latter may be admitted and applied here. The act of the defendants was lawful in building their dam so long as they did not injure their neighbor's land; the moment they so interfered by their dam as to flow his land to his injury, the act was unlawful."

We are of the opinion that to permit the defendant to make his lands profitable though it result in the utter destruction of the usefulness of plaintiff's lands, would violate every principle of natural right and justice, and cannot be supported by judicial authority.

It follows that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 464

BATEMAN v. KELLOGG et al. (Civ. 3854.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 24, 1922.)

1. Appeal and error ⊂⊃870(6)—Order granting new trial not reviewable on appeal from second judgment.

An order granting a new trial after judgment, thereby vacating that judgment, is not reviewable on appeal from the second judgment.

2. Execution ⊂⊃268—Purchaser receives legal title subject to incumbrances.

When property is sold to judgment creditor at sheriff's sale under his judgment, he receives the legal title to the property subject to prior mortgages and prior judgment liens and subject to be defeated by a redemption under Code Civ. Proc. § 700.

3. Execution ⊂⊃264, 319—Purchaser acquires legal title of judgment debtor; sheriff's deed does not create new title.

Purchaser under execution sale acquires the legal title of the judgment debtor defeasible upon condition subsequent, and the effect of the sheriff's deed is not to create a new title, but is merely evidence that the title of the purchaser has become absolute under Code Civ. Proc. § 700.

4. Execution ⊂⊃353—Lien satisfied by sale of land under execution.

When land is sold to judgment creditor under execution for the full amount of the judgment, the lien created by the levy is thereby extinguished.

5. Mortgages ⊂⊃594(4)—"Redemptioner" and "successor in interest" defined and distinguished.

A "redemptioner," as that word is used in Code Civ. Proc. § 701 et seq., is a creditor having a lien by judgment or mortgage on the property sold subsequent to that on which the property was sold, and a judgment creditor purchasing under a judgment antedating the mortgage was not a redemptioner, but was a "successor in interest" of the judgment debtor, and entitled to redeem under subdivision 1 of section 701.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Redemptioner; Successor in Interest.]

6. Mortgages ⊂⊃151(5)—Sale under subsequent trust deed held not to divest purchaser under judgment of legal title.

Sheriff's sale of land to judgment creditor under execution gave him the title of the judgment debtor as of the date of his judgment lien, and a subsequent sale under a trust deed executed subsequent to the judgment's becoming a lien did not divest him of his legal title.

7. Mortgages ⊂⊃586 — Effect of foreclosure sale.

Subject to right of redemption, the effect of a foreclosure sale is of itself to extinguish the right and claim of all the defendants in the action acquired subsequent to the date of the mortgage, and to vest in the purchaser the title of the mortgagor at the date of the mortgage discharged of all such right and claim.

8. Mortgages ⊂⊃624(1)—Effect of redemption by successor in interest.

A redemption by the "successor in interest" of a judgment debtor under Code Civ. Proc. § 701, subd. 1, terminates the sale and vests the title in such "successor in interest."

9. Mortgages ⊂⊃608—Purchaser at foreclosure estopped to deny validity of redemption.

If the person from whom redemption is made after mortgage foreclosure sale consents and accepts payment of the redemption money, it is as to him a valid redemption, even though the person making it be not qualified to redeem, upon principles of estoppel.

10. Estoppel ⊂⊃68(3)—Parties asserting validity of mortgage redemption as basis of claim estopped to deny validity.

No party to an action to quiet title can be heard to question the validity of a redemption under mortgage foreclosure where each is asserting its validity as the basis of his claim of title.

11. Execution ⊂⊃302—Effect of redemption from execution sale.

One who redeems from an execution sale as a "redemptioner" under Code Civ. Proc. § 701, subd. 2, succeeds to the interests of the purchaser at the execution sale as fully as if he had purchased the certificate of sale, and if lienors, whether by judgment or mortgage, redeem, the course of the sale is not thereby impeded or precluded, but finally culminates in a deed to the redemptioner, who will succeed to all the rights which the purchaser at the execution sale would have possessed had no redemption been made.

12. Mortgages ⊂⊃594(1)—"Judgment debtor" in statute relating to redemption from judicial sale held to include "successor in interest."

While the words "successor in interest" are mentioned in Code of Civil Procedure, § 701, and the succeeding sections refer exclusively to the judgment debtor and to redemptioners, still, when in these succeeding sections the Code uses the term "judgment debtor" as contradistinguished from "redemptioners," the words must be construed broadly enough to include "successors in interest" of the judgment debtor.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Judgment Debtor.]

13. Mortgages ⊂⊃372(2) — Trust deed and mortgage distinguished.

The result of the enforcement of a trust deed may be for all practical purposes the same as the enforcement of a mortgage with power of sale, but a trust deed is not a mortgage, and does not create a lien, and a purchaser at trustee's sale takes the title subject to all prior rights, interests, liens, and titles.

14. Mortgages ⊂⊃624(2) — Purchaser under trust deed not a "redemptioner" under statute.

Purchaser at trustee's sale under a trust deed was not a "redemptioner" as that word is used in Code Civ. Proc. § 701, subd. 2, but became by the purchase only the "successor in interest" of the judgment debtors so far as there remained in the latter any interest subsequent to the sheriff's sale under a prior judgment, and his redemption extinguished mortgage foreclosure sale under a mortgage antedating the judgment and restored the title under section 703.

15. Mortgages ⊂⊃596, 597—Failure of purchaser at sale under judgment to redeem from mortgage foreclosure did not forfeit right.

Where land was sold to judgment creditor at sheriff's sale, and thereafter a prior mortgage was foreclosed, the purchaser under the judgment did not lose his right of redemption and forfeit his interest in the land by failing to redeem the property and permitting another to redeem who was not a "redemptioner," but a "successor in interest" under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 701, 703.

16. Mortgages ⊂⊃594(1) — Judgment debtor may redeem, though estate has been transferred to another.

A judgment debtor named in mortgage foreclosure decree had the right to redeem from the foreclosure sale, even though a judgment creditor had succeeded to all of his title to the premises at a sheriff's sale under the judgment.

17. Equity ⊂⊃66—"Successor in interest" redeeming entitled to return of money paid, on owner of legal title bringing suit to quiet title under maxim that he who seeks equity must do equity.

Where the effect of "successor in interest's" redemption from mortgage foreclosure sale was to revest a purchaser at a sheriff's sale under a judgment with the legal title so that he could successfully maintain a suit to quiet title, still, in seeking equity, the purchaser under the judgment must do equity and pay to the "successor in interest" the amount paid by him to redeem the property from mortgage foreclosure sale.

18. Mortgages ⊂⊃594(4)—Decree in mortgage foreclosure sale held not to bar right of prior purchaser under judgment to legal title on redemption by "successor in interest."

A decree in mortgage foreclosure that purchaser under judgment had a "lien" against the property "by reason of a certain sheriff's certificate of sale," etc., held not to establish the fact that plaintiff was the holder of a judgment lien only which was foreclosed by such decree, in view of pleadings and issues, in a subsequent suit to quiet title as against a "successor in interest" of the mortgagor who redeemed from the mortgage foreclosure sale.

19. Judgment ⊂⊃728—Incidental questions not concluded by judgment.

A question which is only incidentally involved and which is not actually litigated—that is, made the subject of trial and pressed upon the consideration of the court—is not concluded by the judgment so as to be res adjudicata in a subsequent suit on a different cause of action.

20. Execution ⊂⊃241—Property held sufficiently described in notice and certificate.

Sale of land under execution was valid though two calls were omitted from the description of the property in the sheriff's certificate of sale and in the notices of the sale where the description given was sufficient to identify the land.

21. Execution ⊂⊃312—Sufficiency of description of land sold.

A description which would be sufficient for a voluntary conveyance of land sufficed for a conveyance by the sheriff after an execution sale.

22. Execution ⊂⊃310—Error in date of sheriff's deed held not fatal to purchaser's claim of title.

Error in the date of sheriff's deed was not fatal to purchaser's claim of title, as the recording of the sheriff's certificate of sale was alone sufficient to charge all subsequent purchasers with notice of purchaser's rights, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 700a, and Pol. Code, § 4159.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by C. W. Bateman against Fred R. Kellogg and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Turner & Grainger, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Robert M. Clarke and Henry L. Knoop, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment in favor of defendants in an action to quiet title to a parcel of land in Los Angeles county.

[1] There were two trials of the case. Upon the first, which was without a jury, findings on all the material issues were made in favor of plaintiff, and the court gave judgment for plaintiff accordingly. Thereafter an order was made granting defendants' motion for a new trial. The order, which was general in its terms, reopened the case for a new trial on all the issues. A retrial was had, at the conclusion of which the court rendered and entered its judgment in favor of defendants. It is from that judgment that plaintiff now appeals. One of the points urged by plaintiff upon this appeal is that the trial court erred in making its order granting defendants' motion for a new trial after the first judgment in the case, and that therefore that order should be set aside and the first judgment reinstated and affirmed. That, however, is not a question which may be considered on this appeal. For the reasons set forth in Furlow Pressed Brick Co. v. Balboa L. & W. Co., 186 Cal. 754, 200 Pac. 625, the order granting a new trial after the first judgment, thereby vacating that judgment, is not reviewable on this appeal from the second judgment. See, also, Schomaker v. Roemer (Cal. App.) 201 Pac. 803.

On the second trial the court found that plaintiff is not the owner of or entitled to the possession of the real property in controversy, and that it is not true that defendants, who are in possession, are without right or title to the land. The alleged insufficiency of the evidence to support these findings is the sole contention made by appellant with respect to the result of that trial.

The facts shown on the second trial, in so far as they are necessary to an understanding of the questions presented by this appeal, are substantially as follows: Both sides claim through L. A. Walker and Mary J. Walker, husband and wife, as the common source of title. It was stipulated that the Walkers owned the property on June 5, 1912. On that date they executed a mortgage to Walter P. Temple. This mortgage, by two assignments, was finally held by John L. Boals. On March 8, 1915, Boals commenced a foreclosure action, and on the same day caused a notice of lis pendens to be filed in the office of the county recorder.

On June 6, 1912, the Walkers executed to Catherine Seccombe, as trustee, a deed of trust covering the same property. On April 11, 1914, a sale was had under this deed of trust, and on September 14, 1914, the purchaser at that sale reconveyed the property to L. A. Walker. On the day that this reconveyance was made to Walker, appellant, as will hereafter appear, acquired a judgment lien on the property. By the reconveyance to L. A. Walker the whole title was vested in him, subject only to the mortgage which he and his wife had given to Temple, and subject also to appellant's judgment lien and to a judgment lien in favor of the Grange Company—the next-mentioned incumbrance. In other words, Mary J. Walker ceased to have any interest in the land after its sale under the Seccombe deed of trust and the reconveyance to her husband.

Following the Temple mortgage, in point of time, was the lien of a judgment of a justice's court in favor of the Grange Company against L. A. Walker. That judgment became a lien on the property on February 21, 1914, on which day an abstract of the judgment was recorded in the office of the county recorder. Subsequently this judgment was assigned to F. G. Stickney.

Next in point of time was the lien of C. W.

Bateman, the plaintiff and appellant in the present action. His was the lien of a judgment for $103.75 which, on September 3, 1914, was rendered by the justice's court of Los Nietos township in favor of Bateman and against L. A. Walker, and an abstract thereof was recorded September 14, 1914, in the office of the county recorder. On the day when this judgment became a lien on the property, the legal title, as has been shown, was in L. A. Walker, subject only to the Temple mortgage and the Grange Company's judgment lien. Execution was issued on appellant's judgment against Walker, and on March 9, 1915, which was the day following the commencement of the action by Boals to foreclose the Temple mortgage, appellant caused the writ of execution to be levied by the sheriff of Los Angeles county on the property in controversy. On May 3, 1915, the property was sold to appellant at sheriff's sale for $135.35, and a sheriff's certificate of sale was issued to him. It is under this execution sale that appellant claims title to the land. On May 4, 1916, appellant received a sheriff's deed to the property.

Next in point of time succeeding the accrual of appellant's judgment lien was a trust deed to L. O. Hatch, as trustee. That instrument, executed by the Walkers on October 16, 1914, was given to secure an indebtedness of L. A. Walker to George H. Woodruff, named as the beneficiary in the trust deed. On August 18, 1915, the trustee in this deed of trust caused the premises to be sold to Woodruff to satisfy L. A. Walker's obligation to him. It is under this deed of trust and the trustee's sale thereunder to Woodruff, and the latter's redemption from the sale which was had under the decree foreclosing the Temple mortgage, that respondents make their claim of title.

As will be noticed, when Boals commenced his action on March 8, 1915, to foreclose the Temple mortgage, Bateman, the appellant here, had not caused execution to be issued on his judgment against Walker, nor had the sale to Woodruff been made by Hatch under the deed of trust which the Walkers had executed to secure L. A. Walker's indebtedness to Woodruff. Among the defendants in the action by Boals to foreclose the Temple mortgage were the mortgagors, Mr. and Mrs. Walker, Bateman (the plaintiff and appellant here), Woodruff (under whom respondents claim title), L. O. Hatch (the trustee in the trust deed given for the benefit of Woodruff), and the Grange Company; the assignment of its judgment to Stickney not having been made when the foreclosure action was commenced. Later Stickney appeared as a defendant, substituted for one of the fictitious defendants.

Bateman filed an answer in the mortgage foreclosure action. He alleged in his answer in that action that, by recording the abstract of the judgment which he had obtained in the justice's court against L. A. Walker, he acquired a lien on the land, and that on May 3, 1915, he purchased the premises at sheriff's sale under the writ of execution issued on his judgment against Walker. He prayed that the court, in its decree foreclosing the mortgage, fix the manner of the distribution of the proceeds from the foreclosure sale, and that such proceeds, after their application to the expenses of the sale, be applied to the payment of the prior liens against the property, and that he receive from the residue, if any should remain, the amount necessary to redeem the property from the sale which the sheriff had made to him on May 3, 1915.

In its decree foreclosing the Temple mortgage the court, after declaring that the Walkers owed Boals $3,387.01, secured by the mortgage, and that Bateman had a lien for $144.40 subject to the Temple mortgage and to the judgment lien held by Stickney, decreed that the property be sold, and that after paying all the costs incidental to the sale the proceeds be applied: (1) To the satisfaction of the Temple mortgage; (2) to the satisfaction of the Stickney lien, if there should be any surplus available therefor; and (3) if there still remained a surplus, that it be paid to Bateman to the amount of his justice's judgment and costs.

On February 1, 1916, the property was sold by the sheriff to Stickney under the decree foreclosing the Temple mortgage. Stickney paid a sum sufficient to satisfy the judgment of the Grange Company against L. A. Walker, as well as the amount decreed to be due to Boals under the mortgage.

On February 1, 1917, Woodruff, who, it will be recalled, had purchased the property at the trustee's sale which was had under the Walkers' deed of trust to L. O. Hatch, redeemed the property from Stickney by paying to the sheriff the sum of $4,212.35, that sum being in full payment of the purchase price which had been paid by Stickney as the purchaser at the foreclosure sale on February 1, 1916, together with interest at the rate of 1 per cent. per month to the time of redemption.

No one redeemed from Woodruff, and the sheriff, on April 6, 1917, executed a deed to him. Thereafter Woodruff conveyed the property to one Birch, who later conveyed it to the defendants Kellogg, McCray, and McBurney. The defendant Montgomery is a lessee of his codefendants.

Appellant's argument may be summarized substantially as follows: The lien of appellant's judgment against L. A. Walker antedated the trust deed which had been given by the Walkers to Hatch to secure L. A. Walker's indebtedness to Woodruff. Mrs. Walker had ceased to have any interest in the land after April 11, 1914, on which day it was sold under the trust deed which she and her husband had executed to Catherine Seccombe, as trustee, and later was reconveyed to her husband by the one who had purchased at that trustee's sale. Therefore, when appellant purchased the property at sheriff's sale on May 3, 1915, under the execution which had been issued on his judgment against L. A. Walker, the legal title immediately vested in him as such purchaser, subject only to the prior mortgage to Temple, then in process of being foreclosed by Boals, and subject likewise to the prior judgment lien in favor of the Grange Company—later assigned to Stickney—as well as to L. A. Walker's right to redeem the property from the sheriff's sale to appellant. Upon Woodruff's redemption of the property from the foreclosure sale to Stickney, the effect of that sale was terminated. Thereupon, so the argument runs, the legal title revested in appellant, and he is now the unconditional holder thereof. The logic of this contention seems irrefutable.

It will be conduce to a readier understanding of the respective rights of the parties on and after Woodruff's redemption from the mortgage foreclosure sale if we consider the effect on the title of each successive step from and after the sheriff's sale to appellant on May 3, 1915.

[2, 3] Without doubt appellant is correct in his contention that when the property was sold to him at sheriff's sale on May 3, 1915, under his judgment against L. A. Walker, he received the legal title to the property. He received a qualified legal title, but the legal title nevertheless. It was a title that was subject to the prior mortgage to Temple and to the prior judgment lien in favor of the Grange Company—subsequently held by Stickney—and subject to be defeated by a redemption by L. A. Walker at any time within 12 months from the sheriff's sale to appellant, and subject also to L. A. Walker's right to remain in possession until such time as the sheriff's deed should be executed to appellant.

"If the judgment is a lien upon the real property the purchaser is substituted to and acquires all the right, title, interest, and claim of the judgment debtor on or at any time after the day such judgment became a lien on such property." Code Civ. Proc. § 700.

"The execution of the [sheriff's] deed gave to the purchaser at the sale no new title to the land purchased by him, but was merely evidence that his title had become absolute. Upon the sale he acquired 'all the right, title, interest, and claim of the judgment debtors thereto' (Code Civ. Proc. § 700), subject to be defeated by a redemption within six months, and to the right of the judgment debtors to remain in the possession of the land until the execution of the sheriff's deed." Robinson v. Thornton, 102 Cal. 680, 34 Pac. 120.

To the same effect are Pollard v. Harlow, 138 Cal. 390, 71 Pac. 454, 648, and Leet v. Armbruster, 143 Cal. 666, 77 Pac. 653. In the Pollard Case it was held that the purchaser under execution sale acquires the legal title of the judgment debtor, defeasible upon condition subsequent, and that the effect of the sheriff's deed is not to create a new title, but is merely evidence that the title of the purchaser has become absolute.

[4] By the sheriff's sale to appellant on May 3, 1915, his judgment against L. A. Walker was satisfied, and his judgment lien thereupon ceased to exist. When property is sold under execution for the full amount of the judgment, the lien created by the levy is thereby extinguished.

[5] A "redemptioner," as that word is used in section 701 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure, is a creditor "having a lien by judgment or mortgage on the property sold," subsequent to that on which the property was sold. Code Civ. Proc. § 701, subd. 2. Appellant therefore, whose judgment was extinguished by the sheriff's sale to him, was not a "redemptioner" within the Code meaning of that word, and therefore he was not entitled to redeem as a "redemptioner" from the subsequent mortgage foreclosure sale to Stickney. But, though not entitled to redeem from that sale as a "redemptioner" under subdivision 2 of section 701, appellant did become and was the "successor in interest" of L. A. Walker, the principal judgment debtor in the mortgage foreclosure suit and the sole holder of the legal title immediately prior to the sheriff's sale to him; and therefore, as such "successor in interest" of L. A. Walker, he was entitled to redeem from the foreclosure sale to Stickney under subdivision 1 of section 701. Pollard v. Harlow, supra.

[6] Such was the condition of the title on August 18, 1915, when Woodruff, under whom respondents claim, purchased at the trustee's sale held under the deed of trust which the Walkers had executed to Hatch, as trustee, on October 16, 1914. This trustee's sale to Woodruff did not divest appellant of the legal title which had come to him through the sheriff's sale of May 3, 1915. The sheriff's sale to appellant gave him the title as of the date of his judgment lien, September 14, 1914, which was prior to the execution of the trust deed to Hatch. By the trustee's sale to Woodruff the latter may have become the "successor in interest" of L. A. Walker, and as such may have been entitled to redeem the property from the execution sale to appellant. This, however, Woodruff never did. Indeed, no attempt to redeem the property from the sheriff's sale to appellant ever was made by any one. It follows, therefore, that the title which vested in appellant on May 3, 1915, when the property was sold to him at sheriff's sale, is still in him, save in so far as it may have been divested by the subsequent foreclosure sale to Stickney under the Temple mortgage and by Woodruff's redemption from that sale. The next question, therefore, is: What effect did the mortgage foreclosure sale to Stickney have upon appellant's title?

[7] The Temple mortgage, it will be recalled, antedated the judgment lien which appellant acquired upon recording the abstract of his judgment against Walker. It follows, therefore, that when the property was sold to Stickney on February 11, 1916, under the mortgage foreclosure sale, Stickney received the legal title subject only to the right of the judgment debtor L. A. Walker to remain in possession pending the time allowed for redemption and to defeasance upon redemption by any person qualified to redeem from the foreclosure sale. As has been stated, Hatch, as trustee under the trust deed, Woodruff, the purchaser from the trustee L. O. Hatch, and C. W. Bateman, the appellant here, each of whom had acquired his interest subsequent to the date of the Temple mortgage, and Mr. and Mrs. Walker, were made defendants to the suit which Boals brought to foreclose that mortgage. Therefore, subject to the right of L. A. Walker to remain in possession pending the time allowed for redemption, the foreclosure sale to Stickney extinguished all the rights and claims of the above-named defendants in the mortgage foreclosure action, save that there was left in the mortgagors and judgment debtors L. A. Walker and Mary J. Walker, and in appellant, as the successor in interest of L. A. Walker, and possibly also in Woodruff, as a "successor in interest" of the judgment debtors L. A. and Mary J. Walker, the right to redeem from the foreclosure sale. The effect of a foreclosure sale "is of itself to extinguish the right and claim of all the defendants in the action acquired subsequent to the date of the mortgage, and to vest in the purchaser the title of the mortgagor at the date of the mortgage, discharged of all such right and claim." Sichler v. Look, 93 Cal. 600, 610, 29 Pac. 220, 222; McNutt v. Nuevo L. Co., 167 Cal. 459, 464, 465, 140 Pac. 6. See, also, Duff v. Randall, 116 Cal. 229–230, 48 Pac. 66, 58 Am. St. Rep. 158; Pollard v. Harlow, supra; and Leet v. Armbruster, supra.

[8] As we presently shall show, a redemption by the "successor in interest" of a judgment debtor terminates the sale and vests the title in such "successor in interest." From this it follows that if appellant, as the "successor in interest" of L. A. Walker, had redeemed the property from the foreclosure sale to Stickney, such redemption would have terminated the sale to Stickney and would have revested the title in appellant. But, though appellant did not exercise his right to redeem from the foreclosure sale, Woodruff did, and Stickney, as the purchaser at that sale—of the sheriff for Stickney—accepted from Woodruff the amount necessary to effect a redemption, namely, the sum of $4,214.23. The next question, therefore, which presents itself for consideration is: What effect did Woodruff's redemption from the foreclosure sale have on the title to the property? This is, indeed, the ultimate question presented for our determination on this appeal.

[9, 10] Regardless of any question as to Woodruff's right to redeem the property from the mortgage foreclosure sale to Stickney, there can be no question here as to the validity of that redemption. It is the effect of that redemption, not its validity, that confronts us. Stickney, from whom the redemption was made, cannot question its validity, even though appellant, and not Woodruff, was Walker's "successor in interest" by virtue of the sheriff's sale made to him under a judgment lien that antedated the trust deed under which Woodruff deraigned his claim of title. Stickney accepted payment of the redemption money. And the rule is that, if the person from whom the redemption is made consents and accepts payment of the redemption money, it is as to him a valid redemption, even though the person making it be not qualified to redeem. Upon principles of estoppel, the person from whom the redemption is thus made will be precluded from questioning it. Freeman on Execution (3d Ed.) vol. 3, p. 1885. Nor can any party to this action be heard to question the validity of Woodruff's redemption, since each is asserting its validity as the basis of his claim of title. What, then, was the effect upon the title of the redemption made by Woodruff?

[11, 12] In order to determine the effect of Woodruff's redemption upon the title to the property it is necessary to consider the capacity in which Woodruff made his redemption from the foreclosure sale. If he made it as the "successor in interest" of the judgment debtors and mortgagors, L. A. and Mary J. Walker, the effect of the foreclosure sale to Stickney was terminated; whereas, if Woodruff can be deemed to have made the redemption in the character of a "redemptioner," within the technical meaning of that term as used in subdivision 2 of section 701 of the Code of Civil Procedure, he succeeded to the rights of the purchaser, Stickney; for the rule is that one who redeems from an execution sale as a "redemptioner" succeeds to the interests of the purchaser at the execution sale as fully as if he had purchased the certificate of sale. If lienors, whether by judgment or mortgage, redeem, the course of the sale is not thereby impeded or precluded, but finally culminates in a deed to the redemptioner, who will succeed to all the rights which the purchaser at the execution sale would have possessed had no redemption been made. But a redemption by the judgment debtor has a very different effect. It terminates the sale, and restores the estate. The statute has provided for a redemption by but two classes of persons—the judgment debtor (or his successor in interest) and creditors having liens by judgment or mortgage. A redemption by the latter class is for the purpose of securing a sheriff's deed in pursuance of the sale; a redemption by the former class is inimical to the sale, and puts an end to it. "If the [judgment] debtor redeem, the effect of the sale is terminated, and he is restored to his estate." Code Civ. Proc. § 703. And such also is the effect of a redemption by the judgment debtor's "successor in interest." The term "judgment debtor," as used in these Code sections, includes the words "successor in interest" of the judgment debtor. While the words "successor in interest" are mentioned in section 701 only, and the succeeding sections refer exclusively to the judgment debtor and to redemptioners, still, when in these succeeding sections the Code uses the term "judgment debtor," as contradistinguished from "redemptioners," the words must be construed broadly enough to include "successors in interest" of the judgment debtor. Phillips v. Hagart, 113 Cal. 555, 45 Pac. 843, 54 Am. St. Rep. 369. For these reasons it must be held that, if Woodruff redeemed in the character of a "successor in interest" of L. A. Walker or of L. A. and Mary J. Walker, the judgment debtors in the mortgage foreclosure suit, the effect of the redemption was to terminate the sale and to revest the title in L. A. Walker or in the person who had succeeded to that judgment debtor's estate, i. e., the person in whom the legal title would be had there been no foreclosure sale under the Temple mortgage.

[13] That Woodruff could redeem only in the capacity of a "successor in interest," and not as a "redemptioner," is manifest. A "redemptioner," as we have seen, is one who is a creditor of the judgment debtor "having a lien by judgment or mortgage." Subdivision 2, § 701, Code Civ. Proc. But Woodruff was not "a creditor having a lien by judgment or mortgage." The trust deed under which he purchased at the trustee's sale conveyed to his grantor, the trustee L. O. Hatch, the legal title so far as was necessary to the execution of the trust. That is, though the trust deed carried with it none of the incidents of ownership other than the right to convey the title upon default on the part of the trustors, it did pass the legal title. The result of the enforcement of a trust deed may be, for all practical purposes, the same as the enforcement of a mortgage with power of sale; but a trust deed is not a mortgage and does not create a lien. Weber v. McCleverty, 149 Cal. 316, 86 Pac. 706; MacLeod v. Moran, 153 Cal. 97, 94 Pac. 604; Athearn v. Ryan, 154 Cal. 554, 98 Pac. 390; Bryant v. Hobart, 44 Cal. App. 315, 186 Pac. 379. The effect of such a deed, says the court in the Weber Case, is to convey the legal title to the trustee, who is thereby vested with the absolute legal title to the premises so far as is necessary to enable him to convey it to the purchaser at the trustee's sale free of all right, title, interest, or estate of the trustors, or of any one claiming under or through them by subsequent conveyance. Moreover, even if the trust deed to Hatch, instead of passing the legal title to him as trustee, had created but a "lien" for the security of the indebtedness due by L. A. Walker to Woodruff, nevertheless, when Woodruff purchased at his trustee's sale, it would be the title which, subject to all prior rights, interests, liens, and titles, would pass to him as purchaser at that sale. So that, if it were true that prior to his purchase he had possessed but a lien for his security, such lien would have been merged in the title which he would have purchased at his trustee's sale. Therefore, in any view of the case, Woodruff cannot be regarded as a lienor at the time when he redeemed the property from the mortgage foreclosure sale to Stickney.

[14] It follows, therefore, that Woodruff was not a "redemptioner," as that word is used in subdivision 2 of section 701 of the Code of Civil Procedure and in the subsequent sections, but that by his purchase at the trustee's sale, he became the "successor in interest" of the judgment debtors or mortgagors, so far as there remained in the latter any interest subsequent to the sheriff's sale to appellant on May 3, 1915. And since Woodruff could redeem from the foreclosure sale, if at all, only in the capacity of a "successor in interest," his redemption extinguished that sale—annulled it—and restored the title. Code Civ. Proc. § 703.

[15, 16] But, though the effect of Woodruff's redemption was to terminate the foreclosure sale to Stickney, which ordinarily would leave the legal title in appellant as the original successor in interest of L. A. Walker just as though the property never had been sold under the mortgage foreclosure decree, respondents seem to think, simply because the redemption from that sale was made by Woodruff, and not by appellant, that the title was diverted from appellant to Woodruff. The basis for this claim seems to lie in the assumption that the only right to which appellant succeeded as the purchaser of L. A. Walker's estate at the sheriff's sale on May 3, 1915, was Walker's right to redeem the property from the foreclosure sale to Stickney. Upon this assumption it is argued that because appellant did not redeem the property from the sale to Stickney he lost his right of redemption and now is left with nothing. But respondents are in error when they assume that appellant succeeded only to Walker's right to redeem the property from the foreclosure sale.

Appellant, it is true, by his purchase at the sheriff's sale did acquire the right to redeem from the mortgage foreclosure sale to Stickney, but he also acquired something very much greater than the mere statutory right to redeem. He succeeded to all of Walker's title and estate. Before the foreclosure sale to Stickney, appellant, as the purchaser at the sheriff's sale under his judgment against Walker, held the legal title—a qualified and conditional legal title, it is true, but a legal title which, subject to the effect of the mortgage foreclosure sale, became absolute on receipt of the sheriff's deed executed to appellant on May 4, 1916.

L. A. Walker, as one of the judgment debtors named in the mortgage foreclosure decree, had the right to redeem from the foreclosure sale, even though appellant had succeeded to all of his title to the premises. The statutory right of a judgment debtor to redeem is not affected by the fact that, by the transfer of his estate to another, he no longer has the title. Yoakum v. Bower, 51 Cal. 539; Southern California L. Co. v. McDowell, 105 Cal. 99, 38 Pac. 627. If Walker had exercised the right given him by the statute to redeem from the foreclosure sale to Stickney, not only would the effect of that sale have been terminated—save in so far as it had completely satisfied the mortgage lien and the Grange Company's judgment lien—but the title would have been revested immediately in appellant, as Walker's successor in interest. The same result must follow the redemption made by Woodruff; for Woodruff, as the purchaser under the deed of trust which the Walkers had made to Hatch as trustee, possessed no right that was superior to any of the rights held by his predecessor, L. A. Walker.

Mrs. Walker, it will be recalled, was divested of all interest in the property on April 11, 1914, when it was sold under the trust deed which she and her husband previously had executed to Catherine Seccombe. And though the purchaser at that trustee's sale later reconveyed the property to the husband, L. A. Walker, the trust deed to Hatch, under which Woodruff, the predecessor of respondents here, claimed title, was executed after Mrs. Walker had been divested of all interest in the land. It follows, therefore, that Woodruff, if he possessed any right of redemption whatever, was only entitled to redeem as a "successor in interest" of L. A. Walker, or, if you please, as a "successor in interest" of L. A. and Mary J. Walker—Mary J. Walker having been named as a grantor in the truth deed to Hatch—and that, for all the purposes of a redemption from the foreclosure sale to Stickney, Woodruff possessed no right that was superior to those possessed by L. A. Walker, and hence a redemption by him had no other effect than a redemption by L. A. Walker would have had.

A somewhat similar question was considered by the Minnesota Supreme Court in a case involving an analogous, though not an identical, situation. That case arose under statutory provisions quite similar to our own with respect to the effect of a redemption by a judgment debtor or his successor in interest. In the case referred to, Kopp v. Thele, 104 Minn. 267, 116 N. W. 472, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 981, 15 Ann. Cas. 313, the plaintiff, Carolina Kopp, and the defendant, Louis C. Kopp, as husband and wife, had executed a mortgage on the husband's land, which was foreclosed. The husband did not redeem from the foreclosure sale, but the plaintiff, as his wife, did, and thereupon went into possession. Thereafter Mr. and Mrs. Kopp were divorced, and subsequently Kopp conveyed his interest in the land to the defendant, Thele. Upon this state of facts the Minnesota court held that the plaintiff, by virtue of her statutory interest in the land as the wife of the owner, had a right to redeem the mortgaged premises from the foreclosure sale, and that such redemption annulled the sale, but that, notwithstanding such redemption by the wife, Thele, the husband's grantor, owned the land, subject only to a lien in favor of the plaintiff for the amount she had paid to redeem, with interest, less the net value of the use of the land while in her possession. After stating that the Minnesota statute provides that the mortgagor, his personal representative or assigns, may within 12 months redeem the land sold on foreclosure sale, and that if any of them does the redemption annuls the sale, the court said:

"It follows that, when the plaintiff redeemed in this case, the foreclosure sale was annulled, leaving the legal title to the land the same as if the mortgage had never been given. Therefore her redemption could not have the effect, either in law or equity, of transferring the husband's title to the land to her. But, she having redeemed for the protection of her own interest in the premises, which necessarily resulted in protecting her husband's title, she was not a mere volunteer. Hence she is entitled, by subrogation, to an equitable lien upon the land for the amount paid on the redemption."

The reasoning of the Minnesota court is equally applicable here. When Woodruff redeemed, the foreclosure sale to Stickney was terminated (Code Civ. Proc. § 703), thereby leaving the legal title to the land the same as if no mortgage had been given. Therefore his redemption could not have the effect, either in law or in equity, of transferring appellant's title to him.

[17] But, though the effect of Woodruff's redemption from the foreclosure sale was to revest appellant with the legal title, so that he may successfully maintain this suit to quiet title, still, in seeking equity, he must do equity. Appellant's title escaped the consequences of the mortgage foreclosure sale to Stickney only because Woodruff, for whose supposed title the respondents paid the sum of $5,103, redeemed the land by paying to Stickney $4,212.35. Appellant cannot come into a court of equity asking to have his title quieted without doing equity. And we think it but equity that he should pay to respondents, as Woodruff's successors in interest, the amount which was paid by Woodruff—a payment which has made it possible for appellant to regain his title—with legal interest thereon from the date of Woodruff's redemption, less, of course, the net value of the use of the land while in the possession of Woodruff and his successors. For this purpose respondents, upon the going down of the remittitur, should be given permission, if so advised, to amend their answer by setting up their equities and praying for relief accordingly.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment must be reversed, and the case remanded for retrial, unless we can say that there is merit in certain points raised by respondents and now about to be considered.

[18] It is claimed by respondents that the decree foreclosing the Temple mortgage established the fact that appellant was the holder of a judgment lien only, not that he acquired the title as a purchaser at execution sale, and that by that decree the court foreclosed appellant's judgment lien. The record of the foreclosure proceedings does not bear out this contention. In his answer in that case appellant set up more than a claim to a mere judgment lien. His answer set forth, briefly but chronologically, the recovery of his judgment against Walker in the justice's court, the filing of an abstract of that judgment in the office of the county recorder, the issuance of a writ of execution on that judgment, the sheriff's sale of the premises to him as the purchaser at execution sale, and the issuance to him of the sheriff's certificate of sale; and he prayed that he receive from any surplus remaining from the proceeds of the foreclosure sale "the amount necessary to redeem said property from the sale to him." From this it will be seen that appellant did not claim to be a mere lienor, but that, on the contrary, by alleging a sheriff's sale of the premises to him under execution, he in effect alleged facts which showed that the judgment lien once held by him was entirely satisfied and extinguished. And the decree in that case, though it recites that formal findings were waived, declares that "all the allegations of * * * the answer of the defendant C. W. Bateman [the appellant here] * * * are true." While it is true that the prayer of Bateman's answer in that case asks that, if any surplus should remain after satisfying all prior claims, he might receive therefrom "the amount necessary to redeem said property" from execution sale to him, still the fact is that there was no surplus available for the purpose, and hence no such forced redemption of the land from the execution sale to appellant ever was effected. Bateman therefore, according to the averments of his answer in the mortgage foreclosure case, remained in the position in which he was immediately prior to the entry of the mortgage foreclosure decree, namely, the holder of the title under execution sale, subject only to the prior incumbrances and to the right of his judgment debtor to remain in possession and to redeem from the execution sale to him at any time prior to the expiration of the 12 months.

[19] Nor did the foreclosure decree adjudge that appellant is merely the holder of a judgment lien. The language of the decree is:

"* * * The said C. A. Bateman has a lien against the property herein mentioned in the sum of $144, and also for his costs herein laid out and expended, taxed at $———, by reason of a certain sheriff's certificate of sale, under execution which was issued on a judgment given and made on September 3, 1914, in the justice's court of Los Nietos township."

The words which we have italicized show the precise nature of Bateman's interest. By the sheriff's certificate of sale, the execution of which is found by the foreclosure decree, Bateman acquired the legal title—a qualified and conditional legal title, but the legal title nevertheless, and not a mere lien. It is true that the foreclosure decree designates Bateman's interest, erroneously, as a "lien." The error in thus denominating appellant's interest appears on the face of the decree itself, since it expressly finds that the interest, whatever it was, existed "by reason of a certain sheriff's certificate of sale." This erroneous designation of appellant's interest is not conclusive in the present action. For whether his interest in the land was merely that of a lienor or whether it was that of the holder of the legal title is a question the determination of which was not necessary to the relief prayed for by appellant in the answer filed by him in the mortgage foreclosure action. Nor was the determination of that question necessary to the relief which was awarded by the decree in that action. A determination of that question one way or the other would not and could not have affected the court's decision and the relief awarded by its decree. The precise technical character of the interest which Bateman acquired by his purchase under the execution on his judgment against Walker was not a matter that was tendered for litigation in the mortgage foreclosure suit, nor was it actually litigated therein. A question which is only incidentally involved and which is not actually litigated—that is, made the subject of trial and pressed upon the consideration of the court—is not concluded by the judgment so as to be res adjudicata in a subsequent suit on a different cause of action.

Fulton v. Hanlow, 20 Cal. 450, 486–489; Ferrea v. Chabot, 63 Cal. 564, 567, et seq.; Chapman v. Hughes, 134 Cal. 655, 58 Pac. 298, 60 Pac. 974, 66 Pac. 982.

[20] Finally, it is contended by respondents that the execution sale under which appellant claims title was fatally defective in certain particulars. It seems that two calls were omitted from the description of the property in the sheriff's certificate of sale to Bateman and likewise in the notices of that sale. But this notwithstanding, the remaining calls in the description as given in the certificate of sale and in the notices were sufficient to describe the property and to identify it as the land in controversy. This was clearly shown by the testimony of an experienced surveyor. The land is described in the certificate of sale as a part of a larger tract—as a part of lot 11 of tract No. 688, as per map recorded in Book 15, page 171, of Maps, Records of Los Angeles County. Lot 11, as shown by the map referred to in the description, contains 19.49 acres. One of the calls in the description as given in the sheriff's certificate is a line which bisects lot 11. It is a line which runs northerly from a fixed point in the southerly boundary line of the lot to a fixed point in the northerly boundary line. It clearly appears from the description as given in the certificate of sale that the property intended to be sold by the sheriff lies to the east of this bisecting line. The certificate of sale and the notices give the area of the land sold as 14.58 acres. By a simple arithmetical calculation based on the data afforded by the description given in the notices and in the certificate of sale, including the map referred to therein, it can readily be ascertained that 14.58 acres is the exact area of all of that part of lot 11 which lies east of the above-mentioned line. It necessarily follows, therefore, that the land intended to be sold and which was sold was all of that part of lot 11 which lies to the east of that call in the description which describes the line that bisects the lot—the line which begins at a definite point in the southern boundary of the lot and extends to a definite point in the northern boundary. The description was therefore sufficient to enable bidders at the sale to ascertain the precise parcel of land to be sold.

[21] The description would certainly have been sufficient for a voluntary conveyance; and what is sufficient for such a conveyance will suffice for an involuntary conveyance. There is high authority for so holding. In White v. Luning, 93 U. S. 514, 23 L. Ed. 938, the court says that in many respects the rules of construction are different, but this difference does not extend to the description of the property conveyed. In this regard "the rules are the same, whether the deed be made by a party in his own right, or by an officer of the court. The policy of the law does not require courts to scrutinize the proceedings of a judicial sale with a view to defeat them. On the contrary, every reasonable intendment will be made in their favor so as to secure, if it can be done consistently with legal rules, the object they were intended to accomplish." To the same effect is Hermann v. Likens, 90 Tex. 448, 39 S. W. 282.

[22] There is no merit in respondents' claim that the error in the date of the sheriff's deed to appellant is fatal to the latter's claim of title. It seems that the deed bears date "May 4, 1914," instead of "May 4, 1916," and respondents suggest that, because delivery is presumed to have been made at the date which a deed bears, the recording of a sheriff's deed bearing such an erroneous date as the one in question here can afford no notice to subsequent purchasers that the property was sold to appellant on May 3, 1915—a year later than the date which the deed bears. But the sheriff's deed to appellant gave him no new title; it was simply evidence that the title which he had acquired at the sheriff's sale had become absolute. Robinson v. Thornton, supra. The recording of the sheriff's certificate of sale to appellant was alone sufficient to charge Woodruff and all other subsequent purchasers with notice of appellant's title. The sheriff is required to file a duplicate of the certificate of purchase in the office of the county recorded for record (Code Civ. Proc. § 700a); and his return on the writ of execution is prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein (Pol. Code, § 4159). His return on the execution pursuant to which he sold the property to appellant, dated May 3, 1915—the date of the sale—states that a duplicate of the certificate had been filed for record with the county recorder. This, therefore, is prima facie evidence that on the date of the sale to appellant a duplicate of the certificate of sale was duly recorded. Woodruff, therefore, and his successors in interest, the respondents here, had notice that the property was sold by the sheriff to appellant on May 3, 1915, regardless of any error in the date of the subsequently executed sheriff's deed to appellant.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to permit respondents to amend their answer, if so advised, by alleging any facts showing them or any of them to be possessed of equities entitling them or any of them to reimbursement for outlays and to an equitable lien therefor.

We concur: WORKS, J.; CRAIG, J.

59 Cal. App. 541

GOLDEN EAGLE MILLING CO. v. OLD HOMESTEAD BAKERY. (Civ. 4275.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1. California. Nov. 2, 1922.)

1. Frauds, statute of ⟸83 — Contract for manufacture and sale of flour held within statute.

A contract whereby a milling company sold to a bakery 1,000 barrels of flour, which was to be manufactured not especially for the bakery but in the usual course of business as part of a larger quantity, held within the statute.

2. Frauds, statute of ⟸89(3)—Acceptance of part of shipment of flour held not to take contract for a larger amount out of operation of statute.

Where plaintiff sold under oral contract to defendant 1,000 barrels of flour at $11.75 a barrel, that defendant accepted 20 barrels as part of a larger shipment of other goods but retained them only after plaintiff had reduced the price to $11.30 a barrel, did not take the case out of the operation of the statute of frauds, the refusal to take the 20 barrels at the price named being in effect a repudiation of the order.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George E. Crothers, Judge.

Action by the Golden Eagle Milling Company against the Old Homestead Bakery. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Fred S. Howell, of Petaluma, for appellant.

John O'Donnell, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. Action to recover the sum of $3,234 damages for the breach of a contract to receive and pay for 1,000 barrels of barley flour sold to the defendant at the agreed price of $11.30 per barrel, only 20 barrels of which were accepted and paid for, the remainder refused, and sold by the plaintiff in the nearest market at the best price obtainable, the price thus realized being less than the contract price by the said sum of $3,234.

The plaintiff is a corporation engaged in the manufacture of flour and feed. The defendant is a corporation engaged in the bakery business. On September 11, 1918, the plaintiff, through its salesman, Howe, sold to the defendant, through its agent and officer, Banzaf, 1,000 barrels of barley flour, to be ground from barley, sample of which had been previously furnished to the defendant, at the price of $11.75 per barrel. It was known to the defendant that the flour was not yet manufactured. While the particular brand and quality of flour so sold was not kept in stock by the plaintiff, it was manufactured according to its own formula and was sold to other customers than the defendant. The sale was effected by telephone conversation between Howe and Banzaf. The former entered the order in his memorandum book, and on the same day wrote a letter to the defendant confirming the order. No reply to this letter was received. A few days thereafter the manager of the plaintiff acknowledged the receipt of the order in a letter also dealing with other matters, but received no reply to this letter, although it is admitted that the letter was received by the defendant.

About November 10, 1918, the plaintiff shipped to the defendant 20 barrels of barley flour on account of this order, they going forward as a part of a larger shipment furnished in fulfillment of a previous order. Invoices for the entire shipment were sent to the defendant, the 20 barrels being charged at $11.75 per barrel, and the remainder at $11.30. Mr. Banzaf, upon observing this, called the plaintiff by telephone to inquire the reason for the difference, and was then informed that the 20 barrels was part of defendant's order for 1,000 barrels given at the price of $11.75 per barrel, whereas the remainder constituted part of a previous order given at a lower price. Banzaf at this time informed the plaintiff that he had no recollection of giving this order for 1,000, and refused to pay more for the 20 barrels than it had been theretofore paying for the same brand and quality of flour. The plaintiff, through its manager, thereupon agreed to reduce the price to $11.30—the old price—and the defendant received and retained the 20 barrels and paid therefor at said reduced rate. Thereafter, in due time, the plaintiff tendered the remaining 980 barrels, but the defendant refused to accept or pay for the same.

The evidence offered by the plaintiff as to the whole transaction was objected to by the defendant upon the ground that the contract, being one for the sale of goods and chattels at a price of $200 and over, was invalid if not in writing signed by the defendant, and that the parol evidence offered by the plaintiff for the purpose of establishing it was incompetent. The evidence was admitted by the court, subject to a motion to strike it out in the event that the plaintiff's evidence did not take the contract out of the operation of the statute of frauds. This the plaintiff endeavored to do by proof of the receipt and acceptance by the defendant of the aforementioned 20 barrels. At the conclusion of the evidence the motion to strike out was renewed by the defendant and granted. Thereupon the defendant moved for a nonsuit, which also was granted, and the plaintiff's motion for a new trial being also denied, was followed by judgment in favor of the defendant, dismissing the action.

The plaintiff appeals and makes two points for the reversal of the judgment, namely: That the contract in question was not a sale of personal property within the meaning of the statute requiring it to be in writing, but comes within the provisions of section 1740 of the Civil Code relating to agreements to manufacture; and, second, that even if it be held to be a sale of personal property there was a delivery and acceptance of part of the goods, the effect of which was to dispense with the necessity of a writing signed by the defendant.

There has been considerable diversity of opinion as to whether a contract, although in terms a sale, comes within the statute of frauds requiring it to be evidenced by a writing, if the goods purporting to be sold are not yet in existence and are to be thereafter manufactured by the vendor; and in a number of early cases in the state of New York it was held that such contracts are not within the statute. Thus it was held that a sale of flour to be thereafter milled was a contract to manufacture rather than a sale (Bronson v. Wiman, 10 Barb. [N. Y.] 406); similarly of a contract to deliver monthly thereafter during a certain period a number of barrels of beer not yet brewed (Donovan v. Willson, 26 Barb. [N. Y.] 138). Later cases have not followed that rule, but have adopted the rule followed in other states holding such a contract to be a sale within the statute of frauds; and that in order to be classed as an agreement to manufacture, the article must be made for the vendee according to his special design or requirements, so that when made it would not be suitable for the general trade of the vendor. The general question is discussed at length in the case of In re Gies, 160 Mich. 502, 125 N. W. 420, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 318, 19 Ann. Cas. 1288. The Supreme Court of Michigan, after reviewing a number of cases decided in various jurisdictions, said:

"The effect of these decisions we understand to be this, namely: That a contract for the sale of articles then existing, or such as the vendor, in the ordinary course of his business, manufactures or procures for the general market, whether on hand at the time or not, is a contract for the sale of goods, to which the statute applies. But, on the other hand, if the goods are to be manufactured especially for the purchaser, and upon his special order, and not for the general market, the case is not within the statute. Spencer v. Cone, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 283. 'The distinction,' says Chief Justice Shaw, in Lamb v. Crafts, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 353, 'we believe is now well understood. When a person stipulates for the future sale of articles which he is habitually making, and which, at the time, are not made or finished, it is essentially a contract of sale, and not a contract for labor; otherwise, when the article is made pursuant to the agreement.' In Gardner v. Joy, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 177, a contract to buy a certain number of boxes of candles at a fixed rate per pound, which the vendor said he would manufacture and deliver in about three months, was held to be a contract of sale and within the statute. To the same general effect are Waterman v. Meigs, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 497, and Clark v. Nichols, 107 Mass. 547. It is true that 'in the infinitely various shades of different contracts' there is some practical difficulty in disposing of the questions that arise under that section of the statute. General Stat. [1860] c. 105, § 5. But we see no ground for holding that there is any uncertainty in the rule itself. On the contrary, its correctness and justice are clearly implied or expressly affirmed in all of our decisions upon the subject-matter. * * * An instructive case is Roubicek & Zobel v. Haddad, 67 N. J. Law, 522, 51 Atl. 938. The contract was a New York contract, and the rule in that state was applied. A defendant, who was doing a retail trade in Atlantic City, N. J., ordered from the plaintiffs, who were importers and manufacturers of Bohemian glass novelties, etc., in New York City, an assortment of watch cases and Cologne articles, to be thereafter manufactured in Europe, with the words 'Atlantic City' thereon, for the special use of defendant's trade; and it was held, following the decisions of the state of New York, that this was not a contract of sale, but for work, labor, and materials, and hence not a contract within the statute. After stating the New York rule, the court said: 'It should be stated, however, that the courts of the state of New York have more recently shown a disposition to qualify the rule thus stated to some extent, and to make it conform more closely to the rule as adopted in the later English and American cases. Thus, in Passaic Mfg. Co. v. Hoffman, 3 Daly (N. Y.) 495, it is held that if the article to be manufactured to fill the order was one that was manufactured and supplied to the trade generally, it would be a sale within the statute; but, if it was specially manufactured for the trade of the person ordering it, then the contract would be one for work and labor, and not within the statute.'"

[1] In this state the question was touched upon in the case of Flynn v. Dougherty, 91 Cal. 671, 27 Pac. 1080, 14 L. R. A. 230, and the contract there held to be one of manufacture coming under section 1740 of the Civil Code, but the facts of that case were such as to clearly exclude it from the operation of the statute of frauds. The court, however, in that case, seems to accept the so-called Massachusetts rule as having the weight of authority, and we think the present case comes clearly within that rule. It cannot be fairly said that the plaintiff in the case at bar manufactured the flour specially for the defendant and that it was not an article suitable for its general trade. The fact that the plaintiff, owing to the uncertainty of the demand for this particular flour, took the precaution of procuring orders before milling it makes no essential difference. It had bought a quantity of barley sufficient to make 3,000 barrels of flour, and its salesman was soliciting orders for the sale of this quantity, and sold to the defendant 1,000 barrels thereof. It was an article manufactured by the plaintiff according to its own formula and for the general market; and if in the present instance the armistice of November 11, 1918, had not intervened the plaintiff could have readily disposed of the flour to other customers. We conclude that the trial court correctly held the contract in question to be a sale within the statute of frauds.

[2] By its ruling on the motion to strike out the evidence the trial court also held that the transaction by which the defendant accepted the 20 barrels constituting part of a larger shipment, the remainder of the shipment being the completion of a previous order, was not such acceptance of part of the goods as to obviate the necessity of a writing signed by the defendant. The trial court took the view that the defendant's refusal to pay for these 20 barrels at the price named in the order was in effect a repudiation of the order, and that its consent to retain them and pay for them at a reduced price could not be construed as an acceptance under the terms of the original order. As an inference to this effect might well be drawn from the testimony, it follows that the lack of a writing signed by the party to be charged was not cured by its retention of the 20 barrels, and the trial court was therefore justified in its ruling striking out the evidence. The ruling of the court to this effect left the record in such condition that it could not do otherwise than grant the defendant's motion for a nonsuit.

It results from the foregoing that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; ST. SURE, Justice pro tem.

---

59 Cal. App. 457

PEOPLE v. GARCIA. (Cr. 920.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 24, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 22, 1922.)

1. Criminal law ⟸1166½(5)—Accused cannot secure reversal because of manner of summoning jurors unless prejudiced thereby.

Accused cannot secure reversal because of form of order for summoning jurors where it is not shown how he was or could have been prejudiced at all.

2. Jury ⟸82(2)—Substantial compliance with statutory requirements as to summoning jurors held sufficient.

There is no constitutional right in an accused to have procedure respecting the summoning of a jury which may sit at his trial strictly and exactly followed; for the procedure is statutory, and substantial compliance therewith is all that the parties are entitled to insist upon.

3. Criminal law ⟸1163(2)—Prejudice not presumed from departure from statutory mode of summoning jurors.

Prejudice will not be presumed from a departure from the statutory procedure of summoning jurors.

4. Jury ⟸82(2)—Order requiring jurors to be selected from body of county held not erroneous.

In kidnapping prosecution, where, at the time the cause came on for trial, there was no regular panel of jurors in attendance, and the court ordered a special venire to be summoned by the sheriff, and in the order required that the jurors be selected "from the body of the county, and not from the bystanders," the court properly denied challenge to the panel on the ground that the quoted language in the order is authorized only where the object is to complete a panel, as in a case covered by Code Civ. Proc. § 227, while the court's action was taken under section 226, as amended by St. 1917, p. 1284.

5. Jury ⟸82(2)—That deputy summoning jurors, and jurors, were applicants for membership or members of secret organization held not ground for challenge.

In kidnapping prosecution, held, that the fact that a deputy sheriff who summoned the jurors and certain jurors were applicants for membership in, or members of, an organization called the "K. K. K.," was not ground for challenge to the panel or individual members selected to compose the jury, where examination did not disclose that their action would be influenced by their obligation.

6. Criminal law ⟸594(3) — Continuance for absence of accused's wife in Mexico held properly refused.

In kidnapping prosecution, continuance for illness and absence of accused's wife in Mexico held properly refused, it not appearing that she had been or could be subpœnaed, or that her attendance could be secured if continuance were granted, and the district attorney announcing himself as being willing that her testimony recorded at a former trial be read to the jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Susano Garcia was convicted of kidnapping, and from the judgment and from order denying his motion for new trial, he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

Frank Birkhauser, of El Centro, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

JAMES, J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of kidnapping. A motion for a new trial was denied. Defendant has appealed from the judgment and from the order denying the motion.

It may be stated at the outset that not only was the evidence showing the guilt of the defendant most ample and complete, but it showed further that the crime was accomplished in a particularly cruel and brutal manner. The facts may be briefly adverted to: About the 1st of June, 1921, Cruz Moreno Singh resided with her husband, Dewan Singh, at a point in Imperial county about 600 feet from the Mexican border. She was a young woman, and had been married about a month at the time of the occurrence hereinafter referred to. With her resided her young sister, aged 16 years. The husband was engaged in farming, and on the day in question was at work a mile or more from his home. Late in the afternoon the appellant herein, in company with another man (both being Mexicans), entered the house where Mrs. Singh and her sister were, exhibited revolvers and a knife, seized Mrs. Singh and the girl, and proceeded to drag them out of the house. The latter resisted to the utmost of their strength, until finally one of the men struck Mrs. Singh a hard blow on the head with a revolver, and she became unconscious. The men then carried and dragged their victims across the line into Mexico. From that point they were compelled to walk to a Mexican settlement some 8 or 9 miles toward the interior of the country. They were placed in a house occupied by a Mexican family, from which, the second night thereafter, with the aid of a Mexican whose assistance they procured with an offer of $50, they escaped and returned to the house of friends on the American side. The appellant here was not arrested for some months afterwards, although his identity was known to the officers, for he remained on Mexican ground. He was finally caught after having driven an automobile across the line, and his trial and conviction followed.

[1-5] Appellant's claims for reversal are based upon highly technical grounds, and after a careful examination of each of them we are convinced that they have no substantial merit. At the time the cause came on for trial there was no regular panel of jurors in attendance, and the court ordered a special venire to be summoned by the sheriff, and in the order required that the jurors be selected "from the body of the county and not from the bystanders." Appellant insists that such language in the order is only authorized where the object is to complete a panel where a sufficient number of persons have not been summoned, as in a case covered by the provisions of section 227, Code of Civil Procedure. The action taken by the court was under the provisions of section 226, Code of Civil Procedure, as amended by St. 1917, p. 1284, which provides that, where no jurors are drawn or summoned to attend, or a sufficient number fail to appear, the court may direct the sheriff to summon, "so many good and lawful persons of the county, * * * as may be required." Assuming that under the latter provisions the order would not exclude bystanders from selection, it is not shown how the appellant was or could have been prejudiced at all. There is no constitutional right in a defendant to have procedure respecting the summoning of a jury which may sit at his trial strictly and exactly followed. The procedure is statutory, and a substantial compliance therewith is all that the parties are entitled to insist upon. People v. Nakis, 184 Cal. 105, 193 Pac. 92. Prejudice will not be presumed from a departure from the statutory procedure. Moreover, the language of section 226, Code of Civil Procedure, imports in its requirement as to the summoning of jurors that the selection shall not be made from bystanders. In People v. Vincent, 95 Cal. 426, 30 Pac. 582, the court said:

"* * * The court, under section 226 of the Code of Civil Procedure, may at any time direct the sheriff to summon jurors from the body of the county, although there be names of properly selected regular jurors in the jury box; and when, from any cause, there are no regular jurors to be drawn from, the very case arises where the court may, without any doubt whatever, exercise the power granted by said section 226."

See, also, Leahy v. Southern Pacific Railroad Co., 65 Cal. 150, 3 Pac. 622; Levy v. Wilson, 69 Cal. 105, 10 Pac. 272.

The challenge to the panel on the ground indicated was properly denied. The further challenge to the panel on the ground that the deputy sheriffs who summoned the jurymen were biased was not well grounded. Appellant both in his examination of the deputy sheriffs and of the jurors sought to show that such officers and jurors were members of an organization called the "K. K. K.'s," and that under the obligation taken as such members of such organization they could not do justice in a cause where a defendant was a foreigner or was of a particular religious faith. One of the deputy sheriffs who summoned the jurymen admitted that he had made application for membership in an organization known under the style of "K. K. K.'s," but stated that he had taken no obligation thereunder. Several of the jurymen admitted that they were members of the organization referred to, and that they had taken an obligation as such members, but each and all of the persons examined as to that subject positively stated that such obligation was not of a character as would influence them in considering fairly the case between the people and the defendant, or in rendering an impartial verdict thereon, and that it would not have that effect. Just what that obligation was appellant's counsel made no attempt to show, except that he offered in evidence an article printed in a magazine which purported to set forth the aims, objects, and purposes of the K. K. K. organization. One of the errors claimed is the ruling of the court in refusing to admit the magazine article in evidence. Such matter was hearsay twice removed and was most properly ruled out. Full scope was given to the examination of the jurors as conducted by appellant's counsel, and the challenges made, both as to the panel and individual members selected to compose the jury, were properly denied.

[6] Appellant complains that the court erred in refusing to grant his motion for a continuance of the trial. The motion was an oral one, unsupported by any other showing whatsoever, and referred to the fact that the wife of the defendant, who was then in Mexico, was ill and could not attend at the day fixed for the hearing. In the first place, a prima facie showing was not made to support the motion. The witness had never been subpœnaed, so far as appears, and was out of the jurisdiction of the court; hence beyond the reach of a subpœna, had one been issued. The court could not have fairly concluded from the oral statement of counsel that there was any probability that the attendance of the witness could be obtained in the event a continuance was granted. It appeared further that the witness had testified at a former trial, and the district attorney announced himself as being willing that her testimony so recorded be read to the jury.

The instructions given by the trial judge were full and fair, and every right which the law accords to a defendant was secured to appellant.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

190 Cal. 201

TRIPP v. TRIPP. (L. A. 7308.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 15, 1922.)

1. Contempt ⟸66(2)—No appeal from order adjudging one in contempt in refusing to make payments due under divorce decree.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1222, declaring the court's judgment and orders in contempt cases final and conclusive, no appeal lies from an order adjudging one guilty of contempt in refusing to make payments due under the terms of a final divorce decree.

2. Contempt ⟸67—Order in contempt may be annulled on certiorari only if in excess of court's jurisdiction.

An order in a contempt case may be annulled on certiorari only when made in excess of the court's jurisdiction.

3. Appeal and error ⟸82(1)—General law controlled by special law making judgment of contempt final.

Code Civ. Proc. § 963, authorizing appeals from special orders after final judgment, is general in character, and controlled by the special law (section 1222), making a judgment of contempt final and conclusive.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Thomas O. Toland, Judge.

Action by Amelia P. Tripp against E. E. Tripp. From an order adjudging defendant guilty of contempt of court, he appeals. On motion to dismiss appeal. Motion granted, and appeal dismissed.

D. Joseph Coyne and Joseph M. Suttner, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Griffith Jones and John J. Craig, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WASTE, J. [1, 2] The defendant has attempted to appeal from an order adjudging him guilty of contempt of court in refusing to make certain payments alleged to be due under the terms of a final decree of divorce. The law does not authorize an appeal in such matters. It is expressly provided in section 1222 of the Code of Civil Procedure that—

"The judgment and orders of the court or judge, made in cases of contempt, are final and conclusive."

It is only when an order so made is in excess of the jurisdiction of the court making it that it may be annulled on certiorari. People v. Latimer, 160 Cal. 716, 720, 117 Pac. 1051.

[3] If it be contended that the order adjudging defendant guilty of contempt was one made after final judgment, from which an appeal may ordinarily be taken under section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is now settled that this provision is general in character, and is controlled by the special law contained in section 1222 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which makes a judgment of contempt final and conclusive, and therefore nonappealable. Gale v. Tuolumne Water Co., 169 Cal. 46, 51, 145 Pac. 532.

The appeal is dismissed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; SLOANE, J.; SHURTLEFF, J.; LENNON, J.; WILBUR, J.; LAWLOR, J.

190 Cal. 180

PHILLIPS et al. v. LAGUNA BEACH CO. et al. (L. A. 6642.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 8, 1922, as amended Dec. 21, 1922. Rehearing Denied Jan. 4, 1923.)

1. Dedication ⟸17—Resolution in minutes of meeting of land company held present offer to dedicate land for park.

A resolution in the minutes of a meeting of the directors of a land company, wherein it was "resolved that all property south and west of * * * shall be reserved for park purposes and not sold by anybody at any time, * * *" held a present offer to dedicate the land described, rather than a statement that the land would be dedicated at some future time, particularly in view of the fact that advertisements were printed containing the statement that the land had been reserved for park purposes and some slight improvements to fit it for public use had been erected.

2. Dedication ⟸37—General use by public held acceptance in pais of offer to dedicate land for "park."

Entry and general use by the public of property which a land company had offered to dedicate to the public use as a park held sufficient to establish an acceptance in pais of the offer, though no extensive improvements were made thereon, since a "park" does not have to be laid off in paths or planted with flowers, but may be merely an open space which the public may use for any purpose it sees fit of a public nature.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Park.]

3. Dedication ⟸16(1)—Public use of land never offered for dedication creates no obligation to dedicate.

Public entry upon and use of land adjoining a park which had been dedicated to public does not impose any obligation on the owner of such property, where no offer of dedication has ever been made.

4. Dedication ⟸48—When unrecorded, held invalid as to persons taking trust deed to property without notice.

An unrecorded dedication of property to the public and an acceptance by user held invalid as to a college and bank who had made a loan on and accepted a deed of trust to the property, notwithstanding that a lot adjoining the property dedicated contained a recital of the dedication; such deed being the only instrument of record indicating the dedication.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; R. Y. Williams, Judge.

Action by Mrs. Frank A. Phillips, plaintiff, and Amelia B. Keech and others, interveners, against the Laguna Beach Company, a corporation, and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff and interveners, defendants appeal. Affirmed as to the named defendant; reversed as to the others.

James S. Bennett, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Hahn & Hahn, of Pasadena, for defendant and appellant Pomona College.

John A. Harvey, of Santa Ana, for respondents.

S. M. Davis, of Santa Ana, for interveners and respondents.

SHAW, C. J. The appeal is from the judgment.

The plaintiff filed her complaint asking for an injunction to prevent the defendants from selling, transferring, or incumbering the land comprising a part of the tract known as "Laguna Cliffs." The part of the tract which the defendants were to be enjoined from selling is described as blocks 34, 25, 17, and 1, and lot 37 in block 2, comprising the ocean frontage of the subdivision of the land according to the map made by the Laguna Beach Company, filed in the recorder's office, and designated as "Laguna Cliffs." The contention of the plaintiff was that the land so described had been dedicated to the use of the public for park purposes. It is claimed that the defendant Laguna Beach Company made a formal dedication of the tract by resolution entered upon their minutes and that there was a subsequent acceptance thereof by the public.

The plaintiff is the owner of lot 4, block 18, of Laguna Cliffs. The interveners own lot 4 of block 8, lot 5 of block 17, and lot 1 of block 18, in said subdivision, and they join in the prayer of the complaint that the defendants be enjoined from selling, disposing, or incumbering the part of the tract which it is claimed the defendant Laguna Beach Company dedicated to the public for park purposes.

[1] The plat was filed on April 19, 1906. On September 20, 1906, the board of directors of the Laguna Beach Company passed a resolution in the following words:

"On motion made by Leonard Merrill and seconded by Ferdinand Thum, it was resolved that all property south and west of the street marked 'Cliff drive,' and the street marked 'Spring street,' as shown on a map of Laguna Cliffs, between the east line and Boat Canyon, shall be reserved for park purposes and not sold by anybody at any time, except such part of block one as lies south of the south line of Spring street and running parallel thereto 100 feet south of said south line, and excepting also lot 1 in block 3, Laguna Cliffs."

This, it is contended, constitutes the proposal to dedicate the property therein for park purposes. They also printed advertisements containing the statement that the entire ocean frontage had been reserved for park purposes, and made some slight improvements to fit it for public use, consisting of erecting two small pavilions, and placing steps in two places where the land was steep. We regard this resolution as a present offer to dedicate the land described, and not as a statement that the land shall be dedicated at some future time. Hence it is sufficient in and of itself so far as the mere offer is concerned. The other acts and declaration are, of course, additional evidence of the intention to that effect.

[2] To make the dedication there must have been additional evidence of acceptance by the public. Laguna Beach was not incorporated and the county of Orange did not pay any attention to the matter, so there was no official acceptance. It is claimed there was an acceptance in pais; that the public accepted the lots so dedicated by going on the premises and occupying the same for camping purposes and using the same for that purpose, and also by using the same for other purposes and by making use of the small pavilions and other improvements thereon.

We think there is sufficient evidence of use by the general public to sustain the finding of dedication. There was evidence that the public soon began to occupy the property by camping thereon, and by parking their automobiles and other vehicles thereon, eating their lunches and viewing the ocean, and divers other uses that the property was adapted for of a public nature. The two pavilions, while not large, were used as places to rest, or in which to sit, and eat lunches and view the ocean. An improvement association, for a number of years, recognized the property as a park and kept it clean from weeds and waste papers and placed garbage cans thereon. The use was not constant. Such uses are seldom of that character, but the use was such as the public was likely to make of such a dedication. A park does not have to be laid off in paths or planted with flowers. It may be merely an open space which the public may use for any purpose it sees fit of a public nature. Such use was made of that land, and as constantly as could be expected under the circumstances.

The real question at issue is how much land was included in the dedication. We do not think the dedication included as much land as is now claimed. Lot 37 of block 2 was not included in the description in the resolution, and the strip 100 feet wide of block 1 was expressly excepted from the dedication, also lot 1 of block 3. The following part of the plat shows how the land claimed to be dedicated is situated with relation to the other parts of the subdivision:

[3] It will be observed that the description of the property dedicated includes "all property south and west of the street marked 'Cliff drive' and the street marked 'Spring street.'" This cannot be held to include lot 37 of block 2, for that block was situated northerly of Spring street. Appellants contend that the line of the land dedicated should follow the line of "Cliff drive" beyond the point of its interesection with Spring street to the point opposite where Spring street curves sharply and extends easterly for a distance of 519 feet; it being opposite the point at the westerly end of lot 21 of block 2, thus making the land dedicated include the whole of lot 37 of block 2. We think the correct solution of the problem is that the line should take the course of the south line of "Spring street" from the place where it intersects with "Cliff drive," immediately opposite lot 1 of block 18 of the tract, and continue on that line around lot 37, block 2, to a point which will make it connect with the line running parallel with the south line of "Spring street" and 100 feet southerly thereof, along that part of said street running easterly from the westerly end of lot 21 of block 2. The fact that the public went upon lot 37 and camped there is of no consequence, since the lots were never offered to the public. Some claim is made that a tennis court was maintained upon lot 37, but the record shows that a special lease was made to the tennis club by Mr. Heisler, the president of the company, and that said tennis club was maintained in pursuance of the lease. We find no reason for including lot 37 in the dedication. The resolution expressly excepted the following portion:

"Such part of block one as lies south of the south line of Spring street and running parallel thereto 100 feet south of said south line."

This could not have been intended to have been included in the dedication. That 100-foot strip therefore must be excluded from the portion of the tract set appart to the public use.

[4] We do not think the judgment can be sustained as to the Pomona College and the Orange County Trust & Savings Bank. The college made a loan secured by a deed of trust to the bank for the property in 1916. The resolution of dedication was not recorded, and there was nothing in the record title to impart notice to them except a deed from the Laguna Beach Company to Mabel W. Frankenfield for lot 3, in block 27, containing the following language:

"The party of the first part guarantees that no land between this lot and the ocean will be sold or used for private uses of any kind."

A committee of the college visited the premises in April, 1916, and looked over the property with a view to making the loan. It included all the unsold lots in the entire tract. They did not notice anything to indicate the dedication to public use. At that time of the year there would be little, if any, evidence of the public use, and there is nothing in the testimony of the witnesses to the transaction to show that any member of the public was exercising his or her rights of occupancy at the time, nor was anything on the ground to indicate such use, except the two small pavilions and the steps. As to them there was nothing to show that they were for public use or that they were anything other than private erections on the part of the premises on which they stood. The bank did not see the premises, but relied wholly on the record title. The clause in the deed to Frankenfield, even if we concede that subsequent purchasers of any other lot except 3 of block 27 must take notice of it, indicates nothing except a personal contract in favor of Frankenfield which she only could enforce, and she is not a party to the action. It does not appear that the bank had any knowledge of the Frankenfield deed. There is no evidence that the public were occupying the public use at the time of the visit of the committee, nor that it ever had occupied any part of the premises so as to impart notice to the committee, or to Pomona College, or to the bank. Consequently the judgment must be reversed as to those defendants.

As to the defendant the Laguna Beach Company, the judgment is affirmed, except as to lot 37, block 2, of said subdivision, known or "Laguna Cliffs," and, as to said excepted part, the judgment is reversed.

As to the defendants Orange County Trust & Saving Bank and Pomona College, said judgment is reversed.

We concur: SHURTLEFF, J.; WASTE, J.; SLOANE, J.; WILBUR, J.; LAWLOR, J.; LENNON, J. (SHAW, C. J., and LENNON, WASTE, WILBUR, LAWLOR, and SLOANE, JJ., concur in opinion as modified.)

---

190 Cal. 198

HURT v. HAERING. (L. A. No. 7293.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 14, 1922. Rehearing Denied Jan. 11, 1923.)

1. Divorce ⟸79—Affidavit for publication of summons referring to verified complaint sufficient, though complaint not filed for more than two months.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 412, an affidavit for publication of summons in a divorce action, referring to a verified complaint, which stated a cause of action and also plaintiff's residence in the state and county for the requisite period immediately preceding commencement of the action, held sufficient, though more than two months elapsed after verification of the complaint before the complaint was filed, as the complaint speaks from the date of its filing.

2. Divorce ⟸79 — Allegation of jurisdiction not esential part of "cause of action."

The allegation of jurisdiction, while essential to the maintenance of an action for divorce in the particular county in which it is instituted, is not an essential part of the cause of action, within Code Civ. Proc. § 412, requiring that it appear, either in the affidavit for publication of summons or the verified complaint on file, that a cause of action exists against the defendant to be served; a "cause of action" arising out of an antecedent primary right and corresponding duty and the delict or breach of such right or duty by the person on whom the duty rests.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Cause of Action.]

3. Parties ⟸67—Husband may be sued by name by which known, though different from that stated in marriage license.

One may be sued for divorce by the name by which he was always known to his wife and others, though that is not the name stated in the marriage license.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by Leora Forman Hurt against Walter A. Haering. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Chas. H. Adkins and E. C. Bowen, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Lucien Gray, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. [1] This is an action for breach of promise of marriage. Defendant claims that the plaintiff is a married woman, and bases that claim upon the invalidity of a divorce decree obtained by the plaintiff from her husband. The court held the divorce decree invalid and instructed the jury to bring in a verdict for the defendant. The claim that the divorce decree was void was based upon the fact that no jurisdiction was acquired over the defendant by the publication of the summons, for the reason that there was no statement of a cause of action in the affidavit for publication of the summons, except by reference to a verified complaint. The complaint states a cause of action, but was verified October 28, 1915, and was not filed until January 13, 1916, 77 days later. An essential allegation in a complaint for divorce is that of residence; that the plaintiff has been a resident of the state for one year and county for three months immediately preceding the commencement of the action. Such an allegation was contained in the complaint in question; but, in view of the fact that more than two months elapsed after the time of verification and before the filing of the complaint, it is claimed that the complaint cannot be considered a verified complaint within the meaning of section 412 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provided that it must appear either in the affidavit for publication, or "* * * by the verified complaint on file, that a cause of action exists against the defendant in respect to whom the service is to be made. * * *"

[2] The respondent's argument is that the allegation of residence is an essential allegation (Flynn v. Flynn, 171 Cal. 746, 154 Pac. 837), and that the verification of the complaint in the divorce action cannot properly be deemed a verification of the essential fact of residence during the three months immediately preceding the action, and that to that extent the complaint is not verified. As the complaint speaks from the date of its filing, the complaint in the divorce action states a cause of action and the essential jurisdictional facts. Ronnow v Delmue, 23 Nev. 29, 32, 41 Pac. 1074. It is also clear that the complaint in the action is a verified complaint and shows that the plaintiff therein had a cause of action for divorce against the defendant. The allegation of jurisdiction, while essential to the maintenance of the action in the particular county in which it was instituted, is not an essential part of the cause of action within the meaning of section 412, Code of Civil Procedure. "A cause of action, as Prof. Pomeroy points out with his usual lucidity (Remedies and Remedial Rights, § 452 et seq.), arises out of an antecedent primary right and corresponding duty and the delict or breach of such primary right and duty by the person on whom the duty rests. 'Of these elements, the primary right and duty and the delict or wrong combined constitute the cause of action in the legal sense of the term and as it is used in the Codes of the several states.'" McKee v. Dodd, 152 Cal. 637, 641, 93 Pac. 854, 855 (14 L. R. A. [N. S.] 780, 125 Am. St. Rep. 82). See, also, Frost v. Witter, 132 Cal. 421, 425, 64 Pac. 705, 84 Am. St. Rep. 53; Lemon v. Hubbard, 10 Cal. App. 471, 102 Pac. 554; Hutchinson v. Ainsworth, 73 Cal. 452, 455, 15 Pac. 82, 2 Am. St. Rep. 823; Code Civ. Proc. § 22.

The point that the court in the divorce action did not obtain jurisdiction over the defendant by publication of summons is not well taken.

The cases cited by respondent to the point that the order of publication must be made with reasonable promptness after the affidavit for publication (People v. Huber, 20 Cal. 81; Forbes v. Hyde, 31 Cal. 342; and Cohn v. Kember, 47 Cal. 144) have no application.

[3] Respondent also claims that the divorce decree was invalid because of the fact that the name of the plaintiff's husband as stated in the marriage license was Tychof B. Hurt, but the plaintiff testified that her husband was always known to her and all others by the name of Theodore. It is consequently proper to sue him by that name. The trial court was also of that view.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; LENNON, J.; WASTE, J.; SHURTLEFF, J.; LAWLOR, J.; SLOANE, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 112

MEEKER v. CROSS. (Civ. 3961.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Oct. 27, 1922. Rehearing Denied Nov. 21, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 26, 1922.)

1. Fraud ⟸13(2)—False representation must be believed to be untrue.

Under Civ. Code, § 1572, subd. 1, defining actionable fraud, a false representation, though accompanied by an intent to deceive, is not alone sufficient to constitute fraud, but it is essential that it also appear that the party making the representation did not at the time believe it to be true.

2. Corporations ⟸121(5)—Evidence held insufficient to support finding corporation's president knew his statement as to value of stock was untrue.

In an action to rescind a sale of corporate stock for fraud, evidence that the seller was the president of the corporation but that he was not the active manager thereof, and relied on a statement prepared by certified accountant showing the corporation to have a surplus held insufficient to support a finding that he knew his statement the stock was worth par was not true.

3. Corporations ⟸121(5)—Evidence held insufficient to sustain finding representation as to value of stock was unwarranted by information.

In an action to rescind a purchase of corporate stock, evidence that the seller in making a statement the stock was worth par relied upon a statement prepared by a certified public accountant which showed a surplus, and thereafter himself purchased treasury stock of the company at par, held insufficient to sustain a finding that he made the statement as to value as a positive assertion, in a manner not warranted by his information, which would have been actionable fraud under Civ. Code, § 1572, subd. 2.

4. Corporations ⟸116—Mere representations as to value of stock is not fraudulent.

Mere statement by the seller that the corporate stock sold was worth $100 per share, made to one with whom no confidential relations existed, must be deemed merely the opinion of the seller, on which the buyer had no right to rely, so that it was not actionable fraud.

On Application for Rehearing.

5. Appeal and error ⟸878(3)—Exclusion of plaintiff's evidence cannot be reviewed on defendant's appeal.

Alleged error in striking out testimony on behalf of plaintiff cannot be reviewed on an appeal by defendant, against whom the judgment was rendered, in the absence of an appeal by plaintiff, who was the party aggrieved thereby.

6. Appeal and error ⊂⊃837(12)—Plaintiff's evidence, erroneously excluded, cannot be considered in determining sufficiency to sustain judgment for plaintiff.

Evidence offered by plaintiff and stricken from the record on motion of defendant cannot be considered on defendant's appeal from a judgment against him as evidence in support of finding on which the judgment was rendered.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by L. M. Meeker against George E. Cross. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Thos. C. Ridgway, of Los Angeles (Jesse A. Gyger, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Jeff P. Chandler and Howard Wright, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment rescinding a sale of 100 shares of the corporate stock of the Puente Mercantile Company, made by him to plaintiff on February 7, 1920.

As alleged in the complaint, the court among other facts, found: (a) That on the 7th day of February 1920, the defendant was, and for some 10 years had been, president of said Puente Mercantile Company, (b) that defendant as such officer had full and complete charge of the business operations of the company, and was entirely familiar with the extent of its indebtedness and the business which it had been conducting and which it was then transacting, and with the extent of the profit which it was then deriving in the carrying on of the business, (c) that, at the time that plaintiff purchased from defendant the 100 shares of the capital stock of the Puente Mercantile Company, defendant falsely and fraudulently represented to plaintiff that said 100 shares of the capital stock of the Puente Mercantile Company were of the value of at least $100 per share; (d) that said statement and representation was false and fraudulent, and (e) was known to said defendant to be so at the time it was made; (f) that said statement and representation was made by the defendant to the plaintiff with the intent to deceive and defraud plaintiff; (g) that plaintiff, believing the representation to be true and relying thereon, purchased the stock; (h) that said statement and representation so made by the defendant to the plaintiff, as above stated, was a positive assertion, made in a manner not warranted by the information of the defendant making it, and that said statement and representation was untrue. As made, these findings bring the case within section 1572 of the Civil Code which defines actual fraud as consisting—

"in any of the following acts, committed by a party to the contract, * * * with intent to deceive another party thereto, or to induce him to enter into the contract:

"1. The suggestion, as to a fact, of that which is not true, by one who does not believe it to be true;

"2. The positive assertion, in a manner not warranted by the information of the person making it, of that which is not true, though he believes it to be true."

While conceding that defendant was and, as found by the court, had been president of the company for 10 years, and represented to plaintiff that the stock was worth $100 per share, appellant challenges the sufficiency of the evidence to support these findings in all other respects.

It appears from the record that defendant was a stockholder and president of the First National Bank of Puente, a stockholder of the Puente Savings Bank, and stockholder and president of the Puente Mercantile Company, all of which were located and conducted business in Puente, Cal. Plaintiff, being desirous of obtaining a controlling interest in the two banks, entered into negotiations with defendant for the purchase of his stock therein, as a result of which he, on February 7, 1920, purchased from defendant 125 shares of the First National Bank at $200 per share, and 109 shares of the stock of the Puente Savings Bank at $150 per share, and on the same day purchased 100 shares of the capital stock of the Puente Mercantile Company for the price of $100 per share. In payment therefor he gave to defendant his check for $43,350, being full cash payment for the bank stock, and $2,000 on account of the purchase price of the Mercantile Company stock, for the balance of the purchase price of which he gave to defendant his note for $8,000 secured by the 100 shares of the Puente Mercantile Company. The only testimony touching the representations made by defendant to plaintiff as to the value of the mercantile stock is that in which plaintiff testifies that—"in a conversation which I had with Mr. Cross and which I think took place in the office of the Puente Mercantile Company at Puente, Mr. Cross said that he could use some more money and would like to sell me an interest in the mercantile company and would like to sell me his home in Puente, as he was going out of the banking business. * * * I asked him about the mercantile company stock. He said it was worth $100 a share. Mr. Cross took me up and showed me his home, and I looked it over and I told him I would not be interested in buying the home—went back and talked about the mercantile company stock, and I decided to buy $10,000 worth."

And, further, that he believed the representations to be true and relied thereon. On the date of the purchase defendant executed a document as follows:

"I, George E. Cross, of Puente, California, having this day sold to L. M. Meeker, of El Monte, California, 125 shares of the First National Bank of Puente, 109 shares of the Puente Savings Banks, and 100 shares of the Puente Mercantile Company, and the good will accompanying same, for valuable considerations, do hereby agree to assist L. M. Meeker in procuring additional bank stock and agree to give all the good will and support possible to him and the banks in which he may be interested in Puente. It is further agreed that I will not become interested in, directly or indirectly, any other bank in Puente for five years without the written consent of L. M. Meeker."

It further appears that while defendant was president of the mercantile company and was in its place of business for a few minutes each day, he was not actively engaged in the conduct thereof, which was in charge of W. E. Newton, as manager in the conduct and management of the business. On February 11th W E. Newton was taken ill, and Mr. Guy V Newton, who was vice president, took charge of the business as manager It was the custom of the company from time to time to have Arthur Loomis, a certified public accountant, examine the books, and his report of the condition of the business, made on February 14, 1919, for the preceding year of 1918, showed a surplus above capital existing on December 31, 1918, of upwards of $7,000. On March 10 1920, he completed an audit of the books for the preceding year of 1919, an inventory of which was furnished by W. E. Newton as general manager of the company, and with which defendant is shown to have had no connection and given no information. From this report it appeared the company had outstanding 499 shares of capital stock, the par value of which was $100 per share, with a surplus on December 31, 1919, of upwards of $7,700, and that the company on June 19, 1919, had paid a dividend of $6,250 on its capital stock. That after the making of this report and subsequent to the time when plaintiff purchased his stock, Guy V Newton, then vice president and acting manager of the corporation, to whom the corporation was indebted for money loaned to it in the sum of $5,000, purchased from the corporation 50 shares of its treasury stock at par, and in March, 1920, being subsequent to the time of plaintiff's purchase of stock from defendant, the latter, to whom the corporation was indebted in the sum of $4,000 for money loaned to it, purchased at par 40 shares of treasury stock from said corporation. Both Newton and defendant testified that they thought the stock was worth par. Upon the report made by the accountant who audited the books, the company made an income tax return for the year 1919, showing a taxable income of $7,249, which return was made prior to March 15, 1920, and signed by Guy V. Newton as treasurer of the company, who testified that at the time he believed the corporation had earned a profit for the year 1919; and in the same month, to wit, March, 1920, Newton as treasurer made a report to the state board of equalization showing a gross business done during the year 1919 of about $300,000, with a surplus of assets of $6,396. Later in July or August, 1920, Guy V Newton, as acting manager of the corporation, began an investigation of the affairs thereof, as a result of which he came to the conclusion that the value of the stock at that time was some $50 per share, and so reported to both plaintiff and defendant. Notwithstanding such information, which Mr. Newton gave to plaintiff and which the court found that plaintiff believed, he took no action in the matter, and a little later an accountant other than Loomis, namely, one Robert F. Mackie, was employed to audit the books, and an inventory of the assets was had as of date September 30, 1920, as a result of which it was discovered that errors had been made during preceding years in bookkeeping, and in the inventory upon which the report of Loomis had been based, and that the capital stock of the company on January 1, 1920, was not worth in excess of $50 per share, and, due to losses made during the year 1920, of less value on September 30th. Thereafter, upon the information so disclosed by this last report of the accountant, and on November 3, 1920, plaintiff caused to be served upon defendant a notice of rescission of the sale for fraud, and demanded a cancellation of the note so given as part of the purchase price and the repayment of the $2,000 in cash made thereon, and at the same time offered to surrender the stock so purchased, followed by this action for a rescission.

[1, 2] Under subdivision 1 of section 1572, Civil Code, a false representation, though accompanied by an intent to deceive, is not of itself sufficient to constitute actionable fraud. It is essential that it be made to appear that the party making the false representation did not at the time believe it to be true. Conceding, as heretofore stated, that the representation as to the value of the stock so made by defendant to plaintiff was untrue, the evidence disclosed by the record is, in our opinion, insufficient to warrant the finding that the representation was known by defendant to be false and untrue at the time when made. Conceding, as claimed by respondent, that defendant was one of the largest stockholders of the company and had for 10 years occupied the position of a director and president thereof, that it was his custom to visit its place of business wherein he spent a few minutes each day and was by other directors consulted upon matters of importance affecting the interests of the company, and that it was a heavy borrower from the bank of which defendant was president, such facts, considered alone (and they are all to which counsel for plaintiff directs our attention in support of the finding) constitute no grounds upon which to impute to defendant knowledge of the financial condition of the business of the company, or cause him to believe that the value of the stock was other than as he represented it. On the contrary, most potent evidence of defendant's good faith in the transaction is furnished by uncontradicted testimony that both he and Guy V. Newton, then manager of the company, shortly after the sale to plaintiff, purchased from the corporation treasury stock, which they considered worth par, and for which they paid $100 per share; that, as appears from a report made by an expert accountant employed by the company, it had made upwards of $7,000 during the year 1918, and had, on June 19, 1919, paid a dividend of $6,250 on its capital stock; that covering such period its treasurer had made return of an income statement to the government showing earnings for the year 1919 to have been $7,249, and made a similar report to the board of equalization of the state.

Defendant's position as president was, as appears from the record, largely that of a figurehead. He took no part in the direct conduct of the business, which was in charge of a manager, with subordinate employees, and as such president he was warranted in basing his belief as to the value of the stock upon information afforded by the statements and reports of such subordinates and expert accountant. The case presented is quite similar to the facts involved in that of Nash, Trustee, v. Rosesteel, 7 Cal. App. 504, 94 Pac. 850, where it was sought to recover damages for a fraudulent representation made by the president of a corporation in a sale of his stock. There the representation was that a dividend of 6 per cent. had been declared and paid by the company to its stockholders covering the period from July 1, 1901, to January 1, 1902. Relying upon this representation, the plaintiff therein purchased the stock. Later it was learned that while the corporation had paid the dividend, it was not paid out of its earnings or surplus, by reason of which fact the action of the board of directors, although based upon an inventory and balance sheet furnished by those intrusted with the preparation of the same, was illegal. In that case this court said:

"Conceding that the books of the company and this inventory exhibited an erroneous condition of the business, it is not, and, indeed, under the evidence, could not, be claimed that either the defendant or other member of the board with whom he acted had any knowledge thereof until nearly six months thereafter."

And further, as bearing upon the question now under consideration, it was said:

"Neither actual knowledge of the alleged erroneous inventory nor an intent to deceive is claimed. but appellant contends that both knowledge and intent must be imputed to him [defendant] because of the fact that he was a director and as president exercised a general supervision over the affairs of the company. We cannot assent to this contention. On the contrary, defendant as president and his co-directors were justified in relying upon subordinates and employees for data upon which to base their corporate action in declaring the dividend, and were justified, in the absence of anything constituting gross negligence, in accepting and acting upon their reports, which fully warranted defendant in making the representation"—in support of which several cases are cited.

This statement of law was quoted with approval in Smeland v. Renwick et al. (Cal. App.) 196 Pac. 283. So, in the instant case, defendant, from information touching the condition of the company, was warranted in believing that the representation which he made to plaintiff was at that time true.

[3] Neither, in our opinion, is the evidence sufficient to justify the finding made by the court that the representation made by defendant was a "positive assertion made in a manner not warranted by the information of the defendant making it," which, if sustained by the evidence, would bring the case within the second subdivision of section 1572, Civil Code, which declares actual fraud to consist of "the positive assertion, in a manner not warranted by the information of the person making it, of that which is not true, though he believes it to be true." What we have heretofore said is likewise applicable to this phase of the case. While the representation was concededly untrue, nevertheless the information which the defendant had with reference to the condition of the company and upon which he based the representation, justified him in believing it to be true and was warranted by the information which he had upon the subject.

[4] Moreover, the representation was a mere statement of value, namely: "That the stock was worth $100 per share." It stands naked and alone, and as such must be deemed merely the opinion of Cross as to the value of the property which he was offering for sale to one with whom no confidential relation existed, but who was dealing with him at arm's length. The general rule is that a bare and naked statement as to the value of property, in the absence of confidential relations between the parties, is deemed the opinion of the party making the representation, and upon which the purchaser thereof has no right to rely, but acts upon his own judgment. Apparent exceptions found are due to statements of extrinsic facts affecting the value and with which the false representation is made or upon which it is based. Winkler v. Jerrue, 20 Cal. App. 555, 129 Pac. 804; Ellis v. Andrews, 56 N. Y. 83, 15 Am. Rep. 379; Shumaker v. Mather, 133 N. Y. 590, 30 N. E. 755; Union National Bank v. Hunt, 7 Mo. App. 42; Id., 76 Mo. 439. Quoting from the syllabus in Gustafson v. Rustemeyer, 70 Conn. 125, 39 Atl. 104, 39 L. R. A. 644, 66 Am. St. Rep. 92, it is said:

"The mere naked assertion of the value of property by a vendor to a purchaser during negotiations for a sale, though consciously untrue and relied upon by the purchaser to his hurt, does not, in the absence of special circumstances, constitute an actionable deceit."

In the instant case there was no representation of extrinsic facts or special circumstances affecting the value of the stock.

We are forced to the conclusion that the mere naked statement made by defendant to plaintiff that the stock was worth $100 per share, cannot be accepted otherwise than as an opinion in the nature of trade talk, and as such plaintiff was not justified in relying thereon.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

On Application for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. [5, 6] Rehearing denied. Conceding the ruling of the trial court upon defendant's motion in striking out testimony of plaintiff, which constituted evidence of extrinsic facts and special circumstances affecting the value of the stock, to have been erroneous, as claimed by respondent, such error, in the absence of an appeal by plaintiff, who was the party aggrieved thereby, cannot be reviewed on an appeal by defendant, against whom the judgment was rendered. Neither, since it was stricken from the record, can we consider the testimony as evidence in support of the finding upon which the judgment is based.

---

59 Cal. App. 547

PEOPLE v. STUDER. (Cr. 903; Cr. 2522.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Nov. 2, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 28, 1922.)

1. Homicide ⟸250—Evidence held to sustain conviction of manslaughter in altercation causing death from hemorrhage.

Evidence that defendant had shaken his aged mother and forcibly ejected her from the house, and expert testimony that a hemorrhage of the brain, from which she died that evening, might have been caused thereby, held sufficient to sustain a conviction of manslaughter.

2. Criminal law ⟸364(6)—Quarrels between defendant and brother held not res gestæ of later attack on mother.

In a prosecution for homicide by an assault on defendant's mother, which resulted in her death from cerebral hemorrhage, evidence of quarrels by defendant with his brother and with a neighbor at their home several hours before the difficulty with defendant's mother, which were not shown to have been in the presence of the mother or connected with the subsequent attack on her, was not admissible as part of the res gestæ.

3. Criminal law ⟸1169(12) — Admission of evidence as to previous quarrels with others held prejudicial in close case.

Where the only evidence to sustain conviction was that of two women, who testified they had seen defendant assaulting his mother, and defendant gave a reasonable explanation for acts which might have appeared as assault, so that the case against him was not of that clearly strong character which reduces the comparative importance of errors in the admissibility of evidence, it was prejudicial error to admit evidence of previous quarrels on the same day between defendant and his brother.

On Hearing in Supreme Court.

4. Homicide ⟸58—Breach of the peace causing death from hemorrhage of mother of parties may be manslaughter.

A disturbance of the peace by violent quarrels between two brothers, during which defendant ejected his mother from the house, which precipitated as a natural and probable consequence a hemorrhage in the brain of the mother, causing her death, is sufficient to authorize a conviction for manslaughter, though it would not be sufficient if the death were that of a mere bystander.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Russ Avery, Judge.

Joseph Studer was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. Reversed.

Wm. T. Aggeler, Public Defender, and Frederic H. Vercoe, Chief Deputy Public Defender, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

CONREY, P. J. The defendant was charged with the crime of murder, and convicted of the crime of manslaughter. He appeals from the judgment of imprisonment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant does not claim that the evidence is legally insufficient to sustain the verdict of the jury. But he claims that it is barely sufficient, and that errors occurred which seriously prejudiced him in relation to his right to a fair trial.

[1] On September 25, 1921, appellant was living at 514 South Concord street, in the city of Los Angeles, which his brother John and their mother, Elizabeth Studer. She was 86 years old and for some years had been suffering from chronic nephritis, commonly known as Bright's disease. She was also suffering from an enlarged left ventricle of the heart, accompanied by arteriosclerosis and high blood pressure. The evidence received by the court described certain conduct of appellant on the day mentioned, culminating at a point where, according to one witness, Mrs. Studer was pushed out of the house by appellant. She then walked toward the house of a neighbor, Mrs. Birch, who lived in the second house north of the Studer residence. Mrs. Studer was assisted into this house by Mrs. Waddell, who lived next north of the Studer house, and by Mrs. Henderson, who lived across the street. There she sat in a chair for about half an hour, and then became unconscious. During that half hour she talked naturally, but complained of suffering some pain. Shortly after 6 o'clock in the evening, which was two hours or a little more after her arrival at the Birch house, Mrs. Studer was taken to a hospital, where she died that night. The evidence shows, and the fact is not contested, that her death was directly caused by a hemorrhage in the fourth ventricle of the brain.

The only testimony of eyewitnesses claiming to have observed any acts of violence of appellant toward Mrs. Studer was given by Mrs. Henderson and by a 13 year old girl named Daisy Sherbondy. The back porch of the Henderson house is located about 150 feet from the front door of the Studer house, and there are no intervening obstacles to the view. According to the testimony of Mrs. Henderson, soon after 3 o'clock on the afternoon of Sunday, September 25, 1921, she heard loud talking by male voices, and looked through the screen of her porch and across toward the Studer house. She saw John Studer on the street opposite the Waddell house, Mrs. Studer on her front porch, and Joseph directly behind her. John walked up the street northward, Joseph backed into the house, Mrs. Studer walked in, and closed and latched the screen door. "She stood right in front of the screen, and he directly in front of her, and he shook her this way and this way (indicating), and then he pitched her to the side—that is, this way (indicating); pitched her over that way." He had hold of her apparently by the arms. He kicked the door shut. About two minutes later Mrs. Henderson started across the street, and at that time saw Mrs. Studer on the lawn near her house. Mrs. Waddell also came out from her own house, and the two helped Mrs. Studer walk up the street to the Birch house, where Mrs. Birch came out and took the place of Mrs. Henderson.

Daisy Sherbondy lived in the third house south of the Studer house. Her testimony is that, at some time after 3 o'clock, on the same afternoon heretofore mentioned, she went to visit a friend at a house located at the rear of her home and facing on Bernal avenue. Her attention was attracted by loud talking, and she walked across lots a distance of about 103 feet to a gate at the back of the Studer lot, and stood at a point where she could see the steps at the rear of the Studer house, where there was a back porch with a screen door, from which there were steps leading down to the yard. She saw Joseph Studer open the door with his foot. His mother was standing beside him. His left arm extended back of her, and his right hand was on her right arm. He then pushed her, and she fell on the steps. "Q. Now, did you hear Joseph Studer say anything as he stood in the doorway there? A. I think he said, 'Beat it.'" The witness then turned and ran home; Mrs. Studer being still on the steps.

Taking the testimony of these two witnesses together, and assuming its truth, it is reasonably probable that the incident described by Miss Sherbondy immediately followed the incident at the front door as described by Mrs. Henderson, and that immediately following these two transactions, Mrs. Studer walked around toward the front of the house, where she was assisted to the Birch house, as before described.

There is evidence legally sufficient to prove that the actions of the defendant were the cause of the death of his mother. For instance, Dr. Louis Weber, who qualified as a specialist on diseases of the brain and nervous diseases, answered in response to a hypothetical question that the acts of the defendant (being substantially those to which we have referred), together with the attendant circumstances of excitement and commotion, also assumed in the question, superinduced the hemorrhage whereby the death was caused. We do not overlook the fact that there were other and different expert opinions about this matter; but that does not concern us at this time, since it is at least made clear that there is a chain of evidence here which is sufficient to sustain the verdict.

Appellant claims that the court committed certain errors in the reception of evidence. Mrs. Waddell testified that during the morning of said day she saw Mrs. Studer on Mrs. Studer's front porch and around her premises; that at about noon she heard loud talking and swearing at the Studer house; that Joseph was "hollering after his brother John," using such phrases as "Jesus Christ," "God damn it to hell," "To hell with your church." The witness testified that at about the same time she heard sounds from the Studer house, such as sounds of dishes being broken. At about a quarter past 12, and after the witness heard the said loud talking, John Studer went up the street. The sounds as of objects being thrown in the house did not occur until after John left. Mr. Louis Waddell testified to some of these same facts about what occurred at noon. He also testified that at about noon, while he was standing on a ladder in his own yard, appellant came out into the Studer back yard and there called witness a "God damn coward," and dared him to come down and fight. The evidence shows that John Studer had returned home before 3 o'clock. Mrs. Waddell testified that at some time between 2 and 3 o'clock she again heard loud talking over there. The voices were both John's and Joseph's, who talked like they were quarreling. Again John left the house and went up the street. There is no evidence that he came back again during that day.

Appellant contends that all of this testimony, relating to what occurred between John and Joseph, and between Joseph and Mr. Waddell, should have been excluded, and that the court erred in overruling his objections thereto. He claims that there is no evidence that the decedent was present while the loud talking or quarreling and noises described were going on, or that the defendant swore at or quarreled with his mother. Although the witness did not testify to the presence of Mrs. Studer in her house at the precise moment of those occurrences, there is ample evidence that she was there throughout the day.

It must be conceded that there is no testimony that the defendant was swearing at or quarreling with his mother while these things were occurring, or at all. No act or word of his appears to have been directed toward her, other than the acts of shaking her by the shoulders as described by Mrs. Henderson, and the acts described by Miss Sherbondy.

[2, 3] Appellant objected to the testimony concerning the incidents which occurred at noon, and concerning the conduct of appellant toward the witness Louis Waddell. The objection was that, unless the language used by Joseph was addressed to his mother, the evidence was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. This objection should have been sustained. The facts then sought to be proved were not part of the res gestæ of the alleged crime. They merely proved a quarrel between the two brothers, in the house where their mother was, at a time three hours before the alleged acts of violence. In that interval of three hours, so far as the evidence shows, the defendant may have been entirely peaceful and quiet. There is no testimony showing any nervous excitement or disturbance of Mrs. Studer during that time. If the testimony concerning these 12 o'clock incidents had been offered for the avowed purpose of proving that the defendant had a quarrelsome disposition, or that he was a man who used profane language in the presence of women, no doubt the court would have refused to permit such testimony, because the people were not entitled to prove the defendant's temperament or his vocabulary, as evidence of his guilt in the case at bar. However, this result was accomplished, under color of an attempt to treat distinctly separate acts as one continuing act, whereby it was argued that great mental excitement was produced in the deceased by these disturbances in her presence. The case is not at all parallel to those cited by respondent, wherein, as counsel say, a series of "continuous and uninterrupted acts, ending in the complete crime," may be proved. We think that the court erred in admitting said testimony. And we further are of the opinion that the defendant was prejudiced thereby, because the case against him, on the entire record, is not of that clearly strong character which reduces the comparative importance of such errors. People v. Fleming, 166 Cal. 357, 370, 136 Pac. 291.

The defendant denied all of the acts of violence charged against him. He testified that when his mother came in from the front porch she had a "dizzy spell," and walked toward him; that her body was swaying unsteadily, when she caught hold of him; that he carried her to a couch, and ministered to her needs. Dr. E. B. Studer, a son of deceased, and Mrs. Van Vlack, her daughter, testified that Mrs. Studer sometimes had such attacks of dizziness. It thus appears that there was very positively conflicting evidence on the most important question concerning the conduct of the defendant toward his mother. Therefore it well may be that, except that the jurors were prejudiced against him by the irrelevant evidence relating to his conduct earlier in the day, the testimony favorable to the defendant would have had greater weight in their minds.

The court gave to the jury the following instruction:

"Every person is responsible for the natural and probable consequence of his acts. If you are satisfied from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant, Joseph Studer, did create a scene of commotion amounting to a disturbance of the peace, or committed any act of violence upon Elizabeth Studer by laying his hands on her, or that the defendant, Joseph Studer, forced his mother out of doors, and that she suffered a hemorrhage of the brain from which she died, and you are further satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that this scene of excitement or the violence contributed to her death, or that her death was one of the natural and probable consequences of his acts, even though Elizabeth Studer herself contributed to bringing about that hemorrhage by the exertion of walking up a hill or grade, still you should find the defendant, Joseph Studer, guilty of manslaughter. And this is so even if Joseph Studer did not intend to kill Elizabeth Studer, if you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the hemorrhage was brought about or precipitated as a natural and probable consequence of such acts on the part of the defendant, Joseph Studer. The only elements of intent which it is necessary for the prosecution to establish is the intent on the part of the defendant, Joseph Studer, to have maliciously disturbed the peace, and to have committed any unlawful acts of violence upon Elizabeth Studer, if you so find from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that such disturbance of the peace was created and such acts of violence committed by the defendant, Joseph Studer."

Counsel for appellant earnestly contends that the foregoing instruction is erroneous because it directed the jury that a disturbance of the peace by the defendant might be considered by them, even though such disturbance was not directed against the decedent personally, and even though such decedent was not present at the time of such disturbance of the peace; also because the instruction in effect told the jury that if appellant created any disturbance of the peace or committed any act of violence upon the decedent, then if such disturbance alone contributed to Mrs. Studer's death, the jury might find appellant guilty of manslaughter regardless of any act of violence. We are satisfied that under this instruction the defendant could have been found guilty even though he committed no act of violence toward his mother, and notwithstanding the fact that none of the disorderly words used by him were addressed to her. According to the instruction, it is the law that, if a person creates a scene of commotion amounting to a disturbance of the peace, and, through excitement thus induced in the nervous system by a bystander, a hemorrhage is caused in the brain of the bystander, and death results therefrom, and if the jury finds that such death was a natural and probable consequence of such disturbance of the peace in the presence of the deceased, then the author of such disturbance may be convicted of manslaughter. Following the only decision that we have been able to find which seems to have determined this question, we have reached the conclusion that the instruction as given is a correct statement of the law. In re Heigho, 18 Idaho, 566, 110 Pac. 1029, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 877, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 138, and note. There is such a thing as involuntary manslaughter resulting from the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to felony; the killing being without malice. Pen. Code, § 192. Such an act may amount to manslaughter, although the defendant did not intend to kill any person. But the fact that the quoted instruction is without fault as a statement of the law only further emphasizes the importance of those errors in reception of evidence, to which we have referred.

There are numerous other assignments of error in the argument for appellant. These relate to claimed errors in rulings on evidence, to asserted misconduct of the district attorney, to instructions given, and to refusal of the court to give instructions requested by the defendant. We deem it unnecessary to determine or discuss these points at this time.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. [4] The petition for a rehearing is denied. The opinion contains this passage:

"According to the instruction, it is the law that, if a person creates a scene or commotion amounting to a disturbance of the peace, and, through excitement thus induced in the nervous system of a bystander, a hemorrhage is caused in the brain of the bystander, and death results therefrom, and, if the jury finds that such death was a natural and probable consequence of such disturbance of the peace in the presence of the deceased, then the author of such disturbance may be convicted of manslaughter."

We withhold our approval of this passage so far as it holds that the death of a bystander is all that is necessary to constitute the crime of manslaughter under the circumstances related. It was not a mere bystander who was the victim of the circumstances, and that question is not involved in the case.

SHAW, C. J., and WASTE, LENNON, LAWLOR, SLOANE, and WARD, JJ., concur.

---

59 Cal. App. 507

BARBERICH et al. v. POOSHICHIAN et al.

(Civ. 4302.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District Division 2, California. Oct. 27, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 26, 1922.)

1. Vendor and purchaser ⟸214(6)—Mere assignment of rights under executory contract casts no personal liability on assignee.

Generally the mere assignment of rights under an executory land sale contract does not cast on assignee any of the personal liabilities imposed by the contract on assignor.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⟸214(6)—Assignee of purchaser liable for breach of assignor's obligations assumed.

As respects damages caused by waste on property sold under an executory contract to defendants' assignor, where defendants assumed contract of the original purchaser, they were liable for breach of its obligations because of privity of contract.

3. Vendor and purchaser ⟸214(6)—Assignee of purchaser liable for tearing down fences and outbuildings irrespective of obligation to perform assignor's contract.

Where land was sold under an executory contract in which it was provided that purchaser should not commit nor suffer to be committed any waste or damages on the premises, assignees of purchaser were liable for damage caused by tearing down fences and outbuildings, irrespective of whether they had obligated themselves to perform the conditions of the contract binding on the assignor.

4. Vendor and purchaser ⊜214(6)—Assignee of purchaser under executory contract chargeable with destruction of personal property.

Where land was sold under an executory contract for a named sum payable in installments, which sum also included the purchase price of certain personal property, such as horses, cows, etc., on the property, in vendor's action for forfeiture of the contract and for damages for destruction of the personal property, where practically all the personal property included in the contract came into possession of assignees of purchaser, the destruction was chargeable to assignees, although it was accomplished by others holding under them.

5. Action ⊜48(1)—Action for forfeiture of land contract and conversion of personal property properly joined.

An action for forfeiture of an executory land contract may be joined with an action for damages for conversion of personal property where they both arose out of the same transaction; Code Civ. Proc. § 427, providing for uniting causes of action in the same complaint arising out of the same transaction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; J. E. Wooley, Judge.

Action by George Barberich and another against Harry Pooshichian and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants Arsen and Ada Yeretzian appeal. Affirmed.

Arsen Yeretzian, of Fresno, for appellants.
Frank Kauke, of Fresno, for respondents.

LANGDON, P. J. This appeal is taken by the defendants Arsen and Ada Yeretzian from a judgment against them in an action to have a certain contract for the purchase and sale of real property in the county of Fresno, state of California, declared forfeited and to recover damages alleged to have been caused because of waste committed upon said property by the said defendants, while they were occupying the same under a contract to purchase.

In April, 1920, the plaintiffs and the defendant Pooshichian entered into a contract with relation to said land, by which plaintiffs were to sell and said defendant was to buy the same. Said defendant paid $1,500 to plaintiffs as the first payment upon the property. The purchase price was to be $6,600, payable in installments, and this sum also included the purchase price of certain personal property, such as horses, cows, chickens, and farming implements upon the property. The agreement also contained a provision that the taxes upon the land were to be paid by the purchaser, and that the purchaser was to care for the premises "in the best farmlike manner and keep and maintain all of said personal property thereon in good order and condition and care and feed all the live stock thereon in the best farmlike manner." There was also a provision that the purchaser should not commit nor suffer to be committed any waste or damage to the premises, and that, in the event the purchaser should fail to comply with the terms and agreements on his part to be kept and performed, the sellers might, at their option, declare the agreement canceled, annulled, and at an end and re-enter and take possession of the property, and that in that event all sums theretofore paid by purchasers under the contract should be forfeited and held and retained by the sellers as a reasonable rental for the use and occupation of the premises.

The breach relied upon by the plaintiffs as working a forfeiture of this contract was the failure to pay taxes for one year and the failure to keep the premises free from noxious weeds and grasses and to properly cultivate the same and properly care for the grapevines and fruit trees planted thereon. The trial court gave judgment against the defendants jointly, canceling the contract, decreeing that all moneys paid under said contract be retained by plaintiffs as and for rental for the use and occupation of the premises, and that the plaintiffs recover $1,000 damages for waste and damage done to the property during the time they were in possession of same, and $450, the value of certain chickens, hogs, cows, and horses, sold and disposed of by defendants, which were a part of the personal property included in the contract. The judgment also bound the defendants to return the balance of the personal property included in the contract or pay the reasonable value thereof, which was recited in said judgment.

As stated the original vendee, Pooshichian, has not appealed from the judgment against him, but this appeal is taken by defendants Arsen and Ada Yeretzian, to whom Pooshichian assigned his rights under this contract, and who took possession of the land. The other defendants held the land under the Yeretzians by virtue of contracts with them, which do not concern us here.

The plaintiffs' right to the remedy they sought is settled in this state, after very careful consideration, by the case of Glock v. Howard & Wilson Colony Co., 123 Cal. 1, 55 Pac. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17.

[1] However, the appellants contend that, as assignees of the vendee, they were not obligated to perform the obligations cast upon the original vendee by the contract, and therefore may not be charged with damages for a breach of such obligations. The general rule is that the mere assignment of rights under an executory contract does not cast upon the assignee any of the personal liabilities imposed by the contract upon the assignor. 3 Cal. Jur. 281, § 33; Lisenby v. Newton, 120 Cal. 571, 52 Pac. 813, 65 Am. St.

Rep. 203; Wilson v. Beazley, 186 Cal. 437, 199 Pac. 772. But the rule is, of course, otherwise in a case where the assignee obligates himself to perform the covenants binding upon his assignor.

[2] There was no evidence offered upon this question in the instant case, but it is alleged in the complaint:

That Pooshichian agreed to keep the premises free and clear of all noxious weeds and grasses; "that prior to the commencement of this action certain of the rights and interests which were acquired by the said defendant Harry Pooshichian under said contract were by mesne transfers and conveyances conveyed and assigned to the defendants Emma Pooshichian, Arsen Yeretzian, Ada Yeretzian, K. Bedrosian, Arousiak Bedrosian, and M. Mkhalian, and that each * * * of said defendants has assumed and promised, undertaken, and agreed to keep, observe, and comply with each and all of the terms and conditions in said contract contained on the part of the original vendee therein named. * * *"

These allegations were not denied by said defendants, and the trial court found that they were true. Appellants are liable, therefore, for a breach of these obligations because of the privity of contract existing between the parties. And upon this theory recovery for the damage caused by noxious weeds and grasses could be had against appellants.

[3] As to the tearing down of the fences and outbuildings, appellants would be liable for the damage caused thereby irrespective of whether or not they had obligated themselves to perform the conditions of the contract binding upon their assignor. As stated in the case of Wilson v. Beazley, supra, the assignee may be charged with acts causing damage to property during the time of his occupancy; and, of course, for the conversion of the personal property the plaintiffs are entitled to recover.

[4] The destruction or disposition of the personal property, which was accomplished by the defendants Bedrosian and Mkhalian, is chargeable to the appellants because said defendants were holding under the appellants, and their possession was appellants' possession in so far as these plaintiffs are concerned. According to the testimony and the findings of the court, all of the personal property included in the contract, except some chickens, came into the possession of the appellants.

[5] Appellants argued in the trial court that an action for forfeiture of a contract may not be combined with an action for damages for conversion of personal property. We are of the opinion that the two causes of action may be joined under the circumstances disclosed by the complaint in the present case, because they both arose out of the same transaction. Our Code provides (section 427, Code Civ. Proc.) that a plaintiff may unite several causes of action in the same complaint where they are all claims arising out of the same transaction. This provision includes causes of action legal and equitable, ex contractu and ex delicto, as well as those ex delicto though based on contract. 21 R. C. L. § 34, p. 469.

We find no errors in the record before us which would warrant a reversal of the judgment against the appellants, and the same is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 585

OHANESIAN v. GALENTE et al.
(Civ. 3767.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Nov. 9, 1922.)

1. Brokers ⟸65(1)—Where broker fraudulently induced vendor to sell land, note for commission was without consideration.

Where broker induced vendor to sell his land by fraudulent representation that purchaser's mortgage to vendor would be a first mortgage, the vendor's note to broker for the commission was without consideration.

2. Brokers ⟸38(4)—Evidence insufficient to authorize recovery against broker for fraud in sale of plaintiff's land.

Where broker induced vendor to sell land by fraudulent representations that purchaser's mortgage to vendor for the purchase price would be a first mortgage on the land, but the mortgage was in fact a second mortgage, the vendor was not entitled to damages for fraud, in the absence of a showing that the property in foreclosure sale would not produce a sum sufficient to pay the entire indebtedness including both mortgages.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action by J. M. Ohanesian against Joe Galente and another, in which the defendants brought a cross-action against plaintiff. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed in part, and reversed in part.

E. A. Bagby, of Visalia, for appellant.

Bradley & Bradley, of Visalia, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. Action to recover money due on a promissory note. Cross-action to recover damages suffered through wrongful acts of the plaintiff, connected with the same transaction in which the note was made. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

Respondents were the owners of a tract of land, subject to a $2,000 mortgage held by the Producers' Savings Bank. Respondents employed appellant to sell this land for them to one Kalfas, for the sum of $5,500, of which $2,000 was to be used to pay the existing mortgage debt, and the remainder to be payable in several installments secured by mortgage on the land conveyed by defendants to Kalfas. The deed to Kalfas, and the $3,500 mortgage by Kalfas to respondents, were placed in escrow. At or about the same time Kalfas arranged to borrow $2,000 from the Visalia Savings Bank & Trust Company, to be secured by first mortgage on the same property. This mortgage also was placed in escrow. The several documents were recorded in the following order: First, the deed to Kalfas; next, the $2,000 mortgage to the savings bank; and then the mortgage to respondents. Concurrently with these proceedings, the Producers' Savings Bank note was paid off, and that mortgage released.

By their answer, respondents alleged that there was no consideration for their note to appellant. As a further defense, they alleged that the note was procured from them by appellant by means of fraud and false representations, and as an alleged commission for the sale of certain real property belonging to respondents; that the fraudulent representations made by appellant to respondents were in negotiating a sale of said property to Kalfas and by representing to respondents that they were to receive a first mortgage for the unpaid part of the purchase price, whereas the mortgage executed to respondents was, unknown to them, a second mortgage, respondents being unable to read and not understanding the transaction or said papers; that the representations so made were by appellant known to be false and fraudulent and were made by him with intent to deceive and defraud respondents.

For a "further answer and cross-complaint," respondents set out the fact that the sale to Kalfas was negotiated for them by appellant, and repeated, in substance, the averments of the answer noted above; alleging that, unknown to respondents, the Visalia Savings Bank mortgage was prior to that of respondents, notwithstanding that appellant, their agent represented to them that their mortgage would be a first mortgage. The damages claimed by respondents, as set out in the cross-complaint on which they went to trial, consisted of their loss of $1,500, the value of the growing crop of fruit on the land at the time of the transfer, and the sum of $87 interest paid by respondents on the mortgage to the Visalia Savings Bank.

Respondents alleged that after the execution of said mortgages and deed appellant took possession of the premises and the crop of fruit, and took the profits thereof for his own use, and that in all of said transactions Kalfas was only acting as the agent of the appellant.

After the cause was submitted for decision, the court allowed respondents to file an amended answer and an amended cross-complaint. In these amended pleadings they alleged, and in conformity therewith the court found, that the fruit crop was of the value of about $1,000, and that Kalfas took possession and harvested and sold the crop, and then departed for parts unknown, without paying anything on the mortgage indebtedness; that it then became necessary for respondents to pay off the $2,000 first mortgage, including $87 interest, in order to protect their second mortgage. The amended answer covered certain defects of the original answer, by more directly alleging that appellant, in making the false representations to respondents, knew that they were false, and by further alleging that respondents believed and relied upon appellant's said statements and representations, and without such belief would not have entered into the transaction, and would not have executed their note to appellant. This note, in the principal sum of $300, was for the amount of appellant's commission for his supposed services to respondents in connection with the sale to Kalfas of their said land.

The court found that these several allegations of the amended answer and cross-complaint were true, and that on account of the false and fraudulent representations made by plaintiff and cross-defendant to said defendants and cross-complainants to induce them to enter into said transaction, said defendants and cross-complainants have been damaged in the sum of $1,087; also, that the defendants were not indebted to the plaintiff in any sum whatever; and that plaintiff is not the lawful holder of the said $300 note. The court by its judgment ordered that the plaintiff take nothing, and that the last-mentioned note be canceled; and entered judgment in favor of respondents in the sum of $1,087 and costs.

[1] Directing our attention first to the action on the note given by respondents to appellant, we are of the opinion that the evidence is sufficient to sustain the court's finding that the note was given without any consideration. According to the testimony introduced by respondents, appellant obtained their consent to the transaction by representing to them that they were to receive a first mortgage securing the unpaid balance of the purchase price; he supervised the steps by which the transaction was carried out, and obtained for them only a second mortgage. The whole history of the transaction, as well as the direct testimony of the defendants, shows that except for their belief in the representation that they were receiving a first mortgage, they would not have made any conveyance of their property. Since it does not appear that the bank which received the first mortgage, or Kalfas, the grantee, were parties to this deception, respondents were not in a position to rescind the transaction. They were left in that unfortunate situation by reason of the fact that they were deceived by appellant, who was their agent and upon whom they relied. From these facts it is a fair conclusion that the plaintiff did not render the service for which he was to be paid, and that the note which represents the amount of his supposed commission was given without consideration.

[2] The award of damages to respondents rests upon the finding that Kalfas took possession of the property and of the unharvested fruit crop and sold it, and that thereafter he "departed for parts unknown and has never been heard of since"; and upon the further finding that respondents, in order to protect their mortgage, had to pay off the first mortgage of $2,000, together with accrued interest in the sum of $87. The court apparently set off this $2,000 against the $2,000 which had been used to pay off the former mortgage of $2,000, and then allowed the remaining $87 as damages. But there is neither evidence nor finding establishing the value of the real property. It is found that the fruit crop was of the value of about $1,000. Kalfas had the right to sell the fruit crop and to appropriate the proceeds thereof to his own use. If he should pay off these mortgages, respondents would have received no damage. If he does not pay, and if the property is sold on foreclosure at the suit of respondents, the property at foreclosure sale may produce a sum sufficient to pay the entire indebtedness included in both mortgages. So far as appears from the evidence, it may be that the entire mortgage indebtedness will thus be paid. It follows that there is no evidence to sustain the finding that respondents have been damaged in the sum of $1,087, or at all.

The conclusion last above stated does not conflict with our first conclusion to the effect that the $300 note was given without consideration. For the fraud and deceit of the agent in procuring for respondents a second mortgage under the circumstances herein stated, thereby subjecting them to the necessity of paying the first mortgage, or even an installment of interest thereon, constituted a failure of appellant to perform the service which was to have been the consideration for the note.

That part of the judgment which provides that the plaintiff take nothing in this action and that the defendants recover their costs is affirmed. That part of the judgment which provides that the defendants (cross-complainants) have judgment against the plaintiff (cross-defendant) for the sum of $1,087 is reversed. Appellant shall have his costs of this appeal.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

(59 Cal. App. 564)

MARKUS v. LESTER. (Civ. 3518.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 3, 1922.)

1. Contracts ⟸92—"Entirely without understanding" defined.

In Civ. Code, § 38, providing that a "person entirely without understanding" has no power to contract, the quoted phrase means a want of capacity to understand transactions of the kind involved.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Entirely Without Understanding.]

2. Appeal and error ⟸1010(1)—Rule as to reversing for insufficiency of evidence stated.

Reviewing courts may not reverse a case for insufficiency of the evidence to support findings of fact, save where the evidence is so free from any substantial conflict that the appellate court can declare, as a matter of law, that it is too weak to support the findings.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Joseph J. Markus against J. C. Lester. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Cooper, Collings & Shreve, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

C. P. Johnson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This action is for money had and received. The complaint alleges that on June 14, 1920, defendant received from plaintiff the sum of $800 to and for plaintiff's use. Defendant joined issue on this averment by denying that the money was so received. The court found the issue in favor of defendant, and entered judgment accordingly. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

At the trial plaintiff introduced evidence showing that he and defendant had entered into a conditional sale agreement, in writing, under the terms of which an automobile was delivered by defendant, as the seller, to plaintiff, as the buyer. Eight hundred dollars of the purchase price was made payable upon the execution of the instrument, and the balance was to be paid in certain designated monthly installments. The contract provided that in the event that plaintiff failed to meet any installment when due, defendant, at his option, might retake possession and keep all payments previously made. Having paid defendant the $800 at the time of the execution of the contract, plaintiff now seeks its recovery. The theory upon which it is sought to recover in this form of action is: First, that the contract was a nullity because plaintiff was without sufficient mental capacity to make any valid agreement whatever; and, secondly, that he had the right to and did rescind the contract because of certain alleged false and fraudulent representations claimed to have been made to him by defendant at the time of the sale. Wherefore he contends that, ex æquo et bono, the $800 ought now to be deemed to belong to him, The trial court, in expressly finding that defendant did not receive the $800 to or for plaintiff's use, impliedly found that plaintiff did have sufficient understanding to make a valid contract, and that the sale was not induced by any false or fraudulent representations on defendant's part. Appellant's sole contention is that the evidence is insufficient to support these implied findings.

It would be impracticable for us to analyze and discuss the testimony of each witness. A brief statement of some of the more important facts will suffice to show that there was a substantial conflict in the evidence, which imposed upon the trial court the duty of determining the disputed facts. And no rule is better settled than that on appeal the findings of the trial court on conflicting testimony cannot be reviewed.

Upon the question of his mental competency the testimony of one of his own witnesses, a medical expert, was enough to show that appellant possessed contractual capacity. It appears that appellant, an ex-service man, was gassed in the late war. One of his witnesses, a physician, testified that gassing usually results in a general weakness, a shortness of breath and a pain in the chest on exertion, and possibly a cough, a lack of endurance and a loss of weight, but that it would not affect the mentality, save indirectly by weakening the person's physical condition and his power of resistance. The witness further testified that his examination of plaintiff revealed only a weakened physical condition.

[1] Though appellant's physical weakness may perhaps have made him more readily susceptible to the influence of persuasive arguments than would be the case with the average person, the evidence leaves no room to doubt his mental capacity to enter into this contract. The evidence is abundantly sufficient to show that he was in possession of his faculties, and that he understood the nature of his transaction with defendant. The Civil Code (section 38) provides that "a person entirely without understanding has no power to make a contract of any kind." The phrase "entirely without understanding" means a want of capacity to understand transactions of the kind involved. Jacks v. Estee, 139 Cal. 507, 73 Pac. 247; Ripperdan v. Weldy, 149 Cal. 667, 674, 87 Pac. 276; Jacks v. Deering, 150 Cal. 272, 88 Pac. 909.

Equally without merit is the claim that the evidence shows without substantial conflict that defendant overreached plaintiff through false and fraudulent representations. The automobile in question was a secondhand 1914 Packard. It is claimed that defendant represented it to be a 1915 model; also that he falsely represented it to be in good mechanical condition, and that it would never wear out. Defendant testified that he did not tell plaintiff that the car was a 1915 model. He also testified that the car was in first-class mechanical condition. He denied that he ever told plaintiff that the machine would never wear out. There is nothing inherently improbable in defendant's testimony, and the trial court was warranted in accepting it as true.

Appellant claims that it was falsely represented to him that the car had been owned by a very wealthy man, a Mr. Pillsbury, immediately before coming into defendant's possession. Defendant testified, and it is conceded, that the car originally was owned by Pillsbury. Defendant denied, however that he told plaintiff that the car had belonged to Pillsbury immediately before he obtained its possession.

It next is urged that defendant falsely represented the title to the automobile to be in himself. There is no basis for this claim. Nowhere in appellant's testimony does he say that defendant told him that he (the defendant) owned the car. What appellant did say when on the witness stand was that defendant told him that Pillsbury owned the car just before it came into defendant's garage. But this, as we have seen, the defendant denied. The owner of the car, a man of the name of McKay, had left it with defendant, with instructions to sell it. The sale was made by defendant within the scope of his instructions, and there can be no question as to his authority to pass the title to appellant.

Appellant claims that he returned the car shortly after the sale, and that defendant received and kept it, wherefore it is argued that the consideration for the sale has failed. The sole basis for this claim is that very shortly after the car was delivered to plaintiff it was taken to and left at a repair shop under circumstances which, according to the version given by defendant and his witnesses, were as follows: Plaintiff returned to defendant's place of business with the car, and complained that he had experienced difficulty in starting it. Thereupon defendant, upon being informed by one of his salesmen that plaintiff had "killed his engine" and that he had "jimmied the starter," told the salesmen to accompany plaintiff to an electric repair shop and there have the starter fixed. Accordingly, plaintiff and the salesman, so defendant testified, took the car to the designated shop, where it was left with instructions to fix the starter. There it remained for some time. Finally defendant wrote plaintiff a letter, reminding him that his car was at the repair shop, and telling him that it was ready to be taken away. Plaintiff never called for his car, and when the next monthly installment fell due defaulted in his payment. Under these circumstances, which in view of the trial court's decision in favor of defendant must be accepted as true, appellant cannot be heard to say that the consideration has failed, or that the contract was rescinded by mutual agreement.

[2] Finally, it is urged that the implied finding that the value of the car was $2,000 is not supported by the evidence. We fail to perceive how there could be any finding, express or implied, as to the value of the car. But assuming that the court did impliedly find the value of the car to be $2,000, the testimony of defendant and his witnesses would have warranted such finding. Defendant, who had had years of experience in the business of buying and selling second-hand or used automobiles, and so was well qualified to give evidence as an expert upon such matters, testified unequivocally that in his opinion the reasonable market value of the car was not less that $2,000. In this he was corroborated by other witnesses equally well qualified to speak authoritatively upon such matters. There was no inherent improbability in defendant's testimony, and we are powerless to overthrow the trial court's findings without undermining the fundamental principle that reviewing courts are limited to a consideration of questions of law, and may not reverse a case upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support findings of fact save where the evidence is so free from any substantial conflict that the appellate court can declare, as a matter of law, that it is too weak to support the findings. Without undertaking any further analysis of appellant's arguments, we repeat that we are satisfied, after a careful examination of the record, that the evidence amply justifies the findings.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, J.; CRAIG, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 679

HOBSON et al. v. HUNT et al. (Civ. 2528.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 17, 1922.)

Brokers ⇐53—Broker not entitled to list a person as prospective purchaser where such person's attention not called to the property by broker.

In an agreement to pay broker $5 an acre commission if the broker during the life of the agreement effected a sale or found a purchaser ready, willing, and able to buy at the price fixed, a clause providing that after the termination of the right to sell the owner sold or exchanged the property to or with any party introduced "or whose name in writing has been given the owner, as a prospective purchaser," by the broker, the broker should get the same rate of commission on whatever price was accepted for the property, held not to render the owner liable for such commission on owner's sale after termination of the broker's right to sell, to a person who, with several others, was listed as a prospective purchaser by the broker in a letter to the owner, prior to terminating broker's right to sell, where there was no evidence that such person's attention had ever been called to the property prior to the listing of his name as prospective purchaser.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; Eugene P. McDaniel, Judge.

Action for commission on sale of real estate by Gail Hobson and another, as executrix and executor of the last will of D. W. Hobson, deceased, against A. D. Hunt and another. From judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Butler & Van Dyke, of Sacramento, for appellants.

W. P. Rich and W. H. Carlin, both of Marysville, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. August 6, 1919, the defendants gave D. W. Hobson Company the exclusive right, for 2 months, and thereafter until 10 days' notice in writing of the cancellation thereof, to sell their stock ranch at Browns Valley, together with certain personal property, at the price of $40 an acre, $10,000 of the purchase price to be paid on delivery of deed. The agreement contained the following:

"If the above-described property be sold or exchanged during the life of this agreement, or if the agent during the life of this agreement shall find a purchaser ready, willing, and able to buy the said property at the above price, the owner agrees to pay the agent as a commission $5 per acre of said price, and in event of the said property being sold or exchanged by the owner, after the termination of this right to sell, to or by any party introduced or whose name in writing has been given the owner, as a prospective purchaser, by the agent, the owner agrees to pay the agent, as a commission, the above-mentioned rate of commission on whatever price is accepted for the said property."

J. H. Ware called at the office of the company, the date of the call not appearing from the evidence, and he was shown a ranch near Folsom, but was not interested in it. Ware testified that nothing was said to him about the Hunt ranch on that occasion. Thereafter, on Saturday, the 27th day of September, as indicated by the letter of October 1st, hereinafter referred to, one of the company's salesmen called on Ware and informed him that the company had a ranch of 710 acres at Browns Valley for sale, on which a cash payment of $15,000 would be required. October 1st, the salesman wrote Ware, stating that it was possible that the owner of the Browns Valley ranch, mentioned in the conversation with Ware on Saturday, would accept $10,000 or $11,000 as a first payment, but Ware made no reply to the letter. September 23d the company wrote the defendants, stating the efforts being made to effect a sale, and giving the names of 11 prospective purchasers, including that of Ware. The evidence does not show that Ware's attention had been called to the defendants' ranch prior to September 27th, when the salesman called on him. About October 20th the defendants gave written notice of cancellation of the authorization to sell. November 26th Ware came to an agreement directly with defendants to purchase the ranch for $24,000, of which sum $2,000 was to be paid in cash, and the land was conveyed to him January 2, 1920. The evidence does not show when or by what means Ware was brought in touch with the defendants. Ware testified that at the interview of September 27th the salesman said he would like to take Ware—

"to see a ranch in Browns Valley. He didn't tell me it was the Hunt ranch, but mentioned a ranch up there that he said was $40,000 or $45,000, $15,000 cash to handle it. I told him: 'It doesn't interest me; no use taking up my time or your time to go look. I haven't the $15,000. I wouldn't be interested.' * * * That is as far as his efforts were concerned. It was dropped. * * * It didn't interest me at the figure or at the cash that was required to handle it. * * * I don't remember the letter at all, but, had I received it, it wouldn't have interested me, because I didn't have that amount of money."

Ware further testified that the name Hunt Bros. or the Hunts was never mentioned in connection with the place. D. W. Hobson died prior to the time of the trial. It may be that the plaintiffs experienced difficulty in proving their case by reason of Hobson's death, and the trial court doubtless gave that fact due consideration in weighing the evidence. There being a substantial conflict, the findings of the court are conclusive.

The court found that Ware was not a prospective purchaser of defendants' property at any time prior to the termination of the contract, and that "D. W. Hobson Company did no act nor performed any services which in any way brought about, induced, influenced, or caused said purchase or sale of said property." These findings are fully supported by the evidence. Ware emphatically declined to consider the purchase when the company endeavored to interest him in the land, and when he finally agreed to purchase it he seems not to have been aware that it was the same ranch mentioned by the company's salesman. There is no evidence of bad faith on the part of Ware or the defendants. October 10th the defendants wrote the company, stating that the contract had expired, complaining of the delay in effecting a sale, and requesting an immediate reply. Receiving no reply, the defendants canceled the contract about October 20th.

Neither party has presented any authority directly in point. Respondents rely on the case of Wright & Kimbrough v. Dewees (Cal. App.) 197 Pac. 957. Whether or not that case is controlling here, it cannot be said that Ware was a prospective purchaser of defendants' land at any time during the life of the contract. There is no evidence that his attention had ever been called to the defendants' land prior to the listing of his name as a prospective purchaser by the letter of September 23d. One cannot be made a prospective purchaser by merely calling him such. In the language of counsel for respondents:

"It would scarcely be argued that an agent, obtaining a contract such as that shown in the record in this case, could write to the owner, giving him a list taken from the great register of a county or from a compilation of prominent persons in a community, and then if perchance, months after the contract had expired, the owner should sell to one of those persons, he could be required to pay commissions to such an agent."

The contract must be given a reasonable interpretation. The clause in question was doubtless intended to protect the agent in the event of a sale made after the termination of the contract, to a person whom the agent had interested in the land during the life of the contract to the extent that such person had become a prospective purchaser; that is, one to whom there was at least some probability of making a sale within a reasonable time. To construe the contract otherwise would be to hold that the agent in such a case might give the owner any number of names of persons as prospective purchasers, regardless of whether or not they were such in fact, and then, in the event of a sale to any one of them, claim the commission. It would be highly unreasonable to hold that such was the intention of the parties to the contract. It would tend to make a real estate dealer a procurer of names, rather than a procurer of purchasers.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

59 Cal. App. 520

SHURTLEFF v. MARCUS LAND & INVESTMENT CO. (Civ. 3868.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 27, 1922. Rehearing Denied Nov. 24, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 26, 1922.)

1. Vendor and purchaser ⟸330—"Reasonable market value" is amount owner could obtain at fair sale.

The "reasonable market value" of land as bearing on measure of damages for vendee's breach under Civ. Code, § 3307, is the amount which the owner can obtain for it at a fair sale.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⟸329—Price owner received at subsequent sale after defendant's breach is not conclusive as to fair sale price.

Under Civ. Code, § 3307, as to damages for vendee's breach, the price received by the owner for her land after defendant's breach of its contract to purchase the land is not conclusive evidence of the fair sale price of the land, but the court can consider other evidence as to such price and base its findings thereon.

3. Vendor and purchaser ⟸329, 330—Value of real property to owner is not always reasonable market value; market value is relevant evidence.

The value of the property to the owner which, under Civ. Code, § 3307, measures the damage caused to him by breach of an agreement to purchase the property, is not always identical with market value, though market value generally is proof of such value to the seller, and is always competent and relevant where that matter is in question.

4. Appeal and error ⟸1011(1)—Trial court's conclusion as to ultimate fact, based on conflicting evidence, not disturbed.

In an action for damages for breach of a contract to purchase real property, the trial court's conclusion as to the ultimate fact of the value of the property to the seller, based on much conflicting testimony, will not be disturbed on appeal.

5. Vendor and purchaser ⟸329—Opinions of experts as to land values held not based on particular use.

Under Civ. Code, § 3307, as to damages for vendee's breach, in action for such breach testimony by expert witnesses for the defendant that the property was best fitted for subdivision purposes, but stating their opinions as to its market value for any purpose, is not objectionable as being based upon the use of the property for subdivision purposes only.

6. Pleading ⟸34(7)—Denial of damages held sufficient when objected to on appeal.

A denial, in an action for breach of contract to purchase real property, that, at the time defendant refused to carry out its contract or at any time thereafter, the value of the property was the sum alleged in the complaint or any other sum less than the contract price for the property, and denying plaintiff was damaged by the breach of the contract, when first objected to on appeal, is sufficient denial of damages to sustain a judgment for nominal damages only.

7. Appeal and error ⟸194(2)—Answer imperfectly raising issue is sufficient after trial as if issue had been joined.

When issue is imperfectly joined, but the case is tried as if it were joined, and both parties treated as joined, the defect in denial in the answer cannot be urged for the first time on appeal.

8. Appeal and error ⟸194(2)—Defective denial held cured by plaintiff's conduct at trial.

If defendant's denial of damage to plaintiff by its breach of contract to purchase plaintiff's land was defective, plaintiff cannot raise that question for the first time on appeal, where her case in chief consisted principally of evidence which tended to show she had been damaged, and the amount thereof, and at no time during the trial did she object to defendant's testimony on that issue on the ground that the denial was insufficient.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Russ Avery, Judge.

Action by Eleanor M. Shurtleff against the Marcus Land & Investment Company to recover damages for breach of contract to purchase land. Judgment awarding plaintiff one dollar damages only, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. Wiseman Macdonald and W. W. Wallace, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Francis J. Heney, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The following facts are undisputed: On January 10, 1920, respondent entered into a written contract to purchase a certain tract of land from appellant at an agreed price of $58,245; at this time a mortgage upon the property had been foreclosed and about seven months of the period for redemption had expired; on January 23, 1920, the respondent refused to accept title to the land; on February 13th appellant sold the land subject to the mortgage to one Toplitzky for $52,778.10; March 16th following Toplitzky sold to respondent for an advance of $1,500 over the price paid by him.

The action is for damages for breach of contract, the amount claimed being the difference between the price called for in the contract of sale to respondent and the amount realized by appellant through her subsequent sale to Toplitzsky, and amounting to $5,466.90. Both sides agree that section 3307 of the Civil Code provides the measure of damages. That section reads:

"The detriment caused by the breach of an agreement to purchase an estate in real property, is deemed to be the excess, if any, of the amount which would have been due the seller, under the contract, over the value of the property to him."

[1, 2] The court found that the value of the property to the plaintiff on January 23, 1920, was $60,000; that the plaintiff had been damaged in the sum of $1, and rendered judgment accordingly. Appellant's principal contention is that the evidence is insufficient to support this finding as to damage. She asserts that her detriment is the excess of the amount due her under the contract over the value of the property to her, and that although in most cases the reasonable market value establishes the element of value to the vendor, under the peculiar facts of this case the value to the vendor is "exactly what she could obtain for it at a fair sale." This appears to be a distinction without a difference. The reasonable market value is the amount which the owner can obtain for it at a fair sale. Winnepiseogee Lake Cotton & Woolen Manufacturing Co. v. Town of Gilford, 67 N. H. 514, 35 Atl. 945. But appellant assumes that what she obtained by the sale in February should have been accepted by the court as the test and full proof of "what she could obtain for it at a fair sale." We think this assumption is erroneous. In arriving at the value of the property to the seller the court properly received evidence not only of the amount realized by the seller through the sale which she made, but also of the rental value of the property, the condition of the title, and the reasonable market value as testified to by experts, which included those elements which they regard as relevant to the issue, such as: The activity of the market, the use for which the property is adapted, its relation to transportation facilities, and other matters which we need not here delineate. The appellant's expert witnesses, in response to questions asked by her counsel, gave opinions as to the market value of the property at the date of the breach of contract. Without doubt this evidence was offered as proof of the price which appellant contended she could have obtained for the property at a fair sale. Yet appellant now takes the position, which is apparently inconsistent, that the trial court should not have considered evidence of the market value in computing the value of the property to the seller, but should have disregarded all such testimony and accepted the sale price as conclusive of that element. Appellant calles attention to the testimony of witnesses on both sides who gave it as their opinion that the fact that a mortgage has been foreclosed would tend to reduce the value of the property to the seller. They did testify to that effect, and also that it would reduce the market value. But the court having received this evidence presumably gave it consideration together with all of the other facts submitted.

[3, 4] We do not hold that the term "value of the property to him" used in section 3307 of the Civil Code is always identical with market value. Cases cited by appellant, and others, as Los Angeles City v. Pomeroy, 124 Cal. 597, 57 Pac. 585, in which it is held that actual or intrinsic value may be quite different from market value, unquestionably established the proposition that "value of the property to him" is a thing apart from market value. However, as the appellant concedes, market value generally is proof of the value of the property to the seller. It is always competent and relevant where that matter is in question. Where, as in the instant case, the trial court received much conflicting testimony, its conclusions as to the ultimate fact will not be disturbed on appeal. It found that the allegation in the appellant's complaint that the value of the property in question to the plaintiff on the date respondent breached the contract was $52,721.07 and no more, was untrue. The court found that plaintiff had been damaged in the sum of $1, and no more. The court found it to untrue that the value upon the date in question to the plaintiff was any less sum than $60,000. While the finding might have been stated in more direct language, we think this is sufficient as a statement that the value to the seller on the 23d day of January, 1920, was $60,000.

The foregoing views as to the legal principles involved in this phase of the case are sustained by California decisions. That "market value," while not "actual value," is the criterion of actual value, is held in Los Angeles City v. Pomeroy, 124 Cal. 597, 57 Pac. 585. By analogy it is logical to say that market value is not value to the seller, but it is indicative of value to the seller and as such may properly be received in evidence upon that issue. Dean v. Hawes, 21 Cal. App. 350, 131 Pac. 885, referring to section 3307 of the Civil Code, holds that—

"In actions for damages for the breach of a contract such as is pleaded here the sum recoverable as compensation for the breach is the difference between the contract price and the market value of the land at the time of the breach."

Reference is then made to Drew v. Pedlar, 87 Cal. 443, 25 Pac. 749, 22 Am. St. Rep. 257, in which it is said that the actual loss sustained by the vendor would ordinarily be the difference between the actual contract price and the actual value of the land at the time of the breach of the contract to purchase.

[5] There is no merit to the contention that the testimony of respondent's witnesses as to the value was irrelevant in that it was based upon the use of the property for subdivision purposes only. Although the expert, Paul Crippen, said it was best fitted for subdivision purposes, he also said his opinion as to its market value had reference to any purpose. John A. Cain also testified as to the value of the property for agricultural, circus, and subdivision purposes. He gave his opinion that the market value at the time in question was between $800 and $850 per acre. Other witnesses gave similar testimony. It cannot be fairly said that these witnesses confined their evidence to the value of the property for a single purpose.

[6] Appellant raises the point for the first time on appeal that the defendant's answer is defective in that it is claimed that the allegation to the effect that the property was of a value to the plaintiff of $52,721.07 is not controverted. The denial of the answer on that point is in the following language:

"Said defendant * * * denies that on the 23d day of January, 1920, or at the time defendant refused to carry out its part of said agreement, or at any time after the 10th day of January, 1920, the value of the said real property was the sum of $52,721.07, or any other sum less than the sum of $58,245."

In the same paragraph the answer goes on to say:

"Further answering said paragraph V, said defendant denies that plaintiff has been damaged by the alleged refusal of defendant to carry out its terms, or any term of said agreement, or to purchase said real property or to pay the purchase price, or any part thereof, according to the, or any of the, terms of said agreement in the sum of $5,523.93, or any other sum."

Appellant's point is that the denial in the part of the answer first above quoted is not a denial of the value of the property to the seller. The denial of appellant's allegations as to damages is complete and, if sustained by the evidence, would permit of a judgment for only nominal damages, which is the judgment rendered.

[7, 8] But it is a familiar rule that when issue is imperfectly joined, but the case is tried and both parties treat the issue as joined, the defect in denial in the answer cannot be successfully urged for the first time on appeal. Klopper v. Levy, 98 Cal. 525, 33 Pac. 444; Stockton Combined Harvester & Agricultural Works v. Glens Falls Insurance Co., 121 Cal. 167, 53 Pac. 565. Appellant correctly states the rule that it is only where the record shows the party against whom the estoppel is invoked consciously at least acquiesced in the trial of the issue, as if it had been made, or diverted attention from the fact that it was not made, and from supplying the defect by amendment that the rule preventing objection being raised to a lack of sufficient denial can be successfully urged. The instant case is typical as one complying with these conditions. Appellant's case in chief consisted principally of evidence intended to show she had been damaged and the amount of detriment suffered. Respondent replied with the testimony of expert witnesses to meet the issues thus presented. At no time during the trial did the appellant object to such testimony on the ground that the denial of the answer was insufficient or otherwise raise the point.

We have considered the errors assigned as to the rulings of the court upon objections to testimony and find no reversible error.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; WORKS, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 569

WHITE et al. v. KIRCHMANN et al.

LA BARRE et al. v. COFFER.

(Civ. 4268.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 8, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 4, 1923.)

Trusts ⇐44(1)—Evidence held not to prove that deceased owner of bonds had directed defendant to deliver them to plaintiff.

In an action to enforce alleged trusts in bonds, in which it was alleged that a decedent had left bonds in a safe deposit box with plaintiffs' names attached, and that before her death she had called defendant to her bedside and had instructed defendant to deliver bonds to persons whose names were attached thereto, and that defendant had agreed to do so, evidence held not to sustain allegations.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by Jessie A. White, Lauren B. La Barre, and Richard Kenneth La Barre against Henry Kirchmann, Sr., and Anna Coffer, formerly Anna Overvold. From a judgment for the last-named defendant, the two last-named plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Marion Weston Cottle and Goldman & Altman, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Hugo D. Newhouse and Russell P. Tyler, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. This is an action brought to enforce certain alleged trusts in certain personal property. The defendants had judgment in the trial court, and two of the alleged beneficiaries have appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Prior to her death Jane Sanders had become the owner of bonds of the federal government and of certain corporations, and had said bonds on deposit in her safe-deposit box. It was the theory of the alleged beneficiaries that she had attached to some of the securities written directions, indicating to whom such securities should be delivered in the event of her death, and that on the evening before her death she called to her side the defendant Anna Coffer, and requested the said Anna Coffer to send certain of the securities to the individuals whose names were marked on, or according to the written directions attached to each of said securities, and that Anna Coffer accepted the trust and agreed to comply with the directions of the trustor. The allegations of the plaintiffs' complaint setting forth the foregoing theory were denied by the defendants in their answers. On the trial of the case the plaintiffs relied on the testimony of Anna Coffer to prove their case. After the case had been fully tried and submitted the trial court decided the case against the plaintiffs, and made findings both general and specific in which it found the facts in favor of the defendants and against the plaintiffs. In their brief the appellants contend that the evidence shows without conflict that the allegations of the amended complaint are true, and that the findings to the contrary are unsupported by evidence. These contentions are not supported by the record.

As far back as 1910 or 1911 Mrs. Sanders had become the owner of several of the bonds which were in her box at the time of her death. Each bond was in the sum of $1,000, and there were nine bonds of the Great Western Power Company, three of the Pacific Gas and Electric, two of the City Electric, and one California Unifier. The bonds at that time were in the safe-deposit box, to which Mrs. Sanders had a key and Anna Coffer also had a key. Anna Coffer testified that Mrs. Sanders gave her the bonds in the year 1910 or 1911, and that the donee demurred to accepting the gift.

"When I got those bonds I made a fuss; I did not want to take them from her, and she cried, and she said she wanted me to have them because of what I had done for her husband during his illness. So I said, 'I will never take them, unless if you need them you take them back.' Before her death in 1918 Mrs. Sanders had acquired other bonds of the federal government, and all of the bonds were in the safe deposit box."

The night before her death in the hospital Mrs. Sanders said to Mrs. Coffer,

"I took those bonds and marked them. Will you send them the way I marked them?"

To that request Mrs. Coffer testified that she did not give an answer, but that her reply to Mrs. Sanders was in the nature of requesting her to preserve her strength. She further testified that Mrs. Sanders did not indicate the specific articles that were marked, nor how they were marked; in short, her testimony was to the effect that she neither accepted nor refused to accept the alleged trust. She further testified that after the death of Mrs. Sanders she and the executor, Mr. Kirchmann, went to the safe-deposit box and examined the contents. They found two Liberty bonds, each for $1,000, and to which was attached a paper bearing these words: "Lauren La Barre, 2704 Bedford Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y." On May 27, 1918, those two bonds were transmitted by registered mail to Mr. La Barre at the above address. The testimony did not develop the fact that any other bond or bonds were marked, but there was in the box a card, admittedly in Mrs. Sanders' handwriting, but not signed, on which appeared these words: "Give $5,000 (five thousand) of this to Lauren La Barre, also $5,000 (five thousand) to Kenneth La Barre." There was a package in the box marked for delivery to Ed Donaldson; there was an envelope on which was written, "Walter Scott's property." That envelope and its contents was forwarded to Mr. Scott. As we understand the record, the Donaldson package was sent to Donaldson, but there is some question as to whether it was sent in the original envelope or otherwise. All of the bonds that were in the safe-deposit box were sent to the individuals accordingly as the bonds were marked.

Mr. Kirchman was called as a witness, and testified that he went to the safe-deposit box the day after Mrs. Sanders died; that Anna Coffer, Edward Sanders, and Mrs. Edward Sanders went with him, and on that occasion they removed the will and a letter addressed to the witness. On the same afternoon, or the next day, the witness and Anna Coffer went to the box, and at that time the witness removed the bonds from the box. He testified that he took the bonds to his office in the Merchants' Exchange Building. At that time the Donaldson bonds were in the envelope, others had small slips of paper attached to them with their names, not the addresses, and were not in envelopes. The bonds were sent according to the way they were addressed, or the way the slips of paper were attached. After the bonds had been sent there were no bonds left. The witness testified that the card found in the box, and hereinabove fully set forth, was with a lot of miscellaneous papers such as tax bills, citizenship papers, etc., but was not attached to any bond or bonds, and there were no bonds in the envelope in which the card was found.

The evidence fully supports the findings, and the findings support the judgment. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

59 Cal. App. 526

STRUPELLE v. STRUPELLE. (Civ. 3870.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 27, 1922.)

1. Divorce ⊂⊃172—Oral announcement evidence was insufficient is not conclusive judgment.

An oral announcement in a prior divorce action that the evidence then adduced was insufficient to justify an interlocutory decree for plaintiff, but that plaintiff might offer additional evidence, was not tantamount to a judgment denying the right to divorce, and is not conclusive against a subsequent action after the dismissal of that action by plaintiff.

2. Divorce ⊂⊃139—Submission is set aside by leave to amend and offer additional proof giving plaintiff right to dismiss.

The submission of an action for divorce to the court was set aside when leave was granted to amend the complaint and to adduce additional evidence, so that thereafter the plaintiff could dismiss the action under the authority of Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subd. 1.

3. Dismissal and nonsuit ⊂⊃5—Plaintiff can dismiss at any time before final submission; "trial."

Within Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subd. 1, authorizing the plaintiff to dismiss at any time before trial, the word "trial" means the determination or finding in the case, so that the plaintiff may dismiss even after the introduction of evidence if he does so before the retirement of the jury, or before the final submission of the case for decision by the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Trial.]

4. Divorce ⊂⊃69—Unreasonable delay in bringing action depends on circumstances indicating connivance, collusion, or condonation.

Since no definite time is fixed as being the lapse of an unreasonable time before commencement of a divorce action which bars the action under Civ. Code, § 124, subd. 3, the question whether the delay is reasonable or authorized must be decided in the light of the circumstances peculiar to each particular case, in view of the definition of an unreasonable lapse of time by section 125, as such delay as establishes the presumption that there has been connivance and collusion, which by sections 112 and 114 imply consent to the act of which complaint is made, or condonation, which under sections 115 and 121 implies forgiveness.

5. Divorce ⊂⊃69—Facts held not to show laches.

A finding that a husband without just cause or excuse and with intent to desert his wife voluntarily separated himself from her, and has willfully and voluntarily lived separate and apart from her for nearly nine years, is inconsistent with the existence of connivance, condonation, or collusion by the wife which would establish that her delay in bringing the action was unreasonable.

6. Divorce ⊂⊃69—Delay in bringing action held not to show acquiescence in desertion with intent to continue relationship.

A delay of nine years in bringing an action for divorce on the ground of desertion by the husband did not establish a presumption of acquiescence in the desertion with intent to continue the marriage relation, within Civ. Code, § 125, where, in the meantime, the wife had heard nothing from her husband, and had brought a prior action for divorce in which the trial judge had stated her proof was insufficient, but had not thereafter permitted her to adduce additional proof.

7. Divorce ⊂⊃37(3)—Intent to desert may be inferred from absence without provision for support.

The intent to desert which, with the voluntary separation of one of the married parties from the other, constitutes desertion may be inferred from the fact that the husband abandoned his wife without apparent cause and left the state, making no provision for her support, and giving her no inkling of his whereabouts for nine years.

8. Divorce ⊂⊃184(10)—Findings based on conflicting testimony may not be disturbed.

The findings of the trial court in an action for divorce upon issues on which there was a sharp conflict in the evidence may not be disturbed on appeal.

9. Divorce ⊂⊃249(1)—Interlocutory decree cannot make disposition of property.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 146, 147, authorizing the court to assign to the innocent party community property or the homestead in case of a dissolution of the marriage and in granting a decree of divorce, the interlocutory decree of divorce cannot make final disposition of the property, since it does not dissolve the marriage, and is not a decree of divorce, but it may indicate the disposition of the property that will be made by the final decree.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Action for divorce by Enrica Strupelle against Michele Strupelle. From an interlocutory decree for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Decree modified and affirmed.

B. F. Thomas, of Santa Barbara, for appellant.

W. P. Butcher, of Santa Barbara, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendant from an interlocutory decree of divorce in an action wherein the wife seeks a divorce from the husband on the ground of desertion.

Defendant, according to the court's findings, on August 4, 1911, with intent to desert and abandon plaintiff, voluntarily and willfully separated from her, and ever since has voluntarily and willfully lived separate and apart, with intent to desert his wife. The action was commenced April 9, 1920.

One of the defenses interposed was that there was an unreasonable lapse of time before the commencement of the action. The court found against defendant on this defense. For the purpose of overcoming any presumption of unreasonable delay, plaintiff put in evidence the record of a prior action for divorce which she had commenced against defendant on May 12, 1914, in the same court. In that action defendant, who was constructively served with summons by publication, made no appearance. His default having been regularly entered, the action came on for hearing on January 11, 1915, before a judge of the superior court for another county, sitting for the judge of the superior court for Santa Barbara county. After plaintiff had offered such evidence in that action as she then was prepared to adduce, a minute order was entered setting forth, in substance, that the court orally announced from the bench that "upon the evidence offered an interlocutory decree of divorce cannot be granted," and that "leave is granted plaintiff to offer additional evidence and to amend her complaint if desired." Thereafter plaintiff, through her counsel, tried in vain to persuade the judge before whom the cause had been heard to return to Santa Barbara and hear such additional evidence as plaintiff was prepared to adduce. Failing in this effort, plaintiff's counsel, on April 5, 1920, or four days before the commencement of the present action, filed with the clerk of the court a written request for the dismissal of the former action.

[1] Appellant, with all seeming seriousness, now contends that the pronouncement from the bench in the former action announcing in substance and effect that the evidence then adduced was insufficient to justify an interlocutory decree of divorce, but that plaintiff if so advised might offer additional evidence, was tantamount to a solemn judgment of the court formally denying to plaintiff the right to a divorce. It further is urged that the dismissal of the former action was unauthorized and void. Wherefore it is argued that the "former judgment" is now res adjudicata. To state this contention is to answer it. The court's oral announcement from the bench was not a judgment. In effect, it was no more than a statement that in the opinion of the court the evidence, in so far as offered, was not sufficient to authorize a divorce, but that the case would be continued indefinitely to enable plaintiff to adduce further testimony should she be so advised.

[2] Moreover, the former action was properly dismissed. The plaintiff, "at any time before trial," upon payment of the costs, may dismiss the action by written request to the clerk, filed with the papers in the case. Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subd. 1. If the former action was submitted for decision, the submission was set aside when leave was granted to amend the complaint and to adduce additional evidence. Westbay v. Gray, 116 Cal. 660, 667, 48 Pac. 800.

[3] In Hancock Ditch Co. v. Bradford, 13 Cal. 637 (cited with approval in Westbay v. Gray, supra), it was held that the word "trial," as used in that provision of the former practice act which corresponds with subdivision 1 of section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure, means the determination or finding in the case. A plaintiff, therefore, even after the introduction of evidence by both sides, may dismiss the action in the manner permitted by subdivision 1 of section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure, if he do so before the retirement of the jury or before the final submission of the case for decision by the court. Westbay v. Gray, supra; MacDermot v. Grant, 181 Cal. 332, 184 Pac. 396.

[4] Appellant urges here, as he did in the court below, that there was "an unreasonable lapse of time," within the meaning of subdivision 3 of section 124 of the Civil Code, before the commencement of the present action. We should hesitate to say that a lapse of time of any definite length must necessarily and of itself be deemed unreasonable as a matter of law,

> "It would," says the court in Locke v. Locke, 153 Cal. 58, 94 Pac. 244, "be attributing to the Legislature a very unjust and unreasonable purpose to hold the meaning of the Code to be that when a husband is guilty of willful neglect to provide for his wife she must immediately, or within any particular time, commence an action for divorce." (Italics ours.)

We think that whether delay in bringing an action for divorce on the ground of desertion is reasonable or otherwise is a question which must be decided in the light of the circumstances peculiar to each particular case. Section 125 of the Civil Code defines an unreasonable lapse of time to be such delay "as establishes the presumption that there has been connivance, collusion, or condonation of the offense, or full acquiescence in the same, with intent to continue the marriage relation notwithstanding the commission of such offense." Connivance and collusion imply consent to the act of which complaint is made (Civ. Code, §§ 112, 114); condonation implies forgiveness, and is revoked when the condonee commits the offense anew (Civ. Code, §§ 115, 121).

[5] None of these matters of defense could coexist with the facts found by the trial court, namely, that defendant, without any just cause or excuse and with intent to desert and abandon plaintiff, voluntarily separated himself from her, and ever since, with intent to desert, has willfully and voluntarily lived separate and apart from her. Nor is connivance, collusion, or condonation consistent with the testimony given by plaintiff and her witnesses. Plaintiff testified that after defendant, without cause and without giving her any reason or explanation for his conduct, left her and went away, she received no word from him until shortly prior to the commencement of the present action, when he wrote her a letter from a town in Arizona in which he says:

"After a long time silence I now notify you that I am still alive, and I would be glad to hear from you."

Her testimony also shows that from the time when he left, August 4, 1911, until a few days before the commencement of the present action, she did not know his whereabouts, and that during all of this time she received no support from him whatever. With such a state of facts connivance, collusion and condonation are utterly incompatible.

[6] Nor did the delay in commencing the present action establish a presumption of "full acquiescence" in defendant's desertion, "with intent to continue the marriage relation." The facts testified to by plaintiff and her witnesses are entirely inconsistent with any intent on plaintiff's part "to continue the marriage relation," with all its rights and privileges. An exposition of the law upon this subject may be found in Thomson v. Thomson, 121 Cal. 11, 53 Pac. 403; Locke v. Locke, supra; Neeley v. Neeley, 179 Cal. 232, 176 Pac. 163; and Walker v. Walker, 14 Cal. App. 487, 492-493, 112 Pac. 479.

[7] Equally without merit is the contention that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding of desertion. The claim is that there was no corroborative evidence of defendant's intent to desert. Desertion consists of the voluntary separation of one of the married parties from the other and the intent to desert. Both ingredients are to be found in this case. The former is proved by the direct testimony of plaintiff and her witnesses; the latter may be inferred from the fact that defendant abandoned his wife without apparent cause and left the state of California, making no provision for his wife's support and giving her no inkling of his whereabouts during the years of his voluntary exile. Morrison v. Morrison, 20 Cal. 431.

[8] By way of defense, and also as a cause of cross-action, defendant averred in his answer and likewise in a cross-complaint that he was driven from the family dwelling place by reason of certain alleged acts of cruelty on plaintiff's part. Upon the issues thus raised there was a sharp conflict in the evidence. The trial court, giving credence to plaintiff and her witnesses, as was its right, found in the wife's favor upon all the issues thus tendered by defendant's pleadings. It was the province of that court to determine the credibility of the witnesses for the respective parties, and we may not disturb the findings without usurping the functions of a trial judge.

There are no other points worthy of mention, except that which is directed against the power of the trial court to make a final adjudication of the property rights in its interlocutory decree.

[9] The property consists of two lots—lots 19 and 20 of block 286, as designated upon the official map of the city of Santa Barbara. These two lots appear to be adjoining pieces of land, forming one parcel. Lot 20, purchased after the marriage, is community property; lot 19, purchased by the husband before the marriage, is his separate property. On December 27, 1910, which was during the marriage relation, defendant filed a declaration of homestead covering both lots. In its findings, and likewise in its interlocutory decree, the trial court properly determined the status of the property and properly determined how it ought to be assigned. But the actual assignment of the property should have been left for the final decree of divorce. A court may assign to the innocent party the community property or the homestead "in case of a dissolution of the marriage" (Civ. Code, § 146) and "in granting a decree of divorce" (Civ. Code, § 147). The interlocutory judgment is not a decree of divorce, nor does it dissolve the marriage. The court therefore should not assign or dispose of the community property or homestead until such time as the marriage is absolutely dissolved by the final decree of divorce. Remley v. Remley (Cal. App.) 193 Pac. 604. For this reason the interlocutory decree must be modified. But, as the purpose of the appeal obviously was to obtain a positive reversal, and the modification cannot substantially change the important features of the final judgment to be made upon the expiration of the year from the entry of the interlocutory decree, the appellant should not recover any costs on this appeal.

The interlocutory decree is modified by striking therefrom everything after the paragraph which adjudges that plaintiff shall have and recover a monthly allowance of $75, and by inserting in lieu of the parts so stricken out the following:

"And it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that plaintiff is entitled to have assigned to her, in and by any final decree of divorce which may be entered herein, all of lot 19 in block 286 of the city of Santa Barbara, state of California, for and during the term of her natural life; and she also is entitled to have assigned to her, in and by any such final decree, an undivided one-half of lot 20 in said block 286, as a tenant in common of said lot 20."

As so modified the interlocutory decree will stand affirmed as of the date of its entry, January 3, 1921. Upon entering its final decree of divorce the trial court will assign the property according to the determination expressed in the interlocutory decree; and, when it makes its final decree, it may then, pursuant to the authority conferred by section 140 of the Civil Code, make provision in that decree for such reasonable security for the payment of the sum allowed for the wife's support and maintenance as it may deem proper.

We concur: WORKS, J.; CRAIG, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 613

MILES v. BYBEE et al. (Civ. 3972.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Nov. 14, 1922.)

1. Pleading ⊂⊃279(4)—Relief held erroneous as based on supplemental complaint based on contract subsequent to commencement of action.

In an action to rescind a contract to buy a restaurant for alleged false representations by vendor, where the evidence showed that the latter was in possession under a lease by which lessor agreed to convey the property to him on completion of certain payments, and plaintiff, after giving notice of rescission at least 10 days after commencing the action, delivered the key of the premises to lessor under an arrangement whereby the latter was to sell the property, which he did, and repay plaintiff the money paid by him from the proceeds, a judgment against lessor for part of the amount received by him on such sale held erroneous, as based on matters of complaint supplemental to, if related at all to, the original cause of action, which failed.

2. Pleading ⊂⊃279(4)—No relief on supplemental complaint where plaintiff had no cause of action when original complaint was filed.

Relief cannot be granted on a supplemental complaint, which is proper only in aid of the case made by the original complaint, where the proof shows that plaintiff had no cause of action when his original complaint was filed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Action by Joseph J. Miles against A. F. Bybee and C. M. Zadow and another, doing business as the Title Guarantee Sales Company. From a judgment against defendant Zadow, he appeals. Reversed.

N. B. Nelson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Humphrey Marshall, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. This action was commenced by complaint filed December 21, 1920, to enforce rescission of a contract entered into on the 13th day of December, 1920, between the plaintiff and the defendant Bybee, whereby plaintiff agreed to purchase from Bybee a certain restaurant property in the city of Los Angeles. It was alleged that defendants Zadow and Roddle were doing business under the name of Title Guarantee Sales Company, and that, upon entering into said contract, the plaintiff paid over to Zadow and Roddle, as escrow holders, the sum of $700 to be delivered by them to Bybee "after all bills are paid and title shows clear." It was alleged that in making said purchase the plaintiff relied upon certain false representations made by the vendor, and that, upon discovery that these representations were false, the plaintiff gave notice of rescission and demanded the return of said sum of money paid by him as part of the purchase price, and that defendants had failed and refused to make such repayment.

In a second cause of action these same facts were alleged, together with a further allegation that on the date of the contract "the defendants received from the plaintiffs the sum of $700 for the use of the plaintiff."

The case came on for trial in May, 1921. The court made findings that the representations made by defendant Bybee were true, and that the plaintiff was entitled to take nothing from the defendants Bybee or Roddle, but rendered a judgment against Zadow in the sum of $600. From this judgment Zadow appeals.

The result at which the court thus arrived is explained as follows: At the trial it was shown in evidence that the restaurant property was held in possession by defendant Bybee under a lease contract from defendant Zadow, under which, upon the completion of certain payments, Zadow agreed to convey the property to Bybee; that after the plaintiff had given his notice of rescission, to wit, about the 1st of January, which was at least 10 days after the commencement of this action, the plaintiff delivered the key of the restaurant premises to Zadow under an arrangement whereby Zadow was to sell the property, and out of the proceeds repay to the plaintiff the money which he had paid for the restaurant; that on or about April 20, 1921, Zadow made a sale, and received from the purchaser the sum of $600, together with a note for $700. In view of these facts, the court, at the time of its decision permitted the plaintiff to file an "amended and supplemental complaint," "to conform to the proof," in which these subsequent transactions were set forth. Thereupon the court made its findings, in which, after making certain allowances to Zadow, arising out of circumstances which we find it unnecessary to discuss, it determined that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment against Zadow for said sum of $600.

[1] From the foregoing it is manifest that, although the plaintiff was not entitled to recover anything upon his original cause of action, he obtained judgment against Zadow by substituting him as the principal defendant on a new cause of action arising out of a contract made between him and the plaintiff after the commencement of this action. This is a totally different cause of action from that upon which the case went to trial. Appellant had objected to the evidence of these subsequent transactions, and certainly did not consent to the substitution of a new or supplemental cause of action.

[2] Without discussing other questions, it is clear that the judgment must be reversed because it is based upon matters of complaint which, if related at all to the original action, are supplemental to a cause of action which has failed.

"Furthermore, since a supplemental pleading is proper only in aid of the case made by the original complaint, relief cannot be granted upon a supplemental complaint, where the proof shows that the plaintiff had no cause of action when his original complaint was filed." Imperial Land Co. v. Imperial Irr. Dist., 173 Cal. 668, 673, 161 Pac. 116, 119.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 636

MATOZA v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.
(Civ. 4242.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 15, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 11, 1923.)

1. Railroads ⟸102(8)—Right to use tracks over private crossing paramount.

The right of a railroad company to the use of its tracks in the proper conduct of its business is paramount to one's right to the use of his private farm crossing, and, if by reason of proper operation he suffers damage from being temporarily unable to use his crossing, this is merely damnum absque injuria of which he cannot complain.

2. Railroads ⟸102(8)—Unnecessary obstruction of private crossing actionable.

The unnecessary and arbitrary obstruction of a private farm crossing by a railroad company renders it liable for damages proximately resulting therefrom.

3. Railroads ⟸102(8)—Company liable for abuse of discretion in operation over private crossing.

A railroad company has a very wide discretion upon the question of proper operation of its business and the management of trains at a private farm crossing, and the court will not lightly regard the judgment and opinion of experienced employees as to what constitutes proper operation; but, where the court finds from the evidence that such discretion has been abused, the company may properly be called on to respond in damages to one suffering from its arbitrary action.

4. Railroads ⟸102(10)—Finding of negligence in obstructing private crossing sustained.

Evidence held to sustain a judgment against a railroad company for negligence in obstructing a private farm crossing preventing removal of cows from an alfalfa field, in consequence of which some of them died from overfeeding.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

Action by Manuel Matoza against the Southern Pacific Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. K. Ford and Elliott Johnson, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

A. A. Rogers, of San Leandro (Henry G. Tardy, of Oakland, of counsel), for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. The action is brought by plaintiff for the recovery of damages for the death of four cows, and certain expenses incident to their treatment in an effort to save them, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant in obstructing a private farm crossing traversing its railroad tracks so that the plaintiff was prevented from removing his herd of dairy cows from a field of green alfalfa, in consequence of which some of the herd consumed too much of the succulent pasture, four of them dying from the effects thereof.

Judgment went for plaintiff in the sum of $680, and the plaintiff appeals.

The main finding of the court, and upon which this judgment is based, is that the defendant negligently obstructed said private farm crossing, and maintained said obstruction after being apprised of the danger to plaintiff's cows arising therefrom.

The appellant urges two points in support of this appeal, namely, that its right to the use of its railroad track was paramount to the right of the plaintiff to the use of his private farm crossing thereover, and that, as the obstruction complained of was one necessarily incidental to the proper operation of its railroad, it could not be charged with negligence in the matter, whatever the effect of such necessary obstruction might be upon the property of the plaintiff; and second, that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence which would prevent him from recovering damages.

The facts of the case may be summarized as follows: The defendant operates a line of railroad between Oakland and San Jose. At Alvarado on said line it maintains a depot adjacent to which is a siding. At this point is a farm lying on both sides of said railroad, of which the plaintiff is the lessee; the plaintiff's buildings and corrals being on one side of the track and on the other a field in which at the time of the occurrence of the events giving rise to the action there was growing a crop of alfalfa. One afternoon at about 4 o'clock the plaintiff drove his herd of 84 cows from his corrals into the alfalfa field, using said farm crossing, his intention being to allow them to feed there not longer than 20 minutes, a longer period not being permissible, owing to the danger of the cows overfeeding and suffering from the effects thereof. Almost immediately after driving the herd into said field he noticed that a long freight train of the defendant was moved upon said siding so as to block his crossing. This freight train was known as No. 802. He thereupon requested the conductor of said train to part it at the point of the crossing, as it would in a few minutes be necessary for him to recross the track with his herd, and, according to the finding of the trial court, informed the conductor of the danger to his cows if their egress from the alfalfa field should be prevented. The conductor asked where the crossing was, the plaintiff gave him the information, and the conductor proceeded to the point apparently for the purpose of complying with the plaintiff's request. In the meantime another freight train (No. 801) pulled up on the main line and stopped opposite said first train, it also blocking the crossing. Train 802 was on its way to San Jose and was waiting at this point for a passenger train bound for Oakland to pass it before it could proceed on its way. Train No. 801 was proceeding to Oakland, and was to be overtaken and passed at this point by said passenger train. The passenger train was due at 4:44. It was late, and did not arrive until 4:56, but the fact that it would not arrive on time was not known to the conductor of No. 802. The plaintiff made no request to the conductor or No. 801 to move the train or part it at the crossing, apparently thinking that it was sufficient that he had requested the employee in charge of No. 802 to open the crossing. Having made such request, the plaintiff proceeded to assemble his herd of cows at the crossing gate; but the conductor of No. 802, being of the opinion that to part his train or otherwise open the crossing would result in delaying the passenger train (his testimony as to the time at which the plaintiff's demand that the crossing be opened was made placing it much later than the testimony given by the plaintiff), took no steps to effect the opening, so that the plaintiff was compelled to wait at the crossing gate until about 5 o'clock, when the delayed passenger train having arrived, No. 802 proceeded on its way, as did also the passenger and No. 801, leaving the farm crossing unobstructed. Some of the plaintiff's herd had in the meantime consumed too much green alfalfa, from the effects of which four of the cows sickened and died in spite of the efforts of the plaintiff and a veterinary to save them.

The appellant urges in support of its appeal that it had the paramount right to the use of its track in the operation of its railroad, and that the plaintiff's right to the use of his farm crossing was subordinate to this right, and, if by reason of the occupancy by the railroad company of its main line and siding in the prosecution of its business the plaintiff was temporarily unable to use his crossing, such disability arose from the nature of the situation; that the railroad company owed no duty to the plaintiff of which there could be a breach giving rise to a remedy against it.

[1-3] There can be no doubt that the defendant's right to the use of its railroad tracks in the proper conduct of its business was paramount to the plaintiff's right of crossing (Kans. Central Ry. Co. v. Allen, 22 Kan. 285, 31 Am. Rep. 190; Clayton v. Chic. I. & P. Ry. Co., 67 Iowa, 238, 25 N. W. 150; Gratz v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co., 76 Ohio St. 230, 81 N. E. 239; A. & N. R. Co. v. Gough, 29 Kan. 94; A., T. & S. F. v. Conlon, 9 Kan. App. 338, 61 Pac. 321); and that, if by reason of such proper operation the plaintiff suffered damage from being temporarily unable to use his crossing, this would constitute merely damnum absque injuria, of which he could not complain. But since it is admitted that the right to cross the defendant's tracks at the point involved in this action did in fact exist, it must follow that the defendant could not unnecessarily and arbitrarily obstruct the crossing without incurring liability for damage proximately resulting from such obstruction. To hold otherwise would amount to a denial of the plaintiff's right. We think a very wide discretion should be recognized in the railroad company upon the question of the proper operation of its business, and the movement and management of its trains, and that a court should not lightly regard the judgment and opinion of experienced and responsible employees of the company as to what constitutes proper operation under a given set of circumstances. Where, however, it finds from the evidence that such discretion has been abused, the railroad company may properly be called upon to respond in damages to a person suffering from its arbitrary action.

[4] The evidence in this case mainly turns upon the amount of time which the conductor of No. 802 had in which to open the plaintiff's crossing by parting the cars of his train, and reattaching them and getting the train ready by the refilling of its air tanks so that it could take the main line when by the passing of the passenger train it should be free to do so. There was evidence that these operations could have been completed in 15 minutes. The evidence as to the time elapsing between the notification to the conductor of No. 802 by the plaintiff that he must have the train parted to allow his cattle to use the crossing, and the time when the passenger train was due, was in direct conflict, as was also that as to the conversation, if any, had between them; and we may say at once that if the trial court had accepted the testimony of the railroad employees upon these points it could not have arrived at the conclusion that the damage of which the plaintiff complains arose from any fault of the defendant; but it evidently accepted the testimony of the plaintiff, which gave to the defendant's employees at least 30 minutes to effect an operation admittedly requiring not more than fifteen. The court having accepted this testimony, we are unable to say that its conclusion that the injury to the plaintiff's herd resulted from the defendant's negligence is not sustained by the evidence.

The appellant also refers to the fact, as a ground for holding the trial court's conclusion to be erroneous, that the crossing at the time in question was blocked not only by train 802 but by 801 also, so that, if said conductor had complied with the plaintiff's request and parted his train, the crossing nevertheless would have remained obstructed, since admittedly the plaintiff took no action with regard to No. 801. We think the answer to this is that so long as No. 802 blocked the crossing it would have availed plaintiff nothing to have removed the impediment of No. 801; and that if the plaintiff's request to the conductor of 802 had been complied with, and the plaintiff had failed to notify the conductor of 801 of his desire to cross the track, or some responsible agent the scope of whose duties would bind the company by such notification, such failure could be availed of in this case, but not so long as the plaintiff's request to the conductor of No. 802 remained uncomplied with.

Complaint is also made by the appellant that the judgment is erroneous since the plaintiff's own negligence contributed to his damage, this contention being based upon certain evidence that the plaintiff failed to take proper steps to remove his cattle from the alfalfa field by other means when he discovered that the obstruction to his crossing was not to be removed. As to this point also the evidence is in conflict, and the trial court chose to accept that version of it which would absolve the plaintiff from the contributory negligence suggested.

It follows from the foregoing that the judgment should be affirmed and it is so ordered.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; ST. SURE, Justice pro tem.

---

59 Cal. App. 408

PEOPLE v. ANDERSON et ux. (Cr. 615.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 23, 1922.)

1. Robbery ⇐24(1)—Evidence held to sustain conviction.

In a prosecution for robbery, evidence held to support a verdict that defendants had conspired with third persons to commit the crime of robbery as defined by Penal Code, § 211.

2. Robbery ⇐8 — Threats ⇐1(1) — "Robbery" and "extortion" distinguished.

The distinction between "robbery," as defined by Penal Code, § 211, as the felonious taking of personal property in the possession of another from his person or immediate possession and against his will, accompanied by force or fear, and "extortion," which, according to section 518, is the obtaining of property from another with his consent, induced by a wrongful use of force or fear, or under color of official authority, is that in the one offense the property is taken against the will of the owner or possessor, while in the other the property is taken with the consent of the owner or possessor.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Extort—Extortion; Robbery.]

3. Criminal law ⇐1167(1) — Reversal for variance between pleading and proof necessary only where crime other than that for which conviction was had, shown.

It is only where the evidence compels the conclusion that a crime other than that of which the defendant was convicted was committed that the reviewing court will be forced to order a reversal of the cause on the ground of variance between the accusatory pleading and the proof.

4. Robbery ⇐15—Conspirator may be guilty of conspiracy to rob although not actually present and participating.

In prosecution for robbery, committed by defendant and his wife with the aid of a third person, pursuant to a conspiracy to rob, if the wife was a party to the conspiracy, it was immaterial whether she was not present when the property was taken by her husband and the third person, and although she took no direct part in the act of taking it.

5. Robbery ⇐14—Return of property held not to relieve act of criminality.

In prosecution for robbery, that defendants returned a part of the property to the person robbed, held not to relieve the act of criminality, but might be considered by the jury with other circumstances as to guilt or innocence.

6. Criminal law ⇐365(1)—Evidence as to signing documents by person robbed held admissible as res gestæ.

In a prosecution for robbery, where it appeared that defendant and his wife, together with a third person, conspired to commit the act, entering the room of the person robbed, and compelling him to sign a check and assignment of a bill of sale and a registration certificate of an automobile, it was not error to permit the prosecuting witness to testify as to the circumstances under which he signed such documents, the evidence being admissible as res gestæ, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1850, and not objectionable because showing another crime.

7. Criminal law ⊂⊃1168(4)—Refusal to rule upon motion to exclude evidence held harmless error.

In prosecution for robbery, erroneous failure to rule upon a motion to exclude evidence held not prejudicial, where it did not appear exactly to what part of the testimony the motion was addressed, and where the evidence was admissible as to one of the two defendants.

8. Criminal law ⊂⊃622(1) — Severance held within discretion of court.

Under St. 1921, p. 90, providing that where two or more persons are jointly charged with a public offense they must be tried jointly, unless the court orders separate trials, the court may, in its discretion, order separate trials of two or more defendants jointly charged with a felony, but is not bound to do so upon mere request, the matter being within the discretion of the court.

9. Criminal law ⊂⊃822(6)—Instruction as to conspiracy to rob held harmless error.

In prosecution for robbery, pursuant to a conspiracy between defendant, his wife, and third persons, an instruction that where a person stands by, aids, assists, or encourages in the perpetration of a crime, he is to be punished as a principal, although erroneous as being in the disjunctive, held harmless error in view of other portions of the instruction.

10. Robbery ⊂⊃26 — Instruction authorizing conviction of defendant's wife as a conspirator held not erroneous as not based on evidence.

In a prosecution of defendant and his wife for conspiring to rob complaining witness, being based upon evidence, the question as to whether the wife participated in the acts charged was for the jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

Ralph J. Anderson and Ethel Anderson were convicted of robbery, and, from the judgment of conviction and refusal of new trial, they appeal. Affirmed.

J. S. Daly and Mark L. Burns, both of Sacramento, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendants, who are husband and wife, were convicted of the crime of robbery, upon an information, filed in the superior court of Sacramento county, jointly charging them with said crime. A motion for a new trial made in behalf of each of the defendants was denied, and the appeal here is by the defendants from the judgment of conviction and the order refusing to grant them a new trial.

The points upon which the defendants claim that they are entitled to a reversal of the judgment and the order appealed from, generally stating them, are: (1) That there is a fatal variance between the charge set out in the information and the evidence, in this, that the crime charged is that of robbery, whereas, the proof, if it shows that any crime at all was committed by the defendants, discloses that it was the crime of extortion and not that of robbery; (2) that error was committed in the admission of certain testimony; (3) that erroneous instructions upon the law were read to the jury by the court to the prejudice of the rights of the accused.

The theory upon which the information was undoubtedly framed and upon which, it appears clear from the record, the case was tried, was that the defendants and another party, whose name and identity the officers of the law seemed not to have been able to discover, formed and entered into a conspiracy, the object of which was to commit the crime charged in the information.

The party upon whom the crime charged is alleged to have been committed is one E. Litts, a painter by trade, and a resident of the city of Sacramento for about five years prior to the time at which the crime is alleged to have been perpetrated. His story of the several circumstances leading to the perpetration of the alleged offense as given at the trial is substantially as follows:

That he first met the defendant, Ethel Anderson, early in the month of November, 1921—either the 3d or 4th of that month—between the hours of 5 and 6 o'clock p. m. at a garage at Seventh and M streets, in the city of Sacramento, having been introduced to her by one William Jones, the night man in charge of said garage. It appears that Mrs. Anderson had been employed at 621 M street in said city, but had been given notice on the day upon which she first met Litts that her services at said place were no longer desired and was requested to remove therefrom. Just prior to the time at which she met Litts, as stated, she had been engaged in conversation with said Jones and had stated to him that she desired to have a trunk and some other personal articles which were at the premises at 621 M street removed therefrom to the home of her husband's brother at Thirtieth and G streets, in the city of Sacramento, and Jones, after introducing her to Litts, asked the latter if he would convey the said trunk and articles in his automobile to said place at Thirtieth and G streets. Litts replied that he would do so; but Mrs. Anderson said that before taking the trunk, etc., to her brother-in-law's home she would like to go about the city and see if she could find an apartment or living rooms. Litts stated that he would be pleased to take her around the city in his automobile for that purpose. Litts and the said defendant then started out and drove to several places on as many different streets stopping at each long enough to enable Mrs. Anderson to ascertain whether she could secure accommodations and, having failed to find suitable rooms for her purposes, Litts drove her back to 621 M street, where he met the woman's husband, having been introduced to him by the former. The trunk and some other articles were removed from the house and into the machine and Litts and Mrs. Anderson took the same to the home of her brother-in-law and left them there. While at this place, Mrs. Anderson telephoned to her husband, saying that she would meet him at Fifth and K streets and Litts drove her to said corner where she met her husband. The couple finally decided to apply to the Central Hotel between Fifth and Sixth streets on K street for lodgings, and Ralph Anderson walked to the hotel and Litts and Mrs. Anderson went there in the automobile. In the forenoon of the following day, Litts again met Mrs. Anderson at the garage above referred to, and again took her in his machine about the city of Sacramento to look for an apartment or a place in which to take up her residence. Finally they found and located themselves in rooms at 1316 Seventh street, Litts having taken the couple there in his automobile. Litts, at the request of the parties, went to Thirtieth and G streets, got the trunk and other baggage belonging to the defendants and took them to their Seventh street apartment. Litts then returned to the garage at Seventh and M streets where he left his car.

He met Mrs. Anderson on the following morning, which was either Friday or Saturday, and she remarked to him that if she were in San Francisco she thought she could secure a position in an apartment house in said city. Litts said to her that he was going down on Sunday morning and if she desired to accompany him she could do so. She readily agreed to this, and on Sunday they together drove to San Francisco in Litts' automobile. After Mrs. Anderson had telephoned to certain parties in San Francisco, she reported to Litts that she was not able to secure employment, and later in the day they started on their return to Sacramento, arriving there and at her home at 1316 Seventh street at about 10 minutes after 10 o'clock that night. Litts thereupon drove his machine to the garage, and then went to his room at 815 F street and retired for the night. Litts testified that Mrs. Anderson told him that her husband knew that she was going to San Francisco, that, in fact, he had advised her to accompany Litts to the city for the purpose for which she desired to go there, as above indicated.

On the following evening, shortly after 5 o'clock, Litts met Mrs. Anderson at the garage. She stated that she expected that he would be at the garage at that hour, for she was aware of his custom of taking his automobile out every evening near that time. She at that time told him that her husband had deserted her; that he was very angry because she returned home so early from San Francisco the preceding evening, saying that she should not have left the city until she could have seen the lights of the metropolis from the ferryboat, and that they quarreled and "fought all night, and he took what money they had and left her with but 19 cents." Litts thereupon asked her what she proposed to do, and she replied, "It is up to you," to which he retorted, "I can't do anything; he will be back," and asked her if he had taken his clothes, to which she answered that he had not taken all of them, and Litts repeated: "He will be back; just go on back home again and he will be back over there." She said that he would not return, for he had been waiting for a chance to get away for a long time. She said that she expected to go to work at the Central Hotel for her room, and Litts then told her that "if she could find a room, I would give her enough to eat on until she got a job and that is all I could do." She replied that she could not go to work, as she had no clothes, and then proposed that if Litts would secure a place she would keep house for him. Litts replied that he did not know whether he could or could not do that, and after she had stated that she would have to do something and that she was not able to work, Litts added, "You can look around and see; that's all you can do and perhaps you can find a job." He then left her at the garage and went to his home.

It appears that Mrs. Anderson was dissatisfied with her rooms at 1316 Seventh street and, after the conversation last referred to with Litts, she started out to look for another place and finally came to 1229 E street. She subsequently met Litts and reported to him that she had found rooms which would be suitable if he desired to rent them, and on the day following that of the conversation last mentioned he, accompanied by Mrs. Anderson, drove to 1229 E street and Litts rented the same, paying with his own personal check, $55 as the first month's rental. After securing said place, Litts, at the request of Mrs. Anderson, drove to Sixth and M streets, where she got out, and he left his machine in front of the "Old Pavilion," at Sixth and M streets. This was about 3 o'clock in the afternoon. He walked over to K street, remained for about 10 or 15 minutes, and then returned to where he had left his automobile, and found Mrs. Anderson sitting in the machine. She had in her hand "the little tin plate that holds the license tag, or registration certificate of the automobile" and he asked her where she got it, and she said "it was in the book." He replied that it was strange that it was in there, as he always kept it "in the top of the car," and he thereupon "put it back in the book and slipped it down between the two front seats," there being two separate and distinct seats in the front part of the car. They then went to 1316 Seventh street, secured the trunk and baggage belonging to Mrs. Anderson, and took the same to the rooms at 1229 E street. They lived together at the latter place for some 6 or 7 days, occupying the same room and the same bed. On one occasion, while they were thus living together, Mrs. Anderson asked Litts why he did not leave his car in front of the house instead of taking it to a garage, and insisted upon him doing so. He said that he would not do that, as he had a place to keep the car, and he intended to leave it there at nights.

On the morning of the 15th of November, 1921, about 2 o'clock, Litts was awakened by some one moving about in the room. A light was turned on and he observed that it was Mrs. Anderson, who had arisen from the bed. She remarked that she was unable to sleep. He asked her what time it was and she said 10 minutes after 2. She returned to the bed. Litts immediately went to sleep but in a short time thereafter he was awakened by the glare of a spot light which was flashed in his face. He soon recognized, by the aid of the light reflected from the spot light, the defendant, Ralph Anderson, husband of the woman who was sharing the bed with him at that time. A light was then turned on, and Anderson asked: "Who is that woman in that bed?" to which Litts replied, "A wife." Anderson then in a loud voice exclaimed, "That's my wife." Litts said, "I don't know whether it is or not." Anderson replied, "I have got a secret man out here in the car. I am going to take you down and take you to police headquarters." Litts answered, "All right; I will go with you," but when he started to get up, Anderson, with his gun, pushed him back in bed. Accompanying Anderson to the room of Litts were two other men, one of whom, because of the active part he took in the occurrences in Litts' room, is referred to throughout the record of this case as "the unknown man." Both Anderson and the "unknown," as we will hereafter refer to the man who was especially active in the carrying out of the transactions occurring in Litts' room, had revolvers in their hands and the unknown also had a spot light. Anderson demanded of Litts a writing to be subscribed by the latter, admitting that he had been cohabiting with the former's wife. At first Litts refused to sign any such document, saying he didn't know whether the woman was really Anderson's wife or not.

While this conversation was proceeding between Anderson and Litts, the unknown was ransacking Litts' suitcase and also his coat, vest, and trousers, and in the suitcase he found the certificate of registration of Litts' car, a bill of sale to Litts from the party from whom he had purchased the car, a lady's gold watch with a diamond setting, some old coins which Litts had preserved, a Liberty bond for $50, and an electric flatiron, all of which he took possession of. He also found in the vest or coat pocket of Litts the latter's check book, which he threw on the bed, and a bill book containing $15 in currency. He handed the bill of sale and the certificate of registration to Anderson, and the latter made a demand on Litts to assign to him the bill of sale and the said certificate. Anderson also at this time demanded from Litts a check on his bank for the sum of $95. He first asked Litts how much money he had in the bank, and the latter replied that he did not have very much money on deposit. "Well," continued Anderson, "there is $1,100 in there." Litts asked, "How do you know?" The defendant answered, "I know; I got the dope on all that; the last check you drew was $55." It may here be stated that Litts testified the last check he drew on his bank account was for the sum of $55, with which he paid the rent for the apartment he and Mrs. Anderson were occupying and that the drawing of that sum from the bank reduced his bank account to the sum of $1,100. Litts refused to sign the document and to make out the check demanded, but the demands, according to the testimony of Litts, were made in such a violent and threatening manner that he finally agreed to sign the statement involving an admission that he had cohabited with Mrs. Anderson for several days. He also agreed to make the assignment of the bill of sale and certificate of registration. Anderson called for some ink so as to prepare the several documents mentioned, but Litts said that he had no ink in the house, whereupon Anderson, according to Litts' testimony, ordered the unknown and the "third man" (as we will hereinafter refer to the man who was with Anderson and the unknown) to go to the garage at Seventh and M streets, procure some ink and a pen and return as soon as possible. The unknown and the third man thereupon left the room, but within a few minutes the unknown returned to the room and remained with Anderson. In the course of 20 or 30 minutes the third man returned with some ink in a salt cellar and a pen point. Litts, upon again being demanded by Anderson to do so, signed the several documents, the unknown signing the name of Harrison Stewart as a witness to the execution of the assignment of the bill of sale. Litts also signed a check for the sum of $95, omitting, however, to insert therein the name of the payee. Anderson objected to the signature to the check, saying that it did not correspond in style or form with Litts' signature as written in the certificate of registration of his car, and also objected to the omission to insert his (Anderson's) name in the check as the payee thereof. Anderson thereupon filled out a new check for the sum of $95, payable to him, and demanded of Litts that he sign the same, which was done. While all this was going on, the unknown was arranging the several articles of personal property above mentioned in such manner as to make it convenient for him to carry them away and also stepped up to Litts and took from his fingers two diamond rings, this latter act being done while the defendant, Ralph Anderson, was still standing near the bed and in conversation with Litts.

After all this occurred, Ralph J. Anderson and the unknown left the house, but within a few minutes returned and procured the trunk and other articles belonging to Mrs. Anderson and removed them from the house. They took with them the bill of sale with the assignment thereof to R. J. Anderson indorsed upon it by Litts, the certificate of registration of Litts' car, also indorsed with an assignment thereof to said Anderson, the check for $95, the Liberty bond for $50, the bill book containing $15 in currency, a statement subscribed by Litts confessing that he had been cohabiting with Mrs. Ethel Anderson for several days, the lady's gold watch, the diamond rings, some old coins, an electric flatiron, and some clothing belonging to Litts. After Anderson and the unknown had left the premises, Litts arose, went to the telephone, called the police station and informed the officer in charge of what had taken place in his room and telling him who the parties were that had committed the acts which have been described. About 6 o'clock in the morning Litts went to the garage on Twelfth street between E and F where he left his car the night before and which, it will be noted, is a block only from his apartment at 1229 E street, and, while standing in front of the door of the garage, the defendant, Ralph Anderson, walking, put in an appearance, passed within a few feet of Litts without saluting or, apparently, noticing the latter and soon disappeared from Litts' sight. Late in the evening of that day (the 15th), after a complaint had been sworn to by Litts against the Andersons and the unknown, as John Doe, charging them with robbery, and a warrant thereupon issued and the publication of the fact of the filing of the charge by the evening newspapers of Sacramento, the defendants R. J. and Ethel Anderson, accompanied by J. E. Taylor, the proprietor of the garage at Seventh and M streets, appeared at the rooms of Litts at 1229 E street and returned to him the two diamond rings, the certificate of registration of the car, the bill of sale, the check for the $95, the electric flatiron, the watch, a fountain pen, a few of the old coins and the bill book, minus the currency therein contained at the time these articles were taken from Litts by said parties. The Liberty bond, the clothing taken, and the currency in the bill book were not returned. The foregoing statement is, as has already been indicated, taken from the testimony of Litts. It should, however, be added that Mrs. Anderson was not a witness to the occurrences in Litts' room above narrated, having immediately left the room upon the appearance therein of her husband and the unknown.

J. E. Taylor, above mentioned, testified that he was not only a part owner of the garage at Seventh and M streets, but was also engaged in motor delivery business; that the defendant Ralph Anderson, who at one time worked at said garage for him (Taylor), came to the garage on the evening of the 14th of November, 1921, about the hour of 7:30 and asked him if he (Taylor) would haul Mrs. Anderson's trunk to the garage and store it there for a few days. Taylor said that he would do as so requested, but testified that at that time Anderson did not inform him where the trunk was. At this time Anderson was engaged as a taxi driver for one of the taxi companies of Sacramento, and about midnight of the said 14th day of November he again appeared at the garage in a taxi which he was driving and again requested Taylor to haul Mrs. Anderson's trunk to the garage. Taylor asked Anderson where the trunk was, and Anderson suggested that when he was ready to go for the trunk that he (Taylor) follow him (Anderson) to the place where the trunk was to be found. Later on, about 2 o'clock a. m. of the 15th, Anderson returned to the garage and stated that he was prepared to go to the place where the trunk was. Taylor, accompanied by one of his employees, by the name of Murphy, followed Anderson to 1229 E street. Anderson was accompanied in his taxi by the party heretofore referred to as the unknown. Here it should be stated that, as to the unknown, Taylor testified that he did not know the man and that he had never seen him until early on the day previous—the 14th day of November, when he (the unknown) was in the company of the defendant Ralph Anderson. Anderson and the unknown, however, on arriving at 1229 E street, left the taxi and went to the door of and entered the house. It appears that Taylor was employed to deliver to the post office the mail deposited in the post office boxes in the outlying districts of the city, and, as it was approaching the time when he should make a collection of the mail, he left the house, after waiting in vain a number of minutes for Anderson's return from the house with the trunk, intending, as he stated, to return to said house after he had collected the mail from the boxes and delivered the same at the post office. About half an hour later, or near 2:30 o'clock a. m. Taylor, being required to go to Twelfth and C streets to secure mail from the box stationed at that corner, on returning, stopped at 1229 E street and sounded his horn several times. He saw the defendant Mrs. Anderson, sitting in her husband's taxi. Within a few minutes after he had sounded his horn, the defendant Ralph Anderson and the unknown came out of the house and stepped to the sidewalk, not bringing the trunk with them. Taylor asked Ralph Anderson about the trunk, and thereupon Anderson and the unknown returned to the house and soon reappeared with the trunk and placed it in Taylor's motor truck. Taylor then started for the garage, and Ralph Anderson, his wife and the unknown followed in the taxi. The Andersons and the unknown arrived at the garage a few minutes after Taylor and his employee Murphy had reached there. The defendants went into the garage, accompanied by the unknown, and a general conversation ensued between Taylor and the Andersons. Suddenly, so Taylor testified, the unknown "sprang up" and exclaimed, "See what I got from that guy," at the same time exhibiting the rings, watch, and other articles heretofore mentioned. Anderson declared that he did not want the jewelry and articles in the possession of the unknown, and then stepped over and held a conversation with his wife, the nature of which was not made to appear at the trial. Taylor said to the unknown: "You have no business taking that stuff out there." The latter replied: "Well, I got it and I will keep the rings," at the same time, turning and facing Anderson, said that the latter could have the rest of the articles. Finally, the rings, watch, and certain other articles were wrapped up and Taylor said to the defendants that they should return them to Litts. Certain of the articles mentioned were returned to Litts by the Andersons as indicated above.

While the Andersons and Taylor were at Litts' apartment for the purpose of returning to him the rings, watch, etc., Taylor telephoned to the police station and informed the officers in charge that the Andersons were then at 1229 E street. Officers Becker and McKinney, armed with the warrant of arrest which had been earlier that day issued by the police court upon the complaint of Litts, immediately went to Litt's apartment and there placed the Andersons under arrest. These officers testified that they had a conversation with Ralph Anderson while he was incarcerated in the city prison, and that he stated to them that he had met his wife, Ethel Anderson, on the afternoon of the 14th day of November, 1921, and that there was then an understanding had between them that Mrs. Anderson would that night unlock the door leading to Litts' rooms from the street so that he could readily enter said rooms when he went there during said night, as he contemplated doing; and, in this connection, it should be stated that Litts testified that he always kept the door leading to his apartment from the street locked.

The above comprises substantially all the testimony presented by the people in support of the charge set forth in the information, and, while it is in our opinion sufficient to sustain the charge as we shall later undertake to show, still it will be interesting to note that the testimony of the defendants in their own behalf is rather confirmatory than otherwise of the theory of the prosecution that the taking of the property of Litts under the circumstances as above described was the culmination of a conspiracy previously formed and entered into by the Andersons and the unknown, and we will therefore reproduce herein in a general way the testimony of the defendants.

There is little material variance between the testimony of Ethel Anderson and that of the complaining witness, Litts, as to the circumstances under which the two first became acquainted with each other; nor is there any substantial difference between them with regard to the circumstances leading to the renting of the apartment at 1229 E street by Litts, and the fact that the said defendant entered into the relationship with Litts, as detailed above.

Ethel Anderson admitted that her husband became angry with her on the night of her return with Litts from San Francisco, but declared that the ground of her husband's indignation was in the fact that she had returned home later in the night than he thought that she should, and that he did not quarrel with her because she had returned home "too early." She stated that her husband, early on the day following that of her return from San Francisco, left her with only 19 cents in her possession. She admitted meeting Litts that day and that she then explained to him her condition financially, and also told him that her husband had gone in search of work, but that she did not know whether he was looking for employment in the city or had gone to the country for that purpose, and said that it was necessary for her to secure employment. She testified that, after considerable discussion between herself and Litts, the latter suggested that he would rent rooms and employ her to keep house for him. She agreed to this proposition, and Litts advanced her the sum of $20. She testified that she went to 1229 E street with Litts and there took up her abode; that the first night that they were there together and when it was time to retire, she proposed to sleep on a davenport bed, and suggested that Litts take the bedroom, but Litts, so she testified, said that there was no reason why two rooms should be "mussed up," since both of them could occupy the bed. She strenuously objected to this proposition, so she declared, and thereupon Litts suggested that she take the bed and he would take the davenport; that after she had retired, Litts came to the room and, against her vigorous protest, got in bed with her; that Litts violently and by means of force outraged her person. She admitted, however, that, notwithstanding this offensive conduct on the part of Litts, she, nevertheless, remained in bed with him that night and occupied the same bed with him every night until the morning of the 15th of November, 1921, when her husband and the unknown appeared upon the scene and carried out the several transactions above described. She testified that on the day following the night of that sordid experience with Litts she went to Taylor, proprietor of the garage at Seventh and M streets, and related to him the fact of Litts' mistreatment of her the night before. She admitted that she arose from bed near the hour of 2 o'clock on the morning of the 15th and corroborated the testimony of Litts to the effect that he asked her the reason she had arisen from the bed and that she replied to him that she could not sleep, and also in reply to Litts told him that it was then about 10 minutes after 2 o'clock. She further testified to the circumstance of the entrance into the house of her husband and the unknown; that her husband had a spot light which he thrust into the face of Litts and upon a light being turned on discovered her in bed with Litts; that he said to her in a loud and vehement manner, "Get the hell out of here as quick as God Almighty will let you;" that she hastily arose, dressed and, placing a few articles belonging to her in her trunk which was in the room, fled from the house; but seeing a car in front of the house and believing it to be that of her husband, she took a seat in it and remained there until her husband returned and with the unknown drove her to the garage at Seventh and M streets, as already explained. She testified that on the afternoon of the 14th of November she met her husband near Seventh and J streets; that she then for the first time learned that he was employed by a taxi company as a driver; that she told her husband that she was working at 1229 E street, but that her husband did not ask what she was doing, for whom she was working, or what compensation she was receiving. She stated that, at the request of her husband, she went to a rooming house and secured a room for her husband, he giving her the sum of $4 to pay for the same; that the rent of the room for a week was the sum of $6, and that she returned to Seventh and J streets, informed her husband that she had secured the room, paid down the $4 he had given her, and that there was still $2 to be paid; that thereafter she took the street car and returned to 1229 E street.

The defendant Ralph Anderson testified that he became acquainted with Litts on the 4th of November, 1921, and corroborated in a general way the testimony of his wife as to the latter's efforts to find living rooms or an apartment, assisted by Litts. He stated that on the 14th of November he was, and for some days prior thereto had been, employed by the Adams Taxi Company in Sacramento as a taxi driver. He testified that on that day, near the hour of half past 5 p. m., he had occasion to visit the garage at Seventh and M streets and there met J. E. Taylor, by whom at one time he had been employed, and that on that occasion Taylor told him that his wife had been at the garage to see him (Taylor) and had reported that Litts was not treating her right, and that Taylor advised him to "go down there and get her"; that upon receiving this information he made no reply, but walked away and went to his room and, as his employment with the Adams Taxi Company required him to enter upon the discharge of his duties near the hour of 1 a. m., he retired. He arose at 12:30 a. m. and shortly thereafter took up his work and made two trips and then went to Taylor's garage for the purpose, so he testified, of requesting Taylor to go to 1229 E street, get his wife's trunk, and remove it to the garage; that while engaged in conversation with Taylor concerning this matter, a stranger—a man whom he had never seen before and whose name he never learned—and who is referred to herein as the unknown, was standing near and stepped up to him and asked him "what was wrong, and I told him, and he volunteered to go out with me and help me bring the trunk back." Said defendant accepted the proffered service, and the unknown accompanied him to the rooms occupied by his wife and Litts. This was about 2 o'clock a. m. Arriving at 1229 E street, continued said defendant, he and the unknown stepped from the sidewalk to the door leading into the apartment of Litts, and he rang the door bell, to which no answer was made, and he thereupon "tried the door and it opened and I walked in," the unknown following. Said defendant stated that it was his intention to break the door down and enter the house if Litts or some other inmate thereof did not respond to the bell and open it; that his mind was fully made up, before arriving at the place, to kill Litts if he found any evidence of immoral relations between the latter and the defendant Ethel Anderson. After getting into the house he "searched around" for the bedroom and found Litts and his wife in bed together. "I believe," continued said defendant, "the first thing I did was to tell my wife to get up out of the bed and get out of the house." He admitted demanding of Litts a signed statement to the effect that he and Ethel Anderson had been living in said house as "man and wife," but that Litts at first refused to sign any such statement; that he asked Litts if he had any ink in the house and the latter replied in the negative and said "if I wanted ink so badly I will have to get it myself, and this fellow (referring to the unknown) and I left the house and went down to Taylor's, got the ink, came back again, and then Litts signed the statement and all these others papers at the time." In this connection, it should be stated that said Anderson denied that there was a third party with them, and as is to be implied from the statement that he and the unknown went after the ink, denied that any "third man" went after that article.

Asked how Litts came to sign the assignment of the bill of sale and certificate of registration of his car, said defendant testified that "this other fellow [referring to the unknown] brought this certificate and this bill of sale over to me and demanded me to have Litts sign them." "Q. And did you demand of Litts that he sign them? A. Yes." He admitted that he saw the unknown take from Litts' fingers the two diamond rings, but that he did not know that he (the unknown) had taken the other jewelry and other articles of personal property, nor was there any understanding between him and the unknown that any property should be taken by them from Litts. On cross-examination he declared that he was very angry during all the time he was in Litts' room, but that the idea of killing Litts "had got out of my mind at that time." He admitted commanding Litts to issue to him his personal check for $95, but denied that a check omitting therein his name had previously been signed by Litts and destroyed upon his suggestion that he preferred a check containing his name as the payee. He admitted that Litts drew the check and signed his name thereto, but he said that the unknown took the check, the bill of sale, the certificate of registration, and all the articles of personal property heretofore enumerated; that all he took with him was the statement as to Litts' relations with his wife. He stated that they remained in Litts' room from 2 to 3:30 a. m.; that Taylor took his wife's trunk in his automobile to the garage and that he, his wife, and the unknown followed in the taxi he was then driving. His testimony as to what occurred after they had arrived at the garage harmonizes in a general way with that of Taylor and the defendant Ethel Anderson. Asked if he did not, early in the morning of the 15th and after he had left Litts' room, pass the garage on Twelfth, E, and F streets in which Litts had left his car and see Litts standing outside and in front of said garage, he replied that he did go back to Twelfth and E at the hour named, intending to tell Litts where his jewelry and other articles of personal property taken by the unknown could be found; that in going to Litts' rooms at that time he might have passed the garage, but that if he did he did not know it, and that he did not see Litts while he was then on the way to the latter's place of residence. He corroborated the testimony of his wife and Taylor to the effect that he, accompanied by the two former, went to Litts' rooms about 7 o'clock the evening of the 15th and returned to Litts certain of the articles, including the rings and the watch, but admitted that at that time he knew that a warrant of arrest had been issued against him upon a complaint charging him with the crime of robbing Litts, having read of the same in the evening newspapers of Sacramento.

We now have presented a fair statement, in substance, of the testimony of the two defendants, and, as before declared considering the general trend thereof, it seems to sustain, rather than refute—at least we can say that upon its face the jury could well have so concluded—the theory upon which the case was presented by the people, to wit, that the several transactions carried out by the defendants in Litts' room were parts of a conspiracy formed and entered into by the defendants and the unknown (and perhaps the "third man" referred to by Litts as having been in the room with Ralph Anderson and the unknown) to despoil Litts of his personal property and money. At any rate the testimony of the defendants is, upon its face, in many respects, so utterly unbelievable that the jury, as most probably they did, could have justly repudiated it in toto. We will not attempt to point out the palpable inconsistencies thereof or dilate upon the obvious inconsistency which inhers in the story itself told by each. Their stories, in almost all particulars, are so far at variance with a reasonable or sensible explanation of the occurrences leading to and characterizing the taking of Litts' property, that they plainly speak for themselves and so betray their intrinsic improbability.

[1] It will not be questioned that a conspiracy to commit a crime may be proved by circumstantial as well as direct evidence and we cannot say upon the evidence, as a matter of law, that the jury were not authorized to find, as the verdict implies that they did find, that the circumstances disclosed by the evidence were such as to show that the defendants, the unknown, and perhaps the "third man," had conspired together to commit a crime against the person or property of Litts. Nor, upon a reading of the testimony can there arise any rational doubt that the defendants were properly found guilty of the crime of robbery and that the conspiracy entered into between the defendants and the unknown was to accomplish that object. That crime, as defined by section 211 of the Penal Code is "the felonious taking of personal property in the possession of another, from his person or immediate presence, and against his will, accomplished by means of force or fear." "Extortion," which the defendants claim the evidence shows was the crime committed, if any crime at all was committed, "is the obtaining of property from another with his consent, induced by a wrongful use of force, or fear, or under color of official authority." Section 518, Pen. Code.

[2] Thus, it will be noted the salient distinction between the two crimes is that in the one the property taken is against the will of the owner or possessor, while in the other the property is taken with the consent of the owner or the possessor of the property. There is not a single line in the evidence from which the inference is justified that the property taken from Litts was with his consent. There is no claim here, nor could there be upon the evidence as it is disclosed by this record, that the property was obtained "under color of official right." The evidence clearly shows that the defendant R. J. Anderson and the individual known herein as the unknown with revolvers in their hands, entered Litts' apartment in the dead of night, while he was asleep, and threateningly demanded of him the assignment of the bill of sale of his car, the transfer of the certificate of registration of said car, and a $95 check drawn upon the funds of Litts in the bank, and compelled him to execute these written instruments, and at the same time took from him certain of his personal property. There was nothing in the whole transaction which could have inspired in Litts such a fear as would induce him willingly or with his consent to deliver over to the said parties his money and personal property. Indeed, there was but one statement in all that occurred in the room which of itself could possibly be regarded as a sufficient foundation for a motive in Litts to willingly part with his check and the articles which were taken from him, and that was the statement of R. J. Anderson that there was awaiting outside a secret service officer into whose custody he intended to commit Litts; but the latter, it will be observed upon having been told by Anderson that such an officer was near at hand for the purpose of taking him into custody for his immoral relations with Ethel Anderson, unhesitatingly stated that he was prepared to accompany the officer, and attempted to arise from his bed for that purpose, when said Anderson by a shove threw him back on the bed. This circumstance clearly shows, or at least the jury could have so construed it, that Litts was not possessed of such fear as to the matter of being proceeded against for maintaining illicit relations with Ethel Anderson as to have induced him willingly to issue to R. J. Anderson a check for $95 and turn over to him the other property which was taken.

[3] But there stands the uncontradicted testimony that, while Anderson was engaged in conversation with Litts relative to the latter's relations with Ethel Anderson, the unknown was busily engaged in ransacking the suitcase and rifling the trousers, vest, and coat pockets of Litts, from which he took and kept certain jewelry and other articles of personal property, and also, before Ralph Anderson's eyes, as the latter admitted at the trial violently took from Litts' fingers the two diamond rings. There is nothing in the evidence from which the theory that Litts willingly parted with these articles could possibly be deduced. In short, no one can read the evidence in this case without coming to the conclusion that Litts not only did not willingly turn over his money and property to the defendant R. J. Anderson and the unknown, but suffered them without protest to take said money and property because he was at the time influenced by the fear that any attempt on his part to resist them or to prevent them from taking said property would be followed by the infliction upon him by them of bodily injury. But, even if it were necessary to concede that the evidence disclosed some semblance of the crime of extortion, it cannot be doubted that the evidence is such that the finding of the jury that the crime committed was robbery is conclusive upon this court. It is only where the evidence compels the conclusion that a crime other than that of which the defendant has been convicted was committed that a reviewing court will be forced to order a reversal of the cause on the ground of variance between the allegations of the accusatory pleading and the proof. People v. Lewis, 141 Cal. 543, 75 Pac. 189; People v. Crane, 34 Cal. App. 599, 606, 168 Pac. 377 et seq.

[4] It is, however, vigorously contended that there is absolutely no evidence showing or even tending to show that Ethel Anderson was guilty of complicity in the commission of the crime. This contention is founded upon the fact that she was not in the apartment when the transactions occurring therein between her husband and the unknown and Litts took place. But this was a matter for the jury to pass upon. We need not specifically point to the circumstances developed in the case from which the jury could justly conclude, and no doubt did conclude, that Ethel Anderson was a party to the conspiracy to rob Litts or in some manner wrongfully deprive him of his personal property. If she was a party to such a conspiracy, then it matters not that she was not present when the property was taken by her husband and the unknown and took no direct part in the act of taking it. The asseverations of R. J. Anderson at the trial that the unknown alone took the jewelry and other property and that he had no part in such taking were also matters for the jury to determine. And we may well add, as we have in effect before stated, that the jury could not go beyond a reasonable interpretation of the occurrences at the Litts apartment in deciding, as impliedly they did, that said defendants' protestations of innocence, in so far as the taking of the property was concerned, were wholly out of line with the truth of the matter.

[5] Nor does the fact that the defendants returned the property to Litts of itself relieve their act in taking it of the stigma of criminality. It was for the jury to consider that circumstance with the other circumstances in the case in determining the question of guilt or innocence. It is evident from their verdict that they regarded, as justly from the evidence they were so warranted, the act of returning the property, not as evidence that the defendants did not intend to deprive Litts thereof, but as one the doing of which occurred to the minds of the defendants only after they had received information that a warrant had been issued for their arrest, that if apprehended they would be prosecuted upon the charge of robbery and that the return of the property might operate as a ground upon which they could successfully predicate the claim of innocence of criminal intent.

[6] The contention that error was committed in permitting the witness, Litts, to testify to the circumstances under which he signed the check, the assignment of the bill of sale, and the registration certificate of his automobile, and to state that he was compelled by the defendant Ralph J. Anderson to execute the instruments mentioned, is entirely without merit. The ground of the objection was and is that the testimony related to a crime different from that with which the defendants are charged. But this testimony was admissible under the rule of res gestæ. Section 1850, Code Civ. Proc. It related to acts which were evidently a part of the general scheme, which constituted the object of the conspiracy, and which were committed before said object was fully accomplished.

[7] It is claimed that it was error for the court to refuse to grant the motion of the defendants to strike out certain of the testimony of Police Officer McKinney. That officer, it will be recalled, testified that, in a conversation with the defendant Ralph J. Anderson, after his arrest, the latter, explaining how he got into Litts' apartment, stated that he (Anderson) had in the afternoon of the 14th of November, 1921, met his wife on the street and that then they had an understanding whereby she was to unlock the door to the said apartment so that her husband could enter it that night or early the following morning. This statement by said Anderson to the officer was not made in the presence of his wife. After the officer had given this testimony, the following occurred:

"Question by the District Attorney: Is that all the conversation? A. And we tried to find out from him who this other party was that was with him that night."

"Mr. Daly, Counsel for Defendants: We move to strike this out."

No ground for the motion was stated, and no ruling was made upon the motion, the district attorney proceeding, as if not interrupted, to ask the officer questions regarding the identity of the "other party" who was with the defendant in Litts' apartment. No objection had, previous to the motion to strike out, been made to the testimony of the officer as to the conversation between him and R. J. Anderson. No question was asked as to whether the conversation was or was not had in the presence of Ethel Anderson, the wife of R. J. Anderson. The court should, of course, have ruled upon the motion, notwithstanding the ground therefor was not stated; but if it had ruled and denied the motion and the ruling was erroneous, the error so committed could not be of any avail to the defendants on this appeal for at least two reasons: First, it is not clear to what part of the officer's testimony the motion was addressed, the counsel not having specifically pointed out at the time of his motion the particular part of the testimony which he desired stricken from the record; second, the testimony, it will be conceded, was competent, relevant and material as to the defendant R. J. Anderson, and if counsel desired to confine the consideration thereof to said defendant, he should have asked for an instruction so limiting the consideration of the testimony by the jury. He failed to do this and such failure involved a failure to preserve the rights of the defendant Ethel Anderson in that particular.

The point next urged in the briefs, although in regular order it should have been the first to be advanced and considered, is that the trial court abused its discretion in its order denying the motion of the defendants for separate trials. Formerly, the law was that where two or more persons were jointly charged with a felony, any defendant so charged requiring it should be tried separately. See section 1098 of Deering's 1915 edition of the Penal Code. In the year 1921, however, the Legislature amended said section so that it now reads in part as follows:

"When two or more defendants are jointly charged with any public offense, whether felony or misdemeanor, they must be tried jointly, unless the court order separate trials. * * *" Stats. 1921, p. 90.

[8] Thus it will be noted that the court may, in its discretion, order separate trials of two or more defendants jointly charged with a felony, but is not bound or required to do so upon the mere request of any defendant. We presume that if there were circumstances in a particular case which would render it peculiarly proper or only just that there should be accorded to several defendants so charged separate trials, and such circumstances were in an appropriate legal way brought to the attention of the trial court, the question whether such court, in denying separate trials, had abused its discretion might be a proper subject of review. In the instant case, though, there is no showing which presents a reviewable question. The mere request of the defendants for separate trials and the order refusing the application constitute all there is of the record upon that question, and, obviously, upon such a showing this court cannot say whether there was or was not an abuse of discretion in the making of the order complained of. The same question has been considered by the courts of other state jurisdictions and by the federal courts, and by those courts held that whether two or more persons charged jointly with a felony shall be tried together or separately, is discretionary with the trial court. See Commonwealth v. Borasky et al., 214 Mass. 313, 316, 101 N. E. 377, and other cases therein cited; U. S. v. Ball et al., 163 U. S. 662, 16 Sup. Ct. 1192, 41 L. Ed. 300, 303; Lee Dock et al. v. U. S., 224 Fed. 431, 140 C. C. A 125; U. S. v. Marchant, 25 U. S. (12 Wheat.) 480, 6 L. Ed. 700. Whether there was a statute upon the subject in any of those cases does not appear, but we judge that in Massachusetts there was no such statute, from the fact that in Commonwealth v. James, 99 Mass. 438, the Supreme Court of that state uses this language: "The general rule is that persons jointly indicted should be tried together."

The objections to the action of the court in the giving and refusing to give certain instructions are numerous, but a few only of the assignments under this head will be given special notice herein. A portion of the language of the instruction based upon section 31 of the Penal Code, and because of the giving of which the defendants complain, is subject to just criticism, but, considered in its entirety, we cannot say that the jury could have been misled by it into a misapprehension of the rule declared by said section. The instruction stated, in the language of said section, that—

"all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether it be a felony or misdemeanor, and whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission, * * * are principals in any crime so committed."

Thus far the instruction is unobjectionable. But the instruction proceeds:

"In other words, where a person stands by, aids, assists, or encourages in the perpetration of a crime, he is just as guilty as the person who actually does it, and is to be punished as the principal. So that, if you believe beyond a reasonable doubt, from all the facts and circumstances and evidence in this case, that the defendants, or either of them, aided, abetted, and encouraged the robbery, * * * if you find such robbery was committed, then it is your duty to find said defendant, or the one so aiding and abetting, guilty as charged in the information."

[9] It will be noted that the verbs expressing action in the italicized part of the instruction are stated in the disjunctive form. Under the decisions that part of the instruction is for that reason erroneous, and taken alone, or where the error is not cured by other instructions given on the same subject, a very serious question is always presented. People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 486, 492, 55 Pac. 581, 68 Am. St. Rep. 50. But the first and latter parts of the instruction accurately state the rule and, as the objectionable part is used in immediate connection with the parts that are correct, we do not think the jury could have been confused as to the true rule. The defective part was cured by the parts of the instruction correctly stating the rule. People v. Fredoni, 12 Cal. App. 686, 108 Pac. 663. It would be most unreasonable to assume or believe that any intelligent person, reading or hearing the instruction read, would form the conclusion therefrom that a person innocently encouraging or aiding or assisting in the commission of a crime could be held liable for the perpetration thereof.

[10] It is insisted that the instruction given by the court to the effect that if the jury found "beyond a reasonable doubt from all the facts and circumstances and evidence in this case, that at the time charged in the information herein, the defendants or either of them, were alone or acting in concert with another or others, took and carried away the property mentioned in the information, or any part of it, the property of the complaining witness, * * * from his person or immediate presence, and against his will, by putting him in fear as defined in these instructions, or by force and violence to his person, * * * with the intent to deprive the said Litts of his ownership therein and convert the same to their or either of their own use, then you will find the defendants or either of them that you find so acted, guilty of the crime of robbery as charged in said information," is not applicable to any evidence in the case. The foundation of this claim is based upon the assumption that there is no evidence in the record showing or tending to show that Ethel Anderson had any hand in the commission of the offense. We have, in effect, already answered this proposition in the declaration above that it was for the jury to determine from all the evidence whether the conduct of Ethel Anderson in connection with the transaction, as shown by the evidence, was such as to warrant the conclusion that she was a party to the conspiracy to rob Litts or take from him in a wrongful manner his personal property.

The defendants further complain of the action of the court in refusing to give a number of instructions requested by them. We have examined said instructions, and also the entire charge of the court, and so have found that every principle stated in the rejected instructions was covered by other instructions embraced within the charge as given by the court.

We have given this record, particularly the evidence herein, extended consideration, because of the earnest insistence of counsel for the appellants that the evidence wholly fails to support the verdict, this point being specially emphasized as to the defendant Ethel Anderson. Indeed, our sole purpose in stating herein the testimony of the defendants was to show, as we think we have shown, that their statements under oath, as before suggested, bolstered, rather than disturbed, the case as made by the people. The verdict, in our judgment, is amply supported as to both defendants.

We have found no prejudicial error in the record, and, accordingly the judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; FINCH, P. J.

---

59 Cal. App. 642

HAMAKER v. PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC CO. (Civ. 2480.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 15, 1922.)

1. Quieting title ⊂⊃52—Decree held to grant only easement in land.

A decree adjudging plaintiff to be the owner in fee of land subject to rights, privileges, and easements owned by defendant, and which adjudges defendant to be the owner of a certain water ditch, power and telephone lines, together with rights of way therealong, held to grant only an easement to defendant, since the ownership of a right of way for a ditch or power line or telephone line is but the ownership of an easement.

2. Quieting title ⊂⊃52—Easement of rights of way held sufficiently described in decree allowing same.

A decree definitely locating the points of entrance upon land of three rights of way, and giving the courses and distances to points of exit, and referring to a delineated map, held to sufficiently describe the boundaries of such easements, particularly in view of the fact that improvements on the easements were already constructed.

3. Eminent domain ⊂⊃318—Use of easement by condemnation does not limit its extent.

Where an easement consisting of a right of way for an aqueduct has been acquired by condemnation, the construction and use of an aqueduct thereon does not establish the extent of the easement so as to preclude thereafter replacing the aqueduct with a larger one.

4. Quieting title ⊂⊃52—Judgment concerning easement held not to enlarge rights acquired by original condemnation.

A judgment defining the rights of the owner of an easement which referred to judgment in condemnation proceedings by which the easement was acquired, and providing that it should "remain in full force," held not to enlarge the rights granted by the original judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Placer County; J. E. Prewett, Judge.

Action by Sadie F. Hamaker against the Pacific Gas & Electric Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Lowell, Lowell & Lowell, of Auburn, for appellant.

Thos. J. Straub and Wm. B. Bosley, both of San Francisco, and Raglan Tuttle, of Auburn, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. By this action plaintiff sought to quiet her title to 80 acres of land. The answer alleges that the defendant owns easements in the land to maintain and operate a certain water ditch and its branches, an electric transmission line, a telephone line, and an aqueduct, together with a definitely described right of way through which said aqueduct is maintained. The court found that at the commencement of the action the defendant owned, maintained, and operated the water ditch, electric line, and telephone line, "together with a right of way therealong, for the purpose of maintaining, patrolling, repairing and operating" the same. The court also found that the defendant acquired by a judgment of condemnation, rendered January 22, 1917, the alleged right of way for an aqueduct, in which judgment, as well as in the judgment herein, such right of way was particularly described. In the first judgment the character of the aqueduct proposed to be constructed was described, in general language, as consisting of a tunnel and an open ditch, without giving the capacity of the aqueduct or the dimensions of the tunnel or ditch. The judgment contained certain conditions to be performed by defendant, such as the construction and maintenance of bridges, fences, etc. The judgment and final order of condemnation are set out in full in the findings herein. In the year 1917, after the rendition of the judgment of condemnation, the company constructed on the right of way an aqueduct having the capacity of 4,000 miner's inches of water, and used the same until the end of the irrigation season of 1919. In the following January the company commenced the enlargement of the aqueduct, within the limits of the right of way so condemned, to a capacity of 12,000 miner's inches. Plaintiff thereupon instituted this action for the evident purpose of preventing such enlargement. From the judgment rendered in favor of the defendant the plaintiff prosecutes this appeal on the judgment roll alone.

[1] Appellant contends that the court erred in adjudging the defendant to be the owner of the rights of way involved, and that the "decree should not go further than to give the gas company easements to maintain and operate the existing improvements." The decree adjudges the plaintiff to be the owner in fee of the land "subject to the respective rights, privileges, and easements which said defendant owns therein, as hereinafter stated." The decree then adjudges the defendant to be the owner of the water ditch and the power and telephone lines, together with rights of way "therealong for the purpose of maintaining, patrolling, repairing, and operating the same." The ownership of a right of way for a ditch or a power line or telephone line is the ownership of an easement. It is apparent that the judgment declares the defendant to be the owner of easements merely.

[2] It is urged that the descriptions of these three rights of way are insufficient to enable one to locate them. The judgment locates definitely the points of entrance upon plaintiff's land, gives the courses and distances to the points of exit, though some of the courses are given generally as "northerly" or "a general westerly and northerly direction," and recites that the same are delineated on a map annexed to defendant's answer. The ditch and the power and telephone lines had been constructed, as the court finds, prior to the commencement of the action, and were therefore definitely located on the land itself. Had the rights of way been located with reference to permanent monuments upon the land, the description would certainly have been sufficient. No reason appears why these permanent improvements may not be treated as monuments.

[3] The principal ground urged for a reversal is that, since the defendant had constructed an aqueduct along the right of way acquired by condemnation, and had used the same for several years, the limit of the land occupied by such aqueduct is the limit of defendant's rights in the plaintiff's land, citing Winslow v. City of Vallejo, 148 Cal. 723, 84 Pac. 191, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 851, 113 Am. St. Rep. 349, and similar cases. In the Winslow Case it is said:

"The rule is well settled that where a grant of an easement is general as to the extent of the burden to be imposed on the servient tenement, an exercise of the right, with the acquiescence and consent of both parties, in a particular course or manner, fixes the right, and limits it to the particular course or manner in which it has been enjoyed."

The right of way given the defendant by the judgment of condemnation, however, was a definitely described parcel of land, with no limit upon the character of improvement to be constructed, except that it was to be an aqueduct for the conveyance of water.

"The condemnor may bind itself to a specified plan of construction or specified use of the property, and have damages assessed upon that basis. In that case an action can be maintained for any damage caused by a subsequent change in the works or use. So if the damages were in fact assessed on the basis of a certain mode of construction, by the procurement or acquiescence of the parties, it has been held that this fact may be shown and relief obtained in case of a change of construction. But, if there has been no such limitation in the condemnation, the condemnor acquires the right to change its works, or increase or change the use of the property as it may deem best, so long as it exercises due care and skill in so doing, and keeps within the purpose of the original appropriation, and no action will lie for damages caused by such changes." Lewis on Eminent Domain (3d Ed.) § 830.

In Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Polhemus, 178 Fed. 904, 102 C. C. A. 105, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 465, where the trial court had held that the company was without the right to erect additional poles between those originally erected, it is said:

"We are clearly of opinion that the use of such additional poles as from time to time may be required to support the line is an incident to the old easement, and not a new one. It would be intolerable and at variance with salutary principles of law * * * If an easement could be taken piecemeal, so to speak, and for a lesser purpose than for the entire use, for the full enjoyment of which the right of condemnation is alone conferred."

"A condemning corporation may condemn lands sufficient to provide for not only its present but also its prospective necessities." 20 C. J. 637; Spring Valley W. W. v. Drinkhouse, 92 Cal. 528, 28 Pac. 681; City of Los Angeles v. Pomeroy, 124 Cal. 597, 57 Pac. 585; Central Pacific Ry. Co. v. Feldman, 152 Cal. 303, 92 Pac. 849.

It would be idle to condemn lands sufficient for prospective necessities if, when the necessity arose, the land could not be used without an additional condemnation.

[4] It is finally contended that the judgment herein enlarges the company's rights as given by the judgment of condemnation and relieves it from the obligations therein imposed upon defendant. The answer pleads the judgment rendered in the condemnation proceeding, sets it out in full, and bases defendant's claim to the right of way for the aqueduct on such judgment, and alleges that it is in full force. The findings in this case set the judgment out in full, and recite that such judgment and the final order of condemnation "remain in full force." It is perfectly clear that the rights of the parties under that judgment are in no wise changed by the judgment herein.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

59 Cal. App. 486

CARTER v. ROWLEY. (Civ. 3627.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Oct. 25, 1922.)

1. Estoppel ⊜75—Agent held to have apparent authority to sell car.

Where the owner of a car employed as agent to procure a purchaser for the car one who was engaged in the business of selling used cars both on his own account and for others, and delivered his car into the possession of the agent at his premises, where there were signs advertising that it was the agent's business to sell used cars, he clothed the agent with indicia of authority to sell the car, according to the custom of trade and the general understanding of business men, so that a sale by the agent in excess of his actual authority gave good title to the buyer, who had no knowledge of the limitations on the authority.

2. Estoppel ⊜72—Authority to secure purchaser and report does not give authority to sell.

Authority given by an owner of a car to an agent to secure a purchaser for the car and report to the owner gives the agent no actual authority to sell the car, but if he is given apparent authority to sell it, an innocent buyer secures good title under the rule that, where the loss falls upon one of two innocent persons, it should fall on the principal who has armed the agent with apparent authority.

3. Principal and agent ⊜103(7)—Possession of agent under circumstances usually accompanying authority to sell gives apparent authority.

Where a principal intrusts his property to an agent under circumstances such as usually accompany authority to sell the property according to the custom of the trade and general understanding of business men, the agent's possession is evidence that he has received from the owner authority to sell.

4. Principal and agent ⊜148(2)—Statement to purchaser principal must sign transfer does not give notice agent had no authority to sell.

A statement by the agent to the purchaser of a used automobile that the owner of the car would have to sign the transfer on a certificate of registration, though it was notice that the car belonged to the principal and not to the agent, was not notice that the agent had no authority to sell the car but only to secure a purchaser and report to the principal.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

Replevin by George S. Carter against A. M. Rowley. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Chester H. Van Winkle, of San Diego, and Wilton W. Webster and George S. Carter, both of Pasadena, for appellant.

Wright & McKee, of San Diego, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an action to recover an automobile, or its value—alleged to be $600—together with damages for its detention. From a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals, contending that the uncontradicted evidence shows him to be entitled to the automobile, and that the findings to the effect that he is neither the owner nor entitled to possession are not supported by the evidence.

Robert J. McNabb was engaged in the business of selling secondhand cars at Lamada Park, in Los Angeles county. Some time between the 16th and 20th of June, 1920, plaintiff left his car with McNabb for the purpose of finding a purchaser. McNabb sold and delivered it to defendant. Plaintiff, claiming that McNabb exceeded his instructions, and that therefore the title to the car did not pass to defendant, claims the right to redelivery.

The further facts, so far as they are pertinent to the inquiry, are substantially as follows: McNabb testified that he is "a garage man and a used car agent"; that at the times in question he was in the used car business, selling used cars, both his own and those belonging to other persons which were left on consignment with him; that the cars were usually displayed on his sales lot and sometimes inside his garage; that the garage was used for the making of repairs and for the storage and display of cars; that it was used for the storage of his own cars and of such cars as were left with him by others to be sold; and that he was not in the storage business. His testimony that he was not in the storage business is corroborated by that of his bookkeeper, who testified that so far as he knew McNabb never did a storage business. It thus will be seen that, though McNabb testified that he was a "garage man," the only business in which he was engaged was that of selling secondhand cars, and that he did not have a garage for carrying on the business of storing other persons' cars, but that he used his garage solely for his own convenience in storing his own cars and such cars as were left with him for sale.

Some time between the 16th and 20th of June, 1920, plaintiff drove his car to McNabb's place of business, exhibited it to McNabb, and instructed the latter to try to find a purchaser at a price which would net plaintiff $575. Plaintiff told McNabb that if he found a purchaser who would pay $575 net "bring him to me and I will sign the necessary license transfer and anything else that is necessary for the completion of the sale." On the following day plaintiff left his car with an employee of McNabb on or near the latter's premises. Plaintiff testified that he took the car there in order that McNabb might find a purchaser for it. On June 26, 1920, plaintiff's car, along with a number of other secondhand machines on exhibition for sale, was on display in McNabb's vacant lot. While thus on display it was sold and delivered by McNabb to defendant for $615. It seems that McNabb embezzled all of the purchase price which defendant paid for the car, or at any rate converted the money to his own use. Hence this action by plaintiff to regain possession of the car or to recover its value.

McNabb, when he sold the car to defendant, did not claim to be the owner. Defendant unquestionably knew that the car was owned by plaintiff; but we think the evidence shows that defendant was led to believe, and that he did believe, that McNabb was authorized by plaintiff to sell the car, and that for that purpose McNabb was possessed of all the authority of a factor; that is, defendant, it would seem, was led to and did believe that McNabb was an agent who, in the pursuit of his independent calling as a dealer in secondhand cars, was employed by plaintiff to sell the car for him, and that for that purpose McNabb was vested by plaintiff with the possession and control of the car and was authorized to receive payment of the purchase price.

McNabb gave defendant a bill of sale for the car, and made out in his own name as the seller. This he undoubtedly would have had the right to do had the car been delivered to him with authority to sell it for plaintiff; for in that event he would have been a factor; and it unquestionably is the rule that, in the absence of usage or instructions to the contrary, a factor may sell in his own name the property which is intrusted to him for sale. 25 C. J., p. 250.

Plaintiff never signed any statement of transfer indorsed on the certificate of registration which had been issued to him by the state motor vehicle department. It seems that at the time when McNabb sold the car to defendant, the latter, in compliance with the state Motor Vehicle Act, signed a statement of transfer as the transferee, and was told by McNabb that he (McNabb) would take the registration certificate to plaintiff and have the latter sign the statement of transfer as the transferor. Defendant, accordingly, after having signed the statement of transfer as the transferee, left the certificate of registration with McNabb for the purpose of having him take it to plaintiff to secure the latter's signature to the transfer statement. It is probable that McNabb forged plaintiff's name to the statement of transfer; for defendant in due time received from the state motor vehicle department through the United States mail a certificate of transfer. This could have been regularly issued only when signed by plaintiff, as the transferor, as well as by defendant, as the transferee.

[1, 2] Upon these facts we think that defendant has acquired an unimpeachable title to the car, notwithstanding that plaintiff's instructions to McNabb were "to find a purchaser," and notwithstanding that plaintiff, when he agreed to leave the car with McNabb, said to the latter, "when you find a purchaser for this car who will pay me $575 net, you bring him to me and I will sign the license transfer and anything else that is necessary for the completion of the sale of the car." For the purpose of this decision we shall assume that this language was tantamount to an instruction to McNabb to do no more than merely to seek a purchaser, and if one were found to report the offer to plaintiff. If this be the proper construction to be placed upon plaintiff's instructions to McNabb, then it unquestionably may be conceded that McNabb had no actual authority to sell plaintiff's car. An agent does not possess an actual authority to sell if he is merely given the property to seek a purchaser and report the offer to his principal. Levi v. Booth, 58 Md. 305, 42 Am. Rep. 332. But though McNabb may have been given no actual authority to sell, we think that plaintiff by his acts clothed him with an apparent or ostensible authority.

As between two innocent persons, one of whom must suffer, the loss should fall on the principal who has armed the agent with apparent authority and thus has enabled him to obtain the advantage of the person with whom he trades, rather than on the purchaser, where the agent acts within the apparent scope of his authority and there is nothing in the transaction to put the purchaser on notice that the agent is exceeding his authority. Wilcox-Rose Construction Co. v. Evans, 9 Cal. App. 121, 98 Pac. 83. The nature and extent of this exception to the general rule that a purchaser gets no title if his vendor has none, or if the vendor has no authority from the owner, are very clearly stated in the opinion of Senator Verplanck in Saltus v. Everett, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 278, 32 Am. Dec. 547. After some remarks on the transfer of notes, bills, etc., the learned author of that opinion says:

"After a careful examination of all the English cases and those of this state, that have been cited or referred to, I come to this general conclusion, that the title of property in things movable can pass from the owner only by his own consent and voluntary act, or by operation of law; but that the honest purchaser who buys for a valuable consideration in the course of trade, without notice of any adverse claim, or any circumstances which might lead a prudent man to suspect such adverse claim, will be protected in his title against the original owner in those cases, and in those only, where such owner has by his own direct voluntary act conferred upon the person from whom the bona fide vendee derives title, the apparent right of property, as owner, or of disposal as an agent. I find two distinct classes of cases under this head, and no more."

After stating the first of these classes, the opinion proceeds:

"The other class of cases in which the owner loses the right of following and reclaiming his property is where he has, by his own voluntary act or consent, given to another such evidence of the right of selling his goods as, according to the custom of trade, or the common understanding of the world, usually accompanies the authority of disposal; or, to use the language of Lord Ellenborough, when the owner 'has given the external indicia of the right of disposing of his property.' Here it is well settled that, however the possessor of such external indicia may abuse the confidence of his principal, a sale to a fair purchaser divests the first title, and the authority to sell so conferred, whether real or apparent, is good against him who gave it."

The question in cases belonging to both classes is: Has the real owner intentionally conferred on the vendor the apparent ownership or the apparent right of selling? If he has, the purchaser is protected; otherwise not.

[3] Mere possession, it is true, even by one who happens to be a dealer in the same class of goods, is not sufficient evidence of ownership or of authority to sell to protect one who purchases from the possessor. Covill v. Hill, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 323; Linnen v. Cruger, 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 633; Wilson v. Nason, 17 N. Y. Super. Ct. 155; Case v .Jennings, 17 Tex. 661. See, also, Pacific Acceptance Corp. v. Bank of Italy (Cal. App.) 209 Pac. 1024, and Levi v. Booth, supra. But where, in addition to possession by the vendor, the owner has given such evidence of authority to sell as usually accompanies such authority according to the custom of trade or the general understanding of business men, then, as was stated by Mr. Justice Field in an early California case, Wright v. Solomon, 19 Cal. 76, 79 Am. Dec. 196, the vendor's possession under such circumstances is evidence, not that he is the owner, but that he has received authority from the owner to sell. Heath v. Stoddard, 91 Me. 499, 40 Atl. 547; Pickering v. Busk, 15 East. 38. See, also, Galbraith v. Weber, 58 Wash. 132, 107 Pac. 1050, 28 L. R. A. [N. S.] 341, and note to Velsian v. Lewis, 3 Am. St. Rep. 201.

"If the principal," says Lord Ellenborough in Pickering v. Busk, supra, "send his commodity to a place where it is the ordinary business of the person to whom it is confided to sell, it must be intended that the commodity was sent thither for the purpose of sale. If the owner of a horse sent it to a repository of sale, can it be implied that he sent it thither for any other purpose than that of sale? Or if one send goods to an auction room, can it be supposed that he sent them thither merely for safe custody? Where the commodity is sent in such a way and to such a place as to exhibit an apparent purpose of sale, the principal will be bound, and the purchaser safe." And in the same case Judge Bayley, in a concurring opinion, states the rule as follows:

"It may be admitted that the plaintiff did not give Swallow any express authority to sell; but an implied authority may be given; and if a person put goods into the custody of another whose common business it is to sell, without limiting his authority, he thereby confers an implied authority upon him to sell them."

The principles governing this case are well stated by the Supreme Judicial Court of Maine in Heath v. Stoddard, supra:

"A principal is not only bound by the acts of his agent, whether general or special, within the authority which he has actually given him, but he is also bound by his agent's acts within the apparent authority which the principal himself knowingly permits his agent to assume, or which he holds the agent out to the public as possessing. 1 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) vol. 1, page 969, and cases cited. Whether or not a principal is bound by the acts of his agent, when dealing with a third person who does not know the extent of his authority, depends, not so much upon the actual authority given or intended to be given by the principal, as upon the question, what did such third person, dealing with the agent, believe, and have a right to believe as to the agent's authority, from the acts of the principal? Griggs v. Selden, 58 Vt. 561, 5 Atl. 504; Towle v. Leavitt, 23 N. H. 360; (55 Am. Dec. 195); Walsh v. Hartford Ins. Co., 73 N. Y. 5. For instance, if a person should send a commodity to a store or warehouse where it is the ordinary business to sell articles of the same nature, would not a jury be justified in coming to the conclusion that, at least, the owner had by his own act invested the person with whom the article was intrusted, with an apparent authority which would protect an innocent purchaser?"

Let us now apply these principles to the present case. Plaintiff, who employed McNabb as his agent to find a purchaser, voluntarily left his car with McNabb, a dealer in secondhand cars; the so-called "garage" being but a building in which McNabb stored the seondhand cars which were held by him for sale. His premises were surrounded by conspicuous signs advertising to the world that his business was that of selling used cars. Plaintiff testified that he knew McNabb's line of business. With this knowledge he left his car with McNabb in order that the latter might find a purchaser for it. McNabb was more than a mere bailee; he was plaintiff's agent to find a purchaser. Whatever may have been the private arrangement between plaintiff and McNabb, whatever the latter's actual authority may have been, plaintiff, by his own voluntary act, clothed McNabb with such indicia of authority to sell the car as usually accompanies such authority according to the custom of trade and the general understanding of business men.

We find nothing in any of the authorities cited by appellant which conflicts with these views. A case which at first blush might seem to give some color to appellant's position is Levi v. Booth, supra. But in that case the purchaser had notice of his vendor's want of authority to sell. It is recited in the opinion that "proof was given that before such alleged sale, Henry Levi [the purchaser] had been informed that the ring belonged to the plaintiff [the owner], and that De Wolf [in whose possession the ring had been placed by the owner] had no power or authority to sell it." Nor is there anything in Pacific Acceptance Corporation v. Bank of Italy, supra, which conflicts with our conclusions. In that case the true owner of the truck, the defendant in the action, did nothing which could have misled the plaintiff, the innocent purchaser from Peniston. All that the owner did was to permit the truck to be used in certain work, together with other trucks which were being used by the purchasers thereof on the same job. Unlike the plaintiff here, the true owner in that case had not brought its property to such a place and in such a way as to exhibit an apparent purpose of sale.

[4] Appellant claims that respondent was placed upon notice when he learned from McNabb that the statement of transfer on the back of the certificate of registration was not signed by appellant as the transferor. Section 8 of the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1915, p. 402, as amended by St. 1917, p. 388, § 7), provides:

"Upon the transfer of ownership of any motor vehicle, the person in whose name such vehicle is registered and the person to whom ownership of such vehicle is to be transferred shall forthwith join in a statement of said transfer endorsed upon the reverse side of the certificate of registration of said motor vehicle in the space provided for said purpose, which statement shall be signed by the transferer and the legal owner in the manner and form of his signature contained on the face of said certificate, and which statement shall likewise be signed by the transferee, who shall also set forth below his signature his post-office address."

We fail to see how the fact that defendant was told by McNabb that it was necessary to have the transfer signed by plaintiff, in whose name, as the legal owner, the car was registered, is a circumstance which might lead defendant, as a prudent man, to suspect that McNabb had not been authorized to consummate a sale of the car. Such information would, of course, apprise defendant of plaintiff's ownership, but it would not alone suffice to charge him with notice that plaintiff had not authorized McNabb to make a sale. The language of the Motor Vehicle Act is that the person in whose name the vehicle is registered shall join in a statement of transfer "upon the transfer of ownership of any vehicle," not before the transfer of ownership. And though the act declares that delivery of the vehicle "shall be deemed not to have been made" and the title "shall be deemed not to have passed" until the transferee shall have received from the motor vehicle department a new registration certificate, it is quite obvious that if McNabb had in fact been actually authorized by plaintiff to sell the car, plaintiff could not have defeated the transfer of title by contumaciously refusing to join in a statement of transfer. The information communicated to defendant by McNabb was not sufficient to lead the former to suspect that McNabb did not possess authority to do everything necessary to effect a transfer of title up to that point, where nothing remained but the securing of plaintiff's signature to the statement of transfer.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, J.; CRAIG, J.

190 Cal. 204

FAWKES v. REYNOLDS. (L. A. 6732.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 19, 1922. Rehearing Denied Jan. 18, 1923.)

1. Appeal and error ⟹719(7)—Formal assignment of errors at law held not necessary.

On appeal under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 648, 650, a formal assignment of errors of law occurring at the trial is not necessary, so that the sufficiency of an instruction was reviewable where the bill of exceptions with reference thereto recited that after argument to the jury the court instructed it, and to each and all of the instructions so given plaintiff enters his exception.

2. Appeal and error ⟹699(4)—Record held not so ambiguous as to require presumption that certain instruction was given at appellant's request.

Where the bill of exceptions showed that the instructions were all given by the court, so that each party had an exception thereto by virtue of Code Civ. Proc. § 647, the record was not so ambiguous as to require finding that an instruction complained of by appellant was given at his request, since such request should have been made manifest by incorporation of appellant's instructions in the bill of exceptions, or by a statement that the instruction was given at his request.

3. Appeal and error ⟹1078(4)—Alleged error in instruction held not waived by failure to present it in appellant's brief.

Alleged error in instruction will not be deemed to have been waived by appellant's failure to present the point in his brief, where the cause was first heard in the District Court of Appeal before transfer to the court in bank, and the District Court of Appeal passed on the instruction, and in respondent's petition for transfer to the court in bank and in the oral argument of the parties subsequently printed the question as to the instruction was presented.

4. Property ⟹4—Water used in irrigation is not personal property.

Water in use for irrigation purposes is not personal property.

5. Assault and battery ⟹15—Defendant held entitled to protect pipe line and water therein on plaintiff's premises by use of reasonably necessary force.

Where defendant had a right to flow of water through pipe lines across plaintiff's land, he had a right to protect his rights in the water and the flow thereof by entering on the land and protecting the property by the use of all force reasonably necessary.

6. Assault and battery ⟹42—Amount of force justified in repelling an assault on one defending his property held for the jury.

The question of the amount of force justified in repelling an assault against defendant protecting possession of property is peculiarly within the province of the jury.

7. Assault and battery ⟹15—Defendant held not to have used more force than necessary in protecting property.

Where defendant, having the right to protect pipe line with flow of water across plaintiff's land, entered thereon, and while standing on the pipe line when attacked by plaintiff struck plaintiff three times, each blow knocking him down as he came to renew the assault, but defendant did not follow him or continue the assault, but remained upon the pipe line, verdict for defendant should not be disturbed on the ground that he used more force than was reasonably necessary.

8. Trial ⟹194(4)—Instruction held not to invade province of jury.

In action for assault, in which the evidence showed that defendant had entered a plea of guilty to a charge of assault, an instruction that such a plea was not to be taken by the jury as conclusive that defendant was guilty of the crime of assault and battery, but only regarded as an admission on his part, and that the jury should consider all that was said by him at the time, was not an invasion of the province of the jury, as the instruction was proper as to the law, and left the question of fact for the jury.

9. Evidence ⟹265(11) — Plea of guilty on charge of criminal assault held not conclusive as admission in civil action therefor.

In a civil action for assault, evidence of a plea of guilty by defendant on a charge of criminal assault for the same transaction was not conclusive as an admission of an unjustifiable assault, but was to be weighed in connection with defendant's explanation thereof and all the other evidence.

Sloane, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by J. W. Fawkes, Jr., against Henry Reynolds. From a judgment of the superior court in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals, and on reversal of the judgment by the District Court of Appeal the case was transferred to the court in bank. Judgment of superior court affirmed.

Wheaton A. Gray and Walter W. Little, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Jennings & Belcher, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. This is an action to recover damages for an alleged battery committed by the defendant upon the person of the plaintiff. The defendant admitted the battery, but justified it on the ground of self-defense and defense of property. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Upon the appeal plaintiff presented two points in his briefs: First, that the uncontradicted evidence establishes that the defendant used excessive and unjustifiable force; and, second, that the court erred in instructing the jury with reference to the effect of a plea of guilty entered by the defendant to a complaint for battery based upon the same occurrence which is the subject of this action. The District Court of Appeal (Second District, Division 2), in passing upon this case, held that the defendant was not justified in committing a breach of the peace, and consequently reversed the judgment. A transfer to this court was asked on the ground that that question was not involved in the appeal and was not presented in the briefs. We will first consider that question.

The battery occurred in a controversy concerning the use of water on the morning of August 11, 1919. The defendant alleged that the acts of violence committed upon the plaintiff were for the purpose of protecting his property, "to wit, the water flowing through said pipe line; that it was necessary that said defendant act in the manner above set forth in order to prevent the wrongful and unlawful diversion and appropriation of said water by the above-named plaintiff. * * *" With his pumping plant, on his land, defendant was pumping water, which flowed through pipes crossing plaintiff's land to the land of one Morro, by whom it was used for irrigation. The plaintiff opened the valves in these pipes on his own land, and was using the water for irrigation of his land, apparently believing that an arrangement had been made with defendant for such use. The defendant had not yet completed the irrigation of Morro's land, and intended to pump about three hours longer for Morro, and then to allow the water to be used by the plaintiff as he had done theretofore. This he could not do with the valves open on plaintiff's land. To retain the water in the pipe line, it was necessary that the valves should be in place. Plaintiff had removed a valve, and defendant entered upon plaintiff's land to replace it. Being unable to find it, he stuffed a standpipe with burlap and rags, and stood on them, to overcome the water pressure and thus retain the water in the pipe line. The trial court in effect instructed the jury that the defendant had a right to use all reasonably necessary force to prevent the plaintiff from interfering with defendant's effort in the above manner to retain the water in the pipe line if the water was being used without the defendant's consent. Under such circumstances the jury were instructed that the defendant was entitled to use whatever force may reasonably have been indicated to be necessary to protect his person from injury and to prevent the further diversion of the water by plaintiff, and that, if the defendant thus had a lawful right to use force at the time of the encounter, and used only necessary force in the protection of his person or property, that he was not liable for damages.

[1] The verdict of the jury implies a finding that the defendant did not consent to plaintiff's use of the water, and this implied finding is supported by the defendant's evidence. It follows that under this instruction the verdict of the jury was proper. This instruction as to the right of the defendant to use necessary force if the water was being used without his consent was not attacked in the plaintiff's brief, nor was there any assignment of error in the bill of exceptions in which it was claimed that this instruction was erroneous, nor does the record disclose whether or not this instruction was given by the court at the request of either the plaintiff or the defendant. The bill of exceptions with reference to the instruction is as follows:

"The cause was argued to the jury by counsel, and the court thereupon instructed the jury, and to each and all of the instructions so given by the court the plaintiff now enters his exception to the same and to each of the same."

The defendant now claims that we cannot now consider the sufficiency of this instruction.

Before the amendment of section 659, Code of Civil Procedure, it was essential that an assignment of error be made in the statement of the case on a motion for a new trial. Section 659, subd. 3, Code of Civil Procedure, as enacted in 1873–74 (Stats. 1873–74, p. 315), upon that subject is as follows:

"* * * When the notice designates, as the ground of the motion, errors in law occurring at the trial, and excepted to by the moving party, the statement shall specify the particular errors upon which the party will rely. If no such specification be made, the statement shall be disregarded on the hearing of the motion. * * *"

Under this section the authorities cited by the respondent, Bohnert v. Bohnert, 95 Cal. 444, 30 Pac. 590; Estate of Black, 132 Cal. 392, 64 Pac. 695; and many other cases (People v. C. P. R. R. Co., 43 Cal. 398; Bagnall v. Roach, 76 Cal. 106, 18 Pac. 137; Smith v. Smith, 119 Cal. 183, 186, 48 Pac. 730, 51 Pac. 183; Laver v. Hotaling, 115 Cal. 613, 47 Pac. 593; Thompson v. Patterson, 54 Cal. 542; Budd v. Drais, 50 Cal. 120; Heinlen v. Heilbron, 71 Cal. 557, 563, 12 Pac. 673; Hershey v. Kness, 75 Cal. 115, 16 Pac. 548; Leonard v. Shaw, 114 Cal. 69, 45 Pac. 1012; Lambert v. Marcuse, 137 Cal. 44, 69 Pac. 620), hold that, in the absence of such assignment of error, the court will not consider such errors upon appeal, as the trial court was precluded from considering them in the granting or denying of the motion for a new trial, but this provision has been repealed, and the authorities cited no longer apply (Code Civ. Proc. § 659; Stats. 1915, p. 201). The appeal in this case is based upon a bill of exceptions, prepared under section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that the bill of exceptions "must contain all the exceptions and proceedings taken upon which the party relies. * * *" If the exception to the verdict or decision is upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify it, the objection must specify the particulars in which such evidence is alleged to be insufficient. Code Civ. Proc. § 648. A formal assignment of errors at law occurring at the trial is not necessary under the provisions of section 648, 650, Code of Civil Procedure, and errors of law appearing in such bill can be reviewed without any formal assignment of error. Such was required in a statement of the case under section 659, subd. 3, Statutes 1873–74, p. 315. Reay v. Butler, 69 Cal. 572, 11 Pac. 463; Shadburne v. Daly, 76 Cal. 355, 18 Pac. 403; Hagman v. Williams, 88 Cal. 146, 25 Pac. 1111; Barfield v. South Side Irrigation Co., 111 Cal. 118, 43 Pac. 406; Snell v. Payne, 115 Cal. 218, 46 Pac. 1069; Smith v. Smith, 119 Cal. 183, 51 Pac. 183; Harper v. Gordon, 128 Cal. 489, 61 Pac. 84. It follows that the contention that the error, if any, in the giving of this instruction cannot be considered because of the failure to assign the giving thereof as error in the bill of exceptions is not well taken.

[2] Plaintiff's claim that this court must indulge in the presumption that the instruction under discussion was given at the request of the defendant cannot be maintained. It is true that where the record is ambiguous upon this subject the presumption in favor of the judgment would require us to assume that the instruction was given at the request of the appellant. Gray v. Eschen, 125 Cal. 1, 5, 57 Pac. 664; Sutter Butte C. Co. v. American R. & A. Co., 182 Cal. 549, 555, 189 Pac. 277. The latter case was one in which the record was prepared under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure. In Gray v. Eschen, supra, the record was ambiguous for the reason that it appeared from the bill of exceptions that the instructions were based upon those given by counsel, and in some instances modified by the court, and the exceptions thereto were thus stated:

"It is understood that every portion of the charge is deemed excepted to by each counsel, and every omission or modification is also deemed excepted to by each counsel."

In this condition of the record the court was unable to say whether or not the particular parts of the instructions objected to were proposed by the party objecting.

In the bill of exceptions now before us it appears that the instructions were all given by the court, and under the law since 1909 each party has an exception thereto. Code Civ. Proc. § 647; Stats. 1909, p. 586. Without further showing in the bill of exceptions the plaintiff is entitled to attack the correctness of the instruction. If the instruction was given at the request of the plaintiff, that fact should have been made manifest by the incorporation of plaintiff's instruction in the bill of exceptions or by a statement that the instruction was given at plaintiff's request.

[3] It is true that by failure to present the alleged error in the instruction in plaintiff's brief the point may be deemed to have been waived (City Savings Bank v. Enos, 135 Cal. 167, 67 Pac. 52), and the court need not inquire into the correctness of the instruction (Rogers v. Schlotterback, 167 Cal. 35, 138 Pac. 728; De Sanchez v. McMahon, 35 Cal. 218; City of Alameda v. Cohen, 133 Cal. 5, 65 Pac. 127; Bird v. Potter, 146 Cal. 286, 79 Pac. 970; People v. Duncan, 22 Cal. App. 430, 134 Pac. 797; People v. Stein, 23 Cal. App. 108, 137 Pac. 271; Arnold v. Producers' Fruit Co., 141 Cal. 738, 75 Pac. 326; Hihn v. Courtis, 31 Cal. 399; Webber v. Clarke, 74 Cal. 11, 13, 15 Pac. 431; Moore v. San Vicente Lumber Co., 175 Cal. 212, 165 Pac. 687; A. B. Field & Co., Inc., v. Haven, 36 Cal. App. 669, 173 Pac. 108; Vance v. Gilbert, 178 Cal. 574, 174 Pac. 42.

The District Court of Appeal, however, predicated its judgment of reversal upon the relative rights of the parties in the real estate, pipe line and water, and thus in effect held the instruction in question erroneous. In the defendant's petition for transfer to this court, and in the oral argument of the parties, subsequently printed, the question as to the correctness of this instruction has been presented. In view of the fact that the question has been raised by the District Court of Appeal, and is now presented by the parties, and is properly based upon the record on appeal, we do not feel justified in dismissing the point from consideration for the mere reason that the plaintiff failed to make the point in his briefs prior to the decision of the District Court of Appeal.

Counsel for plaintiff have presented the point by adopting the reasoning of the District Court of Appeal as their own. That court assumed for the purpose of the decision, that the defendant had a right to the free flow of the water through the pipe line crossing plaintiff's land, and held that the interference of the plaintiff therewith was a wrongful invasion of the defendant's right, and therefore a private nuisance, and that the defendant had a right to enter the plaintiff's premises for the purpose of abating this nuisance, provided it could be done without a breach of the peace.

Defendant does not seriously attack the reasoning or conclusion of the District Court of Appeal upon the fact assumed by them, but insists that the defendant was in effect engaged in recapturing personal property (water) which was being stolen by the plaintiff, and for that reason he was entitled to use all necessary force to recapture the property, citing in support of this contention the following authorities upon the right to recapture possession of stolen property and upon the right to maintain possession against a thief: 3 Blackstone, Com. 120; State v. Cessna, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 291; 2 R. C. L. p. 555, § 35; Barnes v. Martin, 15 Wis. 240, 82 Am. Dec. 670; Biggs v. Seufferlein, 164 Iowa, 241, 145 N. W. 507, L. R. A. 1915F, 673; Riffel v. Letts, 31 Cal. App. 426, 160 Pac. 845; Hodgeden v. Hubbard, 18 Vt. 504, 506, 46 Am. Dec. 167; Gyre v. Culver, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 592; Johnson v. Perry, 56 Vt. 703, 48 Am. Rep. 826; Hopkins v. Dickson, 59 N. H. 235; Kirby v. Foster, 17 R. I. 437, 22 Atl. 1111, 14 L. R. A. 317; Sterling v. Warden, 51 N. H. 217, 12 Am. Rep. 80; 1 Waterman on Trespass, §§ 159, 167; Walker v. Chanslor, 153 Cal. 118, 94 Pac. 606, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 455, 126 Am. St. Rep. 61.

[4] If we assume, as contended by defendant, that the act of the plaintiff in opening the pipe line upon plaintiff's property and allowing the water to flow out upon his property was the unlawful taking of the personal property of the defendant, which defendant had a right to recapture by use of all force reasonably necessary for that purpose, still the battery in question cannot be justified. Defendant did not undertake to regain possession of the water which had overflowed on the lands of the plaintiff; that would have been an impossibility. Moreover, it is now settled that water in use for irrigation is not personal property. Stanislaus Water Co. v. Bachman, 152 Cal. 716, 725, 93 Pac. 858, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 359; Copeland v. Fairview Land, etc., Co., 165 Cal. 148, 153, 131 Pac. 119. On the other hand, if we accept defendant's view that he was merely trying to prevent the plaintiff taking the water which was flowing in the pipe line rather than to recapture the water that had already overflowed, it is clear that he could have accomplished this object without entering the premises of the plaintiff by merely stopping his pump. It is clear, then, that the defendant was not justified in using the force he did upon the person of the plaintiff in an effort to retain possession of the water, for such force was wholly unnecessary for that purpose. It is clear that what the defendant was insisting upon was not his right to regain the water which had overflowed on plaintiff's land or to retain the water in his possession, but rather his right to use the pipe line across plaintiff's land for the transmission of the water to Morro. He was perfectly willing that the plaintiff should use the water upon the terms agreed upon as soon as Morro had been supplied with the amount necessary for irrigating his place. The real question, then, is whether the defendant had a right to maintain his position upon the pipe line for the purpose of continuing the flow of water through the pipe line to the premises of Morro. For the purpose of its decision the District Court of Appeal assumes that the defendant had a right to maintain the flow of water in the pipe line, but denied him the right to maintain that flow by any action which involved a breach of the peace. It is true that the interference by the plaintiff with defendant's right to the free flow of the water would be a nuisance. Civ. Code, § 3479; 20 R. C. L. p. 401, § 22; Lytle Creek W. Co. v. Perdew, 65 Cal. 447, 455, 4 Pac. 426; Civ. Code, § 3502. If the defendant had been attempting to remove an obstruction in the pipe line to the flow of water, it may be that these authorities would apply, although this point need not be determined. The situation here, however, is quite different.

[5] The defendant had entered upon plaintiff's land and had re-established the free flow of water through the pipe line, and had already abated the nuisance involved in the interference by the plaintiff with this pipe line. It was at this juncture, while he was maintaining his right to the flow of the water by his personal presence on the pipe line and by the stoppage of the diversion of the water by plaintiff, that plaintiff interfered. The defendant did not attack the plaintiff for the purpose of maintaining his rights in the pipe line. He remained standing on the pipe line, and was attacked by the plaintiff, and the injury to the plaintiff arose in the repulsion of his assault upon the defendant. Assuming, as was done by the District Court of Appeal, that the defendant had a right to the flow of the water through the pipe lines, and that this was an irrevocable right, and that he had such remedies as the law gave him to protect that right, it is clear that the defendant was not only protecting his right in the water, but was also protecting his rights to the flow of water through the pipe line, and was actually in possession of and maintaining that right at the instant of the assault made upon him by the plaintiff. The property in his possession at that time, then, consisted not only in the corpus of the water, but also the pipe line and the right of way through that pipe line for the flow of that water then actually being used for that purpose by him. Under such circumstances the defendant had the undoubted right to protect the property in his possession by the use of all force reasonably necessary for that purpose.

In view of the fact that the plaintiff and appellant not only does not attack the conclusion of the District Court of Appeal that the respondent was entitled to the right to use the pipe line at the time in question, but also adopts the reasoning of the District Court of Appeal as his own, we do not feel required to enter into a consideration of the exact character and nature of the defendant's right in the pipe line.

[6, 7] The plaintiff's contention that the verdict of the jury is erroneous because of the uncontradicted evidence that defendant used more force than was reasonably necessary cannot be sustained. The question of the amount of force justified in repelling an assault or maintaining the possession of property is one peculiarly within the province of the jury. It is true that defendant struck the plaintiff three terrific blows with his fist, but the defendant remained in his position upon the pipe line, and only struck one blow in each instance in defense of a separate assault by the plaintiff, who, three different times tried to push the defendant off the pipe line. The plaintiff was knocked down each time, but the defendant did not follow him up and continue the assault, but remained in place upon the pipe line. The verdict of the jury cannot be disturbed upon this ground.

[8, 9] It is claimed that an instruction invaded the province of the jury by instructing the jury on a question of fact. The instruction is as follows:

"Evidence has been introduced to the effect that the defendant appeared before a justice of the peace in the city of Burbank and entered a plea of guilty to a charge of assault and battery upon the person of the plaintiff herein. Such plea of guilty is not to be taken by you as being conclusive that the defendant was guilty of the crime of assault and battery against the plaintiff. This plea of guilty should only be regarded by you as an admission on the part of the defendant, and it is proper that you should consider all that was said by the defendant at that time."

The proposition advanced by the plaintiff is that it was for the jury after hearing all the evidence to determine what was proved by the plea of guilty. This is true, but it is also important that the jury should be advised that the plea of guilty and the judgment upon such plea were not conclusive and binding as a judgment fixing beyond question the fact that the encounter was an unjustifiable battery committed by Reynolds upon Fawkes, but that the jury was to determine that question, treating the plea of guilty as an admission of the defendant to be weighed in connection with his explanation thereof and all the evidence in the case. The instruction properly construed did not advise the jury as to the weight or effect of the admission, but, upon the contrary, left that question to the jury to determine under the instruction that as a matter of law the plea in the battery case was not conclusive, and that the whole matter was left open for their consideration. Under this instruction they were not precluded from determining the case solely upon the defendant's admission if they felt that the admission was in fact conclusive against the contentions advanced by the defendant in this case. The objection to this instruction is not well taken.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; WASTE, J.; SHURTLEFF, J.; LAWLOR, J.; LENNON, J.

I dissent: SLOANE, J.

---

190 Cal. 187

MARTIN v. HOWE et al. (Sac. 2905.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 12, 1922.)

1. Courts ⟸488(1)—Cause transferred to Supreme Court is decided on entire record.

Where a cause is transferred to the Supreme Court by the District Court of Appeal of its own motion or on petition of any of the parties, the case is set at large for decision upon the entire record, and not limited to a decision of the questions affecting the parties who secured the transfer.

2. Assignments ⟸129—Partial assignee can sue by joining assignor.

Where a claim had been assigned in part, the assignee can sue the debtor for his part of the claim, provided he joins his assignor either as plaintiff or defendant, so that the rights of all parties to the entire claim can be determined in one action.

3. Action ⟸53(1)—Defendant's objection to splitting of action is to the bringing of the second action.

Even in a case where a single cause of action against defendant is split, his objection is not to the first suit by plaintiff for a less amount than his due, but to a second suit to recover the balance.

4. Parties ⟸91—Other defendants cannot object assignors under partial assignment were joined as defendants, and not as plaintiffs.

In an action by an assignee of part of a claim, the defendants, who were liable for the claim, cannot object that the assignors were joined as defendants, and not as plaintiffs, without having refused to join as plaintiffs.

5. Parties ⟸96(3)—Joint owner of note can waive objection, if he is made defendant, without being asked to join as plaintiff.

A joint owner of the note sued on can waive the objection that he was joined as a defendant, and not as plaintiff, without being notified to join as plaintiff and refusing to do so, and he does waive that objection by joining in the prayer for judgment against the other defendants.

6. Limitation of actions ⟸197(1)—Evidence held to sustain court's findings as to date corporation debt was incurred.

Evidence held to sustain the court's finding that a corporate debt was incurred on the date a defective note was executed, though no record was kept of the transaction at the meeting of the board of directors on that date, so that stockholders of the corporation, who were not sued by the holders of that note within three years from that date, were not liable therefor.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Action by J. D. Martin against E. H. Howe and others to enforce a stockholders' liability. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed as to some of the defendants, and reversed, with directions to enter judgment for plaintiff against other defendants.

Lamberson, Burke & Lamberson, of Visalia (Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck, of San Francisco, Roland C. Foerster, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Everts, Ewing & Wild, of Fresno, and Power & McFadzean, of Visalia, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. [1] After decision in this action a petition for rehearing was filed in which it was claimed that the parties had not presented the question of the bar of the statute of limitations satisfactorily because the case was transferred to this court on petition of the defendants who were not involved in that question, and consequently it was believed that the matter would not be considered by this court, but that the conclusion of the District Court of Appeal on that branch of the case would be adopted without question. On the contrary, the transfer of the case here by the court of its own motion or on the petition of any of the parties set the case at large for the decision of this court upon the entire record. The liability of the defendants who did not appear in the petition for a transfer to this court turned upon the question of whether or not the liability of the corporation was created more than three years prior to the filing of the amended complaint in which they were joined as defendants for the first time in the action. This amended complaint was filed March 17, 1914. The note sued upon was dated April 22, 1911. This note was given to replace an earlier note of March 7, 1911, executed on behalf of the corporation by the president and secretary, and the question involved is as to whether or not this note was duly authorized and the original indebtedness thereby created. From an examination of the record we are satisfied that the finding of the trial court that the indebtedness accrued before the 17th of March, 1911, is sustained by the evidence, as it appears that this note was given at a meeting of the board of directors and then and there duly authorized, although no minutes of that meeting or of that authorization were entered upon the records of the corporation.

Upon other branches of the case we adopt the opinion heretofore prepared by Mr. Justice Lawlor as follows:

"This action was brought by the plaintiff, J. D. Martin, to recover from the defendants, as stockholders in the Lindsay Incorporated Oil Company, 44 per cent. of the amount due on a promissory note given to plaintiff and defendants B. B. Dudley and E. R. Dudley by that company, dated April 22, 1911, and secured by a mortgage. The cause was tried by the court sitting without a jury. Findings of fact and conclusions of law were made and filed, and judgment rendered thereon in favor of the defendants. From that judgment this appeal is taken.

"At the time the note was executed, appellant and respondents E. R. Dudley and B. B. Dudley were partners. The Lindsay Incorporated Oil Company, in which respondents were stockholders, purchased from the partnership a tract of oil land in Kern county for $32,000. On March 7, 1911, a promissory note for $4,000 was executed by three stockholders in favor of the partnership. For the balance of $28,000 a note was given, payable to the partnership, made under the corporate name, signed by the president and secretary of the company and indorsed by several of the stockholders, but not bearing the corporate seal. Some time between March 7, 1911, and March 11, 1911, a deed was given by the partnership to a committee appointed by the corporation, in return for these notes.

"On March 18, 1911, a note secured by a mortgage on the land purchased was regularly issued by the company, and the note of March 7 was taken up by the company. Because of some defect in the execution of the note of March 18, 1911, the note and mortgage of April 22, 1911, were executed and delivered to take their place.

"The partnership between appellant and respondents B. B. Dudley and E. R. Dudley was dissolved by agreement of the partners on June 27, 1911, and by the agreement of dissolution appellant became the owner of 44 per cent. of the promissory note of April 22, 1911, and each of the Dudleys of 28 per cent. In March, 1914, respondent B. B. Dudley transferred his interest in the note to respondent E. R. Dudley.

"Appellant commenced this action on October 23, 1913, against respondents E. H. Howe, Ernest Howe, W. A. Morley, H. E. Redmond, L. A. Sturgeon, L. G. Stallings, M. W. Grace, and W. K. Flynn. On March 17, 1914, an amended complaint was filed in which respondents C. B. Jackson, J. M. Birkhead, T. E. Winters, O. L. Flynn, H. Roth, A. P. Haliburton, and P. M. Northern were named as defendants for the first time. A second amended complaint was filed on May 16, 1914, in which E. R. Dudley and B. B. Dudley were made defendants. It was alleged that they had 'refused to join the plaintiff in the commencement of this action' and the prayer as to them was that they 'be required to answer herein, stating their rights in the premises, if any such they shall claim.' Respondents E. R. Dudley and B. B. Dudley in their answer alleged the transfer of B. B. Dudley's interest in the note and mortgage to respondent E. R. Dudley; denied that either of them had refused to join as plaintiffs; prayed that appellant have judgment against the other respondents; and that respondent E. R. Dudley have 56 per cent. of such judgment, or such other or further relief as is meet in the premises.

"The other respondents in their answer alleged the indebtedness was incurred on or about February 2, 1911; that on or about August 3, 1911, by a settlement had between the oil company, appellant and respondents E. R. Dudley and B. B. Dudley, it was agreed the amount then unpaid on the note was $20,000 and interest; and that the action was barred by subdivision 1, section 338, of the Code of Civil Procedure. By way of special defense it was alleged that prior to their joinder as defendants in this action, respondents E. R. Dudley and B. B. Dudley had filed an action against the other respondents, in Tulare county, seeking to hold them on their stockholders' liability for the same indebtedness; and that prior to the filing of the complaint in this action, a suit was commenced by them in Kern county to foreclose the mortgage securing the note upon which this action is brought. Answering the prayer of respondents E. R. Dudley and B. B. Dudley, they pleaded the three-year limitation upon a liability created by statute, provided by subdivision 1, section 338, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and by way of special defense set up the institution of the two actions by the Dudleys in bar of their right to relief in this action.

"The only findings of the court which we need refer to were that the indebtedness of the oil company was incurred on March 7, 1911; that the note of April 22, 1911, was given as evidence of the debt previously incurred; that since the debt was incurred on March 7, 1911, the action was barred by subdivision 1, section 338, of the Code of Civil Procedure as to those respondents above named who were joined as defendants for the first time in the amended complaint of March 17, 1914; that neither the oil company nor the respondent stockholders ever consented to the division of the debt among the partners; that but $4,000 has been paid on the principal, and no interest has been paid on the remaining $24,000; that on March 7, 1911, there were 20,000 shares of stock outstanding, of which 2,000 shares were owned by each of the respondents named in the original complaint, and none by the respondents joined in the amended complaint; that neither respondent E. R. Dudley nor respondent B. B. Dudley was ever requested or ever refused to join with appellant in the commencement of this action.

"The conclusions of law were to the effect that appellant take nothing against respondents, and that respondents have judgment against appellant for their costs.

"From the opinion of the trial judge it appears that the judgment was rendered upon two grounds. The first was that the indebtedness was incurred by the oil company before March 11, 1911, and, therefore, in any event, was barred by the statute of limitations as to the respondents joined for the first time on March 17, 1914. Second, that appellant could not recover against any of respondents because he was suing for 44 per cent. of an entire demand and had split his cause of action; that, although the Dudleys were joined as defendants, they had not asked for anything more than a portion of such an amount as might be recovered by appellant; and that an action for a portion of a single demand cannot be maintained when the debtor has not consented to a division of the debt, which was not done in this case.

[2] "Appellant contends that under the facts of this case he is entitled to recover 44 per cent. of the amount of the note; that the evidence does not support the finding that the indebtedness was created before March 11, 1911; and that the statute of limitations has not been properly pleaded. Respondents 'submit that with this state of facts, where it clearly appears that an effort is being made in this suit to recover only a portion of a promissory note, * * * this action cannot be maintained, and a judgment cannot be rendered under the complaint on file herein.' We are of the opinion appellant's contention is correct. In 1 Corpus Juris, 1110, it is said: 'As a general rule, a single cause of action or claim arising out of an entire contract cannot without the debtor's consent be split up by means of partial assignments, so as to become the subject of different actions; but as in other cases this may be done with the debtor's consent, and even without his consent a partial assignment may be enforced in equity if the other persons interested are brought in as parties to the suit.'

"Fourth Street Bank v. Yardley, 165 U. S. 634, 644, 17 Sup. Ct. 439, 440 (41 L. Ed. 855), was a suit on an assignment of a part of a bank account. It was there held, 'That the owner of a chose in action or of property in the custody of another may assign a part of such rights, and that an assignment of this nature, if made, will be enforced in equity, is also the settled doctrine of this court. Trist v. Child, 21 Wall. 441, 447, 22 L. Ed. 623; Peugh v. Porter, 112 U. S. 737, 742, 5 Sup. Ct. 361, 28 L. Ed. 859.'

"In Chambers v. Lancaster, 160 N. Y. 342, a contractor subcontracted with another to furnish machinery for a third party, assigning to the subcontractor the right to collect the portion of the contractor's fee which he was to receive upon delivery of the machinery. The action was brought to collect that amount. In considering an objection that certain testimony was erroneously admitted, the court said: 'This testimony only bore upon the question of plaintiff's right to recover that which was but a part of an entire cause of action. This the defendant company insists the plaintiff cannot do. Such was formerly the rule, but it has long been settled in this state that a valid assignment of a part of an entire debt or obligation can be made, and since the decision of this court in Risley v. Phenix Bank of New York, 83 N. Y. 318, the right of an assignee to bring suit on the equity side of the court, making the assignor, as well as the debtor, a party, has been frequently resorted to, and is supported by the decision in Risley's Case, the court saying: "The tendency of modern decisions is in the direction of more fully protecting the equitable rights of assignees of choses in action, and the objection that to allow an assignment of part of an entire claim might subject the creditor to several actions to enforce a single obligation has much less force under a system which requires all parties in interest to be joined as parties to the action."'

"National Exchange Bank v. McLoon, 73 Me. 498, 40 Am. Rep. 388, was a case where a person who was entitled to certain property in the hands of trustees as administrators assigned an amount equal to what he thought was all of such property to creditors. It later appeared the property held for him exceeded the amount assigned, and other creditors trusteed the administrators. In holding that the assignees might recover their portion of the money, the court said: 'In a court of equity, however, the objections to a partial assignment of a demand which are formidable in a court of law, disappear. In equity, the interests of all parties can be determined in a single suit. The debtor can bring the entire fund into court, and run no risks as to its proper distribution. * * * The debtor is not the only party whose interests should be considered. There is as much natural equity, in many cases, in protecting an assignment of a part of a claim as an assignment of the whole of it. Equitable assignments are the outgrowth of the requirements and refinements of the present business era. In many ways, directly and indirectly, do circumstances create assignments of parts of funds, in dealings through servants, tenants, consignees, bankers and other agencies.'

"In Grain v. Aldrich, 38 Cal. 514, 99 Am. Dec. 423, the plaintiff sued to recover part of an entire debt, without joining his assignor. The court said: 'Legal and equitable relief are administered in the same forum, and according to the same general plan. A party cannot be sent out of court, merely because his facts do not entitle him to relief at law, or merely because he is not entitled to relief in equity, as the case may be. He can be sent out of court only when, upon his facts, he is entitled to no relief, either at law or in equity. * * * Under the English practice, a court of equity would not grant the plaintiffs relief, as the case now stands; not, however, upon the ground that the facts do not entitle him to it, but because all of the parties interested in the subject-matter are not before the court. * * * Under our system of practice, then, the real objection in this case is not a want of facts, but a want of parties. The defendants are entitled, if they so desire, to have all the parties having an interest in the subject-matter before the court, in order that its judgment shall be a final determination of the whole matter, and leave nothing to be done by piecemeal.'

[3] "From these cases it follows that appellant was not required to ask for a recovery of the whole amount of the note. It was sufficient for him to join respondents E. R. Dudley and B. B. Dudley, the owners of the remainder of the obligation, as parties defendant. Once joined, it devolved upon them, as prayed in the complaint, to set up any claim they had in the subject-matter, the execution of the note and appellant's claim having already been set forth. The rights of all the parties could then be settled in the one action. It would have been necessary for appellant to have joined these respondents if he had sued for the entire amount, and the final judgment would have been the same in such a case as in this one, where they themselves can ask for such relief as they may desire. An entirely different situation is presented here, where these parties are joined, and can defend their rights in the subject-matter in the one action, than in the ordinary case of splitting a cause of action, where one person sues to recover part of his claim in one action, and later brings a second action to recover the remainder. Even in such a case, the defendant's objection would not be to the circumstance that the plaintiff brings the first suit for a less amount than is due, but that a second action is brought to recover the balance. Paladini v. Municipal Markets Co., 185 Cal. 672, 200 Pac. 415; Smith v. Vandalia Railroad Co., 188 Ill. App. 426, 429.

"Respondents have cited several authorities in support of their position, but in our opinion none of them is authority for their contention. The first of these is Nightingale v. Scannell, 6 Cal. 506, 65 Am. Dec. 525, wherein the question was presented whether or not in an action by one partner to recover damages for a trespass against partnership property, a partner joined as a defendant because he refused to join as a plaintiff could testify in the action. It was said that since in such a case 'the recovery must be entire for the whole injury' and 'the whole cause of action must be determined in one' and 'the partner recovering is liable to account to his copartner defendant,' the latter is 'interested immediately in the event of the suit, and is not therefore a competent witness for plaintiff.' But in that case the plaintiff was seeking to recover for an injury to the partnership property, on behalf of the partnership. As far as he was concerned personally, he only sought damages to the amount of his interest in the goods, and there was no objection to his recovering that amount. In Thomas v. Rock Island G. & S. Mining Co., 54 Cal. 578, an assignee of one-half a judgment sued to set aside an order and entry of satisfaction, and for a judgment for his interest in the first judgment. It was held such an action could not be maintained without the express agreement or distinct ratification of the judgment debtor, but it did not appear there that the judgment creditor had been joined as a party to the suit. Clancy v. Plover, 107 Cal. 272, 40 Pac. 394, involved the right of an assignor to recover what was due to him under a mechanic's lien after a subcontractor as an assignee had already recovered from the debtor the portion due him; the subcontractor not having joined the assignor in the first suit. That case is therefore not authority here, and it clearly appears from that case that the assignee in the previous action had been allowed to recover a part of the total amount due.

[4, 5] Respondents in this connection contend appellant has never properly joined respondents E. R. Dudley and B. B. Dudley as parties defendant under section 382 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that 'if the consent of any one who should have been joined as plaintiff cannot be obtained, he may be made a defendant, the reason thereof being stated in the complaint.' Respondents E. R. Dudley and B. B. Dudley in their answer denied they had been requested to join as plaintiffs, and it is insisted on behalf of all the respondents that the evidence showed clearly that they had not been requested and never refused to so join. As far as the respondents other than E. R. Dudley and B. B. Dudley are concerned, it is sufficient if the two latter respondents are made parties in some capacity, so that their rights may be determined in this action. In Patten v. Pepper Hotel Co., 153 Cal. 460, 96

Pac. 296, the junior pledgee of a promissory note, secured by a mortgage, commenced an action to foreclose the mortgage. The senior pledgee was made a party. The defendant demurred on the ground of defect of parties, in that there was no allegation that the senior pledgee had refused to join as plaintiff. It was said in that case that: 'All those, therefore, who were interested in enforcing the lien of the mortgage were before the court either as parties plaintiff or defendant. This was all that the appellant, as successor in interest to the mortgagor, could insist on. It was immaterial to the appellant, as such successor, whether the bank as first assignee of the note and mortgage, was a party plaintiff or defendant. If the bank did not object, it did not lie with appellant as successor of the mortgagor to raise the question.' With reference to respondents E. R. Dudley and B. B. Dudley, they in their answer alleged the same facts concerning the execution of the note and mortgage as did appellant, and they asked for general relief. The matter of requesting a person to become a plaintiff before joining him as a defendant closely resembles that of serving a party with process, and may properly be governed by the same rules. It is unquestioned that where a defendant appears and asks some relief which can only be granted upon the hypothesis that the court has jurisdiction of the cause and of his person, it is a submission to the jurisdiction of the court as completely as if he had been regularly served with process, whether such an appearance, upon its terms, is limited to a special appearance or not (Security Loan, etc., Co. v. Boston, etc., Fruit Co., 126 Cal. 418, 58 Pac. 941, 59 Pac. 296; Thompson v. Alford, 128 Cal. 227, 60 Pac. 686), and when a party appears generally he is deemed to waive service of process (Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc. v. Cochran, 141 Cal. 653, 75 Pac. 315). Respondents E. R. Dudley and B. B. Dudley must therefore be deemed to have waived the request by their appearance in the action and prayer for affirmative relief. They are in no way prejudiced, for they are in a position to protect their rights fully as well by their cross-complaint as they would have been had they been joined as plaintiffs. * * *"

[6] As above stated, we are satisfied that the evidence sufficiently shows that the obligation of the corporation accrued before March 17, 1911. That a deed was received by the corporation before that time, and that in consideration thereof a note was executed in the corporate name on behalf of the corporation by the president and secretary and indorsed by five of the directors is conceded. The only doubt as to the authority of the president and secretary to execute the note of March 7, 1911, on behalf of the corporation arises from the fact that no record was kept of the transaction at the meeting of the board of directors. Several witnesses, however, testified there was such a meeting, and that at such meeting the purchase of land and the execution of the note were authorized. This evidence was sufficient to sustain the finding of the court to the effect that the obligation was authorized by the corporation, and that its liability thereupon accrued more than three years before the amendment of the complaint joining the defendants first named in the amended complaint, filed March 17, 1914, to wit, C. B. Jackson, J. M. Birkhead, T. E. Winters, O. L. Flynn, H. Roth, A. P. Haliburton, and P. M. Northern. Gilson Quartz M. Co. v. Gilson, 51 Cal. 341; Boggs v. Lakeport A. P. Ass'n, 111 Cal. 354, 43 Pac. 1106; Lawrence v. Premier Indem. Assur. Co., 180 Cal. 688, 697, 182 Pac. 431; 6 Cal. Jur. (Corporations), §§ 130, 131; Thompson or Corps. (2d Ed.) vol. 2, §§ 1842, 1845, 1847. The obligation of the corporation was incurred before these last-named defendants became stockholders, and they are not liable, therefore, regardless of the bar of the statute of limitations. The judgment in their favor was correct.

The trial court found that the indebtedness of the corporation was incurred March 7, 1911. At that time there was outstanding 20,000 shares of the capital stock of the corporation, of which the defendants E. H. Howe, Ernest Howe, W. A. Morley, H. E. Redmond, L. A. Sturgeon, L. G. Stallings, M. W. Grace, and W. K. Flynn each owned 2,000 shares, so that each was liable for one-tenth of the indebtedness. The other 4,000 shares outstanding were owned, 2,000 by H. A. Briscoe and 2,000 by W. S. Berry, who were not made parties defendant in the second amended complaint. The court found that the total indebtedness of the corporation upon the note in question as $28,000, less certain payments which reduced the principal sum to $24,000. The trial court found that the plaintiff J. D. Martin owned 44 per cent. of the indebtedness and defendants B. B. Dudley and E. R. Dudley each owned 28 per cent. of the indebtedness. It is unnecessary that the case be retried.

The judgment in favor of defendants C. B. Jackson, J. M. Birkhead, T. E. Winters, O. L. Flynn, H. Roth, A. P. Haliburton, and P. M. Northern is affirmed. The judgment in favor of the other defendants is reversed. The trial court is directed to enter judgment in favor of the plaintiff and the defendants B. B. Dudley and E. R. Dudley against the defendants E. H. Howe, Ernest Howe, W. A. Morley, H. E. Redmond, L. A. Sturgeon, L. G. Stallings, M. W. Grace, and W. K. Flynn in accordance with their rights and obligations as fixed in this opinion; that is to say, the judgment against each defendant shall be one-tenth of the amount due on the obligation of the corporation as fixed in the findings of fact, and this amount shall be apportioned as follows, to wit: Forty-four per cent. to the plaintiff and 28 per cent. to defendant B. B. Dudley and a like amount to defendant E. R. Dudley. The amount of indebtedness found by the trial court to be due from the corporation shall be credited with the payments, if any, resulting from the foreclosure of the mortgage securing such indebtedness. The court may permit such supplementary pleadings and evidence as may be necessary to establish such payments, if any have been made.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; LAWLOR, J.; LENNON, J.; WASTE, J.; SLOANE, J.; SHURTLEFF, J.

190 Cal. 202

FORWARD et al. v. SAN DIEGO COUNTY et al. (L. A. 7262.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 18, 1922.)

Hospitals ⇐2—County supervisors authorized to maintain hospitals and other buildings necessary to county government may construct residence for county physician.

Under Pol. Code, § 4041, subd. 7, authorizing boards of county supervisors to erect and maintain hospitals and almshouses and "such other public buildings as may be necessary to carry out the work of the county government, * * *" such boards have power to erect and maintain a residence and garage for the county physician at the county hospital.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by John F. Forward, Jr., and others against the County of San Diego and others. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Haines & Haines, of San Diego, for appellants.

H. S. Utley, Dist. Atty., and E. S. Lovett, Asst. Dist. Atty., both of San Diego, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. The defendant supervisors were about to let a contract for the erection of a residence and garage at the county hospital for the county physician in charge of that hospital. Plaintiffs are taxpayers, and sought to enjoin the execution of the contract. A demurrer was interposed to the complaint and sustained, and plaintiffs appeal.

Section 4041 of the Political Code fixes the powers and duties of boards of supervisors, and subdivision 7 authorizes them, among other things, to construct hospitals and almshouses "* * * and such other public buildings as may be necessary to carry out the work of the county government. * * *" There can be no doubt that, under the power to construct and maintain a county hospital, such buildings as may be reasonably necessary for that purpose may be constructed by the board of supervisors, and if, in their judgment, the proper management and control of the county hospital requires that a residence and outbuildings be constructed for the county physician the supervisors would have the power so to do under the statute in question.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; LAWLOR, J.; SLOANE, J.; SHURTLEFF, J.; WASTE, J.; LENNON, J.

190 Cal. 229

In re SULLIVAN'S ESTATE. SULLIVAN et al. v. STATE. (S. F. 10242.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 19, 1922.)

Descent and distribution ⇐71(6)—Evidence held sufficient to establish claimants' identity as intestate's next of kin.

Testimony of intestate's neighbors as to statements made by him as to his boyhood and family relations, and depositions of persons claiming to be his brother and sister, held competent and sufficient to establish the latters' right to the estate as next of kin, as against the state's right to distribution under Code Civ. Proc. § 1269, in the absence of any indication of collusion between the two sets of witnesses, though claimants were informed, before their depositions were taken, as to what facts could be shown by decedent's neighbors, and shaped their depositions accordingly.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; E. I. Butler, Judge.

Proceedings by Dennis Sullivan and others for distribution of the estate of John Sullivan, deceased. From a decree denying distribution among claimants and distributing the estate to the State of California, claimants appeal. Reversed.

Byrne & Lamson, Wesley W. Kergan, and Gerald C. Halsey, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank L. Guerena, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the State.

SLOANE, J. The appeal in this matter is from a decree of the superior court of Marin county denying distribution of the estate of decedent to appellants.

The appellants claim as heirs at law and next of kin of decedent. The only question presented is as to the sufficiency of the evidence introduced on the hearing to establish such heirship.

The claimants are Dennis Sullivan, Annie Sullivan Glennon, alleged brother and sister of decedent, and three children of Mary Ann O'Brien, alleged to be a deceased sister of decedent.

It is not disputed that the establishment of this relationship would entitle the appellants to this estate as next of kin to the decedent.

The court held the evidence insufficient, denied the claim of appellants, and, there being no other claimants, distributed the estate to the state of California, under the provisions of section 1269 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

There was no conflict in the evidence as given in testimony, and, if accepted as true, we are satisfied it was sufficient to establish the heirship as claimed.

John Sullivan, the decedent, lived for many years in California, first in San Francisco, and latterly at Novato, Marin county. He died August 3, 1920. All that is disclosed as to his early history and family is gleaned from the testimony of several of his neighbors in Marin county, who testified as to statements made by the decedent on various occasions as to his boyhood and family relations.

His own story of his boyhood and family, repeated in substantially the same way to the several witnesses, is that he was born and lived as a small boy at Bandon, County Cork, Ireland. The witnesses did not learn from him his father's name, but he gave his mother's name as Ellen. The family came to the United States when he was quite young and landed in Boston. That he had a brother named Dennis and two sisters, one named Annie and the other named Mary. That he learned the painter's trade in Boston. That when about 16 years of age or thereabouts he enlisted in the United States navy, and that after a few months' service there he was released from the service, his father having "brought him out," as he expressed it. That soon after he ran away, working his way overland to California, where he had lived ever since. That he had not communicated with his family for about 50 years. That he was related to the pugilist, John L. Sullivan.

This brief personal narrative from the decedent's own lips furnishes competent evidence, and was received and repeated by the witnesses under circumstances which support its genuineness.

The connecting story offered on behalf of the claimants to establish their relationship was furnished through the depositions of appellants, Dennis Sullivan and Annie Sullivan Glennon. Dennis Sullivan testified that he was born in Boston in 1858; that his father's name was John and his mother's name was Ellen; that his parents came from County Cork, Ireland, and located in Boston; that Annie Sullivan Glennon is his sister and that they had another sister, Mary O'Brien, who died, and who was the mother of the other claimants, and a brother John, who was born in Bandon, County Cork, Ireland; that John entered the navy in 1872; that deponent remembered his father telling him that he bought John off from the navy; that soon after, when about 18 years of age, John ran away from home, and that he eventually ended up in California, having left Boston on a merchant vessel. Their father was a cousin of John L. Sullivan, the pugilist.

Annie Sullivan Glennon testified: That she was born in Boston in 1856. That she had one brother living, Dennis; one brother, the decedent, was dead. That there were two other sisters, one Mary Ann, born about 1846, who died in 1915, and a sister Margaret, who was born in 1858 and died one year later. Their father was John Sullivan and their mother Ellen Mahoney Sullivan. Their father was born in County Cork, Ireland. The witness produced a photograph purporting to be of this brother John in the uniform of the navy. She testified that after the death of their mother, in Boston in 1860, John lived with his sister, Mary Ann, until he enlisted in the navy in 1872. While in the navy he was stationed at Portsmouth, N. H., for a short time, until his father had him released. That to the best of her knowledge John was born in Bandon, County Cork, Ireland, somewhere in the middle of the 1850s. He learned the trade of a carriage painter while in Boston. Soon after leaving the navy John left Boston in a sailing vessel, and they never heard of him after excepting incidentally to the effect that he was in California.

This is a meager biography, but if the points of identity in the two narratives are sufficiently established there can be no doubt that the decedent, John Sullivan, was the same person as the John Sullivan testified to as the brother and uncle of the claimants.

There is not much, perhaps, in the name John Sullivan, from County Cork, to establish identity; but when we have the circumstance that according to both stories he was born in Bandon, that the mother's name was Ellen, that the family migrated to Boston, that there were two sisters, Mary and Annie, and a brother, Dennis, that John was a painter by trade, that he served for a short time in the navy, and was "bought off" by his father, and afterwards ran away from home, and had no further communication with his family, although reputed to be in California, was related to the pugilist, and that the ages disclosed by the two narratives, though not explicitly stated, appear from the connecting incidents to closely correspond, we have circumstantial proof which approaches certainty.

It is only by rejecting some material part of this testimony as unworthy of belief that the conclusion indicated can be avoided.

There might be collusion between the two sets of witnesses, but there is no indication or intimation of this in any part of the record. The circumstance seems to be that the width of the continent at all times separated the two sets of witnesses.

The depositions of the claimants had been taken long in advance of the oral testimony of the California witnesses, and presumably the depositions were not brought to the attention of the witnesses at the trial in advance of the hearing. There was no motive to influence the witnesses who gave oral testimony to deviate from the truth. The only theory of impeachment that can be suggested is that the claimants were informed before their depositions were taken as to what facts could be shown by decedent's neighbors, and that they shaped their depositions accordingly.

We do not believe that in the absence of any intimation or showing to raise such a suspicion that such a presumption could be indulged by the court to reject evidence otherwise competent and convincing.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; WILBUR, J.; WASTE, J.; SHURTLEFF, J.; LENNON, J.; LAWLOR, J.

---

(190 Cal. 214)

ATCHISON, T. & S. F. RY. CO. v. RAILROAD COMMISSION. LOS ANGELES & S. L. R. CO. v. SAME. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. v. SAME. (L. A. 7166, 7165, 10111.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 19, 1922. Rehearing Denied Jan. 18, 1923.)

1. Commerce ⟸8(1) — Congress prescribes dominant rule where interstate and intrastate transactions so related that government of one involves control of other.

Wherever the interstate and intrastate transactions of carriers are so related that the government of the one involves the control of the other, it is Congress, and not the state, that is entitled to prescribe the final and dominant rule.

2. Commerce ⟸85—Authority of Interstate Commerce Commission to compel interstate carrier to establish union depot is exclusive.

Interstate Commerce Act, § 5, par. 1, subds. 4, 5, as amended by Transportation Act, Feb. 28, 1920, § 407, and section 15a, as added by section 422, extending powers and duties of Interstate Commerce Commission, section 1, subd. 3, as amended by section 400, and subdivisions 10, 15, 18–20, as amended by section 402, investing the Commission with powers over the changes in lines, tracks, etc., of railroads engaged largely in interstate commerce, section 1, subds. 21, 22, as amended by section 402, and section 3, subds. 3, 4, as amended by section 405, limiting extension of authority of Commission to railroads wholly within a state not operated as part of the general systems, gives power and authority over the matter of union terminal depot facilities of railroads, largely engaged in interstate commerce, to the Interstate Commerce Commission and by the act the State Railroad Commission has been divested of power over the subject.

In Bank.

Separate certiorari proceedings by the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company, by the Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company, and by the Southern Pacific Company to review orders of the Railroad Commission requiring the elimination of grade crossings and the establishment of a Union Depot. Orders annulled.

E. W. Camp, Paul Burks, M. W. Reed, Robt. Brennan, and E. T. Lucey, all of Los Angeles, C. W. Durbrow, of San Francisco, and A. S. Halsted and Fred E. Pettit, Jr., both of Los Angeles (Wm. F. Herrin, of San Francisco, of counsel), for petitioners.

Hugh Gordon and William W. Clary, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

Jess E. Stephens and Milton Bryan, both of Los Angeles (Max Thelen, of San Francisco, of counsel), for city of Los Angeles.

PER CURIAM. These three proceedings were instituted before this court for the purpose of having reviewed and annulled an order of the Railroad Commission made in certain proceedings before that body of the following nature: In 1916 the Civic Center Association of the city of Los Angeles filed a complaint before the Commission against the Southern Pacific Company, the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Company, and the Los Angeles & Salt Lake Company, praying for an order providing for the elimination of certain grade crossings in said city and for the establishment of a union depot therein. Two other civic organizations of said city presently filed similar petitions asking for like orders. Four petitions were also filed from adjacent municipalities asking for the elimination of grade crossings and a reorganization of the track systems of these several railroad corporations. In addition to these the Southern Pacific Company and the Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company united in an application to the Commission for the establishment of a union terminal depot as to themselves upon a certain site, and also for the elimination of certain grade crossings as an incident to the location of said terminal. These eight proceedings were consolidated by the stipulation of all of the parties and heard as one proceeding before the Commission, which, after a prolonged and exhaustive consideration of the issues involved, made its order for the elimination of certain grade crossings and for the establishment of a union terminal depot for all of said railroads, to be located within a certain defined area. The present proceedings were instituted to review this order. Upon the filing of the return to the writ this court made an order consolidating these three proceedings for the purpose of hearing and decision.

This court has already had before it the question as to the power of the Railroad Commission to provide for the elimination of grade crossings as to all of the present petitioners, in the case of Civic Center Association, etc., v. Railroad Commission, 175 Cal. 441, 166 Pac. 351, in which case it was held as between itself and the city of Los Angeles the Railroad Commission possessed this power and was directed to exercise it. In proceeding to exercise said power pursuant to such direction the Railroad Commission, in the course of hearing upon the consolidated proceeding before it, concluded that as an indispensable element in the elimination of the proposed grade crossings it was necessary to provide for a union terminal depot for all three railroads, with such changes and extensions of the railroad lines of each as would be necessary for the utilization of said depot by each and all of these railroads; and it therefore assumed and exercised the power so to do, whereupon the present proceedings were instituted by the petitioners herein.

The main contention of the petitioners is that the Railroad Commission has no jurisdiction to make any order or orders relative to the establishment and construction of a union depot for part or all of the petitioners herein, for the reason that such power has been taken from the state and its agency and has been vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission by virtue of the amendment to the Interstate Commerce Commission Act made by Congress on February 28, 1920 (41 Stat. 456). This contention, standing, as it does, upon the threshold of the subject under review, will be first considered.

The act of Congress above referred to, and commonly known as the Esch-Cummings Act, is two-fold in its purposes and effects. Its first object was to accomplish the termination of the control of the railroads taken over by the federal government during the progress of the war by virtue of the "Federal Control Act," approved March 21, 1918, and by the later amendments to said act. The second of its main objects was to amend the act of Congress commonly known as the "Interstate Commerce Act," originally approved February 24, 1887, with its later amendments. It is with this latter purpose that we are concerned in this proceeding. An inspection of this portion of the said amendatory act discloses that it embodies a large number of amendments to the Interstate Commerce Act as it existed at the date of said amendment, and that many of these are of the most important and far-reaching character. The Supreme Court of the United States in the recent case of Railroad Commission of Wisconsin v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. R. Co., 257 U. S. 563, 42 Sup. Ct. 232, 66 L. Ed 371, in reciting the provisions and commenting upon the scope of said amendatory act, says:

"It is manifest from this very condensed recital that the act made a new departure. Theretofore the control which Congress through the Interstate Commerce Commission exercised was primarily for the purpose of preventing injustice by unreasonable or discriminatory rates against persons and localities, and the only provisions of the law that inured to the benefit of the carriers were the requirement that the rates should be reasonable in the sense of furnishing an adequate compensation for the particular service rendered and the abolition of rebates. The new measure imposed an affirmative duty on the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix rates and to take other important steps to maintain an adequate railway service for the people of the United States. This is expressly declared in section 15a to be one of the purposes of the bill."

Turning to the provisions of said amendatory act which embody these radical extensions of the powers and duties of the Interstate Commerce Commission, we find that section 15a thereof (41 Stat. 488, § 422), to which the foregoing decision expressly refers, greatly enlarges the powers of the Commission with regard to the regulation of not only interstate but also of intrastate rates, whenever the control and regulation of the latter are necessary to the exercise of the affirmative powers of Congress in developing interstate commerce. The decision above referred to expressly deals with that phase of the question and upholds the powers with which the Interstate Commerce Commission is invested under said section of the amendatory act. Turning to the provision of said act amending the first paragraph of section 5 of the Interstate Commerce Act, we find in subdivisions 4 and 5 thereof (section 407) the following express statement of the scope and purposes of said act:

"(4) The Commission shall as soon as practicable prepare and adopt a plan for the consolidation of the railway properties of the continental United States into a limited number of systems. In the division of such railways into such systems under such plan, competition shall be preserved as fully as possible and wherever practicable the existing routes and channels of trade and commerce shall be maintained. Subject to the foregoing requirements, the several systems shall be so arranged that the cost of transportation as between competitive systems and as related to the values of the properties through which the service is rendered shall be the same, so far as practicable, so that these systems can employ uniform rates in the movement of competitive traffic and under efficient management earn substantially the same rate of return upon the value of their respective railway properties."

"(5) When the Commission has agreed upon a tentative plan, it shall give the same due publicity and upon reasonable notice, including notice to the Governor of each state, shall hear all persons who may file or present objections thereto. The Commissioner is authorized to prescribe a procedure for such hearings and to fix a time for bringing them to a close. After the hearings are at an end, the Commission shall adopt a plan for such consolidation and publish the same; but it may at any time thereafter, upon its own motion or upon application, reopen the subject for such changes or modifications as in its judgment will promote the public interest. The consolidations herein provided for shall be in harmony with such plan."

In the interpretation to be given to the further provisions of said act, having more particular reference to the immediate question before us, the foregoing provisions of said act expressive of its enlarged scope and purposes are to be borne in mind. Having these in view, the following provisions of the act are found to bear directly upon the powers and functions with which the Interstate Commerce Commission have been invested, with relation to any and all extensions and changes in the lines, tracks and facilities of railroads engaged wholly or largely in interstate commerce. The term "railroad" as used in said act is defined by subdivision 3 of section 1 of the Interstate Commerce Act as thus amended (41 Stat. 474, § 400), as including "all the road in use by any common carrier operating a railroad, whether owned or operated under a contract, agreement, or lease, and also all switches, spurs, tracks, terminals, and terminal facilities of every kind used or necessary in the transportation of the persons or property designated herein, including all freight depots, yards, and grounds, used or necessary in the transportation or delivery of any such property." The term "car service" as employed in said amendatory act is defined in subdivision 10 of section 1 of the Interstate Commerce Act as thus amended (section 402), to include the use, control, supply, movement, distribution, exchange, interchange, and return of locomotives, cars, and other vehicles used in the transportation of property, including special types of equipment and the supply of trains by any carrier by railroad, subject to this act. Subdivision 15 of said section 1 of the said original act as thus amended provides:

"Whenever the Commission is of opinion that shortage of equipment, congestion of traffic, or other emergency requiring immediate action exists in any section of the country, the Commission shall have, and it is hereby given, authority, either upon complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, at once, if it so orders, without answer or other formal pleading by the interested carrier or carriers, and with or without notice, hearing, or the making or filing of a report, according as the Commission may determine: * * * (c) to require such joint or common use of terminals, including main-line track or tracks for a reasonable distance outside of such terminals, as in its opinion will best meet the emergency and serve the public interest, and upon such terms as between the carriers as they may agree upon, or, in the event of their disagreement, as the Commission may after subsequent hearing find to be just and reasonable."

Subdivision 18 of said section 1 of said original act as thus amended further provides:

"(18) After ninety days after this paragraph takes effect no carrier by railroad subject to this act shall undertake the extension of its line of railroad, or the construction of a new line of railroad, or shall acquire or operate any line of railroad, or extension thereof, or shall engage in transportation under this act over or by means of such additional or extended line of railroad, unless and until there shall first have been obtained from the Commission a certificate that the present or future public convenience and necessity require or will require the construction, or operation, or construction and operation, of such additional or extended line of railroad, and no carrier by railroad subject to this act shall abandon all or any portion of a line of railroad, or the operation thereof, unless and until there shall first have been obtained from the Commission a certificate that the present or future public convenience and necessity permit of such abandonment."

Subdivision 21 of said section 1 of said original act as thus amended in part provides:

"(21) The Commission may, after hearing, in a proceeding upon complaint or upon its own initiative, without complaint, authorize or require, by order any carrier by railroad subject to this act, party to such proceeding, to provide itself with safe and adequate facilities for performing as a common carrier its car service as that term is used in this act, and to extend its line or lines: Provided, that no such authorization or order shall be made unless the Commission finds, as to such extension, that it is reasonably required in the interest of public convenience and necessity, or as to such extension or facilities that the expense involved therein will not impair the ability of the carrier to perform its duty to the public."

Subdivision 22 of said section 1 of said original act as thus amended provides:

"(22) The authority of the Commission conferred by paragraphs (18) to (21), both inclusive, shall not extend to the construction or abandonment of spur, industrial, team, switching or side tracks, located or to be located wholly within one state, or of street, suburban, or interurban electric railways, which are not operated as a part or parts of a general steam railroad system of transportation."

Subdivisions 3 and 4 of section 3 of the original act as thus amended (41 Stat. 479, § 405) provides:

"(3) All carriers, engaged in the transportation of passengers or property, subject to the provisions of this act, shall according to their respective powers, afford all reasonable, proper, and equal facilities for the interchange of traffic between their respective lines, and for the receiving, forwarding, and delivering of passengers or property to and from their several lines and those connecting therewith, and shall not discriminate in their rates, fares, and charges between such connecting lines, or unduly prejudice any such connecting line in the distribution of traffic that is not specifically routed by the shipper."

"(4) If the Commission finds it to be in the public interest and to be practicable, without substantially impairing the ability of a carrier owning or entitled to the enjoyment of terminal facilities to handle its own business, it shall have power to require the use of any such terminal facilities, including main-line track or tracks for a reasonable distance outside of such terminal, of any carrier, by another carrier or other carriers, on such terms and for such compensation as the carriers affected may agree upon, or, in the event of a failure to agree, as the Commission may fix as just and reasonable for the use so required, to be ascertained on the principle controlling compensation in condemnation proceedings. Such compensation shall be paid or adequately secured before the enjoyment of the use may be commenced. If under this paragraph the use of such terminal facilities of any carrier is required to be given to another carrier or other carriers, and the carrier whose terminal facilities are required to be so used is not satisfied with the terms fixed for such use, or if the amount of compensation so fixed is not duly and promptly paid, the carrier whose terminal facilities have thus been required to be given to another carrier or other carriers shall be entitled to recover, by suit or action against such other carrier or carriers, proper damages for any injuries sustained by it as the result of compliance with such requirement, or just compensation for such use, or both, as the case may be."

The foregoing excerpts from among the many provisions of said amendatory act would seem to fully justify the statement of Chief Justice Taft, above quoted from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, as to the radical departure effected by the said amendment to the Interstate Commerce Act in the direction of placing the entire control over the rates, properties, track, terminals, and facilities of the railroads engaged in interstate commerce in and under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. That Congress had the full power so to do is established by a long line of judicial decisions reaching back to the leading case of Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. Ed. 23, wherein Chief Justice Marshall carved out the pathway for all later decisions by the declaration that the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the several states is supreme and plenary, "is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations, other than are prescribed in the Constitution." It is needless to cite in detail the almost numberless cases in which the doctrine enunciated in that early decision has been reiterated and applied, but among the more recent cases involving its application are the Minnesota Rate Cases, 230 U. S. 352, 432, 33 Sup. Ct. 729, 753 (57 L. Ed. 1511, 48 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1151, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 18), wherein the Supreme Court of the United States, Mr. Justice Hughes delivering the opinion, gives very full and exhaustive consideration to the question as to the scope and effect of the federal legislation upon the subject of interstate commerce, with special reference to its limitations upon the legislative or administrative power of the states to deal with any matters relating to interstate commerce coming within the terms and scope of such federal legislation. In the course of that decision Mr. Justice Hughes makes use of the following significant language in considering certain phases of those cases analogous to those presented in the case at bar:

"The interblending of operations in the conduct of interstate and local business by interstate carriers is strongly pressed upon our attention. It is urged that the same right of way, terminals, rails, bridges, and stations are provided for both classes of traffic; that the proportion of each sort of business varies from year to year and, indeed, from day to day; that no division of the plant, no apportionment of it between interstate and local traffic, can be made to-day, which will hold to-morrow; that terminals, facilities and connections in one state aid the carrier's entire business and are an element of value with respect to the whole property and the business in other states; that securities are issued against the entire line of the carrier and cannot be divided by states; that tariffs should be made with a view to all the traffic of the road and should be fair as between through and short-haul business; and that, in substance, no regulation of rates can be just which does not take into consideration the whole field of the carrier's operations, irrespective of state lines. The force of these contentions is emphasized in these cases, and in others of like nature, by the extreme difficulty and intricacy of the calculations which must be made in the effort to establish a segregation of intrastate business for the purpose of determining the return to which the carrier is properly entitled therefrom.

"But these considerations are for the practical judgment of Congress in determining the extent of the regulation necessary under existing conditions of transportation to conserve and promote the interests of interstate commerce."

[1] Numerous other cases may be cited from both federal and state courts sustaining the rule that, wherever the interstate and intrastate transactions of carriers are so related that the government of the one involves the control of the other, it is Congress, and not the state, that is entitled to prescribe the final and dominant rule, for otherwise Congress would be denied the exercise of its constitutional authority, and the state, and not the nation, would be supreme within the national field. Houston, E. & W. Texas Ry. v. United States, 234 U. S. 342, 351, 34 Sup. Ct. 833, 58 L. Ed. 1341, and cases cited. The case of People ex rel. New York Central R. R. Co. v. Public Service Commission, 233 N. Y. 113, 135 N. E. 195, is a case which nearly approaches identity with the case at bar. It involves the question as to whether under the Public Service Commission Law of the state of New York the Public Service Commission of that state had power to make an order directing two railroad companies, engaged in interstate and intrastate commerce within that state, to reconstruct a switch or track connecting their lines and install other tracks and facilities so as to furnish adequate and convenient interchange of freight between said railroads. Upon appeal from an order dismissing a writ of review instituted by the relator for the purpose of testing the power of the Public Service Commission to make said order, it was held by said court that the state Commission had no jurisdiction to make such order in view of the provisions of the act of Congress of 1920 amending the Interstate Commerce Law. The court said:

"The Transportation Act of 1920, § 405, amended the second paragraph of section 3 of the Interstate Commerce Act to provide: 'All carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property, subject to the provisions of this act, shall, according to their respective powers, afford all reasonable, proper and equal facilities for the interchange of traffic between their respective lines, and for the receiving, forwarding and delivering of passengers or property, to and from their several lines and those connecting therewith, and shall not discriminate in their rates, fares and charges between such connecting lines, or unduly prejudice any such connecting line in the distribution of traffic that is not specifically routed by the shipper.' A violation of that provision of the act of Congress authorizes a complaint by any interested party to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and after a hearing before that Commission to such relief as the facts warrant. The Interstate Commerce Commission is clothed with authority by the section quoted to compel carriers to afford reasonable and proper facilities for the interchange of traffic between their respective lines. The order made by the Public Service Commission commands relator and the Lehigh Valley to make such track connections between their roads as shall be necessary or proper to establish and furnish adequate and convenient interchange of freight between said roads. To sustain the order of the Public Service Commission in the instant case would necessarily establish that the two several Commissions mentioned were clothed with jurisdiction to grant the relief sought and require us to ignore the well-established principle of law that the Congress having delegated to the Interstate Commerce Commission power to deal with the subject-matter of this proceeding, an exercise of like power by the state is thereby superseded"—citing Erie R. R. Co. v. People of the State of New York, 233 U. S. 671, 34 Sup. Ct. 756, 58 L. Ed. 1149, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 266, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 138; Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Hardwick Elevator Co., 226 U. S. 426, 33 Sup. Ct. 174, 57 L. Ed. 284, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 203.

The respondents herein, however, contend that the Railroad Commission was empowered to make and enforce the order sought to be annulled in this proceeding under the authority of the case of Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Larabee Flour Mills Co., 211 U. S. 612, 29 Sup. Ct. 214, 53 L. Ed. 352. That case held that the mere delegation by Congress to the Interstate Commerce Commission of power to act in a given matter did not prevent such action by the state authorities unless the Commission had taken action in the particular matter involved, quoting therefrom the following:

"Until then the authority of the state in merely incidental matters remains undisturbed. In other words, the mere grant by Congress to the Commission of certain national powers in respect to interstate commerce does not of itself, and in the absence of action by the Commission, interfere with the authority of the state to make those reguluations conducive to the welfare and convenience of its citizens."

In the matter of the extension of railroad facilities and in the abandonment of other railroad facilities, including terminals, not only is the Commission empowered to act upon the subject, but Congress has expressly prohibited the railroad companies from acting without the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission. See section 1, subdivision 18 (section 402) supra. Subdivision 20 of that section (41 U. S. Stats, at Large, p. 478), construed in connection with subdivisions 19 and 21, authorizes the Commission to issue a certificate for the extension or abandonment of portions of railway lines and for the issuance of a certificate authorizing such work to be done or a line to be abandoned (subdivisions 18, 19, 20, 21), and with reference to such certificate provides as follows:

"From and after issuance of such certificate, and not before, the carrier by railroad may, without securing approval other than such certificate, comply with the terms and conditions contained in or attached to the issuance of such certificate and proceed with the construction, operation, or abandonment covered thereby. Any construction, operation, or abandonment contrary to the provisions of this paragraph or of paragraph (18) or (19) of this section may be enjoined by any court of competent jurisdiction at the suit of the United States, the Commission, any commission or regulating body of the state or states affected, or any party in interest; and any carrier which, or any director, officer, receiver, operating trustee, lessee, agent, or person, acting for or employed by such carrier, who knowingly authorizes, consents to, or permits any violation of the provisions of this paragraph or of paragraph (18) of this section, shall upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than three years, or both." (Italics ours.)

It is clear from the foregoing that Congress has not only vested jurisdiction in the Interstate Commerce Commission over the question of the extension of terminal facilities, such as contemplated by the order of the Railroad Commission in the case at bar, but has also prohibited the railroads from making such improvements without the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission. This being true, Congress has fully occupied the field of regulation of such matters and the power of the state commission has thereby been terminated.

An examination of the case of Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Larrabee Flour Mills Co., supra, further shows that it was decided in 1909, several years prior to the passage of the amendatory act of 1920, and at a time prior to any attempt on the part of Congress to invest the Interstate Commerce Commission with jurisdiction over the matter of changes or extensions in interstate railroad lines.

The respondents also urge the contention that, since this court has decided in the case of Civic Center Association v. Railroad Commission, supra, that the Railroad Commission of California had jurisdiction to make and enforce orders providing for the elimination of those certain grade crossings involved, in part, in the proceedings before the Railroad Commission, and since the said Commission had found and held in said proceedings that the establishment of a union terminal depot was an indispensable element in accomplishing the elimination of said grade crossings, the Commission had the power to include in its order for the elimination of such grade crossings the creation of such union terminal depot. There is no merit in this contention, for the reason, very aptly set forth in the extract above quoted from the decision of the New York Court of Appeals in the case of People, etc., v. Public Service Commission, supra. It is also without merit for the further reason that, notwithstanding the views expressed by the Railroad Commission in its findings and conclusions in the proceeding herein presented for review, we can perceive no indispensable relation between the elimination of grade crossings and the establishment of union depot facilities, nor can we see any insurmountable difficulty why jurisdiction over the matter of eliminating grade crossings may not be exercised in a proper case consistently, and it may be concurrently, with the exercise of the authority which is vested by the act of Congress of 1920 in the Interstate Commerce Commission over the subject of union terminal depot facilities.

[2] From the foregoing excerpts from the Act of Congress of 1920, amendatory of the Interstate Commerce law, and from the authorities above cited, we arrive at the conclusion that full power and authority over the matter of union terminal depot facilities of the railroads who are largely engaged in interstate commerce, and who are the petitioners herein, has been vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission under the terms of said amendatory act of 1920, and that by virtue thereof the Railroad Commission of California, one of the respondents herein, has been divested of the power, authority, and jurisdiction over that subject, sought by it to be exercised in the several proceedings before it and by the order presented for review herein. This disposition of the primary inquiry involved in these proceedings renders unnecessary a discussion of the several subsidiary questions presented for our consideration by the briefs of counsel herein.

The application is granted, and the order of the Railroad Commission annulled.

LENNON, WASTE, WILBUR, SHURTLEFF, SLOANE, and LAWLOR, JJ., concur.

SHAW, C. J. I concur in the foregoing opinion on the grounds therein stated. I wish to say, however, in addition, that the conclusion that the Railroad Commission has no power to order the terminal depot in question constructed can also be reached by resort to the principle laid down in Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. R. R. Com., 173 Cal. 577, 160 Pac. 828, 2 A. L. R. 975. That decision establishes the principle that railroads are private property which are devoted to public use, and that the state has no power to order the railroad company, without its consent, to establish a new line of railroad for the benefit of the public. The scheme here embraced in the order of the Railroad Commission contemplates the expenditure of a very large sum of money by the railroad companies in the construction of a new terminal depot for their joint use in a place where there is no existing depot and no tracks leading thereto. Entirely new tracks will have to be built to reach the new depot, and the land on which it is to be erected and on which the track is to be built will have to be acquired by the said companies, or by some subsidiary company in which they are all interested, and vast sums of money must be used in constructing the buildings and tracks required for the union depot.

If this be true it is equally beyond the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to make the order. To require the railroad companies to construct this depot and the tracks necessary therefor is equivalent to ordering them to dedicate new property to a public use. I know of no power which will justify the state in commanding a railroad company to thus acquire and dedicate property to a public use.

59 Cal. App. 685

MILLER v. LYNN. (Civ. 4295.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 18, 1922.)

Appeal and error ⊜1011(1)—Finding on conflicting evidence not disturbed.

Finding of the trial court based on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; H. L. Preston, Judge.

Action by J. F. Miller against J. C. Lynn. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Hiram E. Casey and L. R. Lambert, both of Santa Rosa, for appellant.

W. F. Cowan, of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant to obtain a judgment declaring a certain blacksmith business to be the property of plaintiff and defendant as copartners; to have the partnership dissolved and the assets divided. Judgment went for the defendant, and the plaintiff has appealed. In support of his appeal the appellant has brought up the judgment roll and a transcript of the reporter's notes. The appellant does not call to our attention any erroneous ruling of the trial court, but contends that the evidence was such that the judgment should have been in favor of the plaintiff. In support of this contention much might be said. However, the evidence was conflicting, and this court is bound by the finding of the trial court.

It was the theory of the plaintiff, and he introduced his own testimony and the testimony of others, that the plaintiff and defendant entered into a contract on the 6th day of July, 1920, by the terms of which contract the plaintiff was to pay the defendant $265 and thereupon he would be a full partner with the defendant in said blacksmith business. It is not contended that the consideration was ever in fact paid, but the plaintiff contends that he is able and willing to pay the same and that the contract should be enforced. On the other hand, the defendant contended that the agreement between the plaintiff and himself was to the effect that the plaintiff would leave San Rafael, go to Sebastopol, and there go to work for the defendant at $5 per day. He further contended that he stated to the plaintiff that if the plaintiff would put up $300 or $350, something of that kind, for a half interest in the stock on hand, that amount of money would enable the defendant to pay off his debts and would enable the plaintiff to share in the profits. The defendant further contended that the plaintiff said he would do so as soon as he could sell his oil station or his cows, property which he owned at San Rafael. However, according to the testimony, the plaintiff never made the sales and never paid the defendant anything for the half interest in the stock and that the partnership, or profits sharing arrangement, never came into existence.

There were several inconsistencies in the testimony of the plaintiff, and several inconsistencies in the testimony tendered by the defendant; but the power to hear and determine the facts and to weigh the testimony rested with the trial court, and, as stated above, the findings made by the trial court are conclusive on this court when, as we have just shown, such findings are supported by the sworn testimony of creditable witnesses.

For the reasons which we have stated the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

59 Cal. App. 572

McCALLUM v. STULL et al. (Civ. 4197.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2. California. Nov. 8, 1922.)

Dismissal and nonsuit ⊜80—Improper order of dismissal without judgment thereon does not prevent subsequent entry of judgment.

An entry in the clerk's minutes and in the register of actions that the cause was dismissed, undoubtedly made inadvertently, because a cross-complaint had been interposed which was at issue and had been set for trial so that the time to dismiss had passed, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 581–581b, and the rule governing the procedure was that provided by section 582, without a judgment of dismissal having been entered in accordance with that section, did not dispose of the action, and the court thereafter had power to set aside the dismissal and try the action, and a judgment thereafter rendered in the action is valid, even though the order of dismissal was not expressly set aside.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by P. McCallum against G. L. Stull, sometimes known as Gertrude D. Stull, and others, to foreclose a judgment lien. Judgment for plaintiff, and the named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Eloise B. Cushing, of Oakland, for appellant.

T. John Butler, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendants to foreclose a judgment lien. Judgment went for the plaintiff, and the defendant G. L. Stull has appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure. The record presents but one question, and that is the question of procedure. Before proceeding further it is necessary to state the facts concerning the history of this litigation.

Prior to the 9th day of July, 1915, G. L. Stull, the appellant, commenced an action against P. McCallum et al. to quiet title. Thereafter the defendant in that action appeared and answered and at the same time filed a cross-complaint. Later the plaintiff answered the cross-complaint. Thereafter the cause as made by the pleadings came on for trial, and on May 11 such proceedings were had that the cause was ordered dismissed. An entry was made by the courtroom clerk in his minutes, and an entry was made in the register of actions, "1916 May 11. Cause dismissed." Thereafter no proceedings were had until February 19, 1919. On that date findings of fact and conclusions of law were duly signed and filed and on the same date a judgment in due form was also signed and filed and the judgment roll was made up. When the instant case came on for trial, the plaintiff produced the judgment roll and evidence showing that no part of the judgment had been paid, and thereupon the plaintiff rested. The defendant thereupon offered in evidence the minute entry showing an order of dismissal and also the register of actions showing the order of dismissal, which is quoted in full above. Both offers on the part of the defendant were refused, and the defendant claims such refusals to be errors. It is patent that the appellant was contending in the trial court that the first action was dismissed and that therefore there was no judgment to be foreclosed. If such was the contention of the appellant, then the appellant should have produced a judgment roll showing that a judgment of dismissal was entered and that such judgment was within the jurisdiction of the court entering it. Harper v. Rowe, 53 Cal. 233; Simmons v. Threshour, 118 Cal. 100, 50 Pac. 312. But the appellant did not attempt to take any such course. The record on appeal shows that on May 11, 1916, the judge presiding at the trial ordered the action dismissed. Such order was undoubtedly inadvertently made because, as we have stated above, one of the defendants had interposed a cross-complaint, the cross-complaint had been answered, the case had been set down for trial, and trial had been had, at least in part, and the time to dismiss had passed, and the time had arrived to try the cause on its merits and render a judgment accordingly. Code Civ. Proc., secs. 581, 581a, 581b and 582. As recited above, the purported dismissal was ordered by the court, but the dismissal did not fall within the provisions of subdivision 3, subdivision 4, or subdivision 5 of section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Such being the case, the rule governing the procedure is that provided in section 582 of the Code of Civil Procedure. If the clerk had proceeded to enter a judgment of dismissal pursuant to the order made May 11, 1916, the appellant's contention might have had some merit. However, as we have shown above, no judgment of dismissal was entered and the court had full power on the 19th day of February, 1919, to prepare and sign findings and judgment disposing of the case on its merits. At the same time it had the power, if it saw fit, to correct the order inadvertently made on May 11, 1916, which order directed a dismissal. Apparently that correction was not made, but such intermediate errors cannot be inquired into at this late date, when findings of fact and a final judgment were entered as early as February 19, 1919. Such an inquiry would be a collateral attack on the latter judgment.

The trial court did not err in refusing to receive the evidence offered by the appellant. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 633

PEOPLE v. SULLIVAN. (Cr. 902.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 14, 1922.)

1. Jury ⊜103(9)—Disqualification of jurors for bias not based solely on public rumor not removed by statement that they could give fair trial.

In a prosecution for criminal syndicalism, where the opinions of jurors examined on their voir dire as to whether the Industrial Workers of the World was a lawful organization, were not based solely on public rumor and public notoriety, Pen. Code, § 1076, was inapplicable and in disallowing challenges for actual bias under Pen. Code. § 1073, subd. 2, there was prejudicial error, even though they stated they could give defendant a fair trial.

2. Jury ⊜99(5)—Juror holding settled opinion in relation to truth of facts going to foundation of case cannot render unbiased verdict.

A juror is not in position to render an impartial and unbiased verdict who at the beginning of trial holds a settled opinion in relation to the truth of facts going to the foundation of the case required to be made by the prosecution.

3. Criminal law ⊜421(1)—Testimony of witness as to acts of lawlessness, based on statements made to him by others, hearsay.

In a prosecution for criminal syndicalism, where the ultimate fact which prosecution was endeavoring to establish was the illegal character and acts of the I. W. W., which could have been shown by literature authorized or issued by it or by witnesses whose past relation to the organization gave them first-hand knowledge, and by testimony of witnesses as to specific acts, evidence of a witness, based on statements made to him by others as to what they as members had done in the way of lawlessness, was hearsay.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

C. J. Sullivan was convicted of criminal syndicalism, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

R. W. Henderson, of Bakersfield, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, J. The defendant was convicted of criminal syndicalism. He appeals from the judgment pronounced thereon, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. The information is substantially in the language of the statute. It charges the defendant with a violation of several inhibitions of the law known as the Criminal Syndicalism Act (St. 1919, p. 281). The information contains but one count.

[1] Complaint is made that the court committed prejudicial error in disallowing challenges to the jurors Rankin and Morstad. Rankin testified that he had formed an opinion as to whether the Industrial Workers of the World is a lawful and peaceable organization. That he based his opinion upon newspaper statements, some literature purporting to be of the I. W. W., which a hired man had shown him, and also statements made by this man about the organization to him and to other men. Morstad stated that he had an opinion on the question as to whether the Industrial Workers of the World advocate and teach violence and terrorism, based on information he had seen in the public press and pamphlets which he understood were issued by the I. W. W., and also upon statements of persons claiming to tell the facts from their own knowledge concerning the organization, and which statements he believed to be true.

The prosecuting attorney, against the objection of defendant's counsel, was permitted to draw from each of these prospective jurors a statement that, notwithstanding his opinion upon the matters in question, he could and would give the defendant a fair and impartial trial. These jurors were challenged for actual bias, under subdivision 2 of section 1073, Penal Code.

The jurors had formed and still possessed opinions as to the illegal character of the I. W. W. These opinions were not based solely upon public rumor, common notoriety, or statements in journals, and hence section 1076 of the Penal Code is inapplicable. They were founded in part upon what persons had said. Morstad's opinion was in part the result of what men had told him of things which they claimed to know of their own knowledge, and which he asserted were believed by him to be true. Therefore, no further inquiry was permissible. The disqualification of the jurors could not be removed by their statement that they could and would give defendant a fair and impartial trial, and set aside the opinions which they had formed. People v. Wells, 100 Cal. 229, 34 Pac. 718; People v. Miller, 125 Cal. 46, 57 Pac. 771; People v. Riggins, 159 Cal. 113, 112 Pac. 862; People v. Wismer (Cal. App.) 209 Pac. 259; People v. Helm, 152 Cal. 532, 93 Pac. 99.

[2] In the case of People v. Reed (Cal. App.) 207 Pac. 1025, cited by respondent, the juror's opinion was derived from public rumors and newspaper accounts, and is thus differentiated from that of the jurors in the one at bar. It is true that in the cases above cited the opinions of prospective jurors were upon the question of the guilt of the defendant. The provision of the Code is that it is a ground for challenge if the prospective juror has a state of mind "in reference to the case" which will prevent him from acting with entire impartiality and without prejudice to the substantial rights of either party. In the instant case it was incumbent upon the prosecution to establish the illegal character of the I. W. W. organization. Without proof of this fact, the evidence would unquestionably be insufficient to sustain a verdict of guilty upon any one of the charges contained in the information. The defendant did not seriously dispute the fact of his membership in the I. W. W. Obviously the issue as to the character of the I. W. W. was the pivotal one in the case. Under the circumstances, for a juror to have an opinion concerning this vital issue would be as prejudicial, as a matter of principle, as though he had such an opinion concerning the guilt of the accused. The difference would be one of degree only. It cannot be said that a juror is in a position to render an impartial and unbiased verdict, who at the beginning of the trial holds a settled opinion in relation to the truth of facts going to the very foundation of the case required to be made by the prosecution. Davis v. Walker, 60 Ill. 452; Gray v. People, 26 Ill. 344. See, also, White v. Moses, 11 Cal. 68; People v. Din, 39 Cal. App. 695, 179 Pac. 713. The record shows that the defendant exhausted his entire quota of peremptory challenges. We conclude that he was denied a trial by a jury whose members possessed a state of mind in reference to the case of that entirely impartial and unprejudiced character required by the law to safeguard the substantial rights of the defendant.

[3] It will not be necessary to consider other points raised upon this appeal, except to say that certain parts of the testimony of the witness Vale were objectionable. This is true of the relation by him of what other persons had told him that they, as members of the I. W. W., had done in the way of acts of sabotage and lawlessness. The ultimate fact which the prosecution was endeavoring to establish was the illegal character, teachings, and acts of the I. W. W. This could be shown by literature authorized or issued by it, by witnesses whose past relation to the organization gave them first-hand knowledge, and by testimony of witnesses as to the specific acts of sabotage, arson, and revolution within their own knowledge. People v. Roe, 209 Pac. 381.

But to go beyond this and relate purported incidents, not known to the witness, but being based upon statements made to him by others, would clearly be hearsay and as such inadmissible. Authorities cited by respondent do not justify the admission of such evidence. In the opinion in the Roe Case it is expressly stated that the witness Dymond testified that he personally knew of the facts which he related as to acts of sabotage by I. W. W. members.

We find no other error in the rulings of the trial court, but for the reasons we have stated the judgment must be reversed, because of prejudicial error in the disallowing of appellant's challenges to jurors for actual bias.

The judgment is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; WORKS, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 683

KRAUSKOPF v. BROOKING. (Civ. 3892.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 17, 1922.)

Malicious prosecution ⟸64(2)—Findings of malice and want of probable cause warranted.

Evidence in action for malicious prosecution on a charge of embezzlement of crops held to warrant findings that defendant, actuated by malice, caused plaintiff's arrest without probable cause.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; A. F. St. Sure, Judge.

Action by H. F. Krauskopf against A. D. Brooking. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank J. Fontes and Henry Boyen, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Milton A. Nathan, of San Francisco (Thomas Maul, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff obtained a judgment for $500 against the defendant as damages for malicious prosecution. The facts are that the defendant was the owner of a piece of realty in Solano county and plaintiff was his tenant under the terms of a written lease which provided for a division of the products of the ranch, one-third to the owner and two-thirds to the tenant; that in the year 1918, after the harvest, defendant went upon the leased premises to claim his share of the crop, and while there discovered some sacks of grain lying in the field covered with straw; that he thereupon complained to plaintiff that he was not receiving his share of the grain, and after some dispute consulted an attorney at law and a justice of the peace; that, acting upon their advice, he swore to a complaint charging the plaintiff with larceny; that the defendant thereafter consulted another attorney at law and also the district attorney of Solano county, and as a result of said consultation was advised to and did swear to a complaint charging the plaintiff with embezzlement; that the larceny charge was dismissed without examination upon motion of the district attorney, and that the embezzlement charge was heard by a justice of the peace, who found that the crime of embezzlement had not been committed, and that there was not sufficient cause to believe the plaintiff herein guilty of said charge. He was thereupon discharged from custody, and within time commenced this action for damages for the malicious prosecution.

The trial court found, among other things, that the justice of the peace had, after a full and thorough examination, found and held that the crime of embezzlement had not been committed; that plaintiff was not guilty of either of the charges preferred against him, and that in procuring the warrants of arrest the defendant had acted maliciously, and without probable cause; that by reason of the premises the plaintiff had been greatly humiliated and injured in his business, and had suffered damage to his good name and reputation; that, though the defendant had consulted a duly licensed attorney at law, and also the district attorney of the county of Solano and the justice of the peace of Vacaville township, before causing the arrest of plaintiff on either of said charges, he had not made to either of them a fair or full or complete statement of all the facts within his knowledge in relation to the crimes charged against the plaintiff; and, finally, that it was not true that before seeking the advice of said attorney and of the district attorney and of said justice of the peace defendant believed that plaintiff had committed each of the crimes charged against him.

The appeal from the judgment is confined solely to an attack upon these findings of the trial court. In each case appellant insists that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding. A full and thorough examination of the record convinces us that in each case there is sufficient evidence to support each finding. In some instances the trial court found in accordance with the undisputed and uncontradicted evidence. In the instances where the findings are based upon conflicting testimony the great weight of the evidence bears most strongly in favor of the findings which the trial court made. It would serve no purpose to set out this evidence in full. From the entire record it is evident that the appellant, actuated by personal malice and ill feeling toward the respondent, caused his arrest without probable cause and with nothing more than a mere suspicion that he had been defrauded. Every opportunity had been given him to check up the grain and to determine for himself whether the respondent had made an honest division, but this he refused to do, choosing rather to put the respondent to the defense of a criminal charge.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 678

FERRARIS v. FERRARIS. (Civ. 4361.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 17, 1922.)

Divorce ⊂⊃184(10)—Findings on conflicting evidence not disturbed.

In an action for divorce, where the evidence as to the grounds alleged were in direct conflict, the findings of the trial court will not be disturbed on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; J. A. Bardin, Judge.

Action for divorce by Charles Ferraris against Josephine Ferraris. From an interlocutory decree for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Norris & Warth, of Salinas, and Emilio Lastreto, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Zabala & Sargent, of Salinas, and Albert Picard, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff commenced this proceeding to obtain a divorce from the defendant on the ground of her adultery. She filed an answer to his complaint and also a cross-complaint based upon the ground of extreme cruelty. The interlocutory decree was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and relief under the cross-complaint was denied. The defendant appeals from this decree. The only ground of the appeal is that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings made by the trial court.

We have made a thorough examination of the record, including the testimony of the various witnesses. This testimony presents the common story of a case of this nature. The witnesses called on behalf of the husband testified to facts and circumstances which were as positively denied by those called on behalf of the wife. It would serve no purpose to detail any of this testimony. The trial court had all the witnesses before it, and concluded that the husband's charges were true. When the evidence is in such conflict it is not for this court to set aside the finding of the trial court.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 598

PEOPLE v. TEIXEIRA. (Cr. 631.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 13, 1922.)

1. Perjury ⊂⊃21—Information, failing to charge that false affidavit was used or authorized to be used, held fatally defective.

In a prosecution under Pen. Code, § 118a, for perjury, charged to have been committed by making a false affidavit in a criminal case, conviction could not be sustained, where the information failed to allege that the false affidavit was ever produced or used in court, or that defendant authorized its use or delivered it to any one to be used.

2. Perjury ⊂⊃23—Information, charging making of false affidavit, held not defective as failing to allege that oath to testify truly was first taken.

In a prosecution for perjury, brought under Pen. Code, § 118a, and based upon the making of a false affidavit to be used to obtain a new trial in a criminal case, an information, failing to allege that defendant first took the oath to testify or depose truly, was not defective for that reason, it sufficiently appearing that affiant had attested the truth of what was stated in the affidavit before a person authorized to administer oaths; section 118a only requiring the affidavit to be taken before an officer authorized to administer oaths, which under section 119 includes every mode authorized by law of attesting the truth of that which is stated.

3. Perjury ⊂⊃22—Information, failing to show that court wherein perjured evidence was to be used had jurisdiction, held fatally defective.

In a prosecution for perjury, brought under Pen. Code, § 118a, and charging that defendant made a false affidavit to be used in obtaining a new trial in a criminal case, the information was fatally defective, where it did not show that the superior court in which such criminal action was tried had jurisdiction thereof.

4. Perjury ⊂⊃25(2)—Information, failing to allege materiality of perjured testimony, held fatally defective.

In a prosecution for perjury brought under Pen. Code, § 118a, and based upon the making of a false affidavit to be used to obtain a new trial in a criminal case, the information was fatally defective for failing to allege that the false affidavit was material to any issue in that case.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; J. S. Needham, Judge.

Emanuel Teixeira was convicted of perjury, and he appeals. Reversed.

L. J. Maddux and T. B. Scott, both of Modesto, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BURNETT, J. Defendant was convicted of perjury, and he appeals from the judgment, the order denying his motion for a new trial, and his motion in arrest of judgment. The charging part of the information, under which the conviction was had, is as follows:

"The said Emanuel Teixeira, on or about the 1st day of March, 1921, at and in said county of Stanislaus, state of California, and prior to the filing of this information, did willfully make and execute a certain false instrument in writing, to wit, an affidavit with the willful intention to produce the said affidavit and allow the same to be produced and used on behalf of one Antone Vitro upon the hearing of a motion then and there pending for a new trial, made on behalf of one Antone Vitro in a certain criminal action then and there pending in the superior court of the county of Stanislaus, state of California, Department No. 1, wherein the people of the state of California was plaintiff and Antone Vitro was defendant, and for the fraudulent deceitful purpose of imposing the said instrument in writing upon said superior court as containing evidence competent to be received by said court upon hearing of a motion for a new trial, and to fraudulently affect and influence said court in deciding said motion for a new trial.

"That said affidavit in writing, so as aforesaid feloniously made and executed by him, the said Emanuel Teixeira, was and is in words and figures as follows, to wit:

" 'In the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Stanislaus.

" 'The People of the State of California, Plaintiff, v. Antone Vitro, Defendant. Affidavit.

" 'State of California, County of Stanislaus —ss.:

" 'Emanuel Teixeira, being first duly sworn, deposes and says: I live near Modesto, in the county of Stanislaus, state of California. I have lived in the county for 6 years. I am a single man, and am now 25 years of age. I have known Sarafina Enos for 5 years. I was working for John Vitro on the Leek ranch from April, 1916, to April, 1917. That during the time I worked for John Vitro I milked cows and did outside work on the ranch. That Sarafina Enos during the whole of that time was also working for John Vitro as cook. In the month of September, 1916, John Vitro had company, and Sarafina Enos slept on a sofa in the sitting room; it was a sofa that is let down like a bed. About 11 o'clock at night I went into the sitting room and went to bed with Sarafina Enos, and we had sexual intercourse twice. She made no objections. After that she fell in love with Mike Silva and went with Mike Silva, so that I had nothing further to do with her. After that Mike Silva came there every week. I saw him stay there as late as 11 o'clock at night many times. I also worked for John Vitro on the Ceres ranch for about five months, and Sarafina Enos was also working at the Ceres ranch at the same time I was. I used to see Mike Silva come there many times and visit with her at the Ceres ranch.

" 'Emanuel his X Teixeira.
mark

" 'Witness to mark and signature of Emanuel Teixeira:

" 'Vernon M. Gant.

" 'T. B. Scott.

" 'Subscribed and sworn to before me this 1st day of March, 1921. L. J. Maddux, " 'Notary Public in and for the county of Stanislaus, State of California.

" 'Filed March 2, 1921.'

"That said affidavit was subscribed and sworn to before L. J. Maddux, Esq., notary public in and for the county of Stanislaus, state of California, a duly appointed qualified and acting notary public in and for the county of Stanislaus, state of California, an officer authorized by law to administer oaths and to administer an oath to the said defendant, Emanuel Teixeira, and did then and there, on the 1st day of March, 1921, in said county of Stanislaus, state of California, administer an oath in due form of law to said Emanuel Teixeira as the person who made and executed said affidavit above set forth.

"That in said affidavit the said Emanuel Teixeira did willfully, knowingly, corruptly, falsely, and feloniously swear and take oath that during the month of September, 1916, at the Leek ranch near the town of Hughson, county of Stanislaus, state of California, he had sexual intercourse with one Sarafina Enos twice during said month of September, 1916.

"Whereas, in truth and in fact as he, the said Emanuel Teixeira, then and there well knew that he, Emanuel Teixeira, never at said Leek ranch, in September, 1916, or at any time, or at any place, or at all, had sexual intercourse with the said Sarafina Enos, whereby the said Emanuel Teixeira did then and there as aforesaid feloniously, willfully, knowingly, and corruptly swear falsely and feloniously commit willful perjury."

It is conceded that the authority for the prosecution is found in section 118a of the Penal Code providing as follows:

"Any person who, in any affidavit taken before any person authorized to administer oaths, swears, affirms, declares, deposes, or certifies that he will testify, declare, depose or certify before any competent tribunal, officer or person, in any case then pending or thereafter to be instituted, in any particular manner, or to any particular fact, and in such affidavit willfully and contrary to such oath states as true any material matter which he knows to be false, is guilty of perjury."

With the preceding manifestly must be considered section 124, as follows:

"The making of a deposition, affidavit or certificate is deemed to be complete, within the provisions of this chapter, from the time when it is delivered by the accused to any other person, with the intent that it be uttered or published as true."

Appellant claims that the information is fatally defective in four particulars as follows:

"(1) There is no allegation that the false affidavit was ever produced or used in court or that the defendant authorized its use or delivered it to any one to be used. (2) There is no allegation in the information that the defendant first took oath to testify or depose truly. (3) It does not appear by said information that the superior court had any jurisdiction of the case of People v. Vitro. (4) There is no allegation in the information that the alleged false affidavit was material to any issue in the case of the People v. Vitro."

[1] In support of the first contention appellant cites People v. Robles, 117 Cal. 681, 49 Pac. 1042. Therein it was held, as stated in the syllabus, that—

"Before a party can be convicted of perjury in making a false affidavit, he must either use the affidavit for a purpose contemplated by section 118 of the Penal Code, or deliver it to some one for such use; and an indictment which merely shows that a false affidavit made by the defendant was used by another person on a motion for a new trial, without averring that the defendant so used it, or delivered it for such use, or that it was delivered by defendant to another person with the intent that it be uttered or published as true, does not state facts sufficient to constitute the offense of perjury."

It is to be observed that the information herein is more defective in that respect than was the indictment therein, for the reason that, besides the failure to allege that the affidavit was delivered by the defendant to another person with the intent that it be "uttered or published as true," or delivered to another at all, there is no allegation that said affidavit was actually used on said motion for a new trial.

In the opinion in the Robles Case, supra, it is declared:

"Here the indictment only charges the making of the false affidavit; it does not charge enough. It should have declared that the affidavit was delivered with the intent that it be uttered and published as true. Such a statement in the pleading is just as necessary as to charge that the affidavit was made by the accused, or that it was false; if it were possible, more necessary, for while the affidavit remains in the hands of the accused no mischief is done."

In reply to this point the Attorney General cites People v. John, 137 Cal. 220, 69 Pac. 1063, but that case does not overrule the Robles Case; in fact, the court said: "People v. Robles, 117 Cal. 681, has no application." In the John Case the affidavit constitutes the complaint, which was the basis of the criminal prosecution, and it appeared that it was in the custody of the committing magistrate, whose duty it was at once to issue the warrant of arrest. The offense of perjury was therefore complete when the defendant subscribed and verified the affidavit. Neither is the case of People v. Griesheimer, 176 Cal. 44, 167 Pac. 521, inconsistent with the contention of appellant herein. In that case it was held that the essential facts constituting the offense sufficiently appeared, although there was no direct averment of the causal connection between the false pretenses and the payment of the money, or that the money was received as a subscription to a certain corporation.

[2] In support of his second contention appellant cites People v. Simpton, 133 Cal. 367, 65 Pac. 834. Therein an affidavit was involved and the allegation of the indictment was that "the said G. W. Simpton did then and there willfully, corruptly, knowingly, falsely, and feloniously swear, take oath and make his affidavit," etc. The Supreme Court called attention to the fact that section 118 of the Penal Code requires that the person must be sworn to "testify or depose truly," and it is declared:

"The words, 'swear, take oath, and make his affidavit,' are not equivalent to an averment that he was 'duly sworn to testify truly.'"

It was held that the indictment was fatally defective in that respect. It is to be said, though, that section 118a of the Penal Code was enacted after the opinion was rendered in the Simpton Case, and the code commissioner states that "it is made necessary by the decision of the Supreme Court in People v. Simpton, 133 Cal. 367." There is a distinction in the language of the two sections, in that the latter does not contain the word "truly," and only requires that the affidavit be taken before an officer authorized to administer oaths, and that the affiant "swear" to the facts therein stated. Section 119, following, prescribes that—

"The term 'oath,' as used in the last two sections, includes an affirmation and every other mode authorized by law of attesting the truth of that which is stated."

We think it sufficiently appears that said affiant attested the truth of what was stated in the affidavit before a person authorized to administer oaths, and that this objection to the information relates to "form rather than to substance."

[3] The third point is more serious. There is nothing in the information to show that the superior court had jurisdiction to hear the motion for a new trial at which said affidavit was to be "produced and used." There is no direct allegation that the superior court had jurisdiction, nor are facts stated from which the inference would follow. The only averment as to the character of the charge against Antone Vitro is that it was "a certain criminal action then and there pending in the superior court of the county of Stanislaus." Manifestly the foregoing is not sufficient, since there are many "criminal actions" of which the justice court has exclusive jurisdiction. If the affidavit was to be used in a proceeding of which the superior court had no jurisdiction, it could not constitute the basis for a charge of perjury. In other words, the legal authority of the court to hear and determine the motion for a new trial is one of the essential facts which must be affirmatively disclosed by the information, or else it is fatally defective. People v. Howard, 111 Cal. 655, 44 Pac. 342.

[4] The last point is equally serious. Said section 118a requires that the false statement must relate to a "material matter." This is one of the primary essentials of a charge of perjury, and it must appear in the information by specific averment or of such facts as necessarily to lead to the conclusion of law that the perjurious matter is material. People v. Ah Bean, 77 Cal. 12, 18 Pac. 815. In the Ah Bean Case it is said:

"There are two modes by which the materiality of the alleged false statement may be shown in criminal pleading: (1) By setting forth the nature of the issue, and the evidence given thereon so that, as a matter of law, it may be said the testimony upon which the perjury is assigned is material to the issue; (2) by showing an action at issue in a court of competent jurisdiction, the testimony given, its willful and felonious falsity, coupled with the averment that it was material to the issue."

As to said second method it must be said there was no attempt to allege that any of the statements in said affidavit was material to the determination of said motion for a new trial. It is true that the information contains a recital that it was "competent evidence to be received by said court" but "competent" and "material" represent two distinct and well-recognized features and the allegation of the former does not supply the lack of the latter. Nor is a single fact alleged from which we must infer that on the motion for a new trial it was important to inquire whether any fact stated in said affidavit was true. The nature of the charge against Vitro is not alleged, except that it was a criminal action. This is not sufficient, of course, to show whether it was material to inquire as to the truth of the statements in said affidavit. Nor is there any intimation as to any of the grounds for the motion for a new trial. It is conceivable that this might have been alleged in the information so as to indicate the materiality of the alleged false matter, but nothing of the kind appears. Nor is there anything to show that said statement was material to any collateral matter, such as the veracity of any witness at the trial or of any witness or affiant at the hearing of the motion for a new trial. In fine, there is an entire failure to allege any fact from which the inference would follow that such affidavit could have any legal potency in the determination of the motion.

We think these defects are too grave to be deemed cured by section 4½ of the Constitution. They relate to important and fundamental requirements of pleading, and it is of moment that at least a reasonable degree of uniformity should be maintained in a matter of practice of such significance to the orderly administration of justice.

The judgment and orders are reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; ANDERSON, Justice pro tem.

---

59 Cal. App. 623

ALBERT STEINFELD & CO. v. BROXHOLME et al. (Civ. 3697.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division Two, California. Nov. 14, 1922. Rehearing Denied Dec. 13, 1922.)

1. Principal and agent ⟸123(1)—Evidence held not to show authority to enter into contract.

In an action for damages for breach of contract to install tiles, evidence held not to show any authority on the part of plaintiff's architect to enter into the contract in question.

2. Principal and agent ⟸101(4)—Architect authorized to receive bids not authorized to contract.

An architect who was told "to get other bids" for certain work to be done was not authorized to enter into a contract for such work.

On Petition for Rehearing.

3. Principal and agent ⟸25(3)—Rule that one receiving benefits of contract cannot question authority of agent construed.

The rule that, where one has accepted, acted upon, and received the benefits of a contract entered into by him with another as the agent of a third person, he is estopped to question the authority assumed by the agent, has no application where a person has entered into a contract with an unauthorized agent and then withdraws from it prior to its ratification or acceptance by the agent's principal without having acted thereon or receiving any benefit thereunder.

4. Principal and agent ⟸101(4)—Authority of architect stated.

Where an architect is employed to "prepare certain designs and sketches" for remodeling a building, his authority is no greater than that customarily exercised by an architect employed to draw plans and to supervise and direct the construction of a building, and in the absence of authority expressly or necessarily conferred by his contract of employment has no implied authority to bind his employer by entering into a contract for the performance of labor or the furnishing of material.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. S. Crail, Judge.

Action by Albert Steinfeld & Co. against J. W. Broxholme and another, copartners doing business under the firm name of the Los Angeles Mantel & Tile Company. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ward Chapman and L. M. Chapman, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Westervelt & Ball, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Plaintiff, as the assignee of Harold Steinfeld and Andrew Pizzini, brought this action to recover damages claimed to have been occasioned by the breach of an alleged contract to install tiles in a flower store at Tucson, Ariz. The store was owned by plaintiff's assignors, and at the times in question was being remodeled by them. The defense was that, though defendants made an offer to install the tiles, the offer was revoked prior to its acceptance; wherefore defendants asserted that no agreement was consummated, and that therefore there was no breach of contract on their part. The trial court found for defendants, and entered a judgment in their favor accordingly. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment, claiming that the uncontradicted evidence shows that defendants' offer was accepted and that a valid and binding agreement was consummated. Whether the evidence does show this or not is the sole question in the case.

Steinfeld and Pizzini employed an architect of the name of Bray, whose place of business is at Tucson. Defendants' place of business is in Los Angeles. Some time in March, 1919, one of the defendants, J. W. Broxholme, while in Tucson informally submitted to Bray certain figures at which Broxholme said that he thought his firm might install the tiles. Bray submitted the figures to his employers, who said the amount was too high, and that they could not spend that much money. Thereafter Bray made certain changes in the plans for the purpose of reducing the cost of the tiling, and on June 10, 1919, sent the altered blueprints and sketches to defendants at Los Angeles with a request that they make a bid thereon. On June 23, 1919, one of the defendants saw Bray at Tucson, and on behalf of his firm offered to do the work under the altered plans for $1,080. Bray submitted this new bid to his principals, who rejected it and told the architect "to get other bids." They did not direct Bray to enter into a contract, but simply "to get other bids."

Somewhere about the middle of July, 1919, Bray, learning that a Mr. Watkins, a business man of Tucson, was going to Los Angeles, asked Watkins if he would call on defendants when in Los Angeles and see if they could do the work for $1,000. Pursuant to this request Watkins did call on defendants when in Los Angeles, and on July 23d saw the defendant J. W. Broxholme, discussed with him the matter of putting in another bid for the tile work, and was told by Broxholme that, if the latter's firm would be allowed to use the tiles which they then had on hand, leaving to their decision the determination of the color of the tiles, they possibly could make a bid to do the work for $1,000. Watkins then sent a telegram to Bray at Tucson as follows:

"Can arrange tile except shade. Wire Baltimore Hotel today."

In reply Bray immediately sent a telegram to Watkins simply saying, "O. K." Thereupon Watkins again called on J. W. Broxholme, told the latter that he was about to return to Tucson, and inquired whether he might tell Bray that defendants would do the work for $1,000. Broxholme told Watkins that he might so inform Bray. Whereupon Watkins asked Broxholme if he would make the offer in writing. Broxholme said he would, and thereupon wrote, signed and delivered to Watkins the letter which plaintiff claims embodies the terms of defendants' proposal. That letter is as follows:

"Los Angeles, Cal., 7/23/19. Mr. J. S. Watkins, Tucson, Ariz.—Dear Sir: Confirming our conversation of recent date, we herewith agree to furnish and install the tile work in the building for the flower store as designed by Mr. Wm. Bray at your city for the sum of $1,000.00 (one thousand dollars). All to be done as per his plans using white tile on the stairway, but it is understood that on account of the present condition for getting colored tile that we are allowed to use tile out of our present stock, matching the colors desired by Mr. Bray as near as possible. Yours very truly, L. A. Mantel & Tile Co. By J. W. Broxholme."

It does not appear when, if ever, this letter was brought to the attention of the owners of the building.

Four or five days later Watkins delivered to Bray at Tucson defendants' written offer of July 23d, and Bray, on August 1st, mailed to defendants at Los Angeles a letter reading as follows:

"Tucson, Ariz., August 1, 1919. Los Angeles Mantel & Tile Co., 1113 S. Hill Street, Los Angeles, California. Attention Mr. J. W. Broxholme: Dear Sir: Mr. Watkins has informed me that you are willing to go ahead with the tile work for job 210, 44–46 North Stone avenue, for the consideration of $1,000.00. Please find enclosed blueprints for work, and kindly mail upon receipt contract and detail for rough measurements for stairs, etc., giving us the necessary depth to keep back from face of finished work. This work is well along and I trust you will use every endeavor to expedite your portion of it. Yours respectfully, William Bray."

On August 8, 1919, defendants mailed a letter to Bray wherein they advised him that on account of the labor situation they would be unable to do the flower store job. This letter was received by Bray in due course. Ever since sending this letter defendants have refused to recognize themselves as bound by any contract with plaintiff's assignors. Wherefore this action to recover damages for breach of the alleged contract.

[1] Appellant's claim is that defendants' letter of July 23, 1919, signed by J. W. Broxholme and by him delivered to Watkins, was an offer to do the work for $1,000, and that such offer was accepted by Watkins on the spot, or, if not, then that it was accepted on August 1, 1919, when Bray mailed to defendants his letter of that date. It is not necessary to decide whether the facts show an acceptance by either Watkins or Bray, for there is a total lack of any evidence of authority on the part of Bray to accept defendants' offer or to deputize Watkins to do so.

The only evidence to which our attention has been called respecting the nature and scope of Bray's employment is the following: Harold Steinfeld, one of plaintiff's assignors, testifying as a witness for plaintiff, was asked in what capacity and for what purpose Bray was employed, and in reply said: "To represent me in making certain improvements in the referred to property"—the Tucson property known as the "Flower Store." Bray, when on the witness stand, upon being asked what he was employed by Steinfeld and Pizzini to do, replied: "To get up some designs for remodeling the premises known as Howe's Flower Store, on Stone avenue, in Tucson." It will be recalled that Bray did not take it upon himself to accept either of the two earlier bids submitted by defendants, but that he laid each before his principals for their acceptance or rejection. And when he presented defendants' bid of $1,080 to his employers the latter did not tell him to enter into a contract at a lower and more satisfactory sum; they merely told him "to get other bids."

[2] The foregoing seems to be all the evidence bearing upon the subject of Bray's authority. At most it shows no more than that Bray was employed to render services as an architect in the remodeling of the store. As such architect he had no authority to enter into any contract for any part of the work. He might receive bids and submit them to his employers for their acceptance or rejection, but he had no authority to bind them by accepting a bid from any source. He possessed only such powers as were given him by his contract with the owners. If, without the knowledge or consent of his principals, he could contract for tiles that were agreeable to his taste and at a price which accorded with his ideas of reasonableness, he could bind his employers to pay for tiles of a color and character which they, perchance, might deem inappropriate, and he might obligate them to pay a price which might far exceed their means or their expectations. We do not think that one employed simply as an architect possesses any such wide range of authority. His duty is limited to the supervision and direction of the work that is to be done by the contractor or those acting under him.

"The authority of an architect" says the Supreme Court of Washington in Schanen-Blair Co. v. Sisters of Charity, 77 Wash. 256, 137 Pac. 468, "is not absolute. He is bound by the general rules of agency. It is nowhere made to appear in the record that the architect had any authority to bind the respondent beyond the terms of its contract with the principal contractors. * * * In the absence of an express contract, or compelling facts, it is never held, as a matter of law, that an architect has any implied power to purchase materials or to enter into a contract for or on behalf of the owner. His duties are well defined and well understood, and there is nothing pertaining to his engagement that is calculated to mislead any one dealing with him."

See, also, 5 C. J., p. 256. Bray, being without power to enter into a contract for and on behalf of his principals, was without authority to accept the offer contained in defendants' letter of July 23, 1919, or to deputize Watkins to do so. And, since defendants revoked their offer before any attempt to accept it was made by Bray's principals, it follows that there never was a consummated contract, and hence that defendants are not guilty of any breach of contract.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, J., CRAIG, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. In an application for rehearing by this court appellant claims: (1) That respondents are estopped from questioning the authority of Bray to enter into the contract on behalf of his principals, Steinfeld and Pizzini; and (2) that, even if respondents were not so estopped, there still is evidence sufficient to show that Bray did have authority to make the contract. We find no merit in either contention.

[3] 1. The doctrine of estoppel invoked by appellant in its petition for a rehearing is not applicable to the facts of this case. We do not question the rule that, where one has accepted, acted upon, and received the benefits of a contract entered into by him with another as the agent of a third person, he is estopped to question the authority assumed by the agent. That, however, is not this case. Cassin v. Marshall, 18 Cal. 689, cited by appellant, deals with facts very different from those in the case at bar. The present case is controlled by the rule which obtains where the person who has entered into a contract with the unauthorized agent withdraws from it prior to its ratification or acceptance by the agent's principal without having acted thereon or received any benefit thereunder.

By their letter to Bray of August 8, 1919, respondents withdrew from the alleged contract which forms the basis for this action, and there is nothing in the record before us tending to show that Steinfeld or Pizzini had any knowledge of that contract prior to respondents' withdrawal therefrom. There is nothing in the record which tends to show that Bray's principals at any time prior to respondents' repudiation made any attempt to ratify their agent's unauthorized contract —assuming, without deciding, that Bray's conduct and respondents' letter of July 23, 1919, would have constituted a contract had the former possessed the necessary authority. Indeed, so far as our attention has been called to the testimony, there does not seem to be any evidence of ratification of the contract by Bray's principals prior to the commencement of the action. Until a ratification by them there was no contract binding on Bray's principals. Until, by ratifying the contract, they placed themselves in such a position that respondents could enforce it against them, Steinfeld and Pizzini were not in a position to enforce it against respondents. Until then there was no contract binding on either party. Defendants, therefore, were at liberty to withdraw when they mailed their letter of August 8, 1919, to Bray advising him that they could not do the work.

When a contract is entered into in the name of a principal without his authority, he is in no way affected thereby unless he shall choose to ratify it. If it is binding on the other party in advance of such ratification by the agent's principal, then that other party is bound by a contract which his adversary may treat as void or valid at his pleasure. On principle a contract so executed seems, at most, to amount to no more than a proposal on the part of him who executes it, from which he should have the right to recede until it has been ratified or accepted by the party whose agent exceeded his authority, when, for the first time, it becomes binding on the principal as well as on the person who dealt with the agent in ignorance of the latter's want of authority. This is the view which has received the stamp of approval by our Supreme Court. In Salfield v. Sutter, etc., Co., 94 Cal. 546, 29 Pac. 1105, the unauthorized agent had signed the name of the defendant, a corporation, to a paper which purported to be an agreement by the corporation to sell its lands. In stating the principle applicable to such a situation as is presented by the facts in the case before us, the Supreme Court in that case says:

"No doubt the corporation could have ratified it [the unauthorized contract] before the plaintiffs signified their intention not to be bound thereby, but so far as the averments of the complaint show, they did not do so. As the corporation could have elected not to be bound, the same privilege must be accorded the plaintiffs." 94 Cal. 550, 29 Pac. 1106. (Italics ours.)

To the same effect is Baldwin v. Schiappacasse, 109 Mich. 170, 66 N. W. 1091. In Corpus Juris (volume 2, p. 524) the author of the article on Agency says:

"As to whether or not an unauthorized contract entered into by an agent on behalf of his principal is binding on the third party by the mere fact of ratification without any further action on his part, or whether he has a right to withdraw therefrom, the authorities are conflicting. * * * The better rule, and that supported by the weight of authority, is that until ratification the third person is free to withdraw from the contract, and if he does not do so the principal's ratification cures the defect in authority and the third person becomes thereafter bound as though the authority had been previously conferred, and he cannot thereafter withdraw except on grounds entitling him to a rescission; but if before the principal elects whether he will ratify, the other party signifies his intention not to be bound, there can be no ratification"—citing in support of this last clause Salfield v. Sutter, etc., Co., supra. (Italics ours.)

2. Were it not for the earnestness with which appellant urges upon us the contention that the evidence shows that Bray did possess authority empowering him to consummate the contract with respondents, we should not deem it necessary to add aught to what was said by us in the opinion which we handed down when we originally passed upon the merits of the appeal. After a most careful consideration of the able argument advanced by appellant's counsel in their petition for a rehearing, we find it impossible to give our assent to their contention.

[4] In the findings filed by the trial court the scope of Bray's authority is expressly defined. That court found that Steinfeld and Pizzini "employed one William Bray as their agent to prepare certain designs and sketches for remodeling said store building for and under the direction of said Harold Steinfeld and Andrew Pizzini." If this finding is justified by the evidence there can be no question as to Bray's lack of authority to enter into the contract with respondents. Where one who is an architect is employed to "prepare certain designs and sketches" for remodeling a building, his authority is certainly no greater than that customarily exercised by an architect employed to draw plans and to supervise and direct the construction of a building; and, as shown in the opinion heretofore filed, citing Schanen-Blair Co. v. Sisters of Charity, 77 Wash. 256, 137 Pac. 468, in the absence of authority expressly or necessarily conferred by his contract of employment, it never is held as a matter of law that one who is employed simply to perform the usual services of an architect has any implied authority to bind his employer by entering into a contract with third persons for the performance of labor or the furnishing of material. It only remains, therefore, to consider whether the court's finding defining Bray's authority is supported by the evidence.

Bray himself gave an unequivocal and explicit definition of his authority by testifying that he was employed "to get up some designs for remodeling the premises known as Howe's Flower Store." The trial court accepted this definition of Bray's authority—a definition given by the agent himself—and found the fact accordingly. This the court was justified in doing, in the absence of some compelling fact or facts necessitating a different finding, and the record does not disclose any facts necessitating, or, we might even go so far as to say, warranting, a different finding. It is true that, as pointed out by appellant in its petition for a rehearing, Harold Steinfeld testified that Bray was employed "to represent me in making certain improvements in the referred to property." But this testimony by one of Bray's principals does not necessitate the conclusion that the scope of Bray's authority at all exceeded the limits specified in the finding made by the trial court. Steinfeld did not tell the court how Bray was to represent him "in making certain improvements in the referred to property." For aught that is disclosed by Steinfeld's testimony, Bray may have been employed by his principals to represent them in any one of a number of possible ways "in making certain improvements" on the property. But Bray, who was an architect, not a builder, tells us exactly how he was to represent his employers and what he was to do "in making certain improvements in the referred to property." He tells us that he was employed to represent them by getting up "some designs for remodeling the premises." When considered in the light of all the evidence in the case, the most logical inference to be deduced from Steinfeld's testimony that Bray was employed to represent him "in making certain improvements in the referred to property" is that Bray, an architect, was simply employed to "prepare certain designs and sketches," just as the court found. And, even if Bray did receive bids prior to the making of the contract sued upon, and even if he did submit such bids to his employers for their approval, his conduct in that regard would indicate no more than that his principals recognized him as possessing the powers usually exercised by an architect employed to draw plans and to supervise and direct the erection of a building. One so employed, as we have shown, does not possess any authority to bind the owner by entering into contracts in the owner's name, for and on the owner's behalf.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

---

59 Cal. App. 674

MacKEOWN v. BALDWIN. (Civ. 4308.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 17, 1922.)

Physicians and surgeons ⟹18(4)—Complaint for malpractice held not to state cause of action.

Complaint in action for malpractice consisting in injury to leg during treatment for strained ligaments held insufficient to show that defendant did anything which under the particular circumstances he should not have done or omitted to do something which he should have done.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action by Lillian B. MacKeown against Dr. Walter I. Baldwin. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Southard M. Modry, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Hartley F. Peart, of San Francisco (Charles V. Barfield, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant to recover damages for alleged malpractice. To plaintiff's seventh amended complaint the trial court sustained a demurrer without leave to amend, and later signed and caused to be entered a judgment in favor of the defendant for his costs. From the judgment so rendered, the plaintiff has appealed.

In her seventh amended complaint the plaintiff inserted formal allegations to the effect that the defendant was a physician and surgeon; that on the 12th day of July, 1919, the plaintiff injured her right leg by straining the ligaments; that about the 1st day of September, 1919, she employed the defendant; that at that time one Sigrid Stohl was a nurse in the employ of the defendant, and then the plaintiff states the charging part of her cause of action in paragraph V as follows:

"That on or about the 1st day of September, 1919, said defendant entered upon said employment as physician as aforesaid, to treat, heal and cure the right leg of said plaintiff. That at or about said time said defendant instructed the said Sigrid Stohl, who was then and there in his employ as aforesaid, to bend the right leg of plaintiff backward and forward a great many times. That defendant so instructed the said Sigrid Stohl to bend the leg as aforesaid to the right and left, which bending caused said leg to tear the ligaments thereof at a point near the knee and caused the said ligaments to become broken and torn from the flesh. That the said twisting and bending of the said knee by the said Sigrid Stohl was so done by the expressed orders of the said defendant and that the said defendant was careless and negligent in this, to wit, the said defendant told the said Sigrid Stohl to bend the right leg of plaintiff to the right and left, backward and forward, as aforesaid. That the bending, twisting, and exercising the right leg as aforesaid caused the tearing of the ligaments as aforesaid, and said ligaments would not have been torn if the said defendant had not instructed the said Sigrid Stohl to treat said leg as aforesaid. That the said defendant was negligent and careless in prescribing said treatment as aforesaid."

The defendant demurred on numerous grounds. Among others, the defendant alleged:

"That said seventh amended complaint is uncertain in this, that it does not appear therein, nor can it be ascertained therefrom, what act or conduct on the part of this defendant is inconsistent with due and proper care of the plaintiff; how or in what way or manner this defendant was negligent, or careless, or of what his said alleged negligence or carelessness consists; how or in what way or manner defendant could have been negligent in merely instructing the masseuse to bend the leg of plaintiff; whether said alleged bending was not the proper treatment of plaintiff; whether the condition of plaintiff's leg was such that it was improper to bend the same; whether defendant ever instructed the said masseuse to twist plaintiff's leg or knee; and whether she ever, in fact, twisted plaintiff's leg or knee."

Turning to the charging part of the complaint quoted above, it is patent that the defendant's instruction to his assistant was "to bend the right leg of plaintiff backward and forward a great many times." It is true that the pleader in the next sentence charges:

"That defendant so instructed the said Sigrid Stohl to bend the leg as aforesaid to the right and left which bending caused said leg to tear the ligaments," etc.

But further down such expression is clarified as showing the pleader did not mean to state that the leg was to be bent sideways to the right and sideways to the left, but the bending to the right and left was to be backward and forward. It is clear that the pleader does not aver that the leg was to be twisted, although the pleading contains language from which that inference might be drawn. The pleader evidently thought he was within his rights in averring that a ligament was torn by reason of the operation, but the pleader evidently overlooked the fact that in many proper operations it is an essential part of the operation to tear ligaments. In other words, the mere matter of the tearing of a ligament is not actionable. If by reason of a spraining or some other injury an adhesion has taken place, it would seem to be elementary that relief can be had only by forcibly and with more or less violence tearing the ligament loose. It is not, therefore, malpractice to tear loose a ligament, but many other factors must be considered to constitute such an act malpractice.

"Negligence on the part of a physician consists in his doing something which he should not have done, or in omitting to do something which he should have done." McGraw v. Kerr, 23 Colo. App. 163, 128 Pac. 870.

Now in the pleading before us there is no averment of any fact or facts showing that the defendant did anything which under the particular circumstances he should not have done, nor is there any averment that under certain circumstances he omitted to do something which he should have done. These omitted circumstances should have been enumerated (if in fact they existed), and thereupon the pleader should have predicated his contention that under such circumstances, naming them, the alleged bending was not the act of a person reasonably skillful in his profession. Thereafter, on the trial of the case, experts could be called to give testimony for and against such contention. In no other way can some cases sounding in malpractice be proved. McGraw v. Kerr, 23 Colo. App. 163, 128 Pac. 870. Taking the appellant's pleading by and large, and supposing that hereafter the plaintiff should take the stand and prove every single word which she has directly alleged, her proof would not constitute a cause of action to go before the jury, for there would be nothing to guide the jury as to whether the defendant had skillfully prescribed a bending, or whether his prescription was not reasonably skillful. In what we have just said we do not mean to be understood as stating that a doctor may prescribe a violent bending of the leg from side to side, and that such bending, if alleged, must be followed by additional averments, but in that behalf we do not understand the plaintiff by her complaint to make any such allegation, and, furthermore, the defendant's demurrer was directly addressed to that subject and to the subject of twisting. As the plaintiff's complaint was her eighth attempt, it is not reasonable to believe that the defendant was being charged with either a side bending or a twisting as lastly referred to by us.

The trial court did not err in sustaining the demurrer. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

(59 Cal. App. 590)

CRAIN v. SUMIDA et al. (Civ. 3680.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 10, 1922. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 8, 1923.)

1. Trial ⟸331—Verdict held not inconsistent.

A verdict in favor of plaintiff for loss of use of automobile against a certain defendant, and "in favor of defendant that plaintiff take nothing," held not to contain a fatal inconsistency where, from a consideration of the whole record, it was clear that the concluding sentence of the verdict was intended to refer solely to another defendant, and was a finding or verdict in his favor.

2. Trial ⟸331—Verdict certain if it can be made certain.

A verdict is sufficiently certain if it can be made so by reference to the pleadings or the record, and the entire record should be searched and all parts interpreted together, so that a possible deficiency in one place may be cured by what appears in another.

3. Appeal and error ⟸1073(1)—A defendant cannot complain that judgment made no disposition as to another defendant.

Failure to enter judgment determining the right of one defendant was an illegality which did not affect any of the substantial rights of another defendant, and he could not complain thereof on appeal.

4. Trial ⟸326—Form of verdict given to jury held not erroneous.

In an action for injury to an automobile and for loss of use, defendant was not prejudiced by form of verdict suggested to the jury, "We, the jury, find for plaintiff against defendant ——— (naming him), and fix plaintiff's damages for injury to his automobile in the sum of $——— (naming amount), [and] further find in favor of plaintiff for loss of use of automobile * * * and fix plaintiff's damages therefor in the sum of $———," in that it in effect charged the jury that if they found for plaintiff they must allow him damages both for injury to his automobile and for loss of its use, where it was established by uncontradicted evidence that plaintiff's automobile did sustain injuries in the collision, and that he was deprived of its use while it was being repaired.

5. Master and servant ⟸330(3)—Sufficient evidence to show automobile driver's agency.

The fact that defendant was the owner of a motor truck, and that the chauffeur driving it at time of collision had been employed to drive it, if it stood as the sole evidence of agency, would have sufficed to justify an inference that such chauffeur was acting as defendant's agent at the time of the collision.

6. Master and servant ⟸330(3)—Evidence held to show chauffeur's agency.

In an action for injuries to an automobile in a collision, evidence held to warrant a finding that defendant's driver was acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the accident.

7. Damages ⟸174(1)—Rental value admissible on question of damages for loss of use of automobile.

In action for damages for injury to automobile and loss of its use, testimony as to rental value of such an automobile was admissible, not as furnishing the exact measure of damages for loss of use, but as a fact to be considered in ascertaining the extent of the injury due to plaintiff's being deprived of the use of the car while it was undergoing repairs.

8. Damages ⟸188(1)—$300 held not excessive for loss of use of automobile.

In an action for injury to automobile and for loss of use during one month when repairs were being made, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that plaintiff was damaged in the sum of $300 for loss of use.

9. Damages ⟸188(2)—$1,150 not unwarranted nor excessive for injury to Chalmers car.

A verdict for $1,150 was not unwarranted by the evidence, nor excessive, for injuries to a Chalmers automobile in a collision, where an expert testified that in his opinion the market value of the automobile immediately prior to accident was $1,950, and that immediately thereafter it was not worth more than $300 or $400.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action by W. R. Crain against H. Sumida and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and named defendant appeals. Affirmed in the District Court of Appeal, and hearing denied in the Supreme Court.

Bradley & Bradley, of Visalia, for appellant.

D. E. Perkins and Farnsworth, McClure & Burke, all of Visalia, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This action was brought against H. Sumida and K. Sumida to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff in a collision between his automobile and an auto delivery truck, the driver of which was alleged by plaintiff to be an employee of both defendants. Plaintiff recovered a verdict against the defendant H. Sumida for the sum of $1,450. From a judgment entered on that verdict, H. Sumida has taken this appeal.

It developed at the trial that the delivery truck, instead of being the property of both defendants, was the property of H. Sumida only, by whom it was used in a general merchandise business of which he was the sole proprietor. The business was conducted under the fictitious name of "H. Sumida Company," and was managed by appellant's brother, the defendant K. Sumida. The truck was used in the business for the purpose of delivering groceries and other general merchandise. At the time of the accident it was being driven by an employee of appellant, one G. Takeshita, who was employed to solicit for and take orders from customers and to make deliveries. Defendants' main contention at the trial was that Takeshita was ill on the day of the accident, and that he was not then acting within the scope of his authority as agent for either defendant. In addition to an answer denying any liability on the part of either of them, defendants filed a cross-complaint wherein they alleged that the collision was due to plaintiff's negligence, and prayed that the defendant H. Sumida, the owner of the truck, recover damages for the injuries which were received by his vehicle when it collided with plaintiff's automobile.

Before the jury retired it was furnished with certain blank forms of verdict. These forms were worded in such a way that the jury might make its verdict conform to any one of the three or four possible conclusions at which it was conceivable they might arrive. The jury filled out all but one of the blank spaces in one of the forms of verdict so provided them, and returned a verdict as follows:

"We, the jury, find for plaintiff that defendants take nothing by their cross-complaint in this action. We, the jury, find for plaintiff against defendant H. Sumida, and fix plaintiff's damages for injury to his automobile in the sum of $1,150. We, the jury, further find in favor of plaintiff for the loss of use of his automobile against said defendant H. Sumida, and fix plaintiff's damages therefor in the sum of $300. And we further find in favor of defendant ——— that plaintiff take nothing."

[1, 2] Appellant earnestly insists that there is a fatal inconsistency between that part of the verdict wherein the jurors find that plaintiff recover of the defendant H. Sumida the sums of $1,150 and $300 and the concluding part wherein they declare that they "find in favor of the defendant ——— that plaintiff take nothing." From a consideration of the whole record, we think it clear that this concluding sentence of the verdict must be taken as referring solely to the defendant K Sumida, and that it is a finding or verdict in his favor only. If this be so, then there is no conflict between the concluding sentence and those preceding portions of the verdict whereby the jurors find for plaintiff against appellant, the defendant H. Sumida, and fix the damages recoverable against him at $1,150 and $300, respectively. "Id certum est quod certum reddi potest;" and a verdict is sufficiently certain if it can be made so by reference to the pleadings, the evidence or the record. 38 Cyc. pp. 1877, 1878. In determining the sufficiency of the verdict the entire record should be searched, and all the parts interpreted together, so that if possible a deficiency in one place may be cured by what appears in another. It appears from the record before us that the blank forms with which the jurors were furnished before retiring to deliberate were given them with certain appropriate instructions as to filling in the blank spaces. Thus, among other things, the jurors were instructed as follows:

"If you find for plaintiff, and also find that the driver of said delivery car was in the employ of only one of said defendants at the time of said accident, then the form of your verdict should be: 'We, the jury, find for plaintiff against defendant ——— (inserting name) and fix plaintiff's damages for injury to his automobile in the sum of $———. We, the jury, further find in favor of plaintiff for loss of use of automobile against said defendant ——— (inserting the name) and fix plaintiff's damages therefor in the sum of $———. And we further find in favor of defendant ——— (inserting the name of defendant not liable).'"

This was the form of verdict adopted by the jury, showing thereby that they concluded that the driver of the truck did negligently collide with plaintiff's automobile while acting in the course of his employment, but that he was in the employ of only one of the defendants, and that therefore they intended to return a verdict against that defendant only. By specifically finding against appellant and fixing the damages which he should pay it is manifest that, when the jurors declared that they "find in favor of defendant ———," they meant thereby that they found in favor of K. Sumida, the only defendant in the action other than appellant, and that as to the defendant K. Sumida, and as to him only, the plaintiff was to take nothing. This construction is fully justified by the record, and accords with the rule that verdicts are to receive, if possible, such a construction as will uphold rather than defeat them. 38 Cyc. p. 1878.

[3] The judgment recites the verdict and adjudges that plaintiff recover of the defendant H. Sumida a total of $1,450, together with plaintiff's costs, but it fails to make any mention of the defendant K. Sumida, as to whom the jury had found, in effect, that the plaintiff take nothing; and no judgment has been entered either in favor of or against K. Sumida. A judgment is defined by our statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 577) to be "the final determination of the rights of the parties in an action or proceeding"; and appellant now claims that there can be but one judgment rendered on a verdict, and that such judgment should be one which finally determines the rights of all the parties in accordance with the verdict. Without doubt the defendant K. Sumida was entitled to have the judgment adjudicate that plaintiff take nothing as against him; but the failure to enter a judgment which determines the rights of K. Sumida as well as the rights of each of the remaining parties to the action was an irregularity which did not affect any of the substantial rights of H. Sumida, the only party who is here seeking a reversal of the judgment. Appellant is not prejudiced by the irregularity, and he therefore may not successfully assign it as reversible error.

[4] The complaint alleges two distinct items of damage. It alleges, first, that the automobile was damaged in a certain sum, and, secondly, that plaintiff was further damaged by being deprived of its use while it was undergoing repairs. Though the answer does not directly and specifically deny the second item of damage, the case seems to have been tried upon the theory that the denials are sufficient to raise an issue as to both classes of damage, and we therefore shall assume that both were properly denied. As we have seen, the court instructed the jurors that, if they found that plaintiff was entitled to recover, but that the driver of the delivery truck was in the employ of only one of the defendants, then the form of their verdict should be, in part, as follows:

"We, the jury, find for plaintiff against defendant ——— (naming him) and fix plaintiff's damages for injury to his automobile in the sum of $——— (naming amount), * * * [and] further find in favor of plaintiff for loss of use of [his] automobile * * * and fix plaintiff's damages therefor in the sum of $———."

Appellant argues that by submitting this form of verdict to the jurors they were in effect instructed that, if they found for plaintiff, they must allow him damages both for injury to his automobile and for loss of its use, even though thy might believe that plaintiff suffered damage as to one only of the two alleged items of injury.

It was established by uncontradicted evidence that plaintiff's automobile did sustain injuries in the collision, and that he was deprived of its use while it was being repaired. The form of verdict given to the jury could not possibly have injured appellant when considered in the light of this evidence and in connection with the court's whole charge. Elsewhere in its instructions the court was careful to say that it was the duty of the jury to determine whether plaintiff's car was injured as the result of the alleged negligence, and that, if it was injured, but not totally destroyed, the measure of damages for such injury was the difference between the market value before and after the collision; also that, if plaintiff was entitled to any damage for the loss of the use of his automobile, the damage for such loss should be estimated upon the basis of the period of time it was necessary for plaintiff to repair his car, and that the damages therefor should not exceed the reasonable rental value during that period. In view of these instructions we fail to see how appellant could have been prejudiced by the suggested form of verdict.

[5, 6] It next is contended that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the implied finding that Takeshita, the driver of appellant's auto delivery truck, was acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the accident. The fact that appellant was the owner of the truck, and that Takeshita had been employed to drive it, if it stood as the sole evidence of agency, would have sufficed to justify the inference that Takeshita was acting as appellant's agent at the time of the accident. McWhirter v. Fuller, 35 Cal. App. 288, 170 Pac. 417. But K. Sumida, the resident manager of the business, as well as K. Sumida's wife and a young man employed in appellant's store, testified that Takeshita was ill on the day of the collision, and that for that reason he had "laid off" and was not working for his employer on that day. Another witness testified that Takeshita visited his ranch on the day in question, and that he did not come there to deliver any goods for his employer. Takeshita was not produced as a witness. K. Sumida and his wife, both of whom seem to have worked in the store on the day of the accident, and also the young man who worked about the store, may have learned from some source that Takeshita was ill, and they may have been told that he was unable to work during any part of the day in question, and they may honestly have believed that he performed no duty whatever for his employer during any part of that day. Nevertheless, they were not with Takeshita when he carelessly collided with plaintiff's automobile, and it is possible that, as the day wore on, Takeshita felt so much better that he was able to and in fact did seek orders from his employer's customers or make deliveries of groceries. There is no testimony that is necessarily, directly, and inherently inconsistent with this possibility, and, on the other hand, there is testimony which tends to support it and to show that it was an actuality. In support of plaintiff's case the following facts were testified to: It is customary to put in little boxes the groceries which are to be delivered to appellant's customers. It also is the custom of the driver to solicit orders on one day and to deliver the goods on the next. Immediately after the collision there were found in the truck a few groceries and some boxes with Sumida's name thereon, apparently ready for delivery, and also some oil cans. There also was found in the truck the order book with the name "H. Sumida Company" written on it. From these facts we cannot say that the jury was not warranted in inferring that Takeshita was engaged in delivering groceries for appellant at the time of the accident.

[7, 8] Appellant's next point is that there is no evidence to support the verdict for the amount awarded as damages by reason of plaintiff's loss of the use of his automobile. Plaintiff did not have his car repaired until about two months after the accident, and it seems that when it was taken to the repair shop it took about a month to do the necessary work. For this deprivation of use during the month that his property was being repaired the jury awarded plaintiff the sum of $300. Plaintiff testified that prior to the accident the injured automobile had been used by him as a demonstration car in making sales of Chalmers automobiles, for which make of car he seems to have had the agency. He also testified that his damage by being deprived of the use of the car in his business during the time that the repairs were being made amounted to $400 a month. Another witness testified that the reasonable rental value of such a car during the time that the repair work was being done was $20 a day. This testimony as to rental value was admissible, not as furnishing the exact measure of damages, but as a fact to be considered in ascertaining the extent of the injury due to plaintiff's being deprived of the use of the car while it was undergoing repairs. Dettmar v. Burns Bros., 111 Misc. Rep. 189, 181 N. Y. Supp. 146; Meyers v. Bradford (Cal. App.) 201 Pac. 471. We think that the evidence as to rental value was sufficient to sustain a finding that plaintiff was damaged in the sum of $300 by reason of being deprived of the use of his car during the month that the needed repairs were being made.

[9] Lastly, it is claimed that the amount allowed for injuries to plaintiff's car, $1,150, was excessive and not warranted by the evidence. Plaintiff, who qualified as an expert, testified that in his opinion the market value of his automobile immediately prior to the accident was $1,950, and that immediately thereafter it was not worth more than $300 or $400. This was sufficient to justify a finding of $1,150 as the amount of damages to the car. Appellant calls our attention to the fact that after the car was repaired plaintiff refused an offer of $1,000 for it. But manifestly the car was worth much more after the repairs were made than it was immediately following the accident.

We find no reversible error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, J.; CRAIG, J.

On Petition for Rehearing in Supreme Court.

PER CURIAM. The petition for a rehearing in this action is denied.

The opinion contains the following paragraph assumed to be taken from 38 Cyc. pp. 1877, 1878, to wit:

"And a verdict is sufficiently certain if it can be made so by reference to the pleadings, the evidence or the record."

We withhold our approval of this statement so far as it purports to say that the verdict can be made certain by reference to the evidence.

SHAW, C. J., and LAWLOR, WILBUR, LENNON, WASTE, SEAWELL, and KERRIGAN, JJ., concur.

190 Cal. 233

In re UNDERHILL'S ESTATE.

BRYSON v. UNDERHILL et al.

(L. A. 7317.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 26, 1922.)

Descent and distribution ⊜56—Issue of predeceased spouse do not participate in estate of surviving spouse leaving issue by an earlier marriage.

Where a widow with two children marries a widower with one son, who predeceases her, leaving her and his son equal shares of his estate, and she marries again and predeceases her third husband, there being no issue by either the second or third marriages, held, under Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 8, that her estate went to the surviving third husband and the two children by the first marriage, excluding the son of the deceased second husband.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

Proceeding by Frank Bryson against J. C. Underhill, administrator of the estate of Elizabeth M. Underhill, and another. From an order denying petitioner any participation in the estate, he appeals. Affirmed.

George L. Greer, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

G. P. Adams, W. W. Orme, and C. E. Spencer, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WASTE, J. This is an appeal from an order denying petition for final distribution. Elizabeth M. Underhill, the decedent, was married three times. She was first the wife of one Macy, by whom she had two children, Paul Macy and Grace Park, both of whom are living. Upon the death of Macy she married John Bryson, whose wife was dead. Bryson had one son by his former wife, Frank Bryson, the appellant herein. Of the marriage of Elizabeth and Bryson there was no issue. John Bryson died, leaving a last will, by the terms of which his wife, Elizabeth, and his son, Frank Bryson, were made residuary legatees. Upon distribution of his estate the sum of $6,597.93, and certain personal property, were distributed to Elizabeth. After the death of Bryson, Elizabeth married J. C. Underhill, who survives her, and by whom she had no issue. She died intestate. In due time J. C. Underhill, the surviving husband and the administrator of her estate, who is one of the respondents here, filed his final account and petition for the distribution of her estate, alleging himself and Paul Macy and Grace Park, the surviving children of Elizabeth by her first marriage, to be the only heirs at law. Frank Bryson, the appellant, thereupon filed a petition, alleging himself to be an heir at law of Elizabeth Underhill by reason of her marriage to his father, and prayed for distribution to himself of a share of the estate, consisting in part of the money and personal property distributed to his stepmother upon the death of his father, which has already been mentioned. The court settled the account of the administrator and determined J. C. Underhill, the surviving husband, Paul Macy and Grace Park, the son and daughter of the decedent, to be the only heirs at law, ordered distribution of the residue of the estate to them, and denied the petition of Frank Bryson for partial distribution to himself. From this order the appeal is taken.

In contending that he is an heir at law of Elizabeth M. Underhill, deceased, in that he is a son of John M. Bryson, the predeceased spouse of the decedent, and is therefore entitled to that portion of her estate that was received by her upon distribution of the estate of said Bryson, appellant relies upon section 1386, subd. 8, of the Civil Code, relating to succession and distribution of property of deceased persons who die without disposing thereof by will, which provides in part, so far as this case is concerned, that if the deceased is a widow, and leaves no issue, and the estate, or any portion thereof, was common property of such decedent and her deceased spouse, while such spouse was living, such property goes in equal shares to the children of such deceased spouse. If the estate, or any portion thereof, was separate property of such deceased spouse, while living, and came to such decedent from such spouse by descent, devise, or bequest, such property goes in equal shares to the children of such spouse.

Appellant contends that the decedent, although the wife of J. C. Underhill, was, for the purposes of distribution of her estate, the widow of John Bryson. Even if this were so, a point which we do not now need to decide, the decedent was assuredly not a widow who left no issue. In its narrowest sense the word "issue" has been held to mean "children." The more liberal tendency is "to construe 'issue,' where its meaning is unrestricted by the context, as including all lineal descendants." Jackson v. Jackson, 153 Mass. 374, 377, 26 N. E. 1112, 1113 (11 L. R. A. 305, 25 Am. St. Rep. 643).

Subdivision 8 of section 1386, when first enacted as part of the Civil Code (designated subdivision 9), provided that, if the decedent be a widow, or widower, and left "no kindred," the estate should be distributed in a certain manner. Am. to Civ. Code 1880, p. 14. The word "kindred" was used until 1905, when the section was amended to read, "If the decedent is a widow, or a widower, and leaves no issue," distribution shall be in accordance with its provision. Stats. 1905, p.

608. The change was made for a purpose. Before the amendment the "kindred" of the decedent, however remote and collateral, would succeed to the estate to the exclusion of the children of the deceased spouse. The amendment restricted such right of succession to the "issue" of the decedent. There is nothing in the subdivision or in the section which leads to the conclusion that the Legislature intended to provide that, if the decedent, a widow or widower, died without issue by her or his deceased spouse, the succession should be to the kindred of such spouse. We do not feel impelled to write such a condition into the section, for the other provisions of the statute relating to descent and distribution do not require the adoption of such a construction. None of the California cases construing this provision of the Code involved the rights of children of the decedent, but the court has, in a number of instances, assumed that its provisions applied only in the absence of a will and issue. Estate of Page, 181 Cal. 537, 539, 185 Pac. 383; Estate of Simonton, 183 Cal. 53, 55, 190 Pac. 442; Estate of Brady, 171 Cal. 1, 4, 151 Pac. 275.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J; SLOANE, J.; LENNON, J.; LAWLOR, J.; WARD, J.; WILBUR, J.

---

190 Cal. 236

PEOPLE v. WELTON et al. (Cr. 2471.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1922.)

1. Indictment and information ⟹154—Objection that information does not substantially conform to statute, if not taken by demurrer, waived.

Under Pen. Code, §§ 950–952, the objection to an information that it does not substantially conform to the requirements of the statute is one which must be taken by demurrer, and, if not so taken, the objection is waived.

2. Criminal law ⟹300, 970(7)—Indictment and information ⟹154—Objection that information does not state a public offense not waived by failure to demur, but may be taken under plea of not guilty or by motion in arrest.

Under Pen. Code, § 1012, the objection to an indictment or information that the facts stated therein do not constitute a public offense is not waived by failure to demur, but may be taken at the trial under a plea of not guilty or after the trial in arrest of judgment.

3. Indictment and information ⟹154—Objections to information as to form not demurred to held waived.

In a prosecution for syndicalism where a defect in the information to which the defendants for the first time pointed out in their motion in arrest of judgment was not a defect of substance, but of form, consisting in the absence of that particularity, which, in view of the peculiar nature of the offense, might be necessary in order to enable the defendants to properly prepare for and make their defense, it was such a defect as the defendants should have urged upon demurrer, and, not having done so, such objection was waived under the express provisions of Pen. Code, §§ 1004, 1012, and 1185.

4. Criminal law ⟹1167(1)—Defendants held not prejudiced by failure of information to particularly describe documents.

In a prosecution for criminal syndicalism where, in his opening statement, the district attorney announced that the particular books, papers, pamphlets, documents, and written and printed matter advocating and advising criminal syndicalism, and referred to in the information, were the literature taken from the headquarters of defendants at the time of the arrest, and such documents were introduced in evidence and identified without objection on the part of defendants, the defendants were not prejudiced by reason of the alleged defect in not particularly describing such documents in the information.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; George Samuels, Judge.

Howard Welton and others were convicted of the crime of syndicalism, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Wm. F. Cleary and Wm. B. Cleary, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

RICHARDS, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal prosecuted on behalf of all of the defendants from a judgment of conviction for the violation of certain of the provisions of the act of the Legislature approved April 30, 1919, commonly known as the "Criminal Syndicalism Act" (Stats. 1919, p. 281). The information in which the defendants were jointly charged embraced five counts charging a violation by the defendants of each of the five subdivisions of said act, each in the language of the act. No demurrer was interposed to the information in this form, but the defendants went to trial upon the general plea of not guilty. After a lengthy trial the jury returned a verdict finding the defendants not guilty upon the first four counts in said information, but guilty as charged in the fifth count thereof. The charging portion of the fifth count in said information was in the following form:

"The said Howard Welton, Michael J. Dunn, Patrick Casey, James McLaughlin, John Hannan and George Ryan, prior to the time of filing this information, and on or about the 26th day of June, A. D. nineteen hundred and twenty-one, at the said county of Alameda, state of California, did then and there unlawfully, willfully, wrongfully, deliberately and feloniously print, publish, edit, issue, circulate and publicly display books, papers, pamphlets, documents, posters and written and printed matter containing and carrying written and printed advocacy, teaching and aid and abetment of and advising criminal syndicalism."

Upon motion in arrest of judgment the defendants for the first time urged:

"(3) That the said information or the fifth count thereof does not substantially conform to the requirements of section 950 and 951 of the Penal Code; (4) that the said information, or the fifth count thereof, does not substantially conform to the requirements of section 952 of the Penal Code, in that the particular circumstances of the offense are not alleged with certainty in the following particulars; (1) Count 5 fails to set forth the words, language and matter either in their very words and language, or in the substance thereof, of the written and printed matter, magazines, pamphlets, documents and publications, and which it is alleged contain and carry written and printed matter advocating, teaching, aiding, abetting and advising criminal syndicalism; that the said count fails to give the names, dates of issue or editions of said printed matter, magazines, pamphlets, documents and publications alleged therein; that the said count is not a statement of ultimate facts, but merely conclusions of law as to the nature and character of said written and printed matter, etc., alleged therein."

The defendants' motion for a new trial and also their motion in arrest of judgment upon the foregoing grounds was denied by the trial court and the judgment upon conviction followed, from which judgment this appeal has been taken.

[1] The first contention presented by the defendants upon this appeal is that the information is fatally defective in the respects urged in their motion in arrest of judgment. Section 1185 of the Penal Code provides for a motion in arrest of the judgment and for the grounds on which said motion may be based. It reads in part as follows:

"It may be founded on any of the defects in the indictment or information mentioned in section 1004 unless the objection has been waived by a failure to demur."

Section 1004 of the Penal Code provides for demurrer to the indictment or information on five separate grounds, the two of which are applicable to the instant situation, being subdivisions 2 and 4 thereof, which read as follows:

"(2) That it does not substantially conform to the requirements of sections 950, 951 and 952. * * * (4) That the facts stated do not constitute a public offense."

Section 1012 of the Penal Code reads as follows:

"When the objections mentioned in section one thousand four appear on the face of the indictment or information, they can only be taken by demurrer, except that the objection to the jurisdiction of the court over the subject of the indictment or information, or that the facts stated do not constitute a public offense, may be taken at the trial, under the plea of not guilty, or after the trial, in arrest of judgment."

It appears from the foregoing excerpts from the Penal Code that as to the two separate grounds of demurrer above referred to, the objection that the indictment or information does not substantially conform to the requirements of sections 950, 951, and 952 of the Penal Code is one which must be taken by demurrer and that it is waived if not so taken (People v. Jim Ti, 32 Cal. 60; People v. Swenson, 49 Cal. 388; People v. Chuey Ying Git, 100 Cal. 437, 34 Pac. 1080; People v. Ellenwood, 119 Cal. 166, 51 Pac. 553; People v. Rodley, 131 Cal. 240, 63 Pac. 351); while the objection that the facts stated do not constitute a public offense is not waived by failure to demur, but may be taken at the trial under a plea of not guilty, or after the trial, in arrest of the judgment.

[2] The information was, as we have seen, as to those counts in the language of the statute. In the early case of People v. Saviers, 14 Cal. 29, it was held that where a statute introduces a new offense it will be sufficient if the indictment described the offense in the terms of the act. In the case of Ackley v. United States, 200 Fed. 217, 221, 118 C. C. A. 403, 407, the rule is thus stated:

"If the crime charged existed at common law, and is denounced by name only by statute, then the indictment must contain averments covering the common-law ingredients. If the crime is statutory, the indictment is sufficient if the averments are in the language of the statute, unless generic or general or common-law terms are used, in which case the indictment must be more specific, so that a defendant of ordinary understanding may comprehend what is charged."

In the case of People v. Cronin, 34 Cal. 191, this court upheld an indictment for murder in the language of the statute, notwithstanding the rule of the common law that the manner and means by which a homicide was committed should be stated in the indictment, and in so doing said:

"The only reason assigned by the common law, why the manner and means by which the homicide was committed should be stated in the indictment, was that the defendant might be fully informed as to the case against him, and thereby enabled to prepare for his defense. As we had occasion to remark in the case of People v. King, 27 Cal. 510, this reason of the common law was but a flimsy pretext, for, if the defendant was guilty, he stood in no need of information [as to the means by which he committed the crime]; and if not guilty, the information, that he did the act in a particular way, or by the use of particular means, could not assist him in the preparation of his defense."

The case of People v. Cronin has been generally followed by this court in later decisions. People v. Murray, 67 Cal. 103, 7 Pac.

178; People v. Giacamella, 71 Cal. 48, 12 Pac. 302; People v. Rozelle, 78 Cal. 84, 20 Pac. 36; People v. O'Brien, 96 Cal. 171, 31 Pac. 45; People v. Frigerio, 107 Cal. 151, 40 Pac. 107; People v. Page, 116 Cal. 386, 48 Pac. 326; People v. Hunt, 120 Cal. 281, 52 Pac. 658; People v. Witt, 170 Cal. 104, 148 Pac. 928; People v. DeMartini, 25 Cal. App. 9, 142 Pac. 898. See, also, State v. Hennessy, 114 Wash. 351, 195 Pac. 211.

[3] In the light of these authorities it must be held that the defect in the information which the defendants for the first time point out in their motion in arrest of judgment was not a defect of substance, but of form, consisting in the absence of that particularity, which, in view of the peculiar nature of the offense, might be necessary in order to enable the defendants to properly prepare for and make their defense. This being so, it was such a defect as the defendants should have urged upon demurrer. Not having demurred to the information upon that ground, the objection must be held to have been waived under the express provisions of sections 1185, 1004, and 1012 of the Penal Code. In making the contention that the information herein is fatally defective the appellants rely upon certain expressions of this court in the case of People v. Taylor, 187 Cal. 378, 203 Pac. 85, to the effect that an indictment or information charging a violation of this subdivision of the criminal syndicalism act would be insufficient in the absence of a particular statement of the pamphlets, papers, or other writings, or of their contents, the circulation of which was alleged to constitute a violation of the terms of said act. In that case, however, there was a demurrer to the indictment upon the ground that the same did not substantially conform to the requirements of sections 950, 951, and 952 of the Penal Code. In the case of People v. Wieler (Cal. App.) 204 Pac. 410, upon which the appellants also rely, there was also a demurrer to the information upon the same ground. The other decisions by the courts of this state cited by the appellants as seeming to support a different rule were either cases of prosecutions for offenses sounding in fraud, which require a particular statement of the facts constituting the fraud under well-settled rules of pleading, or were libel cases wherein the statement of the particular words of the alleged libel is necessary in order to state the gravamen of the offense; or else are cases wherein demurrers were presented to the pleadings which were the subject of criticism upon appeal.

[4] There is another sufficient answer to the appellants' contention that they are entitled to take advantage of the alleged defect in the information herein upon this appeal. When the cause was called for trial, the district attorney in his opening statement to the jury announced that the particular books, papers, pamphlets, documents, and written and printed matter advocating and advising criminal syndicalism as defined in the statute and referred to in the information were the literature taken from the headquarters of the I. W. W. at the time of the arrest of the defendants and, also, particularly that taken from the rooms of certain of the defendants immediately following their arrest. The first witness called by the prosecution was one of the arresting officers, and he identified with much particularity this literature, and the same was then introduced in evidence without any objection on the part of the defendants save and except an objection as to the method by which the prosecution had obtained certain portions of the said literature by what was claimed to have been an illegal search and seizure. The defendants not only did not object to the introduction of this literature at the inception of the trial of the cause upon the grounds stated in their motion in arrest of judgment, but later in the trial in making their defense they introduced and had read into the record extensive excerpts from said literature in their endeavor to show that it was not revolutionary in character. Under these circumstances, it is clear that these defendants have suffered no prejudice by reason of the alleged defect in particularity in the information, and that the cases of People v. Taylor, 187 Cal. 378, 203 Pac. 85, and People v. Whitney (Cal. App.) 207 Pac. 698, with respect to the reversal of said causes upon appeal upon records substantially similar to that presented in the case at bar, must be given full application to the instant case.

The only other contention of the appellants herein is that the evidence is insufficient to justify their conviction. We are entirely satisfied from an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, that there is not only no merit in this contention, but that there has been no such miscarriage of justice as would entitle or permit this court to set aside the judgment herein on account of the alleged error in the information.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; LENNON, J.; WASTE, J.; SLOANE, J.; LAWLOR, J.

WILBUR, J. (concurring). I concur in the judgment upon the ground first stated in the opinion, namely, that in the absence of a demurrer the fifth count of the information stated an offense. I also concur in the conclusion that there was evidence sufficient to establish the commission of such offense. The evidence shows that certain literature was displayed at a meeting conducted by the Industrial Workers of the World upon a table at which the defendant Casey was seated. The defendants claim that the evidence is insufficient to establish the connection of the other defendants with such display. The evidence showed that the defendants were all furthering the meeting in question and that they were thus aiding and abetting Casey. It is true that the verdict is not strictly logical, for the jury acquitted the defendants of the charge that they belonged to the Industrial Workers of the World, but for the purpose of determining whether or not the defendants all participated in the crime of displaying the literature in question, the jury were entitled to consider all the evidence before them tending to show that the defendants were co-operating together in the display and sale of the literature in question.

The defendants refused the aid of counsel in the trial court. They did not call upon the district attorney to elect the particular book, document, or circular relied upon by him for conviction, but allowed the case to be presented to the jury both in the evidence and in the instructions without specification of the particular instrument or instruments relied upon by the prosecution to establish the general charge set forth in the fifth count of the information. They do not now complain of this failure of the district attorney to elect and the court to point out in its instructions the particular instrument relied upon to establish the defendants' guilt under the fifth count of the information. In view of the failure of the defendants to request any more definite specification by the district attorney or by the court in its instructions, the judgment must be affirmed.

---

(59 Cal. App. 621)

KOHN v. KEMPNER et al. (Civ. 2525.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 14, 1922.)

1. Trusts ⟸110—Evidence held sufficient to show that property was conveyed to wife on express promise to reconvey to husband on demand.

In a husband's action, after his wife's death, to set aside conveyances to her, evidence held sufficient to warrant findings that the property was conveyed to her on her express promise to reconvey to plaintiff on his demand, and that such promise was made in bad faith and without any intention of performing it.

2. Trusts ⟸96—Husband's conveyances to wife promising to reconvey set aside after her death, whether property was community or separate property.

A husband's conveyances of property to his wife on her express promise to reconvey on his demand may be set aside after her death, whether the property was community property (Civ. Code, § 1401) or the husband's separate property held in trust for him by his wife; he being entitled thereto by reason of her fraud, if her promise was made without intention to perform, while, if made in good faith, equity, by reason of the confidential relation of husband and wife, will enforce it, though oral.

3. Pleading ⟸34(7), 205(5)—Allegation that conveyance was made on wife's promise to reconvey held sufficient averment that husband believed and relied on such promise as against objection by general demurrer or on appeal.

In a husband's action, after his wife's death, to set aside conveyances of property to her, an allegation that the conveyances were made on her express promise to reconvey on his demand was a sufficient averment that he believed and relied on such promise, as against a general demurrer or an objection raised on appeal.

4. Appeal and error ⟸1036(3)—Refusal to make administrator party to husband's action to set aside conveyances to deceased's wife held not prejudicial to latter's heirs.

In a husband's action, after his wife's death, to set aside conveyances to her on her express promise to reconvey on his demand, where defendants defended as heirs merely, their rights were not prejudiced by denial of their motion to make deceased's administrator a party to the action.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; J. A. Plummer, Judge.

Action by Morris Kohn against Philip Kempner and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Loutitt & Stewart, of Stockton, F. I. Lemos, of Hayward, and Rose, Silverstein & Collier, of Oakland, for appellants.

A. H. Carpenter, of Stockton, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. Plaintiff and Tillie Kohn were married April 3, 1919. They lived together as husband and wife until the death of the latter on August 3, 1920. At the time of Tillie Kohn's death, her mother, Rosie Kempner, since deceased, and her brothers, Philip and Edward Kempner, defendants and appellants, were living.

At the time of the marriage the plaintiff was the owner of three parcels of land in which he thereafter conveyed a half interest to his wife. He also during the marriage purchased, with his separate funds, a fourth parcel and caused an undivided half thereof to be conveyed to his wife. He testified that his wife persistently importuned him to convey a half interest in the property to her, in order that she might have the same for her support in the event of his death, and declared that she would not continue to live with him unless he complied; that she promised him that if he would convey such interest to her she would reconvey the same to him at any time he might request her to do so; that the conveyances to her were made without consideration, and not as a gift, in reliance upon her promise to reconvey upon request; that in June, 1920, he desired to exchange one parcel of the land for other land, but that she refused, and said she would not reconvey the land to plaintiff, but desired to sell for cash so that she could give money to her brothers. Three other witnesses testified that Mrs. Kohn promised to reconvey the property at any time the plaintiff asked her to do so. One of these witnesses testified that Mrs. Kohn refused to reconvey and said she would give the property to her brother.

The court found, in accordance with the allegations of complaint, that the property was conveyed to Mrs. Kohn "upon her express promise to reconvey to plaintiff upon his demand, therefor, * * * and which said promise was made in bad faith and without any intention of performing it," and that such conveyances were not intended as gifts, that she held the property so conveyed in trust for plaintiff, and that the same was community property of plaintiff and his wife. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff in accordance with the foregoing facts and findings.

[1, 2] There is no doubt that the evidence is sufficient to warrant the findings and judgment. If the property held by the wife was community property, then the judgment is clearly right. Civ. Code, § 1401. If it was not community property, then under the facts proved and the findings it was the separate property of the plaintiff, held in trust for him by his wife. If her promise to reconvey was made without intention to perform, then the husband was entitled to the property by reason of the wife's fraud. If the promise was made in good faith, then by reason of the confidential relation of husband and wife, equity will enforce the promise, though it was oral. Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 525, 17 Pac. 689, 7 Am. St. Rep. 189; Adams v. Lambard, 80 Cal. 426, 22 Pac. 180; Butler v. Hyland, 89 Cal. 575, 26 Pac. 1108; Taylor v. Morris, 163 Cal. 717, 127 Pac. 66; Bradley Co. v. Bradley, 165 Cal. 237, 131 Pac. 750.

[3] Appellants contend that the complaint is insufficient because it does not allege that the plaintiff relied upon the promise of his wife to reconvey or believed that she would perform it. The allegation in this connection is that the conveyances were made to Mrs. Kohn "upon her express promise to reconvey to plaintiff upon his demand." The defendants demurred generally on the ground that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The allegation that the conveyances were made upon Mrs. Kohn's express promise to reconvey is a sufficient averment that the plaintiff believed and relied on the promise as against a general demurrer or an objection raised on appeal. It cannot be said that there is an entire absence of allegation of such belief and reliance.

[4] It is urged that the court erred in denying defendants' motion to make the administrator of Mrs. Kohn's estate a party to the action. The appellants defended as heirs merely, and their rights were in no wise prejudiced by the ruling.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 703

ADAIAN v. BORANIAN. (Civ. 4230.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 20, 1922.)

Vendor and purchaser ⊜75—Compliance with obligation in land contract to furnish abstract showing title in vendor free from incumbrance condition precedent to first payment thereunder by purchaser.

Under Civ. Code, § 1498, the purchaser of lands under a contract that vendor furnish an abstract of title showing title in himself free and clear from all incumbrances has the right to insist upon the performance of such obligation as a condition precedent to his first payment under the contract upon the land.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; D. A. Cashin, Judge.

Action by A. H. Adaian against Arpenig Boranian, executrix of the last will and testament of A. Boranian, sometimes known as Ardash Boranian, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Arsen Yeretzian, of Fresno, for appellant.

G. Levin Aynesworth and Astor Elmassian, both of Fresno (L. N. Barber, of Fresno, of counsel), for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. The defendant has appealed from a judgment against her as executrix of the last will and testament of A. Boranian, deceased, by which plaintiff recovered $600, the amount of money paid by him as a deposit upon the purchase price of certain land, together with the value of his labor and materials furnished upon said land in reliance upon a contract for the purchase and sale of the same made with the defendant's testator.

The action was tried upon an amended complaint for money had and received. The trial court found, upon substantial evidence, as follows: During the year 1920, plaintiff and A. Boranian, defendant's testator, entered into a contract for the sale and purchase of certain real and personal property for the sum of $26,000. Plaintiff deposited with Boranian $500 on account of the purchase price. The written contract between the parties was offered in evidence, and in accordance therewith the trial court further found: The purchase price was to be paid in installments, $5,500 on the execution and delivery of a good and sufficient contract for a deed; $1,500 on or before the 5th of November, 1920, and $1,500 on or before the 15th day of November in each and every year thereafter until the whole of the purchase price had been paid. The plaintiff was to receive a deed when one-half of the purchase price had been paid, and plaintiff was to take the premises subject to a certain contract outstanding with the California Associated Raisin Company. In the event the sale was consummated, the $500 deposit was to be applied upon the initial payment of $5,500. Boranian agreed to furnish an abstract of title to said property, showing title in him clear of incumbrances, said abstract to be furnished within 15 days from the date of said agreement, to wit, on February 24, 1920. In the event plaintiff failed to comply with his agreement, he was to forfeit the $500 deposit. By agreement between the parties, Boranian furnished to plaintiff, in lieu of an abstract of title, a certificate of title, which showed that the title to the property was vested in Gustaf Pearson; that the title was subject to a contract with the Fresno Canal & Land Corporation for a water right appurtenant to said land and rights of way thereover to convey water to contiguous lands; that it was also subject to a mortgage dated December 4, 1916, for $3,300, due three years after date, which said mortgage had been assigned to John D. Patterson; that said premises were also subject to taxes for the fiscal year 1920–22; that Boranian's only title to said premises was a contract executed by Gustaf Pearson and his wife in favor of Boranian for the sale and purchase of said premises.

At the time the plaintiff and Boranian entered into the contract involved here, plaintiff, at the request of Boranian, went upon the premises, took charge of the same, and performed work and labor thereon of the reasonable value of $50, and he also purchased for the use and benefit of Boranian certain supplies of the reasonable value of $50. On March 13, 1920, plaintiff offered and tendered to Boranian the balance of the initial payment on the purchase price provided for by the terms of the contract, and demanded that Boranian perform his obligations thereunder, but said Boranian then and there refused to do so. Thereupon plaintiff demanded the return of his $500 and payment for his labor and supplies purchased for the property and used for the benefit of Boranian, which was refused. The trial court also found that plaintiff had surrendered the possession of the property to Boranian, and had been able, ready, and willing at all times to perform his part of the contract.

The only point urged by appellant for a reversal of the judgment entered herein is that, because plaintiff did not make an unconditional tender of the first installment of the purchase price, Boranian was not in default in refusing to furnish evidence of a clear title in himself. The objection is entirely without merit. Boranian was obligated by his contract to furnish an abstract of title showing the title in himself, free and clear of all incumbrances, within fifteen days from the date of the contract between the parties. That time had expired, and Boranian furnished a certificate of title which did not meet his obligations under the contract. The plaintiff had a right to insist upon the performance of this obligation as a condition precedent to his first payment upon the land. Section 1498, Civ. Code.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 616

In re MINOR'S ESTATE.

HUXLEY et al. v. MINOR et al.

(Civ. 4075.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Nov. 14, 1922.)

1. Wills ⟸524(2) — Construction annulling limitation of beneficiaries to those surviving testatrix untenable.

Where testatrix made bequests to such certain persons "as may be living at my decease, their heirs and assigns respectively," the heirs of one of such persons who had predeceased testatrix were not entitled to take, since to hold otherwise would necessitate a construction of the phrase "their heirs and assigns" as if preceded by the word "or," thereby rendering the phrase "as may be living at my death" of no effect, which would violate Civ. Code, § 1325, requiring words in a will to be so interpreted as to give every expression some effect.

2. Wills ⟸462, 463—Words eliminated or added only to remove ambiguities.

The elimination or addition of words in a will, for the purpose of construction, is not permitted except to remove ambiguity in expression of intention.

3. Evidence ⟸16—Common knowledge that phrase "heirs and assigns" is used by conveyancers, though unnecessary.

It is common knowledge that the phrase "heirs and assigns" continues to be used by many conveyancers, although it has ceased to be necessary.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

---

⟸For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

In the matter of the estate of Mary T. Minor, deceased. From a decree of distribution in favor of John B. Minor and others, Henry M. Huxley and others appeal. Affirmed.

Adams, Adams & Binford, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Ward Chapman and L. M. Chapman, both of Los Angeles (Selden Bacon and M. J. Byrne, of counsel), for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. Appeal from decree of distribution. The questions presented for discussion require an interpretation of the residuary clause in the will of the decedent. The estate consists of both real and personal property, all situated in the state of California.

On the 2d day of April, 1898, when the will was made, the decedent, Mary T. Minor, was the widow of Samuel Minor, deceased. All of the estate came to her from him, under his will. At the date when Mrs. Minor's will was made there were living two sisters of Samuel Minor, whose names were Mary M. Huxley and Emily J. Benham. His two brothers, John B. Minor and Henry Minor, died prior to April 2, 1898. John B. Minor left, him surviving, a son, John B. Minor. Henry Minor left, him surviving, three daughters. Mary T. Minor died January 31, 1906, leaving no surviving husband nor any descendant. Emily J. Benham died June 7, 1904, leaving no surviving husband nor any descendant. Mary M. Huxley died December 2, 1904, leaving two children.

The will of Mary T. Minor, after disposing of part of her estate by certain provisions, contains in the third paragraph of the will the following:

"Second. The remainder I give, devise and bequeath as follows: To each of the following named persons as may be living at my decease, their heirs and assigns respectively—my husband's sister, Mary Huxley, now of Waterbury, Conn., my husband's sister, Emily J. Benham, now of Woodbury, Conn.—my husband's nephew, John B. Minor, now of Plainville, Conn.—the children of my husband's deceased brother, Henry Minor."

Applying to the foregoing clause of the will, the facts hereinabove stated, the court by its decree awarded all of the residue of the estate to the descendants of John B. Minor, deceased, and Henry Minor, deceased, and excluded therefrom the descendants of said Mary M. Huxley. Appellants are the heirs at law of Mary M. Huxley and the administratrix of the estate of her deceased son, Edward.

The matter in dispute was submitted to the superior court on an agreed statement of facts in which the legal questions at issue were thus stated:

"Question has arisen under the will of said Mary T. Minor by reason of the death of said Mary M. Huxley prior to the death of said Mary T. Minor, whether the heirs and next of kin of Mary M. Huxley took under the second subdivision of the third clause of the third paragraph of the said will, and likewise whether the interest which would have passed to Emily J. Benham, had she survived the testatrix, passed to her heirs and next of kin, or whether the said share bequeathed to Emily J. Benham lapsed, by reason of her death prior to the death of the testatrix, Mary T. Minor. Question has further arisen under the same second subdivision of the third clause of the third paragraph of the will whether the children of Henry Minor took thereunder per capita or per stirpes, that is, whether said Mary J. Buell, Emily L. Minor and Julia B. Esterly each were given a share equal to that given to said John B. Minor, or all together were given a share equal to that given to said John B. Minor, and concerning the consequent results of the division of the residue of this estate of Mary T. Minor."

The parties joined in submitting these questions to the court for its decision and construction of the will. On the first of the questions thus submitted the court determined that the heirs or next of kin of Mary M. Huxley were not entitled to take any share in the estate. On this appeal they claim that the court erred in so deciding.

Concerning the personal relations existing between the testatrix and her husband's relatives, the statement of facts says:

"At the time of making her said will, Mrs. Mary T. Minor had but comparatively slight personal acquaintance with her husband's relatives; they residing chiefly in the East, and she in California. Prior to her death, however, Mrs. Emily J. Benham spent several months with Mrs. Mary T. Minor, but Mrs. Minor had no personal intimate acquaintance with any other of the surviving members of her husband's family."

[1] Appellants direct attention to the rule of construction of wills that, in order to enable the court to place itself in the position of the testator, evidence of all the circumstances surrounding him at the time he wrote his will is permissible to aid in its construction. They argue that the fact that she used the words "their heirs and assigns respectively" immediately following the words "to each of the following named persons as may be living at my decease," shows that the testatrix had in mind the contingency that one or more of these persons named by her as legatees might not be living when the will should take effect; that it was in her mind to treat all of the relatives of her late husband alike; that having expressly provided for the then living nephews and nieces whose parents had died, she at the same time made equal provision for the two sisters of her late husband who were then living; but that, having in mind the possibility that issue would survive these two sisters, she inserted the words, "their heirs and assigns respectively," for the purpose of providing for the successors of these two sisters if they, or either of them, should die before the time of death of the testatrix.

The construction contended for by appellants requires that the word "or" be implied before the words "their heirs and assigns respectively," and that thereupon the phrase be construed as one whereby the heirs of Mrs. Huxley (upon her death prior to the death of the testatrix) would be substituted for Mrs. Huxley. In support of this position they refer to certain decisions which, they insist, are in line with this contention. Wren v. Hynes, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 129; Ebey et al. v. Adams, 135 Ill. 80, 25 N. E. 1013, 10 L. R. A. 162; In re Paton, 111 N. Y. 480, 18 N. E. 625; Keay v. Boulton, 25 Chancery Div. (Eng.) 212; Wingfield v. Wingfield, 9 Chancery Div. (Eng.) 658; King v. Cleveland, 4 De Gex and J. 477 (Eng.); In re Philp's Will, English Law Reports, 7, Eq. 151. But in order to adopt this view we would find it necessary to eliminate the phrase "as may be living at my decease." In effect, we are asked to reconstruct the sentence, so that it will read, "to each of the following named persons * * * or their heirs and assigns respectively."

[2] This we cannot reasonably do. The elimination or addition of words in a will, for purposes of construction, is not permitted, except where that is necessary for the purpose of removing some ambiguity in the testator's expression of intention. "The words of a will are to receive an interpretation which will give to every expression some effect, rather than one which will render any of the expressions inoperative." Civ. Code, § 1325. It is only by giving to the words "their heirs and assigns" their usual meaning, expressive of an intention to pass the fee, or the entire ownership, to the named donees, that those words are consistent with the gift as made to each of the persons named "as are living at my decease."

[3] The fact that the words "heirs and assigns" were not necessary to make a gift of the fee, or complete ownership, does not make their use an indication of some other purpose. It is common knowledge that this phrase continues to be used by many conveyancers, although it has ceased to be necessary. In this case, the mere fact that all of the persons named in the will were sisters of the husband of testatrix, or descendants of his deceased brothers, is not, in our judgment, a sufficient reason for eliminating definite and plain words from the will in order to avoid their effect in the event of the death of the sisters before the death of the testatrix. Therefore, we adopt and apply here the conclusion at which the Supreme Court arrived in Estate of Sessions, 171 Cal. 346, 153 Pac. 231, where the court had under examination a will giving the residue of an estate to "William Jackson and to his heirs and assigns forever." The court said:

"Furthermore, the word 'heirs' occurs only in the phrase, 'and to his heirs and assigns forever.' This phrase is the regular ancient formula in a conveyance of the fee in real estate. No reason appears for giving to the word 'heirs,' as used therein, any greater significance than should be given to the word 'assigns.' The latter word would have been meaningless if used as a word of substitution. The most reasonable conclusion from the whole will is that the residuary clause was made without any intention at all concerning the destination of the property in case Jackson should outlive the testatrix."

The court, we think, must have intended to say, in the last clause, "in case Jackson should not outlive the testatrix." Otherwise it is not consistent with the other parts of the decision, which held that the words "and to his heirs and assigns forever" were merely descriptive of the estate of inheritance given to Jackson, and that, Jackson having died prior to the death of testatrix, his heirs acquired no rights under the will.

We therefore conclude that the provision made in the said will, in favor of Mary M. Huxley, lapsed by reason of her death during the lifetime of the testatrix. It follows that appellants, who claim only as heirs and next of kin of Mrs. Huxley, take nothing.

The decree is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 606

ISAAC UPHAM CO. v. UNITED STATES FIDELITY & GUARANTY CO.
(Civ. 4284.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 14, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 11, 1923.)

1. Insurance ⇐179—Fidelity bonds held independent contracts.

Where the practice of a fidelity company was to issue a new bond or a continuation certificate, as might be requested by the insured, and, no request to the contrary being made, issued a new bond at the expiration of an old bond which contained no reference whatever to the first bond, and contained no language whatever to the effect that it was a continuation of the first bond, the two bonds were independent contracts, and any defalcation during the period covered by the first bond could not be recovered where the same was not discovered and noticed to the fidelity company within the time designated in the bond.

2. Insurance ⇐668(3)—Construction of fidelity bonds for the court.

Where it was the practice of a fidelity company to issue a new bond or a continuation certificate, as might be requested by the insured, whether or not a new bond was an independent contract or a continuation of the old contract was a question for the court, and not the jury, where a new bond was issued, no request to the contrary being made, and there was no evidence introduced to show that the second policy continued the first.

3. Insurance ⟸508½—Fidelity bond held to cover losses sued on.

Where insured in fidelity bond was a corporation which transacted business for itself and for another corporation, and the business transactions of both corporations were kept on the books of the insured, and the stock of both corporations was owned in equal parts by two brothers, and during the period covered the employee was cashier, credit man, and general accountant for the plaintiff, the bond which undertook to reimburse insured for any pecuniary loss sustained by reason of the fraud or dishonesty of such employee indemnified against losses of money in the hands of insured, no matter to which corporation it belonged.

4. Trial ⟸133(2)—Argument of counsel held not prejudicial error.

In an action on a fidelity bond, prejudicial error was not committed by attorney for plaintiff in saying in his opening statement, "We will show you further that when he (the employee) came to our employ he was then indebted to his former employer, which we did not learn until after the termination of his employment with us, * * * on a shortage of approximately over $500," where the trial court forthwith admonished the jury that the attorney for the plaintiff was but making an opening statement, and that the jurors were not to take the same as evidence, and that, when the evidence was introduced, the court would definitely rule thereon.

5. Insurance ⟸264(1)—Statements in application for policy held not warranties.

Statements in application for fidelity bond were not warranties where the policies did not contain any reference whatsoever to them, though the application ended with the language, "It is agreed that the above answers are to be taken as conditions precedent," etc., in view of Civ. Code, § 2605.

6. Fraud ⟸31—Remedies of defrauded party.

As to contracts generally, the party claiming that he has been defrauded by false representations or concealment has three remedies.

7. Insurance ⟸640(2)—Insurer must plead fraudulent representations.

Where insurer in fidelity policy intends to defend on ground of fraudulent representations, it must plead them and introduce evidence in support.

8. Insurance ⟸436—Negligence of insured as defense.

If insured in fidelity bond did any act in violation of the terms of the policy, and thus produced a loss, he could not recover whether the act were negligent or otherwise, but, if the act of the insured is not covered by the terms of the policy, the insurer is not exonerated because the insured is negligent in view of Civ. Code, § 2629.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by the Isaac Upham Company against the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Frank J. Mahoney, and Thomas, Beedy & Lanagan, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Lent & Humphrey, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant on an indemnity insurance policy. The plaintiff had judgment, and the defendant has appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1, 2] In pleading its case the plaintiff set forth its claims in two separate counts. In the first count it pleaded certain facts, and sought to recover the sum of $2,000. In the second count it pleaded certain other facts, and sought to recover an additional $11,003.44. During the period that the defendant carried insurance for the plaintiff such insurance was evidenced by a policy dated January 12, 1917, a policy dated December 19, 1917, and a certificate of continuation dated the 7th day of January, 1919. The plaintiff contended in the trial court and contends in this court, that all of said papers constituted but one policy. If this were so it would be entitled to recover on the first count. If, on the other hand, the policy dated January 12, 1917, is a separate and independent contract, then the plaintiff was not entitled to recover on the first count pleaded in this complaint. The loss pleaded in the first count was an item of $2,000, which the plaintiff's agent embezzled on December 31, 1917, one of the dates covered by the first policy. That policy by its terms insured the plaintiff from the 8th day of January, 1917, to the 8th day of January, 1918, and covered losses "occurring during the term of this bond, or any continuations thereof, and discovered and notified to the surety within six months after the expiration or cancellation of this bond. * * *" No loss whatever was notified to the defendant until the 15th day of April, 1919. The policy contained a passage:

"This bond may be continued from year to year by the payment of the annual premium to the surety, and the issuance by the surety of its continuation certificate."

Other papers in the record show that the practice of the defendant was to issue a new bond or a continuation certificate as might be requested by the insured. No request to the contrary being made, the defendant issued a new bond December 19, 1917, which contains no reference whatever to the first bond, and contains no language whatever to the effect that it is a continuation of the first bond. It is patent that the two bonds are independent contracts, and the defalcation of December 31, 1917, may not be recovered because the same was not discovered and noticed to the defendant within the time designated in the bond. The trial court submitted to the jury for its determination the question as to whether the parties intended that the second bond should continue the first bond. The intention of the parties was reduced to writing. It was the duty of the trial court to construe the written instruments, and advise the jury as to such construction. There was no evidence of any kind introduced that showed, or tended to show that the second policy continued the first, or that any recovery could be had under the facts on the first policy.

[3] The appellant contends that there is no evidence to show that the plaintiff sustained a loss of $13,003.44. We think the contention is without merit. The evidence shows that Isaac Upham Company is a corporation, and that the Estate of Isaac Upham is another corporation which owns certain real estate which is income property. Isaac Upham Company transacts the business for itself and for the other corporation, Estate of Isaac Upham. The business transactions of both corporations are kept on the books of the plaintiff. The stock of both corporations is owned in equal parts by two brothers, Isaac O. Upham and Benjamin P. Upham. During the period covered by this litigation H. B. Smith was cashier, credit man, and general accountant for the plaintiff. The defendant's bond undertook to reimburse Isaac Upham Company, the employer, for any pecuniary loss sustained by reason of the fraud or dishonesty of its employee, H. B. Smith. The evidence showed that Smith embezzled June 26, 1918, $2,786.62; October 30, 1918, $3,800; January 31, 1919, $3,000; March 24, 1919, $1,415.70. As between the parties to this litigation all of that money was the money of the plaintiff. The bond, by its terms, covered such items, whether the moneys were received for either corporation. Alabama Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Alabama P. Sav. Bank, 200 Ala. 337, 76 South. 103, 109.

[4] The appellant contends that prejudicial error was committed by the attorney for the respondent in making his opening statement. The language complained of was:

"We will show you further that when he came to our employ he was then indebted to his former employer, which we did not learn until after the termination of his employment with us, Messrs. Kohler & Chase, on a shortage of approximately over $500.

"Mr. Presley: Now, we will object to the remarks of counsel and assign them as misconduct and prejudicial error."

We see no error in this matter. The trial court forthwith admonished the jury that the attorney for the plaintiff was but making an opening statement, and that the jurors were not to take the same as evidence, and that, when the evidence was introduced, the trial court would definitely rule thereon. Furthermore, if the word "shortage" had been omitted, we do not understand that the defendant would contend that such evidence was not admissible. 20 C. J. 484; People v. Rowland, 12 Cal. App. 6, 19, 106 Pac. 428. Because, perchance, the indebtedness arose by reason of a tort committed by Smith, such additional fact did not destroy the probative force and effect of the evidence. If for any reason the testimony was admissible, it should have been received at least for the purpose for which it was admissible. Cooney v. Glynn, 157 Cal. 583, 588, 108 Pac. 506; People v. Rowland, 12 Cal. App. 6, 18, 106 Pac. 428. While counsel in opening statements should not, of course, include testimony which they know will not be received, and state the testimony for the purpose of prejudicing the jury, it is perfectly clear from the record before us that the attorney for the plaintiff was not guilty of any such act.

[5] In its answer the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff had breached certain warranties alleged to have been contained in the policy. After the evidence had all been introduced it appeared that the alleged warranties were contained in the application for insurance. Among other things questions 12 (a) and 12 (b) called for replies as to what supervision would be had over the person employed, H. B. Smith. The paper ended with this language:

"It is agreed that the above answers are to be taken as conditions precedent and as the basis for the said bond applied for or any renewal or continuation of the same, or any other bond substituted in place thereof. * * * *"

Neither one of the policies, nor the certificate of continuation, contained any reference whatsoever to the statements contained in the application. Such statements, therefore, are not warranties:

"Every express warranty, made at or before the execution of a policy, must be contained in the policy itself, or in another instrument signed by the insured and referred to in the policy, as making a part of it." Civ. Code, § 2605.

That language was quite different under the Code as adopted in 1872; it then read:

"Every express warranty, made at or before the execution of a policy, must be contained in the policy itself, and another instrument, whether upon the same paper or not, cannot be referred to as making a part of the policy for this purpose, even by agreement of the parties."

That language was found too harsh as to the insurance company. "The Code Examiner's Notes from the Draft of an Act to Amend the Civil Code Submitted October 13, 1873," states:

"The amendment restores the law as it existed previous to the Code. See 2 Parsons on Maritime Law, pp. 51 and 106 (1859); 1 Phillips on Insurance, § 756 (1867)."

An examination of the cases cited by those authors does not disclose that prior to the Code a statement would be held to be a warranty if the statement was contained in a separate paper not referred to in the policy. The passage above referred to in Phillips on Insurance was worded by the author as follows:

"Any express warranty or condition is always a part of the policy, but, like any other part of an express contract, may be written in the margin, or contained in proposals or documents expressly referred to in the policy, and so made a part of it."

The cross-reference was inserted in the policies considered by the court in Young v. Pacific Surety, 137 Cal. 596, 70 Pac. 660, and Larrimore v. United States F. & G. Co., 21 Cal. App. 767, 132 Pac. 1050. That fact does not appear on the face of the decision in each case, but it is disclosed by the record in each case. Finally, the case entitled Employers' L. A. Corp. v. Indus. Acc. Com., 177 Cal. 771, 776, 171 Pac. 935, is directly in point to the effect that the statements contained in the paper which was not expressly referred to in the policy in the instant case are not warranties.

[6-8] As we understand the appellant, it claims that, if it be held that the statements made in the application are not warranties, in any event, they are false representations, and in this connection the appellant also calls attention to other alleged false representations which were made about the same time, but are contained in yet other papers not referred to in the policy. To this contention there are many complete answers. The defendant in its pleadings has not attempted to plead fraudulent representations nor a rescission of its contract, nor did it attempt to introduce evidence along those lines. As to contracts generally, it is settled law that the party claiming that he has been defrauded by false representations or concealment has three remedies. Field v. Austin, 131 Cal. 379, 382, 63 Pac. 692. Assuming, without deciding, that the appellant had three remedies as against the policy in suit, it did not plead any one of those three remedies. As we understand the appellant, it is its contention on this branch of the case that the insured did not exercise ordinary care in the supervision of Smith's work, or in the examination of his accounts. In its brief it does not specifically call our attention to the evidence supporting such contention. We have examined the record, and we do not find such evidence in the record. Moreover, section 2629 of the Civil Code was enacted to eliminate just such a controversy. That section provides:

"An insurer * * * is not exonerated by the negligence of the insured. * * *"

If the insured did any act in violation of the terms of its policy, and thus produced a loss, the insured could not recover whether the act were negligent or otherwise. On the other hand, if the act of the insured is not covered by the terms of the policy, under the Code section the insurance company is not exonerated. Waters v. Merchants' Louisville Ins. Co., 11 Pet. 213, 219, 9 L. Ed. 691; Gates v. Madison County Ins. Co., 5 N. Y. 469, 478, 55 Am. Dec. 360; May on Insurance (2d Ed.) 614.

What we have just said answers the next attack made by the appellant. That attack is that the court erred in charging the jury that the negligence of the insured was no defense. The trial court did not commit an error in giving that instruction.

The appellant complains of certain other instructions which the trial court gave or refused to give. Each and all of the instructions so complained about were addressed to the alleged warranties which we have considered above. The trial court did not err in concluding that the warranties claimed were not proved, and it did not err in instructing the jury accordingly.

The verdict of the jury and the judgment based thereon was for the full amount claimed by the plaintiff. As we have shown, that claim included $2,000 more than the plaintiff was entitled to. The judgment should be modified by deducting $2,000 from the principal sum therein mentioned so that the language will read:

"* * * The sum of $11,003.44, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum. * * *"

And as so modified the judgment should stand affirmed. It is so ordered.

We concur: LANGDON P. J.; NOURSE, J.

(59 Cal. App. 574)

PEOPLE v. DUNSTAN. (Cr. 629.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 9, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 8, 1923.)

1. Perjury ⇐25(3) — Indictment held sufficient.

An indictment averring that defendant testified "in a manner material" to an issue in a case held sufficient to charge perjury, though it did not directly state that the testimony related to a "matter" material to the case, under Pen. Code, §§ 118, 966; the use of the word "manner" being clearly a clerical mistake, and any error being purely technical, and not calculated to result in the miscarriage of justice, under Const. art. 6, § 4½.

2. Perjury ⇐11(2)—Alleged false testimony held material.

False testimony to the effect that defendant did not meet certain persons at a certain time and place held to relate to a material issue in a prosecution for a violation of the liquor laws, a sale of liquor taking place at such time.

3. Perjury ⇐11(8)—Test as to materiality of testimony.

The test of materiality of alleged false testimony is whether the statement made could have influenced the tribunal upon the question at issue before it, and any statements made in a judicial proceeding for the purpose of affecting the decision, and upon which the judge acted, are material.

Appeal from Superior Court, Glenn County; H. C. Bell, Judge.

Arthur W. Dunstan was convicted of perjury, and he appeals. Affirmed.

R. L. Clifton and W. T. Belieu, both of Willows, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. Under an indictment purporting to charge him with the crime of perjury, the defendant was convicted in the superior court of Glenn county of the crime so charged, and this appeal is prosecuted by him from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial. The indictment alleges that the defendant on the 9th day of January, 1922, having duly taken an oath before the superior court of the said county of Glenn that he would testify truly to the whole truth and nothing but the truth in the case then and there pending and at issue in said court, to wit, The People of the State of California v. J. H. Heusers, did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously, in a manner material to such case, and to the issue therein, declare and testify the truth to be that he, said Arthur W. Dunstan, "did not see one G. L. Budd in front of Tom's Pool Room or the Popular Restaurant on Tehama street, in the town of Willows, county of Glenn, state of California, on Saturday evening, November 19, 1921, and talk to him at said place, and, further, that he did not talk to said G. L. Budd, or one J. H. Heusers, the defendant in the above-mentioned case, in front of said restaurant, or in front of said Tom's Pool Room on Tehama street, in the presence of or with said J. H. Heusers, at all; and that he, the said defendant, Arthur W. Dunstan, did not, in the company of said G. L. Budd and J. H. Heusers, talk together at said place, all of which is false, the defendant well knowing such statements to be false and untrue, and all of which is contrary to the form, force, and effect of the statute," etc.

The defendant demurred to the indictment on the general ground that the same "does not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense or at all," and thus the point first made by him on this appeal is raised. The specific contention is that the indictment does not aver that the alleged false testimony given by the defendant related to a matter material to the issue involved in the case, and that the indictment does not otherwise state facts which in themselves disclose that said testimony was material to the issue or to the case.

Section 118 of the Penal Code defines perjury as follows:

"Every person who, having taken an oath that he will testify, declare, depose, or certify truly before any competent tribunal, officer, or person, in any of the cases in which such an oath may by law be administered, willfully and contrary to such oath, states as true any material matter which he knows to be false, is guilty of perjury."

[1] The above definition of perjury is only a restatement of the offense as it was defined by the common law; and it will be observed that one of the essential elements of the offense as it is so defined is that the alleged false testimony shall be material to the issue tendered and tried in the case. In this state it has been said that there are two modes by which the materiality of the alleged false testimony may be shown in a criminal pleading:

"1. By setting forth the nature of the issue, and the evidence given thereon, so that, as a matter of law, it may be said the testimony upon which the perjury is assigned is material to the issue; 2. By showing an action at issue in a court of competent jurisdiction, the testimony given, its willful and felonious falsity, coupled with the averment that it was material to the issue." People v. Ah Bean, 77 Cal. 12, 15, 18 Pac. 815, 816.

The indictment here, it will be noted, does not directly state that the alleged false testimony given by the defendant in the case of People v. Heusers related to a matter material to the case or any issue therein, but states that said testimony was "in a manner" material to the case, etc. Nor do the facts set out in the indictment and which follow the averment that the defendant testified "in a manner material" to an issue in the case themselves disclose that the alleged false testimony related to a material matter therein, although the facts so alleged set forth the controversy in respect to which the offense is alleged to have been committed, to wit, the case of People v. Heusers. Section 966, Pen. Code; People v. Ah Bean, supra. The section just named reads as follows:

"In an indictment or information for perjury, or subornation of perjury, it is sufficient to set forth the substance of the controversy or matter in respect to which the offense was committed, and in what court and before whom the oath alleged to be false was taken, and that the court, or the person before whom it was taken, had authority to administer it, with proper allegations of the falsity of the matter on which the perjury is assigned; but the indictment or information need not set forth the pleadings, record, or proceedings with which the oath is connected, nor the commission or authority of the court or person before whom the perjury was committed."

It is very clear that the indictment here contains all that the above section requires to be set forth in a criminal pleading charging the crime of perjury, although we would not say that that section is not to be considered in connection with section 118, defining the crime of perjury, and thus its meaning intended to be that, in addition to the facts which it provides shall be stated, it must also be shown that the matter as to which the testimony is given is material to the issue in the case or proceeding in which the perjury is alleged to have been committed. But we are of the opinion that the circumstances of the case as tried are such as to justify us in holding that the indictment was sufficient, or at least that the defendant cannot complain of the defective statement of the crime thus attempted to be charged against him. It is quite obvious that the use of the word "manner" was a clerical mistake, and inadvertently inserted in the indictment in place of the word "matter" by the party who prepared that pleading. And, while it does not precisely express in the indictment the fact which the word "matter" would express when used in the connection in which it (the word "manner") is used in said pleading, it must be admitted, upon a fair consideration of the indictment, that it does not go far afield in charging the crime of perjury. Indeed, while we do not regard a criminal pleading in such a case wherein the word "manner" is used in the place of the word "matter" strictly proper, nor sanction the carelessness in the preparation of criminal pleadings resulting in such a defective statement of a public offense as appears in this case, still we are unable to perceive why the word "manner" does not in a measure express the fact thus sought to be stated with sufficient clearness or intelligibleness to apprise the accused of the nature of the charge which he will be required to meet or defend against. The word "manner" is defined in part as "mode of action; way of performing or effecting anything." Thus, if it be said that a party gives false testimony in a manner material to the issue of a case, such language may reasonably be understood or construed to mean that the way in which such party testified rendered his testimony material to the issue or issues to be decided. But, aside from this reasoning, or independently of a consideration of the strict lexicology of the word "manner," it is clear from the whole record that the defendant in this case was not misled or under any misapprehension as to the nature of the charge which the indictment makes a reasonably fair attempt to state. While it is stated in the brief of the defendant that, in the argument on the demurrer, the deficiency of the indictment in the particular here considered was pointed out to the trial court by counsel, still the trial of the case plainly discloses that the defendant labored under no mistake as to the meaning of the indictment; for at no stage of the case was there a single objection by him to the testimony offered by the people in support of the charge of perjury upon the ground that the indictment failed in the statement of a public offense or said crime. Indeed, the case was tried as though the crime of perjury was charged against him in a proper manner or according to legal requirements in such a case. The defendant had the benefit of every right which under the law should be accorded a person accused of and on trial for a public offense as fully and effectually as if the crime had been stated according to legal formalities in such a case. See People v. Tomsky, 20 Cal. App. 672, 685, 130 Pac. 184. At any rate, we are of the opinion that the error predicated upon the defectiveness of the indictment, being purely technical, could not have resulted in a miscarriage of justice, since, upon a full view of the evidence, we are convinced that the defendant was clearly shown to be guilty of the crime with which it is sought by the indictment to charge him. Const. art. 6, § 4½. As our Supreme Court declared in People v. Hitchcock, 104 Cal. 482, 484, 38 Pac. 198, so we here declare:

"We do not intend to encourage carelessness in criminal pleading, but, where a defect in an indictment or information is merely technical, and does not affect the substantial rights of the parties, we are not at liberty to reverse the judgment"—citing section 1258 of the Penal Code.

It is well here to note that the error to which the Supreme Court in that case was referring was precisely the same error to which we are presently giving attention, to wit, the use of the word "manner" in the place of the word "matter" in an indictment charging the crime of perjury, and used in precisely the same connection in which the word "manner" is used in the indictment involved herein.

In the case of Smith v. Territory, 14 Okl. 164, 77 Pac. 187, the defendant was prosecuted for murder, and convicted of the crime of manslaughter. On appeal he assailed the indictment on the ground that the facts stated were insufficient to state the crime of murder under the statute of Oklahoma in this, that the indictment alleged that the homicide was perpetrated "with the premeditated design to affect" the death of the deceased, while the language of the statute defining the crime of murder was that the homicide should have been committed "with the premeditated design to effect" the death of the person alleged to have been killed. In the trial court there was neither a motion made by the defendant to quash the indictment nor a demurrer interposed thereto upon the ground that it failed to state the offense thereby sought to be charged, but the defendant, upon the people offering their first witness, objected to the introduction of any testimony for the reason that the indictment did not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense. The Supreme Court held that the mistake was that of the pleader, and a mere clerical error, which could not have prejudiced the substantial rights of the defendant upon the merits.

[2] The defendant, however, makes the further point that the alleged false testimony given by him in the case of People v. Heusers was not material to any issue arising in said case. In the case of People v. Heusers the defendant was charged with, tried for, and convicted in the superior court of the county of Glenn of the crime of violating the so-called Wylie Liquor Law. It appears that one G. L. Budd, an officer or detective acting for the State Law and Enforcement League, among the purposes of which was the business of enforcing the laws and ordinances prohibiting the traffic in intoxicating liquors within the limits of cities, towns, and counties of the state, went to the town of Willows to investigate conditions with respect to "bootlegging" in that community; that he received information which gave him good reason to know or believe that one J. H. Heusers was engaged in the illicit liquor traffic in said town.

At the trial of said Heusers, and also at the trial of the present case, Budd testified that he met the defendant Dunstan and asked him if he knew where he could procure some liquor; that Dunstan replied that he could get liquor from Heusers, and thereupon either volunteered or agreed upon the solicitation of Budd to introduce the latter to Heusers and to assure him (Heusers) that Budd "was all right." Budd testified at said trial of Heusers that he met Heusers in the early part of the evening of the 19th of November, 1921, in the Popular Café; that he was introduced to him by the defendant Dunstan; that they had some conversation inside the restaurant, but within a few minutes after they started the conversation the three (Heusers, Dunstan, and Budd) stepped out on the sidewalk, stood in front of Tom's Pool Room, which is next door to the Popular Café, and resumed their conversation about the proposed purchase of liquor from Heusers by Budd. These negotiations, so Budd testified both in the Heusers and in the present case, occurred in the presence and the hearing of the defendant Dunstan, and the result thereof was that Budd purchased from Heusers a quart bottle of "jackass," for which he paid Heusers the sum of $5.

J. H. Heusers, the defendant in the case of People v. Heusers, testifying in his own behalf in said case, stated that he did not know said witness Budd; that he never sold Budd any liquor on the 19th day of November, 1921, or at any other time; that, although he had seen Budd in the Popular Café, he never had talked to him either in said café or on the sidewalk outside of and in front of the restaurant on Saturday evening, November 19, 1921.

The defendant, Dunstan, supporting the foregoing testimony of Heusers, testified in said case of People v. Heusers, and in response to the cross-examination to which he was subjected by the district attorney, in part as follows:

"Q. Did you see Mr. Budd down in front of the pool room or the restaurant (referring to Tom's Pool Room and the Popular Restaurant) that night (November 19, 1921), and talked to him at all? A. I did not. Q. Did you talk to him that night in front of the pool room or in front of the restaurant in that block on Tehama street in the presence of Mr. Heusers at all? A. I did not. Q. Did all three of you talk together there? A. We did not."

In the present case the witnesses Frank Mursa and Newt Power, the latter sheriff of Glenn county, each testified that on the evening of the 19th of November, 1921, between 6 and 7 o'clock, he saw Budd, the defendant Dunstan, and Heusers standing together and in conversation on the sidewalk in front of and near Tom's Pool Room on Tehama street, in the town of Willows. Mursa stated that he was about 60 feet from where the trio were standing, and he observed from the movement of their lips that they were carrying on a conversation. Power testified that he stood 30 or 35 feet from where the three men were standing, and that, while he was unable to hear what they were saying, he did observe from the movement of their lips that they were engaged in conversation.

Upon the testimony given by the defendant in the case of the People v. Heusers, as presented above, the indictment was predicated and, as to said testimony, the counsel for the defendant in his brief says:

"The matter of Budd having talked to or seen appellant in front of the restaurant on this particular night was a mere incident occurring during the progress of the trial of J. H. Heusers, and had no bearing one way or the other upon the issue as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, J. H. Heusers."

In other words, the contention is that Dunstan's testimony as given in the Heusers Case and as hereinabove set forth was wholly collateral to any issue raised in the case, and not material thereto, and that therefore the evidence is wholly insufficient to support the verdict.

It may be conceded that the testimony was upon a collateral question in the case, but it does not follow that the question to which it related did not involve a material issue within the meaning of the law. Budd had testified to the circumstances leading to the commission of the crime charged against Heusers, and among these was the circumstance that the defendant Dunstan introduced him (Budd) to Heusers and was present and engaged in a conversation held in front of the pool room referred to on the evening of the 19th of November, 1921, between him (Budd), Dunstan, and Heusers, and which conversation led to the consummation of the crime with which Heusers was subsequently charged, and upon which he was later tried and convicted. It will therefore readily be perceived that the testimony of Dunstan denying that he was present with Budd and Heusers at the time and place mentioned involved a direct attack upon the credibility of the whole testimony of Budd in the Heusers Case, and also involved the credibility of his own testimony. And, of course, it related to a matter most material to the case. If the jury had believed Dunstan, they could have justly repudiated the entire testimony of Budd, and have returned a verdict of not guilty in the Heusers Case, since it was principally upon Budd's testimony that the verdict in said case was founded.

In the case of the People v. Barry, 63 Cal. 62, the defendant, who was a witness in a murder case, testified upon cross-examination that he did not state in a conversation held at a particular time and place and in the presence of certain named persons that upon the occasion of the shooting of the deceased he, said Barry, saw the defendant fire the first shot. Claiming said testimony to be false, the people proceeded against Barry for the crime of perjury, and he was convicted upon a trial. It was contended upon appeal that his testimony was not material to any issue in the case in which he gave the alleged false testimony. The Supreme Court stated:

"For the purpose of impeaching the witness it was certainly competent for the prosecution to prove that the defendant had, on an occasion prior to the trial, made the statement imputed to him, and before this could be done it was required of the prosecution to lay a foundation for such impeachment. This could only be done by calling the attention of the witness to the contradictory statement and interrogating him respecting it. It therefore became a matter material to the credibility of the witness; it was a circumstance material to the issue or point of inquiry, and a false oath respecting it was perjury."

Again, the court in that case quoted approvingly the following language from the case of Wood v. People, etc., 59 N. Y. 123:

"It is not necessary that the false statements should tend directly to prove the issue in order to sustain an indictment. If the matter falsely sworn to is circumstantially material or tends to support and give credit to the witness in respect to the main facts, it is perjury."

The court adds:

"And it is equally perjury if the false evidence tends to discredit the witness. To the same effect is the rule laid down by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in the case of Commonwealth v. David Thompson, 12 Mass. 225."

In Rex v. Glepe, 1 Ld. Raym. 256, it was said:

"It is not necessary that it should appear in an information for perjury to what degree the point in which the man is perjured was material to the issue, for if it is but circumstantially material it will be perjury. * * * So if a witness swears to the credit of another witness, if it be false it will be perjury if it conduced to the proof of the point in issue."

And we may subjoin to the latter statement the suggestion that, conversely, if the witness swears to the discredit of another witness, and it be false, it will be perjury "if it conduce to the proof (or disproof) of the point in issue."

In 22 Am. and Eng. Ency. of Law, 687, the rule is thus stated:

"The matter sworn to need not be directly and immediately material. It is sufficient if it be so connected with the fact directly in issue as to have a legitimate tendency to prove or disprove such fact by giving weight or probability to the testimony of a witness testifying thereto, or otherwise."

See, also, People v. Senegram, 27 Cal. App. 301, 303, 149 Pac. 786; People v. Metzler, 21 Cal. App. 82, 130 Pac. 1192.

[3] In fine, the test of materiality is whether the statement made could have influenced the tribunal upon the question at issue before it. Any statements made in a judicial proceeding for the purpose of affecting the decision, and upon which the judge acted, are material. In other words, evidence affecting the credibility of a witness usually tends to strengthen the case of a party to an action, or to weaken the defense of his adversary and, therefore, such evidence is material. People v. Brilliant, 58 Cal. 214; People v. Von Tiedeman, 120 Cal. 128, 52 Pac. 155; People v. Prather, 134 Cal. 436, 66 Pac. 589, 863; People v. Macard, 109 Mich. 623, 67 N. W. 968.

There can be no doubt that, for the reason already stated, the alleged false testimony in this case tended to weaken the case of the People in the prosecution of Heusers, and, consequently, under the rule as enunciated in the above cases, it was material to a vital issue in the case.

No other points are discussed in the briefs. The judgment and the order are affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 718

ANHEUSER-BUSCH BREWING ASS'N v. AMERICAN PRODUCTS CO. (Civ. 4269.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 22, 1922.)

1. Landlord and tenant ⟸195(1)—Tenant for definite term cannot terminate liability by abandonment without landlord's consent.

A tenant for a definite term cannot divest himself of his right to possession or terminate his liability for the stipulated rental therefor by a mere abandonment of the premises without the landlord's consent.

2. Landlord and tenant ⟸194(3)—Acceptance of keys by landlord not sufficient in itself to prove acceptance of surrender of lease.

Where premises were let for a two-year term beginning November, 1918, and rents were collected by drafts drawn on tenant through a bank, and on payment of draft in June, 1919, tenant left keys to the premises with the bank, which wrote landlord, asking what disposition should be made, and landlord directed that keys be turned over to an agent, but continued to draw drafts on tenant for the rentals, the delivery of the keys by tenant and the keeping of them by landlord or its agents was not sufficient in itself to prove an acceptance on landlord's part of a surrender of the premises so as to relieve tenant of liability for rent.

3. Landlord and tenant ⟸194(2)—Passive permission by agent to third person to use surrendered premises not effective as acceptance thereof.

Where a real estate agent had no authority from the landlord to accept a surrender of premises by tenant, and landlord had manifested intention not to accept tenant's attempted surrender by insisting that tenant pay rentals during the succeeding months, a passive permission of the agent to a third person to store some hay in the premises was not indicative of an acceptance of tenant's surrender so as to relieve tenant of liability for rent.

4. Landlord and tenant ⟸194(2)—Final acquiescence in termination of lease held not to relate back to tenant's attempted surrender.

Where premises were let for two years, and during the first year tenant attempted to surrender lease and gave keys to the landlord, which surrender was not accepted, and landlord continued to demand rentals, letting of the premises to another tenant six months thereafter held not to relate back to the date of attempted surrender.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; G. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association, a corporation, against the American Products Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Gerald C. Halsey and Frederic T. Leo, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Goodfellow, Eells, Moore & Orrick, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action to recover $2,500.02, with interest alleged to be due plaintiff according to the terms of a lease of certain premises in which the plaintiff is lessor and the defendant lessee; the above sum being the aggregate of the stipulated monthly rental of $416.67 for the months from July to December, inclusive, 1919. The defense to said action proffered by the defendant in its answer and at the trial was that it had delivered up and surrendered said premises during the month of June, 1919, and had then vacated and abandoned the same, and that said plaintiff had then and there accepted and agreed to said surrender of said premises, and had taken possession of the same and had thereby terminated said lease and relieved said defendant of the obligation thereunder for the payment of any rent after the date of the said surrender and of the plaintiff's acceptance of the same. Upon the trial of the cause the court found against this contention on the part of the defendant; its finding in that respect reading as follows:

"Said defendant did not deliver up or surrender possession of the said premises to the plaintiff, and the said plaintiff did not unqualifiedly or at all take or accept in its own right, or in any right, or for its own use or benefit, or any use or benefit, or at all, the possession of said premises. That said defendant did not deliver up to said plaintiff the said premises, and said plaintiff did not acquiesce in or agree to any surrender of said premises by said defendant; and said plaintiff did not unqualifiedly enter into or unqualifiedly take possession of the premises in its own right, or in any right, or for its own use or benefit, or any use or benefit. That the said lease was not, in the month of June, 1919, or at any other time, or at all, terminated by the mutual consent or any consent, or at all, of the parties thereto, to wit: The said plaintiff, and the said defendant."

The sole contention of the appellant upon this appeal is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the foregoing findings of the trial court. The facts of the case which are practically undisputed, are summarized as follows: The lease between the parties was entered into November 19, 1918, and was for a period of two years at the stipulated monthly rental above stated. The lessor, and plaintiff herein, was a nonresident corporation. The real estate agent who had acted for the lessor in negotiating said lease was one Allen Moyer, who had procured the same subject to the approval and ratification of the lessor. This being obtained and the lessor having prepared and executed the lease in question, and the lessee having gone into possession, Moyer collected the first month's rent, when he was notified by the lessor that it would itself thereafter collect the rent by means of drafts on the lessee through the Anglo California Trust Company of San Francisco. The rents were so collected until the 24th day of June, 1919, when the defendant moved out of the premises, and its president appeared at the office of said trust company and paid the draft for the rent covering the month of June and left some keys to the premises with the trust company. The latter wrote to the lessor, informing it that the keys had been left with it, and asking what disposition should be made of them, to which letter the lessor replied, directing that the keys be turned over to Allen Moyer. The lessor, however, continued to forward drafts on the lessee covering the monthly rental as it fell due, which the lessee refused to pay, for the months of July and August; the drafts being returned to the lessor and plaintiff herein unpaid. It then wrote a letter to Moyer, directing him to call upon the lessee and insist upon the payment of the drafts. He did so, and was informed by the lessee and defendant herein that it had given up the keys and abandoned the premises, and that it refused and would refuse to pay any more drafts. In the meantime, in November, 1919, a third party named Panerio called up Allen Moyer by telephone, stating that he had some hay in the vicinity of the premises out in the rain which was going to be spoiled, and asking permission to store it in said premises. Mr. Moyer replied that he could not give him such permission because there was likely to be some trouble about it, to which Panerio replied: "Well, the place is open, and if I put it in there will you put it out?" Moyer said "No," and the result was that Panerio placed his hay temporarily in the premises. The plaintiff knew nothing of this episode and in the meantime in December, 1919, commenced this action for the recovery of the accumulated rent up to the date of its institution. In the meantime, in February, the plaintiff relet the premises to another tenant for a one-year term commencing March 1, 1920.

[1, 2] Basing its contention upon the foregoing facts, the appellant herein insists that they affirmatively show that the lease was terminated by its abandonment and the surrender of the premises in June, 1919, and by the plaintiff's acceptance thereof, as shown by its receipt and disposition of the keys to the premises at that time, and by the subsequent occupancy of the premises by Panerio. We cannot give our assent to the contention. A tenant of premises for a definite term cannot divest himself of his right to the possession of the same or terminate his liability for the stipulated rental therefor by a mere abandonment of the premises without the consent of the lessor. Bonetti v. Treat, 91 Cal. 223, 27 Pac. 612, 14 L. R. A. 151. Nor is the delivery up of the keys to the premises by the lessee, and even the keeping of the keys by the lessor or its agents sufficient of itself to prove an acceptance on the lessor's part of such surrender of the premises by the lessee, nor can it be clearly made to appear that such was the intention of the parties at the time. In Jones on Landlord and Tenant, § 548, the law is thus stated:

"The delivery of the key by the tenant and keeping it by the landlord are not sufficient to show a surrender of the premises by the tenant and an acceptance by the landlord, unless that appears to be the intention of both parties. * * * The landlord's failure to return keys which have been sent to him by a tenant who is vacating the leased premises does not effect a surrender by operation of law. The court remarked in one case: 'We are by no means prepared to concede that an abandonment of the premises by the tenant, and a delivery to and acceptance of the keys by the landlord, would alone necessarily amount to a surrender. The mere act of the landlord and his wife in picking up the key of the demised premises from the doorstep of his house, where the tenant had thrown it, and keeping it, does not show an acceptance of the tenant's abandonment. Whether landlord's acceptance of keys and resumption of possession amounts to a surrender of a lease depends on the intention of the parties. The landlord has a right to accept the keys and take possession of the premises to protect them from waste. The law does not necessarily infer a surrender from such act.'"

The following authorities fully support this view: Bonetti v. Treat, supra; Sessinghaus v. Knocke, 127 Mo. App. 300, 105 S. W. 283; Thomas v. Nelson, 69 N. Y. 118; Smith v. Hunt, 32 R. I. 326, 79 Atl. 826, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1132, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 971.

[3] As to the episode wherein Panerio, by a sort of sufferance on the part of Allen Moyer, stored his hay for a brief period in the premises without taking on the quality of a tenant and without any knowledge on the part of the owner as to his occupancy of the same we attach little or no significance to the occurrence. The real estate agent, Moyer, had no authority to bind the owner of the premises to any such arrangment or to the acceptance of the lessee's abandonment of the premises in any such manner, and the owner had clearly manifested its intention not to accept the lessee's attempted surrender of the premises by insisting upon the payment of its drafts for the rental thereof during the months succeeding such attempted surrender. The findings of the trial court are fully supported by the evidence in the case to the effect that there was no acquiescence on the lessor's part in the lessee's effort to surrender said premises prior to the institution of the present action.

[4] There is no merit in the appellant's further insistence that the plaintiff's final acquiescence in the termination of the defendant's lease as shown by its letting of the premises to another tenant should have relation back to the date of its attempted abandonment of the premises; nor do the cases relied upon by the appellant sustain such a contention. The case of Welcome v. Hess, 90 Cal. 507, 27 Pac. 369, 25 Am. St. Rep. 145, chiefly relied upon by the appellant as supporting this claim, is distinguishable from the instant case by the very important fact that the landlord retook possession of the premises and relet the same without in any way notifying the tenant that in the interim between the lessee's surrender of the premises and the landlord's reletting thereof he would continue to hold the defendant liable for the rental according to the terms of his lease: while in the instant case the contrary clearly appears. The case of Phene v. Popplewell, 15 Eng. Ruling Cases, 518, is also distinguishable as to its facts from the case at bar. On the other hand, the cases cited in Ruling Case Law, p. 197, in support of the rule that a re-entry on the part of the landlord and his resumption of the benefits, use, and enjoyment of the premises, while it terminates the lease as to the landlord's right to rentals subsequent to such re-entry, does not affect the tenant's liability for rent accrued prior to such re-entry, fully sustain the rule, and have full application to the facts of the case at bar. Oastler v. Henderson, 2 Q. B. 575; Schuisler & Donnell v. Ames, 16 Ala. 73, 50 Am. Dec. 168; Barlow v. Wainright, 22 Vt. 88, 52 Am. Dec. 79; Edmonds v. Mounsey, 15 Ind. App. 399, 44 N. E. 196; In re Sherwoods, 210 Fed. 754, 127 C. C. A. 304, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 940; American Bonding Co. v. Pueblo Inv. Co., 150 Fed. 17, 80 C. C. A. 97, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 557, 10 Ann. Cas. 357; Rockwell v. Eiler's Music House, 67 Wash. 478, 122 Pac. 12, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 894.

The judgment is affirmed.

---

59 Cal. App. 714

HOUGHTON v. KLUEGEL. (Civ. 4243. S. F. 10504.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1. California. Nov. 22, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court, in Bank. Jan. 20, 1923.)

1. Contracts ⊜193—Telegram construed as offer to repay salary as inducement to employer to accept proposed settlement with third person.

A telegram, sent an employer who had performed services for a public utilities commission by an employee, negotiating with the commission for an adjustment of the employer's claim for compensation, held to amount to an offer by the employee to repay salary already paid him, if the employer would accept the sum offered by the commission.

On Hearing in Supreme Court.

2. Contracts ⊜52—Detriment to employer from acceptance of third person's offer of settlement held sufficient consideration for employee's promise to repay salary.

Where public utilities commission was only willing to pay $3,837 for engineer's services, for which he claimed $8,886, the detriment suffered by the engineer in accepting $5,049 less than the sum claimed held sufficient consideration, under Civ. Code, § 1605, for an employee's promise to repay salary amounting to $1,500 if the employer would accept the commission's offer.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by C. S. Houghton against H. A. Kluegel upon agreement for return of compensation. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. R. Moulthrop, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Courtney L. Moore, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This appeal is from a judgment in the plaintiff's favor in an action to recover the sum of $1,500 upon a written contract alleged to have been made between the defendant and one Shirley Houghton, by the terms of which the defendant agreed to pay to the latter said sum. The plaintiff sues upon such assigned contract. The defendant denies the existence of any such contract or obligation. He also pleads that any such contract or agreement, if shown to exist, was wholly without consideration moving to said defendant. He further pleads the bar of the statute of limitations against the plaintiff's alleged cause of action. The case was tried upon an agreed statement of facts supplemented by some oral testimony of minor importance. The following, briefly summarized, are the undisputed facts of the case.

During the year 1916 Shirley Houghton, who was apparently a consulting engineer in construction work, with his office in San Francisco, Cal., had been engaged in the preparation of a certain report for the use of the public utilities commission of the city of Denver. The defendant, Kluegel, was also an engineer and was at the time an employee of said Shirley Houghton and his representative in Denver, under a salary, in connection with the preparation of said report and in the adjustment of the compensation to be allowed and provided for in the budget of said commission. Difficulties having arisen before the commission as to the amount of such compensation, Kluegel, on the 29th of December, 1916, sent from Denver to Shirley Houghton in San Francisco the following telegram:

"1916 Dec. 29 Denver Colo

"Shirley Houghton Hooker & Lent Bldg., San Francisco, Calif. Refer Nyes night letter. Last conference today. Presented statement for 8886 dollars from Sept. first. Deductions made 5049 include Wilhelm, your last two trips, Nyes two bills and practically everything since Oct fifth, making net allowed and for which they will issue warrant 3837 plus fee. Everything done under Nyes direction. Urge you accept this recommendation. Do not believe your presence would alter situation. Will refund my salary in above amounting to 1500. Speer will not include warrant in budget, but will take up matter after Jan. first in the line our talk Marsh. I could attend same after returning New York or Nye. Answer so if you agree present basis I can get warrant this week. Mailing copy report tomorrow.

"H. A. Kluegel."

The foregoing telegram had been preceded by certain other telegrams between the parties during the few days prior to December 29th from which it appeared that a good deal of doubt existed as to the allowance by the commission of the full amount of Shirley Houghton's claims for compensation for the labor and expense incurred by him in the preparation of said report, with the prospect of much delay and protracted litigation. As a result of these conditions and upon the receipt of the above-quoted telegram, Shirley Houghton, on December 29, 1916, sent to Kluegel at Denver the following reply to his aforesaid telegram:

"San Francisco, Dec. 29, 1916.

"H. A. Klugel, Century Building, Denver, Colo. Your wire. Make best settlement possible with Commission.

"Shirley Houghton."

Upon the receipt of this telegram Kluegel went before the public utilities commission of Denver and continued his negotiations for a settlement of Houghton's claim, but was unable to procure other or better terms than those embraced in his aforesaid telegram, and he finally made a settlement upon said terms. Thereupon, and on January 3, 1917, he sent a telegram to Shirley Houghton, stating:

"Settlement made approximately as per my last wire and warrant received duly registered."

Later he declined to repay Shirley Houghton the sum of $1,500 referred to in his telegram, whereupon the present action was instituted by the plaintiff as said Houghton's assignee. The trial court rendered judgment in the plaintiff's favor upon findings to the effect that the foregoing telegrams between the defendant and plaintiff's assignor constituted a written contract by which the defendant bound himself to the repayment to Shirley Houghton or his assignee of the sum of $1,500 theretofore received by him as salary for his services as an engineer, which services had apparently been rendered in whole or in a large part in connection with the preparation of the report to the public utilities commission of the city of Denver. The court also found that said action was not barred by the statute of limitations, and its finding in that regard is not assailed upon this appeal.

[1] The sole question presented upon this appeal is as to whether the evidence in the case, taken as a whole, sustains the foregoing finding on the part of the trial court. Looking to the terms of the telegram sent by the defendant Kluegel to Shirley Houghton on December 29, 1916, it would appear that the total claim of said Houghton for his labor and expenditures in the preparation of the report, which with the defendant Kluegel's co-operation he had prepared and presented to said public utilities commission, was the sum of $8,886, from which the said commission proposed to make deductions amounting to $5,049, leaving the sum of $3,837 for which the commission was willing to issue its warrant. The defendant, Kluegel, was apparently anxious to make a settlement on this basis if he could not by further negotiation procure better terms. But this basis of settlement would apparently cause a loss to his employer approximately two-thirds of his claim. The defendant, Kluegel, for reasons which we will discuss hereafter, was willing to share some portion of this loss with his employer, and hence made the offer to do so by returning to his employer the sum of $1,500, theretofore received by him as salary during the prosecution of the work of preparing said report. As we view this telegram of Kluegel's it amounted to an offer to do just that thing as an inducement to said Houghton to accept, at considerable loss to himself, the terms of settlement proposed by the public utilities commission. As to the consideration for such an offer, viewed from the standpoint of Shirley Houghton, it would seem to be ample, since it would, if complied with, reduce his loss by an amount of about one-third of its total sum, in the event of his acceptance of the offered compromise of his claim. Viewed from the standpoint of the defendant, the record is not so clear as to his motives in making said offer, or as to the benefit to be derived by him from his employer's acceptance of the same. His own explanation of his expected benefit to be ultimately derived from his present sacrifice is plausible, and would, in our opinion, supply a sufficient legal consideration for his offer. He states that at the time of making it he expected to remain in the employ of Shirley Houghton in the doing of other construction work, and he states, in substance, that he believed that his said offer to share with his employer the loss venture would induce a continuance of the relationship between them. It was only when he was disappointed in this expectation that he concluded that his offer was not binding upon him. We are of the opinion that a consideration by the defendant's definite offer was fully shown, and that its acceptance on the part of the plaintiff's assigner constituted a binding contract between the parties which the plaintiff herein was entitled to enforce in the present action.

The judgment is affirmed.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition to have the above entitled cause heard and determined by this court after judgment in the District Court of Appeal is denied.

[2] We do not however approve what is said in the opinion of that court as to the consideration for defendant's promise. The detriment suffered by plaintiff in accepting $5,049 less than the sum he claimed to be due him was sufficient consideration for defendant's promise to repay him $1,500. (Civil Code, Sec. 1605.)

WILBUR, C. J.; LENNON, J.; SEAWELL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.; and Myers, J. concur.

59 Cal. App. 662

BURNS v. JACKSON. (Civ. 2523.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 16, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 15, 1923.)

1. Appeal and error ⊜1001(1)—Evidence held to support finding that driver of car causing injury was in defendant's employment.

Where, in an action against J. and D. for death through the operation of an automobile, the driver had on two previous trials testified as to the facts of his employment and expressed his opinion that he was in the employ of J., which evidence was sufficient as a matter of law to demand submission to the jury of the question of the liability of J., the driver's alleged special employer, evidence on a third trial, wherein it was sought to show that J. was the employer liable, detailing the same facts but showing the driver's opinion to be that he was employed by D., the general employer, was sufficient on appeal after verdict in favor of plaintiff to compel the decision that a verdict against J. was legally supported, regardless of the technical rule of the law of the case.

2. Master and servant ⊜301(4)—Test of employer's liability for acts of employee stated.

Where the question is as to whether the general or special employer is responsible for injuries caused by an employee, the test is not which of them paid the wages of the employee, but whether the act was done in the business of which the person was in control as a proprietor so that he could at any time stop or continue it, and could determine the way in which it should be done, not merely in reference to the result to be reached, but in reference to the method of reaching the result.

3. Death ⊜99(3)—$5,250 held not excessive for death of 16 year old boy.

$5,250 held not excessive for the death of a 16 year old boy who had just completed his first year in high school, and was strong, healthy, industrious, and obedient, and a great help to his parents, both of whom were cripples; the father's life expectancy being 15.39 years.

4. Death ⊜97—Damages matter of discretion of jury.

In determining damages for death, no hard and fast guide can be employed in all cases, but the jury may exercise an intelligent discretion in view of the particular facts of the case, keeping in mind the well-established principles of law as to actual compensation for the loss sustained.

5. Witnesses ⊜379(8)—Cross-examination of witness as to inconsistent statements made on former trials held not error.

In an action for death caused by the operation of an automobile owned by the driver's general employer, but used temporarily in the services of defendant, where, on two previous trials wherein liability was sought to be imposed upon the general employer, the driver had testified as to the facts of his employment, it was not error on the third trial, wherein liability was sought to be imposed upon the special employer, to permit the driver on redirect examination by plaintiff to be examined as to his evidence on the former trials claimed to be inconsistent, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 2049, permitting a party producing a witness to show that the witness has made at other times inconsistent statements, provided the attention of the witness is called to such statements as required by section 2052.

6. Trial ⊜207—When instructions as to inconsistency of testimony at previous trial improper stated.

Where a witness testifies that his testimony on former trials of the case was true and was just what he meant to testify at the subsequent trial, an instruction that the jury could consider the testimony only in explanation of inconsistencies, and not as substantial testimony in the case, is improper.

7. Master and servant ⊜301(4)—Special employer may be liable for acts of servant.

One who is the general servant or employee of another may be lent or hired by the master for some special service so as to become as to that special service the servant of such other party, and where a general servant or employee is so hired to another, and as regards the particular service is subject wholly to the direction and control of the other, the latter and not the general employer is the master and is liable for injuries caused by the negligent and wrongful act of the servant while engaged in the duties appertaining to such service.

8. Trial ⊜260(8)—Requested instructions covered by instructions given properly refused.

In a death action brought against several defendants, it was not error to refuse instructions as to each of the defendants that, if the death was solely caused by the negligence of a certain defendant, verdict must be in favor of the particular defendant named in the instruction, where the requests were covered by another instruction to find in favor of defendant if the death was caused solely by the negligence of any other person than such defendant.

9. Appeal and error ⊜1039(2)—Inconsistent allegation in amended complaint held not ground for reversal.

In an action for wrongful death caused by the operation of an automobile, on the theory that the driver was in the employ of defendant, a special employer, an allegation in the complaint that the driver was employed by another defendant as general employer held not to require a reversal; such allegation through oversight not having been amended when the remainder of the complaint was amended to conform to a theory attempting to place liability on the special instead of the general employer.

10. Appeal and error ⊜193(3)—Sufficiency of complaint held not subject to attack for first time on appeal.

Where a case has been tried three times without objection to the sufficiency of the complaint, the contention cannot be made for the first time on appeal that the complaint is insufficient, particularly where, at most, it can be said that a particular allegation thereof is open to the charge of duplicity.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by W. F. Burns against George H. Jackson for damages for the death of a minor child. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, and A. H. Hewitt, of Yuba City, for appellant.

V. L. Hatfield, Martin I. Welsh, and W. H. Hatfield, all of Sacramento, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was for damages for the death of a minor son, and plaintiff was awarded by a jury the sum of $5,250, and judgment was thereupon entered in his favor for that amount. The son was killed in a collision between a Southern Pacific motor passenger car and an auto truck owned by one Jackson Diggs, one of the original defendants herein, operated by one F. G. Prinderville, also a former defendant, who, it is claimed by respondent, was in the special service and under the control of appellant Jackson through his superintendent, W. G. McRoberts, at the time of the collision.

The cause has been before this court on two former occasions. In Burns v. Southern Pacific Co. et al., 43 Cal. App. 667, 185 Pac. 875, the facts are quite fully stated, and therein it was said:

"The fact that Diggs was the owner of the truck, and that the defendant Prinderville was in his general employ as a chauffeur, appears to be the only cause for having joined him in this action, but, as the testimony shows without contradiction that at the time of the collision referred to both truck and chauffeur were under the control and management of the defendant Jackson, the correctness of the ruling of the court as to the defendant Diggs requires no further mention."

Furthermore, it was said:

"Without setting forth the evidence in detail, it is only necessary to say there was sufficient evidence to take the case to the jury as to the defendant Prinderville being an employee of the defendant Jackson, and also as to the negligence of the defendant Prinderville in his operation and management of the auto truck at the time of the collision."

This court therefore ordered the judgment of nonsuit in favor of the defendants Diggs and McRoberts rendered in the trial court to be affirmed and the judgment of nonsuit in favor of defendant Jackson to be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial as to him. It may be added that upon the first trial a verdict was rendered in favor of plaintiff against Prinderville and for defendant company for its costs, and there was no appeal as to either of these defendants.

The case went back for a new trial as to Jackson, and again a judgment of nonsuit was rendered in his favor. An appeal was taken and the judgment reversed, as reported in Burns v. Jackson (Cal. App.) 200 Pac. 80. Therein it was held that substantially the same evidence as to the liability of defendant Jackson appeared at the second as at the first trial, and therefore the principle of the "law of the case" was applicable. In the opinion is set out the testimony of the two witnesses, Prinderville and McRoberts, at both trials, which it is not necessary to repeat. This appeal is by the defendant Jackson from the judgment rendered against him after the third trial, and the main contention of appellant is that the verdict is entirely unsupported, since the evidence shows without conflict that Prinderville was in the employ and under the direction and control of Diggs, and hence Jackson was in no wise responsible for the negligence of the driver of said auto truck at the time of the collision. Preliminarily, it may be stated that the conclusion as to the liability of Jackson at all the trials rested wholly upon the testimony of Prinderville and McRoberts, that a petition for a rehearing was denied by the Supreme Court after said decisions were rendered by this court and appellant's counsel, who represented Diggs in the opposition to the petition of the plaintiff in the Supreme Court for a hearing after said first decision of this court holding that the nonsuit as to him was properly granted, contended that there was no evidence that Prinderville was under the control and direction of Diggs, and therefore the latter could not be held responsible for the former's negligence. In other words, while representing Diggs alone, they earnestly sought to make it appear that Jackson was the responsible employer, but herein, while representing Jackson alone, they are equally insistent that the liability belongs to Diggs. It is due counsel, though, to say that they claim the evidence at the last trial to be different from the first, in that the testimony of Prinderville was not the same. To support this position attention is called to the fact that at the last trial he testified that he had full control of the truck, that he had full power to stop and to start it when he pleased, that nobody had any control over him in doing that work, that he was then the employee of Jackson Diggs, and that neither Dr. Jackson nor Mr. McRoberts directed him in any particular as to how he should run the truck, whereas at the first and second trials he testified that he was working for Dr. Jackson, subject entirely to his orders, to go with his truck and drive it wherever he was directed and without anything being said by Diggs at all. Hence it is concluded that the principle of "the law of the case" is inapplicable, since it presupposes that the facts are substantially the same and has no application where the facts alleged and found are materially different from those considered on a former appeal. Esrey v. Southern Pac. Co., 103 Cal. 541, 37 Pac. 500; Moore v. Trott, 162 Cal. 268, 122 Pac. 462; Kramm v. Stockton Electric R. Co., 10 Cal. App. 271, 101 Pac. 914.

But it is to be observed that Prinderville admitted that at the first trial he testified that he was working for Dr. George H. Jackson that day, and subject entirely to his orders, to go with the truck and drive it wherever he directed him without anything being said by Jackson Diggs at all. In explanation of the apparent discrepancy he made the following reply to the questions asked by counsel for appellant as follows:

"Q. Well now, Mr. Prinderville, in this testimony here, as I understand, on the 27th day of June, 1917, while you were in the employ of Jackson Diggs on that day, you were working for Dr. Jackson. You mean by that you were hauling Dr. Jackson's fruit? A. Yes, sir. Q. As you said to-day? A. Yes, sir. Q. (Reading) 'And subject to his orders entirely?' That is, that you were hauling fruit he told you to haul? A. Yes, sir; hauling fruit he told me to haul and when he told me to to haul it. Q. (Reading) 'And to go with your truck and drive it wherever he directed you to?' A. Yes, sir. Q. That is true, wasn't it? A. Yes, sir. Q. (Reading) 'And without anything being said by Jackson Diggs at all?' A. Yes, sir. Q. That is true, and that is what you say to-day? A. Yes, sir. Q. You still say, do you, that so far as the management of the truck was concerned, you controlled that absolutely yourself, drove it as you pleased, stopped it when you pleased, controlled absolutely without anything being said by Dr. Jackson or any of his employees? A. Yes, sir."

[1] We can see no substantial difference in the facts to which the witness testified at the various trials, the only difference being in the inference or opinion of the witness as to who was his employer. His opinion at the first two trials was that he was in the employ of Dr. Jackson, while at the last trial, for some reason or other, his judgment was that Mr. Diggs was his employer and that he was responsible to him. This consideration was, however, for the determination of the jury and not to be influenced by the opinion of the witness. Upon what ground he based his conclusion is not disclosed, but when it comes to the recital of the facts from which the jury was to conclude whether in this particular employment he was subject to the direction and control of Dr. Jackson or Mr. Diggs, in justice to the witness, it must be said that his testimony throughout is consistent. These facts, in brief, are that for a month or six weeks he had been in the general employ of Mr. Diggs as chauffeur; that during all this time he had been living at the Jackson place; that Mr. Diggs was operating a ranch across the road, and on the morning in question Mr. Diggs sent him over to Dr. Jackson's without giving him any directions as to what he should do; that he hauled fruit that day from Dr. Jackson's ranch to Oswald; that after dinner, Mr. McRoberts, the foreman for Dr. Jackson, told him to take a load of fruit to Oswald, to go out in the orchard and get the fruit; that Mr. McRoberts and young Burns rode with him and assisted him in unloading the fruit; that, after unloading the fruit, he went to a place named Kecks and got a load of empty boxes; that he had nothing to do with the loading, but that it was attended to by Mr. Burns and McRoberts; that he went to Kecks by direction of Mr. McRoberts; that he was hauling Dr. Jackson's fruit "he told me to haul and where he told me to haul it and to go with my truck and drive it wherever he directed me to and without anything being said by Jackson Diggs at all." The foregoing appear as the material facts in all these trials from which the inference was to be drawn as to who had the direction and control of Prinderville, and, if they were sufficient as a matter of law in the first and second trials to demand the submission to the jury of the question of the liability of Jackson, they are sufficient upon this appeal after verdict in favor of plaintiff, regardless of the technical rule of "the law of the case" to compel a decision that the verdict is legally supported. In this connection it is to be remembered that neither Jackson nor Diggs testified in the case. They were in a position to shed more light upon the disputed point than any one else, and their silence under the circumstances must have been deemed by the jury as a circumstance of some significance. They undoubtedly had some agreement as to the services of Prinderville as it is unreasonable to suppose the contrary. While neither, of course, was required to testify, they at least had direct and personal knowledge of the relation of the parties, and their failure to speak could hardly fail to weigh against the appellant. It is true, also, that the jury were at liberty to accept a portion of Prinderville's testimony if it carried conviction to their minds, and reject any other portion that they may have disbelieved. Indeed, they must have observed his inclination to favor Jackson in the last trial as he manifestly desired to help Diggs in the other trials. This apparent bias could not be laid out of view in properly appraising his testimony. As to Prinderville's statement that no one directed him when to stop and when to start the machine, etc., it can have no bearing upon the question before us. There is no pretense that he was an independent contractor, but it appears beyond peradventure that he was an employee of either Diggs or Jackson, and it would be absurd to suppose that the employer would give him such minute directions as to the operation of the truck. Such matters would naturally be left to the judgment of the driver, who was better qualified and in a better position than the employer to exercise such judgment.

As to the principle of law involved in the question of the relation of the parties there is no controversy, the only difficulty being in its application to the facts. The books are replete with illustrative cases, but it is sufficient to refer to a few from the recent decisions of our Supreme Court.

In Stewart v. California Imp. Co., 131 Cal. 125, 63 Pac. 177, 724, 52 L. R. A. 205, the injury was caused by escaping steam from an engine operated by one Conger, who was employed by the California Improvement Company to roll and level certain streets in the city of Oakland. The main contention of appellant therein was that the injury to the plaintiff was not caused by its negligence but that of the city of Oakland, since it was being used under the direction of the city superintendent of streets. The Supreme Court, however, said that the trial court had found that the defendant company had selected the engineer, and his services were to be paid by said company, and said company had the right to remove him, and that the relation of master and servant existed between them and not between the city and Conger. The Supreme Court held that the evidence supported these findings and quoted with approval from the leading case of Boswell v. Laird, 8 Cal. 469, 68 Am. Dec. 345, the following statement of the rule in such cases:

"The relation between parties to which responsibility attaches to one, for the acts or negligence of the other, must be that of superior and subordinate, or, as it is generally expressed, of master and servant, in which the latter is subject to the control of the former. The responsibility is placed where the power exists."

[2] Therein the services were paid for by the party whom the court held to be liable, while in the case at bar the evidence shows that Diggs, and not Jackson, paid Prinderville, but such circumstance is not controlling, the test being whether "the act is done in the business of which the person is in control as a proprietor, so that he can at any time stop or continue it and determine the way in which it shall be done not merely in reference to the result to be reached, but in reference to the method of reaching the result." 18 R. C. L. § 244; Burns v. Jackson, supra.

In Pruitt v. Industrial Accident Commission (Cal. Sup.) 209 Pac. 31, it was held that the owner of a truck was not liable for the death of the driver caused by injuries received by said driver while hauling materials for a contracting firm, "where such firm hired the truck from the owner including the services of the driver, and controlled and directed the driver in the operation and movement of the truck, and said owner never exerted any measure of control over the truck or driver while in the service of said firm"; the court being of the opinion that the hirer of the truck was the responsible party.

In Billig v. Southern Pacific Co. (Cal. Sup.) 209 Pac. 241, is found the last expression of the Supreme Court on the subject. Therein the governing principle is stated as follows:

"The application of the doctrine of respondeat superior in any given case depends upon the power of control which the superior possesses, and which for the protection of third persons he is required to exercise, over the conduct and activities of his subordinates," and "consequently the doctrine has application only in cases where the power of control exists, and such power does not exist in a situation where the special employer has no voice in the selection or retention of the negligent subordinate."

It was held therein that the trial court was justified in holding that the special employer had no such power of control, but the general employer did have and that the latter was therefore liable. In the opinion denying a rehearing (209 Pac. 245) the Supreme Court shows that there is no conflict between that case and Pruitt v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, there being a difference in the evidence, and the court being of the opinion that there was no evidence, either direct or otherwise, "from which it might be inferred that Harris [the general employer] at the time and place of the collision, and with respect to the manner and method of operating and controlling the auto truck while in transit, had relinquished to another person his right of control over the driver of the truck." Herein, as we have seen, there is no direct evidence of the extent of the authority of the special employer, but it is a fair inference from all the circumstances in the case that it depended upon Dr. Jackson's volition whether Mr. Prinderville should be retained in that particular work, and that the special employer had control over the employee while engaged in that work.

[3, 4] The contention that the verdict is excessive, in our judgment, possesses no merit. The rule is, of course, that the verdict will not be disturbed upon this ground unless it is "so plainly and outrageously excessive as to suggest, at the first blush, passion or prejudice or corruption on the part of the jury." Hale v. San Bernardino, etc., Co., 156 Cal. 713, 106 Pac. 83. The boy was 16 years of age, had just completed his first year in the Marysville High School, and the evidence shows he was a strong, healthy, industrious, and obedient lad, and a great help and comfort to his parents, who were both cripples. The father's expectancy of life was 15.39 years, and applying the principles that must govern in such instances, as enunciated in the cases cited by appellant, we cannot say that the verdict should be condemned. Peluso v. City Taxi Co., 41 Cal. App. 297, 182 Pac. 808; Bond v. United Railroads, 159 Cal. 270, 113 Pac. 366, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 687, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 50. It is, of course, true, as stated by appellant, that no "hard and fast guide" can be applied to all cases, but that the jury is permitted to exercise an intelligent discretion in view of the peculiar facts of the case, keeping in mind the well-established principles of law as to actual compensation for the loss sustained.

[5] It is claimed by appellant that the court committed error in overruling the objection to questions asked of Prinderville on the redirect examination by respondent as to said Prinderville's testimony at the first trial of the cause. Upon cross-examination, it seems, he declared that he was the servant of Jackson Diggs and was not in the employ of Dr. Jackson and that the latter had no control over him. The questions as to his testimony at the former trial we may combine into one as follows:

"As I understand, in that day, the 27th day of June, 1917, while you were in the employ of Jackson Diggs on that day, you were working for George H. Jackson, and subject to his orders entirely, to go with your truck and drive it wherever he directed you and without anything being said by Jackson Diggs at all?"

[6] He admitted that his answer was, "Yes," and in reply to further questions by appellant he stated what we have hereinbefore set out. Appellant admits that the questions as to the former trial would have been proper on the ground of surprise if the witness had testified on the direct as he had on the cross examination; but we can see no difference in principle, since he was a witness for plaintiff and the particular statement could be no less surprising because elicited by appellant rather than by respondent. Section 2049 of the Code of Civil Procedure permits a party producing a witness to show that the witness "has made at other times statements inconsistent with his present testimony," provided the attention of the witness is called to such statements as provided in section 2052 of said Code. The reason for the rule is clearly stated in the opinion of this court in Zipperlen v. Southern Pacific Co., 7 Cal. App. 206, 93 Pac. 1049, to the effect that "a party producing a witness virtually stands as an indorser of the character of such witness, and by the act of calling him to testify in his behalf in effect declares to the court and jury that the testimony of said witness will strengthen and support his contention," and it would be unjust to allow the witness to place the party "in a false light before the court or jury." Moreover, said questions propounded to the witness on cross-examination involved his opinion of the relation he sustained to the other parties, and to that extent he was really made the witness of appellant, and it was proper to permit the respondent under such circumstances to call his attention to an adverse opinion that he had formerly expressed. In this connection appellant claims that he requested the court to limit this testimony to the consideration of the credibility of the witness and that it should not be regarded as proof of the fact, but our attention is not directed to any portion of the record showing such request. All that we have found concerning it is the following statement made by counsel for appellant during the argument as to the admissibility of said testimony at the first trial:

"Now, I repeat, had they asked the witness a question and then obtained an answer which surprised them, under the law as laid down in the Code and sustained by the authorities, they would have had the right to ask him if he made another answer at another time; and then we would have been entitled from your honor to an instruction to the jury that they were permitted to do that only for the purpose of putting them right before the court and jury, but it must not be considered as testimony in the case."

But if such instruction had been requested, it would have been properly refused, since the witness said his former testimony was true and just what he meant at this trial.

[7] Appellant complains of this instruction:

"You are instructed that it is the law that one who is the general servant or employee of another may be loaned or hired by the master for some special service, so as to become as to that special service the servant of such third party; and where a general servant or employee is so loaned or hired to another, and as regards the particular service, for which he is so loaned or hired, is subject wholly to the direction and control of the other, the latter, and not the general employer, is the master, so far as the particular or special service is concerned, and is liable for injuries caused by the negligent and wrongful act of the servant, while engaged in the duties pertaining to such service."

The instruction embodies a sound principle of law, and, as a rational inference in harmony with the hypothetical situation therein presented could be drawn from the evidence in the case, we perceive no valid objection to the action of the court in giving it.

[8] Appellant proposed a specific instruction as to each of the defendants other than himself similar to the following:

"I instruct you that if you find from the evidence in this case that the death of Emmons Franklin Burns was caused solely by the negligence of the defendant F. G. Prinderville, then your verdict must be in favor of defendant."

It is apparent that no prejudice resulted from the refusal of the court to give them, since they were entirely covered by this direction to the jury:

"If you find from the evidence in this case that the death of Emmons Franklin Burns was caused solely by the negligence of any person or persons, or corporation, other than George H. Jackson, or his servants, agents, or employees, then your verdict should be in favor of defendant Jackson."

The only other point made by appellant is that since concededly the only ground, upon which plaintiff could recover from defendant Jackson, depends upon the theory that Prinderville was in the employ of Jackson, he is precluded from such recovery by the allegation in paragraph 6 of his complaint, "and defendant F. G. Prinderville was then employed by the defendant Diggs as his agent and servant to drive said motor truck while the same was being used in the transportation of said fruit." Appellant says:

"That allegation, of course, was a proper one when plaintiff was seeking to fix liability on the defendant Diggs, but manifestly out of place when seeking to charge the defendant Jackson."

It appears that in paragraph 5 the complaint originally alleged that "said George H. Jackson was engaged in transporting said fruit * * * by means of a certain auto truck owned and operated by defendant Jackson M. Diggs." In the original answer it was denied "that the said auto truck was, on said date, operated by the defendant, Jackson M. Diggs," but at the last trial appellant by leave of court amended his answer so as to strike out that denial. Thereupon plaintiff amended said paragraph so as to have it read:

"That some of said fruits were then ready for shipment and sale, and on said 27th day of June, 1917, said George H. Jackson, was engaged in transporting said fruit from said farm to various places, including a station called Oswald on the lines of the Southern Pacific Company in said county of Sutter, as aforesaid by means of a certain auto truck owned by defendant Jackson M. Diggs, along and upon a certain highway of said county of Sutter extending from the ranch of said Jackson to a station called Oswald, on the railway line of the defendant Southern Pacific Company."

[9] Said paragraph 6, through oversight no doubt, was not amended as it should have been to make it consistent with said amended paragraph 5. However, the defect is not sufficient to justify a reversal of the judgment. The theory of plaintiff in the beginning was that defendants Diggs and Jackson were jointly liable for the negligence of Prinderville, and this joint liability he attempted to set forth in said sixth paragraph by the allegation:

"That defendant Jackson is the grandfather of defendant Jackson M. Diggs, and they work together and exchange utilities with each other, and were so co-operating at said date in the use of said auto truck."

It may be admitted that the pleader was not fortunate in the use of terms, but there was no demurrer, and the case was tried three times without objection upon the theory that defendant Jackson was charged with responsibility for the operation of said truck; and for the first time in this court the point is made that the complaint is insufficient in that respect. The truth is, however, that the complaint is simply uncertain, since paragraph 5 as amended alleged, as we have seen, that defendant Jackson "was engaged in transporting said fruit by means of a certain auto truck owned by defendant Jackson M. Diggs."

[10] In connection with the other allegations this could only mean that he was transporting the fruit through the operation of said truck, thus rendering the complaint open to the charge of duplicity in view of paragraph 6; but no objection was made, and it is apparent that appellant should not be heard now for the first time to urge the point.

We think the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 727

ANDERSON v. ANDERSON. (Civ. 3659.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 24, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 22, 1923.)

1. Divorce ⟸11—Policy of law stated.

It is the policy of the law to conserve the stability of the marriage relation, and to grant no divorce except on clear proof, adequately corroborated, of facts specified by the Code as ground for divorce.

2. Divorce ⟸179—No complaint of evidence admitted without objection.

That testimony was given without objection by defendant in divorce is sufficient response to her contention that its admission was prejudicial to her.

3. Divorce ⟸184(10)—Court on appeal bound by findings supported by evidence.

The appellate court is bound by the findings supported by the evidence in a divorce action, and an argument on the weight of the evidence is improper.

4. Divorce ⟸130—Findings of cruelty supported.

Findings of fact sufficient for divorce for cruelty held sustained by the evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Mogan, Judge.

Action by Andrew H. Anderson against Lenna Mae Anderson for divorce. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 206 Pac. 463.

J. J. Dunne, of San Francisco, for appellant.

James M. Thomas, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This appeal is taken by the defendant from a judgment against her by which plaintiff was granted an interlocutory decree of divorce.

[1] Appellant devotes much space in her brief to the cases expressing the general attitude of courts with reference to divorce actions. There is no dispute about what this attitude is, and it is beyond controversy that the policy of the law, as expressed by appellant, is to conserve the stability of the marriage relation and to grant no divorce except upon clear proof, adequately corroborated, of facts specified by the Code as grounds for divorce. However, we find no violation of these principles in the present record. The complaint charged the defendant with having an uncontrollable temper, with constant quarreling, almost continually from the date of the marriage (December 6, 1916), to June 21, 1918. He also charged that she had falsely accused him of improper relations with a "German woman"; that she had stated to divers persons that she was going to "put plaintiff out of business"; that defendant had interfered with plaintiff's business by calling at his office and insisting upon reading all his business letters; that she had accused him of being "so crooked in his business dealings that he never got through with a transaction without having a lawsuit over it"; that on June 21, 1918, in the town of Novato, Cal., the defendant met plaintiff outside of the freight sheds of the Northwestern Pacific Railroad; that plaintiff had called there for his satchel and had found that defendant had previously secured possession of it. He remonstrated with the station agent for having delivered the satchel to defendant, and thereupon defendant turned upon him with vile language, striking him in the face with clenched fists and striking his eye several times, so that it became bruised and swollen; that defendant thereupon stated to several persons standing about:

"That man left me to go with a German woman. I will have him driven out of town by the people of Novato."

That defendant followed plaintiff as he left said station and picked up a stone and threatened to strike plaintiff with it, and in order to avoid being struck plaintiff was obliged to seek shelter in the depot; that defendant has stated to divers persons that she is going to put plaintiff out of business; that she not only personally annoyed, harassed, and assaulted the plaintiff, but caused her mother and sister to assist her in annoying, harassing, and assaulting him. Plaintiff then specifies an instance in which defendant's mother and sister called at his office and assaulted him, breaking his eyeglasses and accusing him of being intimate with a "Hun" woman; that plaintiff has endured great mental suffering and physical pain as a result of such conduct on the defendant's part and has been incapacitated thereby from attending to his business duties.

[2] Let us concede at the outset that the last incident, although admitted in its essential features by the mother and sister, was not proven to have been instigated by the defendant. The mother and sister testified that the defendant did not know of their contemplated visit to plaintiff's office and plaintiff produced no proof to contradict this. Therefore we shall dismiss this incident from our consideration and direct our inquiry to whether or not the remainder of the evidence warrants the granting of the interlocutory decree of divorce. However, before passing to a consideration of the remainder of the evidence, it might be well to point out, in response to appellant's contention that the admission of the evidence of the assault by the mother and sister of the defendant was prejudicial to the defendant, that the record discloses that the facts were testified to in the first instance by the mother of defendant without objection on the part of the defendant.

Plaintiff testified to repeated quarrels and accusations by the defendant, and particularly to the accusation that plaintiff was having improper relations with his stenographer, whom defendant characterized as the "German woman" or the "Hun." There is no direct corroboration of all of plaintiff's testimony on these matters, but there is corroboration of a considerable part of the same in the testimony of plaintiff's mother to the effect that the defendant came to her house and stated that plaintiff had been there with "that German woman." Plaintiff testified also that he heard this conversation as he was about to enter his mother's house. Another witness, Mrs. Clark, testified that defendant had told her that plaintiff had had improper relations with his stenographer. The stenographer and the plaintiff both took the stand and denied any improper relations whatsoever, and the court has found that defendant's accusations with reference to this matter were untrue. But plaintiff and his said stenographer also testified to an incident in which defendant had assaulted the stenographer in his office. All of these matters corroborate plaintiff's testimony of repeated quarrels between the parties and of accusations made by the defendant, as does also the testimony of the witness Beck, who worked in the office of plaintiff. He told of a visit of defendant to plaintiff's office at a time when plaintiff was away. She insisted upon getting into the safe, and Mr. Beck prevented her from doing so. At that time "she spoke about the 'Hun' woman, as she called her; she said: 'He is with this Hun woman.'"

Plaintiff also testified that defendant would come to his office and read the letters on his desk and would take papers and copies of letters away from his desk and would go into his files against his protest. Mrs. Brown, the mother of plaintiff, testified that defendant had brought to her home a letter which she stated was taken from the plaintiff's file. She read this letter to the witness and stated she was going to put it back again.

The witness Alpi testified that defendant had stated to him that her husband's business dealings were so "crooked" that they seldom "put a deal through" without a lawsuit. She said his business was "crooked."

Plaintiff testified to the assault by the defendant at Novato, Cal. He was corroborated by the testimony of the witness Stone, who was working at the freight depot when the scene took place. He stated that the plaintiff had asked for his suit case and had protested when told that it had been given to his wife; that defendant followed close behind him, saying, "You left me for a German woman." She called plaintiff "a dirty dog" in a loud voice and struck him in the face with her hand; that, as plaintiff walked away, defendant followed him and stopped as though to pick up something. The station agent, Seaton, also witnessed this assault and testified to substantially the same facts with relation to it, as did also the witness Peterson, the assistant station agent.

The witness Bond, a newspaper publisher at Novato, testified to a conversation between defendant and himself in which defendant admitted striking plaintiff and stated that plaintiff wanted a divorce, but that she would not let him have it and was going "to make it warm for him" and wanted to run him out of town. Another witness testified that defendant told him she had "beaten Mr. Anderson up" at the depot. Plaintiff's mother testified that on the evening after the assault she saw plaintiff, and his eye was swollen and blackened. Another witness also saw him at the same time and testified to his injuries. Defendant herself admitted the assault, seeking to justify it by stating that the plaintiff had used offensive language to her; but the trial court has found the facts to be in accordance with the plaintiff's testimony. In the light of all the testimony in the record upon this incident, we feel the finding of the court was a proper one.

[3] A great part of the appellant's briefs is devoted to arguments upon the evidence; but after the foregoing statement of the testimony, which supports the findings of the court, it will appear that we are bound by the findings of the trial court, and that an argument upon the weight of the evidence is improperly addressed to this court.

Appellant complains that the evidence does not show that plaintiff lost any business by reason of the acts of defendant. We do not think that such a showing was necessary. Plaintiff testified that during the time he was subjected to these annoyances he lost 30 pounds in weight and was in the worst physical and financial condition he had ever been in in his life. It does not take much proof to carry the conviction that such a course of conduct as that herein narrated would cause mental and physical suffering to the victim regardless of the acuteness of his sensibilities.

[4] We are of the opinion that the evidence sustains the findings, which are sufficient upon which to base the judgment. Appellant makes the most of minor matters with reference to rulings of the trial court upon evidence, but we can find no error in the record which would warrant a reversal of the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; NOURSE, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 706

PEOPLE v. GRAFF. (Cr. 878.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 20, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 18, 1923.)

Husband and wife ⊂=54—Wife "a person" within acts defining and punishing embezzlement and forgery against husband's property.

Notwithstanding Pol. Code, § 4468, which provides that the common law, so far as it is not repugnant to or inconsistent with the United States Constitution or the Constitution or laws of this state, is the rule of decision in all courts of this state, and in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, providing that neither husband nor wife can be a witness against the other without consent, except for a crime committed by one against the other, Pen. Code, §§ 26, 1322, providing that all persons are capable of committing crimes, except, inter alia, married women (except for felonies) acting under coercion of their husbands, and that neither is a competent witness against the other in a criminal action, except in case of a crime committed by one against the person or property of the other, "any person," "every person," and "a person" as used in Pen. Code, §§ 470, 503, 506, 507, defining embezzlement and forgery to include, in substance, both husbands and wives, hence a motion to quash an indictment against a wife for embezzlement and forgery concerning the property of her husband was improperly granted.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Person.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Harriet A. Canfield Graff was informed against for embezzlement and forgery. From an order granting her motion to quash the information, the People appeal. Order reversed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Arthur Keetch and John W. Maltman, Deputy Attys. Gen., and Thomas Lee Woolwine, Dist. Atty., and William G. Randall, Deputy Dist. Atty., all of Los Angeles, for the People.

Kemp, Mitchell & Silberberg, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, J. Defendant was informed against in two counts for the commission of the crime of embezzlement and in four counts for the commission of the crime of forgery. Under all of these counts the commission of the alleged offenses was stated to have been against the property and rights of defendant's husband, defendant having been a married woman at the time of the alleged wrongful acts. Defendant moved the trial court to set aside and quash the information, and the motion was granted; defendant never having entered her plea to any of the six counts. The people appeal from the order granting the motion to set aside and quash.

The point offered in support of the motion made in the trial court, and the sole point now offered by respondent in support of the order of that court is that a wife cannot commit the crimes of embezzlement and forgery if her alleged criminal acts concern the property of her husband. This contention is based upon the well-known rule of the common law, founded upon the unity of the two parties to the marriage relation, to the effect that a wife cannot commit a crime against the property of her husband; respondent insisting that the rule mentioned yet obtains in California.

Section 4468 of the Political Code provides, with our italics, that—

"The common law of England, so far as it is not repugnant to or inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, or the Constitution or laws of this state, is the rule of decision in all of the courts of this state."

The solution of the question before us depends upon the italicized portion of this section. Respondent contends that the insistence that her alleged wrongful acts do not constitute the crimes of embezzlement and forgery is not repugnant to nor inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the state, in the absence of constitutional provision or legislative enactment expressly extending the two crimes to married women who offend against the property of their husbands, and there is no such provision or enactment. On the other hand, the position taken by appellant is that the general state of the law as to married women is such that there is thereby furnished a repugnancy to the idea of the application of the common-law rule above mentioned to the charges made in the information filed against respondent. It is between these two contentions that we must make a choice in disposing of the appeal.

We first take account of the penal laws which bear upon the question. Where italics are used throughout this opinion it will be understood that they are ours. Section 470 of the Penal Code provides:

"Every person who, with intent to defraud," commits certain acts, or who, "with intent to prejudice, damage, or defraud any person," commits certain other acts, "is guilty of forgery."

Section 503 of that Code reads:

"Embezzlement is the fraudulent appropriation of property by a person to whom it has been intrusted."

Section 506 of the same Code is to the partial effect that—

"Every trustee, * * * agent, * * * or person, otherwise intrusted with or having in his control property for the use of any other person, who fraudulently appropriates it to any use or purpose not in the due and lawful execution of his trust * * * is guilty of embezzlement. * * *"

Section 507 of that enactment in part provides:

"Every person intrusted with any property as bailee * * * who fraudulently converts the same or the proceeds thereof to his own use * * * is guilty of embezzlement."

These quotations, while fragmentary, will serve sufficiently as a basis for our discussion. It will be observed that each of the sections is all-inclusive as to persons, in form at least. The continued use of the expressions "every person," "any person," and "a person" justifies the statement upon principles of pure logic and without the possibility of cavil. That, however, does not settle the matter, for some courts in other jurisdictions have found no great difficulty in deciding in the face of the very general terms of penal statutes that a wife may not be guilty of the larceny of her husband's property; this upon the common-law rule as to the unity of husband and wife; it being declared in those jurisdictions, in effect if not by positive statement, that as to such offenses a wife is not a person. This being so, we may look to other enactments of the Legislature which cast light upon the question.

It is provided by section 26 of the Penal Code that—

"All persons are capable of committing crimes except those belonging to the following classes: * * * Seven. Married women (except * * * felonies) acting under the threats, command, or coercion of their husbands. * * *"

Because of the exception upon exception in which this statement is involved and for the sake of clarity, the people in their brief paraphrase it thus:

"Married women are persons capable of committing all crimes, except misdemeanors committed by them when acting under the threats, command, or coercion of their husbands," a rendition of the terms of the enactment which to us seems eminently just. Certainly, if the Legislature had not intended the words "every person," "any person," and "a person," as used in sections 470, 503, 506, and 507, to operate as contended for by the people in the present instance, we might reasonably expect that body to have so expressed itself in the seventh subdivision of section 26. Under such conditions we should naturally expect a reading of the subdivision somewhat after the following manner:

"Seven. Married women (except for felonies) acting under the threats, command, or coercion of their husbands; or (as to both felonies and misdemeanors) committing acts against the property of their husbands."

Certain companion sections of the Penal Code and the Code of Civil Procedure are very persuasive of, if they do not in fact control, the view that the Legislature never intended an exception to the general terms of sections 470, 503, 506, and 507 of the Penal Code in the case of a married woman offending against the property of her husband. Section 1322 of the Penal Code is to the effect, in part, that—

"Neither husband nor wife is a competent witness for or against the other in a criminal action or proceeding to which one or both are parties, except * * * in case of criminal actions or proceedings for a crime committed by one against the person or property of the other. * * *"

The following is a portion of section 1881, Code of Civil Procedure:

"There are particular relations in which it is the policy of the law to encourage confidence and to preserve it inviolate; therefore, * * * a husband cannot be examined for or against his wife without her consent; nor a wife for or against her husband, without his consent; nor can either, during the marriage or afterwards, be, without the consent of the other, examined as to any communication made by one to the other during the marriage; but this exception does not apply to a civil action or proceeding by one against the other, nor to a criminal action or proceedings for a crime committed by one against the other. * * *"

Respondent asserts that these two sections embody rules affecting procedure alone, and that therefore they cannot be regarded as substantive declarations that either husband or wife may commit crimes against the property of the other. The statement is true, but the sections nevertheless have both a direct and a decided bearing upon the question here presented. The rules of evidence prescribed by the Legislature in them amount to a contemporaneous construction of the substantive law enacted by that body and dealing with questions kindred to that covered by those rules of evidence. It is well settled that such a construction is most persuasive with the courts. 25 R. C. L., tit. "Statutes," pars. 273, 275. The language employed by the Legislature in the two sections is particularly persuasive in the present instance, for if the lawmaking body has not intended by its substantive enactments to render husbands and wives criminally responsible for wrongful acts committed by either against the property of the other, then parts of the two sections do nothing but incumber the statute book. It must be said that the body has performed, not only a futile, but a foolish act, in providing that husbands and wives may testify against each other in cases in which either is under prosecution for the commission of a crime "against the person or property of the other," or "against the other," if such crimes cannot be committed. It must be true, then, that in announcing this rule of evidence the Legislature has in effect declared that it has elsewhere provided that each of the spouses may commit such crimes; that is, if we may find elsewhere language employed by the lawmaking body which with reason may be interpreted as declaring that each may commit them. We have already remarked that such a declaration is made, in form, in sections 470, 503, 506, and 507 of the Penal Code. We may now, with the aid of section 1322 of that Code and section 1881 of the Code of Civil Procedure, not forgetting to pay due regard to the terms of section 26 of the Penal Code, safely conclude that we have made substantial progress toward the view that the Legislature has made the declaration, not alone in form, but in substance as well.

The question whether a wife may offend against the property of her husband through a commission of the crimes of embezzlement and forgery has never been passed upon, apparently, in any jurisdiction. Courts of last resort in several of the states have had before them, however, the question whether one spouse may commit larceny of the effects of the other, or may commit other crimes, notably arson, against the property of the other, with the result that the authorities upon the question are divided. In those cases in which it has been determined that the crimes mentioned may not be committed by one spouse against the other the courts have descanted upon the sanctity of the marriage relation as the foundation upon which a stable condition of society can alone exist. The view is taken that the peace of the home will be destroyed if husbands and wives may be charged with the commission of crimes against the property of each other, and it is said that it were better to permit the escape from punishment of a husband or wife who robs a spouse than to encourage the dissension which would enter a family if a criminal charge could be pressed against the thief. It is said in effect that the commission of such a theft would have a slight tendency to produce a warfare internecine to the family, while the pressure of a criminal charge because of the immoral act would tend to cause a disruption of the marital relation. We cannot adopt such a line of reasoning. We cannot believe that such events can be so smothered in the family circle that no ripple, or that but a slight ripple, will disturb the serenity of the home. A spouse will not lightly forgive a robbery committed against him by his marital partner, and a home in which one of the partners will steal the property of the other cannot be regarded as one resting on a particularly solid foundation.

In passing upon the question involved in this appeal we cannot but contemplate the effect upon society if our decision should be favorable to respondent. Such a termination of the cause would advertise to the world the fact that wives may rob their husbands with impunity, that they may commit against their husbands inherently immoral acts which if committed by them against others, or if committed by others against their husbands, would bring down condign punishment upon the offender under the laws denouncing the serious crimes of embezzlement and forgery. Such a conclusion on our part could not but encourage and multiply the commission of such acts, thus bringing into some households at least the very strife and dissension which it is the purpose of some of the decided cases to prevent, through arguments unconvincing, unsound, and illogical.

Another circumstance may be looked to as indicating the inapplicability of the cases with which we have already indicated our positive disagreement. In jurisdictions in which it has been determined that either spouse cannot commit larcey of or arson against the property of the other it is also held that neither can maintain a tort action to recover damages for the wrongful act of the other against the person. In fact, the authorities on these two questions generally go hand in hand; there being some exceptions because of the language of particular statutes. The rule is different everywhere as to the right of either spouse to maintain a civil action to recover separate property of that spouse which has been appropriated by the other, or to recover its value. Either a husband or a wife may maintain such an action against the other as freely as he or she might maintain a similar action against a third person. Peters v. Peters, 156 Cal. 32, 103 Pac. 219, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 699. In such a case a spouse may drag the family skeleton from its closet and exhibit it to the public view, thus precipitating the domestic warfare which the cases that we decline to follow would have us believe might never otherwise arise. We repeat, however, that the authorities are uniform upon the proposition that such actions may be maintained. In fact, such a rule is necessary to the maintenance of the separate property rights of husband and wife. Upon this consideration alone we might almost venture to base a decision favorable to appellant, for it surely would be strange if the husband of respondent could maintain an action against her for the recovery of any money which she may have appropriated to her use after he had intrusted her with its possession, and the people at the same time be precluded from the maintenance of a criminal action against her upon the score of embezzlement.

On the whole, we conclude upon reason and from the face of the various sections of the Codes to which we have referred that when the Legislature used the expressions "any person," "every person," and "a person," in sections 470, 503, 506, and 507 of the Penal Code, it meant to include in substance, and not merely in form, both wives and husbands. Our views, however, find substantial support in decided cases, a few of which we shall take the space to cite. Garrett v. State, 109 Ind. 527, 10 N. E. 570; Beasley v. State, 138 Ind. 552, 38 N. E. 35, 46 Am. St. Rep. 418; Hunt v. State, 72 Ark. 241, 79 S. W. 769, 65 L. R. A. 71, 105 Am. St. Rep. 34, 2 Ann. Cas. 33; Brown v. Brown, 88 Conn. 42, 89 Atl. 889, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 70; State v. Shaw, 79 Kan. 396, 100 Pac. 78, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 27, 131 Am. St. Rep. 298; Fiedler v. Fiedler, 42 Okl. 124, 140 Pac. 1022, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 189. Some of these cases proceed partly and some wholly upon the different position in which Legislatures have placed wives in relation to property rights, as contrasted with the servile status occupied by them at common law. Because of the construction which we have placed upon our criminal statutes we have not found it necessary to discuss this phase of the question involved in the present appeal. It is sufficient for us to say that the California Legislature has granted to women at least as full a measure of right in the acquisition, holding and disposition of property and with reference to the making of contracts generally, as well as in matters of civic or political concern, as have the Legislatures of the generality of the states. It is doubtless because of this emancipation of woman from the disabilities under which she so long labored that the Legislature has cast our criminal law in the form in which we have found it to be.

Respondent has called to our attention the cases of Sesler v. Montgomery, 78 Cal. 486, 21 Pac. 185, 3 L. R. A. 653, 12 Am. St. Rep. 76; People v. Miller, 82 Cal. 107, 22 Pac. 934; Henley v. Wilson, 137 Cal. 273, 70 Pac. 21, 58 L. R. A. 941, 92 Am. St. Rep. 160; and Peters v. Peters, 156 Cal. 32, 103 Pac. 219, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 699; but we find nothing in the opinion in any of them which precludes the conclusion at which we have arrived.

Order reversed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 724

MARTIN v. EMERSON. (Civ. 2551.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 22, 1922.)

Partnership ⊂⊃69—Consideration to be paid for half interest in lot sold and conveyed to partner by copartner and wife, after transfer to her, held not assets.

Where a partner conveyed in good faith to his wife his undivided half interest in a partnership lot, she took subject to the rights of creditors and to payment of any balance due his copartner pursuant to Civ. Code, § 2405, but when he and his wife thereafter sold and conveyed such interest to his copartner, the lot was removed from the partnership assets and thereafter his copartner was owner of the lot in his individual right subject to claims of creditors, and it follows that the consideration agreed to be paid therefor, and for which his wife sued his copartner, did not constitute partnership assets, and his copartner, either as an individual or as a survivor, has no lien on, or claim to, such consideration for any balance due him.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth M. Martin against C. E. Emerson. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Pardee & Pardee, of Susanville, for appellant.

G. C. Julian, of Susanville, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment denying her any relief and awarding the defendant his costs of suit. The transcript on appeal was filed March 1, 1921, and appellant's opening brief was filed May 18, 1921. Respondent has filed no brief and no appearance was made for him at the time set for oral argument, November 10, 1922.

The complaint alleges that the plaintiff, being the owner as her separate property of an undivided half of a certain town lot, sold the same to defendant for $1,250; that at the same time the defendant executed a written agreement with plaintiff and her husband, E. A. Martin, who died prior to the time suit was brought, by the terms of which defendant promised to pay plaintiff and her husband the purchase price agreed upon; that her husband "joined in said agreement merely as a matter of form, and at the suggestion of defendant," but that her husband had no title to or interest in the lot.

The answer denies that plaintiff had any interest in the lot, or that the same was her separate property; admits the execution of the agreement to pay the $1,250; alleges that Martin "was the actual owner of said land and that he held the same in trust for a partnership between himself and said defendant, and that, so far as said plaintiff was concerned, said property was community property of said plaintiff and said E. A. Martin." As a separate defense, the answer alleges that from the year 1901 to August 5, 1915, the defendant and Martin were engaged in the saloon business as copartners; that February 24, 1904, they purchased the property in suit with partnership funds and for partnership purposes; that thereafter Martin executed a deed purporting to convey an undivided half interest in the property to plaintiff, but that there was no valuable consideration for the transfer; that the plaintiff knew, at the time of said conveyance, that such property belonged to the partnership and that she thereafter held the property in trust for the partnership; that at all times said property was used as partnership property and all receipts therefrom claimed and treated as partnership funds, and all taxes paid by the partnership, and that plaintiff never claimed any of said receipts; that at the time of the execution of the deed from Martin to his wife, the partnership was largely indebted and its business carried on through the credit of defendant, all to the knowledge of plaintiff; that defendant never had actual knowledge of the conveyance from Martin to plaintiff; that the business of the partnership ceased August 5, 1915, and thereafter there were no funds or assets belonging to the partnership, and that no accounting has ever been had between the partners; that Martin was "largely indebted to defendant on account of moneys drawn by him from said partnership in excess of the moneys drawn by said defendant"; that at all times since August 5, 1915, the books of account of the partnership have been in possession of Martin and plaintiff; that the acts, omissions, and conduct of plaintiff misled defendant, and "if it had not been for said acts, omissions, and conduct of said plaintiff said defendant would have compelled an accounting of said partnership business, and would have been able to have protected himself and to have secured said property or the value thereof to said partnership as a part of the assets thereof"; and that by reason of the foregoing facts the plaintiff is estopped from claiming said property. In a separate defense it is alleged that Martin acted in bad faith in transferring the property to his wife and concealed from defendant the fact of such conveyance. Other defenses are alleged, and found by the court to be true, in support of which no evidence was produced. The findings follow the denials and allegations of the answer.

The evidence shows that the defendant and Martin were engaged in the saloon business as alleged in the answer; that they purchased the town lot in controversy with partnership funds, both Martin and Emerson being named as grantees in the deed of conveyance. Thereafter Martin, in consideration, as expressed in the deed, of love and affection and for her better support and maintenance, conveyed a half interest in the lot to plaintiff, the deed being delivered at the time it was recorded, June 11, 1907. February 20, 1914, a deed was executed by "Elizabeth M. Martin and E. A. Martin, her husband," to defendant conveying to him an undivided half interest in the lot. At the same time the parties to the deed executed the contract sued on, which reads as follows:

"This memorandum of agreement, made this 20th day of February, 1914, between C. E Emerson, first party, and A. E. Martin and Elizabeth M. Martin, second parties,

"Witnesseth: That whereas said parties heretofore entered into an agreement whereby the said second parties agreed to sell to said first party an undivided one-half interest in and to lot No. 8, of block No. 10 of the town of Susanville, and said first party agreed to pay therefor the sum of $1,250 in cash, provided said first party does not incorporate his property of which the above is a part, and further providing that in case such property is turned to a corporation, then the said second parties are to get for said property above described such price as they are able to obtain from the said corporation.

"Now, it is understood and agreed, that the said second parties have this day made and executed a deed conveying said property to said first party in accordance with the terms of such agreement, and the said first party hereby agrees to pay therefor the said sum of $1,250, in case no incorporation is made, it being understood that, if the property of said first party is handled by a corporation, then the price to be agreed upon with said corporation, for any amount more than $1,250, but in any event said second parties to receive the said sum of $1,250.

C. E. Emerson.
"Elizabeth M. Martin.
"E. A. Martin."

No corporation has been formed to take over the property. There is no evidence of bad faith on the part of Martin, in so far as defendant's rights are concerned, in conveying the property to his wife. The conveyance did not become effective until delivered to her and it was recorded at the time of delivery. She took the property, of course, subject to the rights of creditors and the right of defendant to have it applied to the payment of any general balance due him. Civ. Code, § 2405. Such right remained in defendant until plaintiff and Martin sold and conveyed their interest in the lot to him. The effect of such sale, however, was to remove the property from the partnership assets and thereafter, the defendant was the owner of the same in his individual right, subject to the claims of creditors. In Jauman v. McCusick, 166 Cal. 517, 523, 137 Pac. 254, 256, it is said:

"Each partner had the right to transfer his interest in the agreement or in any other partnership property, subject, of course, to the rights of creditors of the firm. * * * When two of the partners thus assigned the contract to the third, the interest of all the partners became merged and vested in such assignee. Retaining his own interest and taking under the assignment the interests of his copartners, he became the owner of every right of the three partners in the contract. The legal effect of such transfer was precisely the same as that of an assignment purporting to transfer the claim in the partnership name."

Since the effect of the transfer to defendant was to vest in him the entire ownership of the property in his individual right, it follows that the consideration agreed to be paid did not constitute a partnership asset, and the defendant, either as an individual or as the surviving member of the partnership, has no lien upon, or claim to, such consideration. It may be further stated that, after the partnership discontinued business, it effected a composition with its creditors, and the evidence does not show that as between the partners there is anything due from one to the other. There is no evidence to sustain defendant's plea of estoppel.

In the contract on which the suit was brought, defendant promised to pay plaintiff and E. A. Martin the sum therein specified. The complaint is based upon the theory that the plaintiff is entitled to the full amount due, and that Martin's name appears in the contract as a mere matter of form. Defendant did not by demurrer to the complaint or by objection to evidence offered at the trial contest plaintiff's right to sue alone on the contract, without joining the representative of her deceased husband's estate as a party to the action, but based his defense upon the theory that the plaintiff never acquired any interest in the town lot in question, and the case seems to have been tried on that theory. For the reasons stated, the evidence does not support the findings and conclusions of the court. If anything in support of the judgment has been overlooked, it is due to respondent's failure to point it out or to render any assistance to the court in the consideration of the appeal.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 781

ZAUTZ et al. v. SEBREAN et ux.
(Civ. 3991.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 27, 1922.)

Landlord and tenant ⇐109(8)—Surrender and acceptance held not rescission of agreement when not consented to by lessors acting within rights in good faith.

In an action for money paid under the terms of a lease and for the value of goods sold and delivered, where the lessees, negotiating with the owner of the premises, purchased through them automobile accessories and leased the building, and lessees without cause renounced and surrendered up their lease and failed to comply with any of its terms, the act of the lessors in re-entering the premises under an expressed provision of the lease, and accepting the keys and taking possession, did not constitute a rescission on their part, but rather an assertion by them of a right under the lease, and one which the lessees themselves acknowledged when they requested that defendants take possession.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by Charles Zautz and another against F. W. Sebrean and wife. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Victor A. Dunn, of Oakland, and Lewis A. Hilborn, of San Francisco (D. Cameron, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellants.

Jesse Robinson, of Oakland (Clarence De Lancey, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. This action is one in assumpsit, and was brought to recover money paid under the terms of a lease, and also for the value of certain goods sold and delivered. Plaintiffs obtained judgment in the sum of $2,083, and defendants appeal.

The facts may be briefly summarized as follows:

Defendants were the owners of certain real property situated in San Leandro, county of Alameda. The premises were improved with a brick building known as the Cherry City Garage. On October 15, 1920, and prior thereto, one Leslie Galbraith was in possession thereof under a lease covering a period of some five years. He was in arrears in rent, and wished to dispose of his lease and business. Plaintiffs, being informed of this fact, communicated with the defendants and expressed their desire to purchase the business and lease the premises. They did not care to deal directly with Galbraith as they were of the opinion that defendants could acquire the business upon better terms than they. Accordingly they agreed that defendant F. W. Sebrean should conduct the negotiations and purchase the garage for them. This arrangement was carried out. Sebrean acquired the lease for the sum of $1,750. He also, and at the same time, and for the benefit of plaintiffs, purchased from Galbraith automobile accessories to the amount of $633.32. In addition to being in arrears in rent Galbraith was indebted to various people in different sums, and the entire amount of the purchase price he received from the sale of his lease and business was distributed among his creditors.

Upon acquiring the property in the manner thus indicated defendants as lessors and plaintiffs as lessees entered into a contract of lease of the same for a term of five years at a monthly rental of $350 per month, payable monthly in advance. Under its terms the parties agreed that the lessees would be credited with the sum of $1,750 they had paid Galbraith for his lease, said sum to be applied on the last five months of the term. One month after entering into this contract, and when in default in payment of the second month's rent, one of the plaintiffs, Charles Zautz, served defendants with a notice of rescission of the lease and sale, claiming that he and his associate had been defrauded. At the same time he delivered the keys of the leased premises to them with the suggestion that they take possession of the premises in accordance with the provisions of the lease entitling them so to do in the event of nonpayment of rent on the part of plaintiffs, one of the covenants of the lease between the parties providing that, if any rent should be due and unpaid, or default should be made in any of the provisions thereof, the lessors would have the right to re-enter the premises and remove all persons therefrom. Demand was also made at this time upon defendants for a restitution to plaintiffs of the sum of $2,383, the amount paid by them for the lease and automobile accessories.

Defendants accepted the keys, but refused to make reimbursement of the sum demanded. The following day defendants took possession of the abandoned premises as requested, made an inventory of the property belonging to plaintiffs, and notified them to remove the same. Thereafter defendants proceeded to conduct the same business as was carried on by plaintiffs. A small quantity of gasoline remained in the tank which defendants were unable to store. They had the tank refilled without removing this gasoline, but offered to return an equal quantity in kind to plaintiffs. Prior to the notification given plaintiffs to remove their accessories, defendants had been tendered a bill of sale for the same, together with a demand for the sum of $633.32, the amount paid by plaintiffs for such accessories. Compliance with this demand was also refused. This action was thereupon brought by plaintiffs.

It was contended below, and is here, that the facts above narrated constituted a rescission of the agreement between the parties. The trial court so concluded, and judgment went in plaintiffs' favor for the sum of $2,083, the full amount prayed for, less one month's rent which the court found to be due defendants under the lease, and defendants appeal. It is appellants' claim that entry by them under the circumstances related did not constitute an abandonment of their rights under the terms of the lease, and did not, so far as they were concerned, amount to a rescission of their agreement. We see no escape from this contention. The acts amounted to no more than a surrender on the part of plaintiffs of the leased premises, and a determination by them to terminate the lease. This surrender and abandonment was without any fault on the part of defendants. True, fraud was claimed by plaintiffs when they demanded restitution of the money they had paid Galbraith, but at the trial all question of fraud was expressly abandoned, and they relied solely for a recovery upon the acts of defendants in accepting the keys and conducting the business, which acts, they claim, constitute a rescission of the contract. We fail to see in what possible manner such acts can be so construed. Under the circumstances defendants had the right to enter the premises, care for them, and terminate the lease. They might have elected to accept possession for the purpose of reletting the same for the benefit of plaintiffs, but they were not bound to do so. Baker v. Eilers, 26 Cal. App. 371, 146 Pac. 1056. The only presumption, if any, that could possibly arise from the acceptance of the premises upon plaintiffs' surrender would be an agreement to absolve them from the further payment of rent under the lease. But defendants are not here seeking to recover any rent, but, on the contrary, have elected to accept a surrender. They at all times positively refused to rescind their agreement or to make any reimbursement of any character to plaintiffs. They do stand ready, however, as is their duty, to deliver up the automobile accessories. So far as the lease is concerned, as above pointed out, defendants were expressly given the right of re-entry when any rent became due and unpaid. Their mere act, therefore, of accepting the keys and taking possession did not constitute a rescission on their part, but rather an assertion by them of a right given under the lease, and one which the lessees themselves acknowledged when they requested that defendants take possession. Glock v. Howard, 123 Cal. 1, 16, 55 Pac. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17; Phillips v. Stark (Cal. Sup.) 199 Pac. 509, 511; 13 Corpus Juris, 600; Jones on Landlord and Tenant, § 548. The evidence conclusively shows that appellants were in no manner ever in default, but, on the contrary, it does show that they were at all times ready and willing to perform their contract. Respondents, on the other hand, without cause renounced and surrendered up their lease, and failed to comply with any of its terms. Such an arbitrary renunciation on their part can in no manner affect the rights of defendants, who at all times insisted upon a compliance with the terms of the contract. The acts of plaintiffs amounted to no more than an offer of rescission, never consummated or consented to by defendants.

The conclusion we have reached renders it unnecessary to discuss the liability of defendants for the sums paid by plaintiffs to Galbraith or any question of agency or the respective rights of the parties flowing therefrom.

For the reasons given, the judgment is reversed.

I concur: KERRIGAN, J.

---

(59 Cal. App. 729)

BERRY v. ALDERSON et al., Board of Medical Examiners. (Civ. 4262.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 23, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 22, 1923.)

1. Physicians and surgeons ⟸11(3)—Evidence held sufficient to sustain revocation of physician's license.

Evidence in a proceeding to revoke a physician's license to practice medicine held sufficient to sustain a revocation under the Medical Practice Act, authorizing the board of medical examiners to revoke a license of a physician or surgeon for unprofessional conduct.

2. Physicians and surgeons ⟸10—Statute relating to professional conduct of physicians and surgeons requires doctor to practice in own name.

By the Medical Practice Act, the Legislature intended that a person to whom the privilege of practicing medicine and representing himself to the world as qualified and worthy of the confidence of the sick should, when offering his services by advertisement or announcement, do so under his own name; the statute not being vague and indefinite, but aiming at conduct less reprehensible than fraudulent misrepresentations.

3. Constitutional law ⟸318—Revocation of physician's license by board of medical examiners based upon charges filed by board's special agent held not denial of due process of law.

Where the charges against petitioner physician to revoke his license were filed before the state medical board by a special agent of the board, charged with the duty of discovering violations of the Medical Practice Act, and the agent appeared as the witness against petitioner, there was no denial of due process of law, on the theory that the board of medical examiners was at once prosecutor and judge; the board having no direct interest in the revocation of the license nor bias against petitioner, and the special agent having filed the charges in discharge of his official duty.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabannis, Judge.

Proceedings by Harry E. Alderson and others, as members of the Board of Medical Examiners of the State of California, to revoke the license of John Lafayette Berry to practice medicine. From a judgment of the Superior Court in certiorari proceedings, affirming the action of the State Board of Medical Examiners, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Edwin V. McKenzie, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Harry A. Encell, of San Francisco, and Frank M. Smith, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal by the petitioner from a judgment of the superior court in a proceeding in certiorari by which the action of the board of medical examiners of the state of California in revoking the license of the petitioner to practice medicine was affirmed. The appeal is presented upon a bill of exceptions which contains the papers constituting the record of the proceeding before said board, including a transcript of the testimony taken therein, and which, in obedience to the writ of certiorari issued by the trial court, were produced in that court.

The record shows that a complaint was filed before the board of medical examiners by one Frank M. Smith, special agent of said board, charging the petitioner, John Lafayette Berry, with having been guilty of unprofessional conduct under the eighth section of section 14 of the Medical Practice Act (St. 1913, p. 722, as amended), in that the said Berry, being the holder of a certificate issued by said board licensing him to practice medicine and surgery, did "use in connection with his practice of medicine and surgery a name other than his own in a certain sign and advertisement of his practice in the words and figures following, to wit, K. B. Bloodless Surgeons."

[1] Said section of the Medical Practice Act authorizes the board of medical examiners to revoke the license of a physician or surgeon for unprofessional conduct as defined in the act, and one of the specifications of unprofessional conduct as therein defined is "the use by the holder of any certificate, in any sign or advertisement in connection with his said practice, or in any advertisement or announcement of his practice, of any fictitious name, or any name other than his own."

The contention of the respondents in support of the judgment is that the petitioner, in an advertisement or announcement of his practice, used the letters and words "K. B. Bloodless Surgeons," and that said expression is a name; that it not being the name of the petitioner he was therefore guilty of the particular unprofessional conduct charged in the complaint.

The material evidence disclosed by the transcript of the testimony taken before the respondents is uncontradicted, and shows that one Kratzer in conjunction with one Bennett, organized in the state of California a corporation for the vending of medicine and medical remedies; said corporation being known as "K. B. Remedies Incorporated" and "K. B. Medicine Company." It was under the management and control of Kratzer and conducted its business in various parts of the state. To foster and increase the demand for its product, it employed or worked in conjunction with physicians, or persons styling themselves such, and in one instance conducted a sanatorium at Hayward, where at different times Drs. Brandon, Manley, Crum, and Powell treated the patients. Upon the exterior of this sanatorium was a large sign, "K. B. Bloodless Surgeons." This sign, or one quite similar, was also used in an office conducted by the corporation, through Kratzer, in Livermore. This had been going on for some years before the petitioner met Kratzer, and the business connection of the two men dates from only a few weeks prior to the events which gave rise to the present proceeding. One of the methods adopted by Kratzer in pushing the sale of the corporation's so-called remedies was to give open-air entertainments to which the public were invited without payment. The character of these entertainments may be gleaned from the following advertisement:

"Free Open-Air Show. July 14, 7:30 p. m. and every evening except Sunday, corner N. and Yolo streets. * * * Vaudeville, Music, Singing, Comedy, Lectures, Sketches and Funny acts. Free demonstrations in Bloodless and painless surgery. * * *"

At the conclusion of the entertainment, the performers would circulate among the audience and offer for sale the K. B. remedies. Such an entertainment was arranged to be given at Newman by Kratzer and the petitioner, the expenses thereof to be jointly defrayed. Accordingly, upon an open space in said town they caused to be erected a platform, and engaged performers for the entertainment. Upon the platform was placed a large sign, the dimensions being about 4 by 12 feet, upon which the device "K. B. Bloodless Surgeons" appeared in red letters upon a yellow ground. One of such entertainments was given by Kratzer and the petitioner on or about the 1st of August, 1919, part of which was a lecture by the petitioner upon some medical subject. In addition to the vending of these remedies to the members of the audience, the performers also distributed cards, upon which was printed the following:

"This card entitles the holder to one free consultation and examination by the physicians and surgeons of the K.-B. Medicine Co. Not good after ———. Corner P and Merced streets."

The location indicated was the place of residence of Kratzer and the petitioner, the latter occupying one of the rooms as an office or consulting room. Upon this building was also exhibited the sign "K. B. Bloodless Surgeons," but upon the window and door of the petitioner's consulting room appeared only his name, J. L. Berry. The profit, if any, to be derived by Berry from this enterprise, was to come from fees received for medical treatment given by him to persons coming to his office, although, as stated upon the card distributed, the first consultation was gratuitous.

It is apparent from this recital of the evidence that the petitioner did use in connection with his practice in an advertisement thereof the designation or name "K. B. Bloodless Surgeons," a name other than his own, thus bringing himself within the provisions of the Medical Practice Act relating to unprofessional conduct.

[2] The first contention of the appellant in support of his appeal is that the use by a physician of a name other than his own referred to in the statute must be of such a nature and under such circumstances as to amount to a fraud upon the public, i. e. that it must amount to a representation that said physician is in fact another person; in other words, that there must be a fraudulent concealment of identity; and that, if not so construed, then this provision of law is too vague and indefinite to be given any effect.

We think this construction is entirely too narrow, and that the provision is aimed at conduct much less reprehensible than fraudulent misrepresentation. Our view is that the Legislature intended that a person to whom the privilege had been granted of practicing medicine and representing himself to the world as qualified and worthy of the confidence of the sick should, when offering his services by advertisement or announcement, do so under his own name. This simple requirement, so easily complied with, was not aimed particularly at the person who was willing to incur the odium of actual fraud, but was designed to offer a much wider protection to the public by assuring to it a reasonable certainty of knowing in every case precisely with whom it was dealing, the importance of the relation of physician and patient, and the very serious consequences which might follow improper, unskillful, or negligent treatment, rendering such openness and candor particularly desirable. That the provision of the law in question is neither vague nor indefinite is obvious. Every person with intelligence enough to have been granted a license to practice medicine must be presumed to know his own name. When such a person is informed in so many words that in any announcement or advertisement of his practice he may not use a name other than his own, i. e. if he uses any name at all it must be his own name, there can be no doubt that he understands precisely what is required. It would, indeed, be difficult to put it in plainer language.

[3] The next contention of the appellant is that the provision of the federal Constitution that no man shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, was violated in the case at bar, in this, that the board of medical examiners before whom the appellant was cited to appear, and which as the result of the hearing revoked his license to practice medicine, was at once prosecutor and judge; that the hearing was therefore a mere formality, and the result a foregone conclusion.

The basis for this assertion is the fact that the charge against the appellant was filed before the board by one Frank M. Smith in his capacity of special agent appointed by the board, charged with the duty of discovering violations of said Medical Practice Act, and that in the trial of appellant said Smith appeared as a witness against him. The appellant cites the case of North Bloomfield G. M. Co. v. Keyser, 58 Cal. 315, quoting from it the following language:

"It is an ancient maxim, and one founded in the most obvious principles of natural right, that no man ought to be a judge in his own cause. * * * A sound public policy, which is interested in preserving every tribunal appointed by law from discredit, imperiously demands its observance."

But it is also said in the same case:

"Undoubtedly the prohibition does not extend to cases where the interest is simply in some question or questions of law involved in the controversy, or when it is indirect and remote."

If, for the sake of the argument, and contrary to many eminent authorities which might be cited, we assume that the right here in question is one protected by the provision of the Constitution referred to, we cannot agree with the appellant that that provision was violated in the present case merely because the proceeding for the revocation of the appellant's license was initiated by an agent of the board. No direct or immediate interest on the part of the board can be predicated upon such fact, nor can any fair inference be drawn from it that the board in its hearing of the charges was biased against the accused thereby. The Medical Practice Act itself provides for the appointment of such agent; and it was in discharge of his duties as such that he filed the charges. Under these circumstances, this contention made on behalf of the appellant seems to have little weight.

This disposes of the points made on the appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; ST. SURE, Justice pro tem.

---

59 Cal. App. 690

CIOLI v. KENOURGIOS et al. (Civ. 2461.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 18, 1922.)

1. Fraudulent conveyances ⇐15 — Sending purchase money paid beyond jurisdiction held badge of fraud.

Where a property owner against whom a suit for personal injuries was pending sold all his property to his partners, and sent the money paid to a foreign country, the very fact of sending the money out of the jurisdiction was a badge of fraud.

2. Fraudulent conveyances ⇐15—Disposal of grantor's entire property with grantees' knowledge held badge of fraud.

Where plaintiff, having a cause of action for personal injuries, sued to set aside a conveyance by the person causing the injuries to his brothers as in fraud of creditors, that the grantor had disposed of his entire property, and that the grantees knew it, constituted a badge of fraud.

3. Fraudulent conveyances ⇐15—Conveyance of defendant's entire property during pendency of suit held badge of fraud.

Where plaintiff having a cause of action for personal injuries sued to set aside a conveyance by the person causing the injury to his brothers as in fraud of creditors, that such conveyance was made during the pendency of the suit for personal injuries constituted a badge of fraud.

4. Fraudulent conveyances ⊂=15—That grantees were grantor's brothers held not a badge of fraud.

Where plaintiff, having a cause of action for personal injuries, sued to set aside a conveyance by defendant in the personal injury suit, whereby all defendant's property was conveyed to his brothers during the pendency of the personal injury suit, the fact that the grantees were related to the grantor did not constitute a badge of fraud.

5. Evidence ⊂=591—Plaintiff, calling alleged conspirators as witnesses, not obliged to approve their testimony.

In a suit to set aside a conveyance by one of the defendants to his brothers, the other defendants, as in fraud of plaintiff, who had recovered a judgment against one of them, that plaintiff called defendants to the witness stand did not compel an approval by him of their testimony, and he could use any part thereof and reject the rest in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 2055, as added by St. 1917, p. 58, authorizing examination of adverse parties.

6. Fraudulent conveyances ⊂=215—One having cause of action for personal injuries held protected as against fraudulent conveyance by person causing injury.

A plaintiff who has brought suit against one of several brothers to recover for personal injuries inflicted by defendant, if not a creditor, as soon as the injury was inflicted, held fully protected under Civ. Code, § 3439, defining fraudulent conveyances, so that defendant could not, after the injury had been inflicted, convey his property to his brothers, and thereby defeat plaintiff's recovery.

7. Fraudulent conveyances ⊂=66—Payment of adequate purchase price held not to relieve transaction from taint of fraud.

Where a defendant, who had become liable to plaintiff for personal injuries inflicted in an automobile accident, conveyed all his property to the other defendants, who were his brothers and partners, that an adequate consideration was paid for the property, did not relieve the transaction from the taint of fraud; the consideration received being immediately sent out of the country.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Claude Cioli against Samuel Kenourgios and others, to set aside conveyances. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. M. Inman and Neil R. McAllister, both of Sacramento, for appellants.

Charles B. Harris, of Sacramento, for respondent.

ANDERSON, Justice pro tem. This is an action brought by the plaintiff to set aside certain conveyances alleged to have been made by John Kenourgios to said Samuel Kenourgios and Frank Kenourgios for the purpose of defeating plaintiff's claim, and for defeating creditors generally. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff, canceling and annulling the deed and bill of sale in controversy.

The main contention of appellants is made on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the alleged grounds of fraud. A brief statement of the evidence will be necessary for the purpose of an examination of this contention.

It appears from the evidence that the three brothers, natives of Greece, came to Sacramento and formed a partnership to engage in the grocery and bakery business in that city. John (grantor and vendor herein) and Samuel came first, in 1915, and Frank joined them later. While associated in said business as such partners, on the 4th day of July, 1920, an automobile collision occurred, in which the said Claude Cioli, plaintiff herein, was injured; the automobile, a borrowed one, was being driven by John; the other brothers not being present. On September 21, 1920, the attorney for Cioli wrote to the three brothers, addressing the letter in the firm name of the defendants, the receipt of which letter was acknowledged, and one of the defendants—Frank, grantee herein—went to the office of the attorney for plaintiff in regard to the collision.

On the 6th day of July, 1920, all three defendants entered into a written agreement to purchase the real property in controversy, though payments had previously been made by them on the intended purchase. Thereafter, on the 16th day of November, 1920, a deed was made of said property to Frank and Samuel; John's name being omitted from the deed. The next day the deed was recorded at the request of M. I. Welch, the then attorney for the defendants; but before this deed was executed and delivered notice of institution of suit and summons were served on the defendants on the 29th day of September, 1920.

Thereafter each defendant was in frequent consultation with Mr. Welch, attorney for defendants. Among other things, the attorney was told that the collision occurred while John was out on a "joy ride"; that the automobile which he drove was a borrowed one; that the other two brothers were not in the machine; that they did not see the accident, and knew nothing about it. Each defendant filed a separate answer, the one by John admitting that he was driving and in control, but denying negligence or liability. The answers of Samuel and Frank, respectively, denied everything on information and belief. The case was finally set for trial on January 25, 1921. About one week before the date set for trial Mr. Welch, the attorney for defendants, advised John to settle the case by paying the plaintiff $1,500. In response to this, all three defendants offered to pay a total sum of $1,000. The plaintiff, through his attorney, Mr. Harris, offered to settle the case against all three defendants for the total sum of $1,500. The defendants refused to act upon the advice of Mr. Welch, whereupon Mr. Welch refused to further represent either of them in the case. They then immediately employed Mr. McAllister, who proceeded at once to obtain a continuance of the case. The continuance was procured against the protest of the plaintiff. The case was then reset for trial on February 15, 1921, at which time judgment for $2,500 against John alone was given by the court, sitting without a jury; Frank and Samuel were held not liable.

Between the date of the withdrawal of Mr. Welch and the final trial of the case, being within a few weeks' time, the following matters occurred: Mr. McAllister, the substituted attorney, proceeded at once to draw papers for the dissolution of the partnership between John, on the one hand, and Samuel and Frank on the other; Samuel and Frank buying John's interest and retaining the business. Mr. McAllister also prepared a bill of sale for John to sign, conveying to Samuel and Frank his entire interest in everything appertaining to the grocery and bakery business; this bill of sale was duly executed. In fact, when all of the papers were finally executed, and before the trial finally took place, John was completely divested of all of his earthly possessions. The money which it is claimed was paid to John for his property was immediately sent to Europe, part to a brother as a gift and the remainder to the father for payment of alleged debts of the father. It happened that by the time judgment was filed in the case of Cioli v. John Kenourgios, John was "execution proof," as the sheriff's return showed.

The notice of intention to sell, filed in the recorder's office, fixed the time for sale at 10 a. m., February 5, 1921, and place at Mr. McAllister's office. At the time and place above stated Mr. McAllister was not there, nor were any of the defendants there to receive notice of the claim of Mr. Cioli, the plaintiff, although the claim was duly presented. It appears from the record that the money had been paid to John, and that he had sent it to Europe before the above date set for the payment.

It appears from an examination of the whole case that the plaintiff when he brought his action, was ignorant of the fact that he did not have the slightest ground for a cause of action against the defendants Samuel and Frank Kenourgios, but, as often happens in such cases, the plaintiff can only learn this at time of trial. Plaintiff must have known at the time the collision occurred that one of the brothers was driving, though he may not have known his first name, or he may have thought the one who was driving was doing so as the agent of the others; but whatever the reason which prompted the pleader at the time of bringing the action to name all three brothers defendants is now immaterial, for, although the plaintiff may have been under a misapprehension, it is certain that the defendants were not. This was clearly shown as soon as their answers were filed, from the advice given them by their attorney, Mr. Welch, advising only John to pay, and by the testimony of the defendants that the collision occurred while John was on a "joy ride." The defendants knew at the time they answered that the plaintiff was in error. They knew that it was John who was on the "joy ride," and not Frank or Samuel. They stated that Mr. Welch had been their attorney "for a long time." They told both Mr. Welch and Mr. McAllister "all about the facts" of the case, and Mr. McAllister stated that Mr. Welch told him "about the facts" of the case. It is true they would not admit that the attorneys told them that Samuel and Frank could not be held liable, but every action of the attorneys appearing in the record, every step taken by the defendants, coupled with the evidence revealed by both attorneys and clients, leads irresistibly to the conclusion that the attorneys did advise them that no judgment could be obtained against Frank and Samuel. Every step taken by the defendants and their attorneys was consistent with such advice. Wherever the halting and evasive answers of the defendants failed to make complete connection the link is supplied by some positive act which speaks for them as clearly and certainly as words could declare it, and shows clearly what was in their minds.

These men had been associated very intimately for years as brothers and partners. Frank said "he had helped John and Sam out of trouble before." There is not a particle of evidence in the case that their relations were not of the most amicable nature, except from their own statement, and this not until after the accident with Cioli. The only evidence in the case, as stated, to support the claim that they wanted to get rid of John because they quarreled comes from their own lips; and, notwithstanding their repeated assertions on the witness stand that they could not get along with John, he has been their constant associate in the business, working with them at the very time of the trial; no change having taken place by reason of the sale and dissolution of the partnership, so far as any one could see. All the circumstances appearing in the case refute their assertion that they were not willing or satisfied to retain John as a partner.

We find nothing in the evidence which would tend to convince the trial judge of the frankness and sincerity of any of the defendants, and we can easily imagine what their appearance must have been on the witness stand from many of the questions and answers and remarks made during the course of the trial. In one portion of the testimony Frank was trying to make it appear that he did not understand that by putting all of the property out of John's hands would defeat recovery on Cioli's claim. The court was finally compelled to say, "Yes; you do; you understand English." All of the defendants, after considerable effort, finally admitted that they knew that if John had no property Cioli's judgment would remain unsatisfied, and John admitted he had nothing after he sent the money to Greece as gifts and to pay the pretended indebtedness of his father, and at the time he testified he stated that he was collecting his wages from his brothers every day, as fast as they became due. The whole scheme reveals a determined purpose to prevent recovery by Cioli for his injuries caused by John's reckless driving.

[1] We can see nothing in the brothers going through the form of paying the $3,000 to John for the property. The very fact that it was sent to a father and a brother—beyond the process of the courts of this country, to persons hopelessly beyond the jurisdiction of our courts—is a badge of fraud. And the testimony of Samuel and Frank, trying to declare their ignorance of what John did with the money until long after it was sent, could not be believed by any one. Frank pretended that he did not correspond with his relatives in Greece, that John did the writing, and he was not interested in the letters when they were received by John. He said:

"Never received no letters from the old country; I received the letters and put them all aside; I never read one. * * * I never wrote no letter, and never read no letter."

Further on in his testimony, in relation to these letters, he said:

"Sometimes I read a letter and sometimes I didn't care to."

The record is full of such evasive and contradictory testimony on many important matters.

Samuel pretended he did not know until July or August of 1921 that John sent the money away, and that he learned this from a letter written to John from the old country about that time. He finally admitted evasively that the receipts for the money sent were shown him several months before while on the witness stand, to wit, during the month of April.

We do not deem it necessary to review the evidence further.

[2] The grantor disposed of his entire property, and the grantees knew it. This was a badge of fraud. Bump on Fraudulent Conveyances, p. 33, § 47, citing many authorities.

[3] The expectation and pendency of suit created a badge of fraud. Bump on Fraudulent Conveyances, p. 36, § 50, citing numerous authorities.

[4] On the question of relationship, in matters of fraud, we quote from Bump on Fraudulent Conveyances, at page 56, section 67, as follows:

"Relationship is not a badge of fraud. Fraud, however, is generally accompanied with a secret trust, and hence the debtor must usually select a person in whom he can repose a secret confidence. The sentiments of affection commonly generate this confidence, and often prompt relatives to provide for each other at the expense of just creditors. Consequently relatives are the persons with whom a secret trust is likely to exist. The same principle applies to all persons with whom the debtor has confidential relations. Any relation which gives rise to confidence, though not a badge of fraud, strengthens the presumption that may arise from other circumstances, and serves to elucidate, explain, or give color to the transaction. This doctrine applies to the relationship of father, * * * brother," etc. "Wherever this confidential relation is shown to exist, the parties are held to a fuller and stricter proof of the consideration, and of the fairness of the transaction."

[5] The fact that plaintiff called the alleged conspirators to the witness stand did not compel approval by him of their testimony. He could use their appearance on the stand, their words, their acts—in fact anything they could furnish in his favor, and reject the rest. The salutary provision of section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as added by St. 1917, p. 58, was designed to prevent as far as possible parties to an action from perpetrating fraud and dishonesty. It strips them of former barriers used for shielding falsehood.

As soon as the automobile collision occurred, Cioli had a claim against John Kenourgios, and as soon as his brothers, Frank and Samuel, had notice of the claim, they were no longer innocent third parties without notice.

[6] The greater weight of authority placed Cioli in the category of creditor as soon as the collision occurred, but if there is doubt in our own state that this is the proper designation of Cioli's status, certainly, no matter what his status may be termed, his rights are fully protected under section 3439 of our Civil Code, and he cannot be deprived of his rights by a fraudulent conveyance.

[7] Appellants strenuously urge that the fact that an adequate consideration was paid removes the taint of fraud from the transaction. This fact in some cases would be a controlling factor, but we are unable to attach any importance to this fact in this case. In the light of the circumstances of this case, it appears but hollow form merely. The explanation as to where the ready money came from and why John was not bought out long before was not satisfactory, and the payment and sending away of the money seems, to say the least, to have been a little overdone, for "when a part is overacted the delusion is broken and the fiction appears." Bump on Fraudulent Conveyances, p. 54, § 64.

In Hunters v. Waite, 3 Grat. (Va.) 32; 14 Am. St. Rep. 747 (note), Baldwin, J., states:

"It is not the consideration, but the intent with which a conveyance is made, that makes it good or bad as against creditors. However valuable the consideration, if the conveyance be designed to delay, hinder, or defeat creditors, it is void."

For further consideration of the subject, see Fluegel v. Henschel, 7 N. D. 276, 74 N. W. 996, 66 Am. St. Rep. 642, and note; State v. Mason, 112 Mo. 374, 20 S. W. 629, 34 Am. St. Rep. 390, and note.

We will not undertake to even touch upon the vast number of authorities bearing upon the question of the proof of fraud, and believe it will suffice to merely quote the following from the work of Mr. Justice Cooley on the subject of Torts, at page 907, volume 2 (3d Ed.):

"Fraud is never presumed, and the party alleging and relying upon it must prove it. This, however, is one of those rules of law which is to be applied with caution and circumspection. 'So far as it goes, it is based on a principle which has no more application to frauds than any other subject of judicial inquiry. It amounts but to this, that a contract, honest and lawful on its face, must be treated as such until it is shown to be otherwise by evidence of some kind, either positive or circumstantial.' Fraud is therefore as properly made out by marshaling the circumstances surrounding the transaction, and deducting therefrom the fraudulent purpose, when it manifestly appears, as by presenting the more positive and direct testimony of actual purpose to deceive; and, indeed, circumstantial proof in most cases can alone bring the fraud to light, for fraud is peculiarly a wrong of secrecy and circumvention, and is to be traced not in the open proclamation of the wrongdoer's purpose, but by the indications of covered tracks and studious concealments. And while it is often said that to justify the imputation of fraud, the facts must be such as are not explicable on any other hypothesis, yet this can mean no more than this, that the court or jury should be cautious in deducing the fraudulent purpose; for whatever satisfies the mind and conscience that fraud has been practiced is sufficient." (Italics ours.)

We do not deem it necessary to discuss the objections made in defendants' closing brief in relation to the pleadings and findings. No one was or could have been misled by them. It appears the case was fairly tried and a just judgment rendered therein, which should not be disturbed. The judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

59 Cal. App. 758

H. LIEBES & CO. v. UNITED STATES CASUALTY CO. (Civ. 4363.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 24, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 22, 1923.)

Insurance ⊂=495(2)—Store window held "show window" within burglary policy limiting liability.

Under facts shown, held, that a store window was a "show window" within condition of burglary policy limiting liability in case of merchandise being taken from such a window by persons breaking the glass from the outside.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by H. Liebes & Co. against the United States Casualty Company. From judgment for less than claimed, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Leon E. Morris, of San Francisco (Edward M. Jaffa, of Berkeley, of counsel), for appellant.

Chickering & Gregory, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a judgment against the defendant for $200 in an action to recover upon a policy of burglary insurance issued by defendant to the plaintiff. Appellant contends that the judgment in its favor should have been for $1,885, the agreed value of the property which was stolen. It is conceded, however, that, if the condition marked "t" in the policy applies to the facts in the instant case, the judgment must be affirmed. That condition reads as follows:

"The company shall not be liable for any loss of or damage to * * * (t) merchandise contained in a show window in the premises for an amount in excess of $200.00 occasioned by any person or persons who, from the outside of the premises, breaks the glass in any such show window."

We are asked to determine whether or not the goods stolen were contained within a show window, as the words are used in condition "t" of the policy. It is the contention of appellant that there was no show window in the store, but that this store was of the type known as "glass front." The case was submitted to the trial court upon a stipulation as to facts. The trial court, having reached the conclusion that the goods which had been stolen were contained in a "show window," gave judgment in favor of appellant and against respondent in the sum of $200. From the agreed statement of facts and the exhibits attached thereto we think the court could have reached no other conclusion, for from these it appears that a platform of polished oak, 3 feet wide and 13 inches high, extended across the front of the store immediately behind the plate glass. On the surface of this platform, or on racks placed thereon, the goods which were stolen had been placed for the purpose of display to persons passing along the sidewalk or within the store. The goods were removed from the platform by a person or persons from the outside of the premises, who broke the plate glass separating the platform from the street. While, with the exception of a doorway, the plate glass extended across the front of the building in two sections, and there were no walls or curtains behind the platform to interfere with the view of the entire interior of the store from a position outside of the plate glass front, nevertheless the fact remains that the goods stolen were placed upon the platform behind the plate glass to catch the eye of the traveling public, and the use of the platform behind the plate glass indicates clearly that it was in fact, and was intended to be, a "show window." It is quite immaterial that it was used in part for other purposes such as housing meters and mechanical devices or as a seat for customers within the store.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 647

SMITH v. SAN JOAQUIN LIGHT & POWER CORPORATION. (Civ. 4287.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 16, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 15, 1923.)

1. Electricity ⟸19(3)—Doctrine of res ipsa loquitur held applicable in action for injuries to boy grasping live wire hanging from pole.

The doctrine of res ipsa loquitur held applicable in an action for injuries to a seven year old boy grasping a live wire hanging from an electric light pole to within a foot or two of the ground near the side of a public highway on which he was walking.

2. Electricity ⟸16(7)—Broken electric power wire held not caused by act of God.

That an electric power wire was broken by leaves of a large palm being blown against it held no defense to an action for injuries to one grasping it as it hung near the ground as constituting an act of God; it being defendant's duty to properly protect its wire from such danger.

3. Master and servant ⟸322—Independent contractor's neglect to protect electric wire chargeable to employer.

Where an electric company's power line was being replaced with new poles for wires, and leaves of a palm tree endangering an unprotected live wire were blown against the wire and broke it, the company was liable for injury to a boy who touched the broken wire, though the work was done by an independent contractor.

4. Appeal and error ⟸1004(1)—Appellate court has power over excessive damages only when excess appears as matter of law, or suggests passion, prejudice, or corruption.

The appellate court has power over excessive damages only when the excess appears as a matter of law, or is such as to suggest, at first blush, passion, prejudice, or corruption on the part of the jury.

5. Damages ⟸132(12)—$20,000 for burns, necessitating amputation of seven year old boy's arm below elbow, held not excessive.

$20,000 for injuries to a seven year old boy, whose right arm was so badly burned as to necessitate amputation a little below the elbow, held not excessive.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; M. F. McCormick, Judge.

Action by Noah Harvey Smith, a minor, by Charles Smith, his guardian ad litem, against the San Joaquin Light & Power Corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Carl E. Lindsay and Lindsay & Conley, all of Fresno, for appellant.

Burns & Watkins, of Fresno, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff, through his guardian ad litem, commenced an action against the defendant to recover damages for personal injuries. Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The defendant owned and operated as a part of its general system an electric power line consisting of wires strung on poles in the usual manner along the north side of the public highway known as North avenue in the county of Fresno, running west from the public highway known as Elm avenue, to and beyond the intersection of said North avenue with the public highway running north and south, known as Fruit avenue, which power line was used for the purpose of transmitting and distributing electricity for light and power purposes to various consumers. In the morning of November 10, 1920, the plaintiff, a child of seven years, whose parents lived on the south side of North avenue, was sent to a neighbor's house on the north side of said avenue for some milk. After procuring the milk, and while on his way home, walking on the north side of the avenue, which is a county highway, he observed a wire hanging from the top of a pole and reaching to within a foot or two of the ground. This wire, at the time, was charged with electricity. The lad took hold of the wire, with the result that he was very severely injured. As stated in the complaint, his right arm was so badly burned that it became necessary to amputate the same, and the same was amputated at a point below and near the elbow. The jury's verdict was for the sum of $20,000. The defendant thereafter served and filed a notice of intention to move for a new trial, but the record does not disclose the fact that the motion was ever made, or, if made, on what grounds. Neither does the record disclose any motion or other attack in the trial court on the amount of the verdict.

[1] In instructing the jury the trial court, at the request of the plaintiff, stated to the jury that in such a case the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies. The appellant makes no attack on the language used by the court, and does not claim that the instruction was improperly worded. The objection in this behalf made by the appellant is that the case as made by the pleadings is not a proper case to apply that doctrine. In this contention we think that the California rule is otherwise. Diller v. Northern Cal. Power Co., 162 Cal. 531, 123 Pac. 359, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 908.

As to this same instruction the appellant claims that its real meaning is that the mere fact that an accident happened authorized the jury to infer negligence. However, a most cursory reading of the instruction shows it was broader than as contended, and that it contained all of the elements necessary to bring into play the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. O'Connor v. Mennie, 169 Cal. 217, 224, 146 Pac. 674.

[2] The defendant pleaded in its answer, and thereafter offered to prove, facts showing or tending to show that the wire which the plaintiff touched was properly in place the night before, that a wind arose, and the leaves of a large palm were blown over against the wire and broke it, and that such facts constituted an act of God. If the facts stated constituted an act of God the defendant should have been permitted to show the same as a defense. However, the respondent contends that the alleged facts do not show an act of God within the proper meaning of that rule. Fay v. Pacific Improvement Co., 93 Cal. 253, 26 Pac. 1099, 28 Pac. 943, 16 L. R. A. 188, 27 Am. St. Rep. 198. In this behalf he contends that, if the palm tree stood in such a position as to endanger the defendant's wire, the defendant should have properly protected its wire therefrom, and in failing to do so the omission was an act of neglect on the part of the defendant, and not an act of God. This contention is supported by the authorities. Chidester v. Consol. Ditch Co., 59 Cal. 197.

[3] The defendant claims that the trial court erred in refusing it permission to prove that at the time of the accident an independent contractor held a contract and was proceeding to replace the old line of poles with a new line of poles, and to string the wires thereon. In this behalf the appellant contends that the independent contractor might be liable to the plaintiff, but the existence of its contract would operate to relieve the defendant of liability if the accident occurred by reason of the act of such independent contractor or his employees. The rule contended for by the appellant is that the instant case is governed by the general rule stated in Boswell v. Laird, 8 Cal. 469, 487, 68 Am. Dec. 345, but the respondent claims that the case is governed by the exception to the general rule. In this contention we think the respondent is correct. Spence v. Schultz, 103 Cal. 208, 37 Pac. 220; Frassi v. McDonald, 122 Cal. 400, 55 Pac. 139, 772; Louthan v. Hewes, 138 Cal. 116, 70 Pac. 1065; Stockton Automobile Co. v. Confer, 154 Cal. 402, 97 Pac. 881; Luce v. Holloway, 156 Cal. 162, 103 Pac. 886.

[4, 5] The appellant claims that the verdict was excessive. The power of this court over excessive damages exists only when the facts are such that the excess appears as a matter of law, or is such as to suggest, at first blush, passion, prejudice, or corruption on the part of the jury. We have carefully examined the evidence, and under the facts of this case we are unable to say that it is a proper case for this court to declare the verdict excessive.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 651

GIOVANNONI v. BARTMANN. (Civ. 2489.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 16, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 15, 1923.)

1. Banks and banking ⇐40—Transaction held to constitute sale of corporate stock.

Where stockholder of bank indorsed certificate of stock in blank and left it with president to be delivered in event of its sale, and shortly thereafter met the person desiring to purchase it, and they came to an agreement for the sale of the stock, and the purchaser gave his check for the purchase price, and the seller delivered an order on the president for the certificate of stock, there was a completed sale, under Civ. Code, § 1140.

2. Banks and banking ⇐40 — Finding that seller of corporate stock was without knowledge of insolvency sustained by evidence.

In an action by purchaser of bank stock against seller to recover the purchase price, evidence held to justify a finding that defendant seller, although a director of the bank, was without knowledge of the insolvency of the bank at the time of the sale, and that he did not make any misrepresentation, though the published reports of the financial condition of the bank contained gross misrepresentations.

3. Banks and banking ⟸40—Misrepresentation must have been relied on in sale of stock.

In order to recover price paid for bank stock purchased from a director as stockholder, it is not sufficient for plaintiff to show misrepresentations in financial report of bank, but he must prove that he placed his reliance upon them in making the purchase, although he need not show that they were the sole inducement.

4. Banks and banking ⟸40—Finding that purchaser of stock was not induced to purchase by false financial report sustained.

In an action to recover purchase price of bank stock, evidence held to sustain a finding that plaintiff did not rely upon misrepresentations in a financial report, assuming that the seller of the stock, as director in the corporation, was technically guilty of misrepresentations.

5. Banks and banking ⟸40—Valueless stock sufficient consideration for price.

One purchasing valueless shares of stock could not contend that there was a total want of consideration, and that he was entitled to a rescission on ground of mutual mistake, since the consideration for the payment of the purchase price was the stock, and not the value thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Action by P. J. Giovannoni against George H. Bartmann. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. M. Drew, of Fresno, and Whitehurst & Logan, of Newman, for appellant.

John W. Maloy, of Madera, Lee D. Windrem, of Richmond, and Fee & Ring, of Madera, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The complaint sets up a cause of action for money had and received on the 13th day of January, 1920, in the sum of $1,650. The answer denies the allegations of the complaint, and by way of cross-complaint the defendant alleges that on said day the defendant, being the owner of 10 shares of the capital stock of the First National Bank of Newman, Cal., sold the same to plaintiff for the sum of $1,650, which the plaintiff then paid; that within 60 days after such sale the bank was declared insolvent and taken over by the Comptroller of Currency and a receiver placed in charge thereof; that March 2, 1920, the Comptroller levied an assessment of $100 a share on the capital stock of the bank, and the receiver notified defendant to pay such assessment on the 10 shares sold to plaintiff; that thereupon on the defendant notified plaintiff to pay the same, but that he refused; that the defendant then paid the assessment pursuant to a stipulation that such payment should not prejudice any right the defendant might have for the recovery of the amount thereof from plaintiff; that the sale of the stock was made without knowledge, information, or belief on the part of the defendant that the bank was to be closed or declared insolvent or that it was "otherwise than solvent, and conducted as an honest and successful business enterprise." The prayer of the cross-complaint is for recovery of the $1,000 paid on the assessment. The answer to the cross-complaint, in addition to the denials of many allegations thereof, avers that, at the time of the alleged sale of the stock, the defendant was, and for a long time prior thereto had been, a director of the bank, and as such had knowledge of its affairs; that on the day of the alleged sale the defendant, "at and in the First National Bank of Newman, * * * wrongfully, unlawfully, and fraudulently, and with intent to induce this plaintiff to purchase 10 shares of the capital stock, * * * represented and stated to this plaintiff * * * that the said stock was of the value of" $188 a share, and that the bank was about to declare a dividend of $38 a share, that the defendant warranted the stock to be of the value of $188 a share; that the plaintiff relied on said statements and believed them to be true and, so relying and believing, paid the defendant $1,650 for such stock; that the bank was insolvent and the stock thereof worthless at the time of the alleged sale, to the knowledge of defendant. In the answer to the cross-complaint the plaintiff prays for a rescission of the contract of sale and for recovery of the $1,650 paid thereon to defendant. The court found in favor of defendant on all the issues which are material on this appeal, and gave defendant judgment for the sum of $1,000, with interest.

The First National Bank of Newman was incorporated with a capital of 1,000 shares of the par value of $100 each and carried a reserve of $25,000. Wm. J. Burris and Frank P. Gomez were president and cashier, respectively, and had been such for a number of years. The defendant served as one of the directors from January 14, 1919, to January 13, 1920, and attended all meetings of the board from the time of his election to and including September 3, 1919. Having changed his residence and place of business from Newman to Madera in August, he attended no board meetings after September 3d. The Comptroller of Currency took over the affairs of the bank January 23, 1920, and levied an assessment of $100 a share on the capital stock, as alleged in the cross-complaint, which the defendant paid on the 10 shares involved in this suit. The receiver succeeded in collecting about 80 per cent. of the total assessment. After applying the amount so collected, the remaining liabilities far exceeded the value of the total assets. At the time the bank was closed it carried on its books, as assets, bills receivable in the sum of $1,075,961.54 and other assets to the amount of $150,067.44. The receiver classified the bills receivable as follows: Good, $204,264.06; doubtful, $361,110.01; and worthless, $510,587.47—and the other assets: Good, $56,628.54; doubtful, $93,438.90. Prior to the time his deposition was taken, November 4, 1921, the receiver had collected $64,803.36 on promissory notes which he had classified as worthless and $201,393.40 on those classified as doubtful. Among the assets classified as worthless were promissory notes forged by the president and cashier aggregating the sum of $223,000. The receiver testified that these forgeries had continued through a period of 8 or 10 years. All except a few of the persons whose names were forged to these notes resided in the vicinity of Newman. In some instances fictitious names were signed to the spurious notes. A large number of the forged notes were signed by mark, different clerks in the bank signing as witnesses at the request of the president, apparently without seeing the persons whose names appeared thereon as makers. About $250,000 was loaned to bean growers and others without security, and their notes renewed from time to time. On these notes the receiver was able to collect but about 5 per cent. of their face value. These loans were made prior to defendant's term of office and seem to have been made on the prospect of a continuance of war prices. During the subsequent depression in the bean market the growers were unable to pay, and their notes were renewed from time to time; the board of directors approving the renewals made during defendant's term. The receiver testified that very few loans were made during defendant's term. Whether such as were made were good or not does not appear. The minutes of July 8, 1919, contain the following:

"All loans 6860 to 6911, inclusive, examined and approved. All loans, property of this bank, also examined and approved."

The defendant testified:

"These notes were all made prior to my time, and the men who were on the board of directors had been living in the vicinity of Newman, some of them anywhere from 15 to 30 years, and they knew the conditions, and they had made these loans and approved them, and when they came up for renewals there was not any reason for me doubting their motion to renew them and O. K. the notes. I just followed in behind them and signed the book. * * * I never investigated them any more than what the men said who were on the board of directors."

The receiver found on file in the bank a letter from the Comptroller calling attention to the low reserve and past-due paper and instructing the directors to increase their reserve and get rid of their past-due paper. The record does not show when this letter was received. Early in December, 1919, the chief bank examiner and Mr. Day of the Federal Reserve Bank called the members of the board, including defendant, into conference and instructed them not to loan any more money until they could reduce the bank's indebtedness to the Federal Reserve Bank, then amounting to about $190,000, according to defendant's testimony. At that time the members of the board gave their personal note to the Reserve Bank for the sum of $50,000 as further security. The bank examiner had regularly investigated the affairs of the bank without discovering its insolvency or the numerous forgeries of the president and cashier. The defendant testified that at the December conference a proposition to increase the capital stock was discussed, and, relative to the price at which the new stock should be sold, the bank examiner said:

"I myself would possibly pay in the neighborhood of $135 a share for it now."

This testimony was not contradicted.

January 13, 1920, a meeting of the stockholders was held for the purpose of electing a new board of directors and increasing the capital stock. Both the plaintiff and the defendant attended this meeting; the former being the owner of one share of the stock. At this meeting the president stated that the bank was in a flourishing condition, and that the capital stock was of the value of $188 a share. It was proposed to sell the new issue of stock at $150 a share and to declare a dividend of $38 a share in favor of the old stockholders, thus placing the old and the new stockholders on an equality. There were not enough stockholders represented at the meeting to increase the stock, but a number of persons subscribed for new stock, in the event it should finally be issued. The plaintiff so subscribed for 10 shares.

The testimony of the parties is sharply conflicting as to what occurred relative to the sale of defendant's stock to plaintiff. In view of the findings in favor of defendant, the question is whether the findings are supported by the evidence, and hence only the defendant's testimony need be noticed. The defendant testified that plaintiff was desirous of purchasing sufficient stock to qualify for the office of director; that at the stockholders' meeting he sought to purchase the stock of another director, who replied that he did not care to sell; that the plaintiff then said to defendant, "Well, Dr. Bartmann, you are moving away and leaving town; * * * you'd better sell me your stock," and that defendant replied, "I don't believe I care to sell it;" that immediately after the meeting the plaintiff again sought to buy the stock, and defendant replied that he had given the president of the bank "the refusal of it" if defendant should decide to sell; that the plaintiff said he would take it if the president did not buy it; that the defendant interviewed the president and learned that he did not desire to purchase the stock; that defendant then indorsed the certificate of stock in blank and left it with the president to be delivered in the event of its sale, thinking he would not see the plaintiff again; that shortly thereafter he again met the plaintiff, and they came to an agreement for the sale of the stock at $165 a share; that the plaintiff gave his check for the purchase price, and the defendant delivered his order on the president for the certificate of stock. The defendant further testified that he did not make the representations alleged in the answer to the cross-complaint. The defendant deposited in the bank the $1,650 received for his stock. His check for $1,000 was paid January 22, 1920, leaving a balance in his account of $689.87 at the time the bank was closed. July 12, 1919, the defendant attested as correct a report to the Comptroller of the financial condition of the bank at the close of business on June 30th, in which the doubtful and worthless notes were listed as resources. The defendant testified that he attested the report on the assurance of the cashier, who had verified it, that it was correct. The report was published in a local newspaper. The defendant had attested other reports prior to that time during his term.

[1] That the transaction between the parties constituted a sale and passed title to plaintiff seems clear. The parties agreed upon a present transfer, and the thing to be transferred was identified. Civ. Code, § 1140; Young v. New Pedrara Onyx Co. (Cal. App.) 192 Pac. 55; Johnston v. Laflin, 103 U. S. 800, 26 L. Ed. 532.

[2] The court was justified in finding from the foregoing facts that the defendant was without knowledge of the insolvency of the bank at the time of the sale, and that he did not make the misrepresentations alleged by plaintiff. It is apparent that both parties thought the stock was valuable. It is not probable that the defendant would have left so large a sum on deposit in the bank if he had doubts as to its solvency. It is not surprising that the defendant should have been deceived into the belief that the bank was sound when the experienced bank examiner was equally deceived. Whether or not the defendant was negligent in the discharge of his duties as director, there is sufficient evidence to support the finding that he acted in good faith in the sale of his stock to plaintiff.

The published reports of the financial condition of the bank, attested by defendant, contained gross misrepresentations though the defendant believed the report to be correct. It was the report itself, and not the signature of the cashier, which the defendant attested. The attestation was a positive statement that the condition of the bank was as represented in the report. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5211; 6 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d Ed.) p. 790 (U. S. Comp. St. § 9774); Gerner v. Mosher, 58 Neb. 135, 78 N. W. 384, 46 L. R. A. 244.

"The making and publishing of the reports are not merely for the information of the Comptroller, but are to guide the public, and he who buys stock in a bank in reliance upon the reports has a right of action under section 5239, Rev. Stats. [Comp. Stat. 1916, § 9831], against any officer or director who, knowing its falsity, authorizes such report." Chesbrough v. Woodworth, 244 U. S. 72, 37 Sup. Ct. 579, 61 L. Ed. 1000; Macdonald v. de Fremery, 168 Cal. 189, 142 Pac. 73.

"While the statute furnishes the exclusive rule for determining whether its provisions have been violated or not, this does not prevent the application of the common-law rule for measuring violations of common-law duties." Bowerman v. Hamner, 250 U. S. 504, 39 Sup. Ct. 549, 63 L. Ed. 1113.

This is not an action to recover damages for deceit or misrepresentation, but for rescission of the contract and for money had and received through defendant's misrepresentations. Where stock is purchased from a corporation through misrepresentation, "the purchase of shares may be set aside, and the purchaser relieved from his liability as a contributory, without any knowledge of the untruth on the part of those who issued the document. Recovery from the directors personally requires knowledge of the untruth on their part, or else that the statement should be made under such circumstances that knowledge will be imputed to them." Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence (4th Ed.) § 881. Appellant contends that, where a director sells his own stock through misrepresentation, however innocently made, he is liable in an action for the purchase price received.

"An action at law for fraud in making false representations and a suit in equity for the rescission of a contract on the ground of misrepresentations are founded on distinct theories. The former is based on an intentional deceit, which of course includes a knowledge of the falsity of what is affirmed. But the latter is aimed at the undoing of a bargain which circumstances would render it inequitable to enforce and the restoration of the parties to the status quo, and this may be consistent even with entire innocence and ignorance on the part of the person making the misrepresentations, or with his belief in their truth." Black on Rescission and Cancellation, § 102.

In Alvarez v. Brannan, 7 Cal. 503, 507, 68 Am. Dec. 274, it is said:

"A party will always be held to make good his statement in the form in which he makes it. If he states a thing as true in general terms without qualification, then he is presumed to do so upon his own knowledge, or at his own peril, and must make good his assertion."

In Groppengiesser v. Lake, 103 Cal. 37, 42, 36 Pac. 1036, 1037, an action for the rescission of a contract because of fraudulent representations, the court said:

"It does not matter that defendant did not know that what he stated was untrue, or that he believed it to be true."

[3, 4] Whether or not appellant's contention be correct, it is not sufficient for the plaintiff to show that the financial report contained false statements, but he must prove that he placed his reliance upon them in making the purchase, although he need not show that they were the sole inducement. Macdonald v. de Fremery, supra. The plaintiff testified that he made the purchase on the information obtained from the published reports, the statements of the president at the stockholders' meeting, and the representations made by the defendant at the time of the transaction. On cross-examination he testified as follows:

"Q. I want to ask you if you have an independent recollection now of having read the financial report of the First National Bank of Newman, in the West Side Index, a newspaper, published on the 22d day of July, 1919? A. I am reading it and I have read all the issues of the Index and I take an interest to look at the way the bank was progressing; I read them all; now, if you ask me if I read a certain number, I read them all, because I was used to reading them. Q. You have no independent recollection of having read this particular number at that time? A. I have read them all. * * * As I say, I am reading the whole papers very carefully and every issue almost, and, if I miss an issue, I will go into the office and get it. Q. Now, the only recollection that you have as to having read these various reports published in these various issues of this paper which has been introduced here in evidence is that you do read the paper, and that is all the recollection you have? A. I do read them all very carefully; yes. Q. That is the only reason that you have for believing that you read this particular one, is that correct? A. Well, that is just the way I am expressing myself. * * * Q. Let me ask you what was the report of the total resources * * * as published * * * July 21, 1919? A. It was over a million. Q. Will you discard that paper; now, what was the total liabilities at that time? A. I was just reading, taking the figures of the Newman Bank and the First National Bank, to see how they were getting up. Q. If this total published here shows $993,751.20 instead of away over a million, as you assumed it to be, why you were not so much influenced by this statement as you thought you were? A. Ain't it over a million? I don't remember; I read one below, one million; ain't this over a million, $1,161,000, that is what I was going by. Q. That is loans and discounts. A. That is all Greek to me. Q. Then you just went by what you saw here at the top? A. Up here, the way I seen it was; that is the way we took it, the Newman Bank was so much that they had in, etc., and the First National Bank, we was considering the First National Bank; it was much better than the Newman Bank. Q. Now, that also applied to the other issues in this paper, your testimony applies to all the other issues in this paper which have been introduced here in evidence? A. They have."

In connection with this testimony, the court may have logically considered the fact that the only misrepresentations averred by the plaintiff were those alleged to have been made at the very time of the transaction. Since the plaintiff did not allege that he was influenced in making the purchase by the published reports, it is fair to infer that he did not have such reports in mind when he filed his answer to the cross-complaint, and from this inference, considered in connection with the uncertainty of his testimony relative to his knowledge of the contents of the reports, it was not unreasonable to conclude that he did not have them in mind at the time of the purchase. While it cannot be said that the evidence is insufficient to support a finding that the published reports were among the inducements which caused the plaintiff to buy the stock, neither can it be said to be such as to compel a finding to that effect.

[5] Appellant urges that, since the stock was of no intrinsic value (whether or not it had a market value not appearing from the record), there was a total want of consideration for the contract, and that, even if both parties were mistaken as to its value, appellant was entitled to a rescission on the ground of mutual mistake. This contention finds support in the case of Neale v. Wright, 130 Ky. 146, 112 S. W. 1115. The case cited, however, seems to be in conflict with the decisions of this state and with the great weight of authority in other states. The consideration for the payment of the purchase price was 10 shares of bank stock, not the value thereof. There was no mistake as to what each party was to receive. In Sutro v. Rhodes, 92 Cal. 117, 28 Pac. 98, the plaintiff sought to recover money paid for worthless bonds; both parties believing them to be valuable at the time they were transferred. The court said:

"In the case at bar, as in Otis v. McCullum, 92 U. S. 447, the appellants 'got exactly what they intended to buy, and did buy'—that is, certain written instruments."

To the same effect is the decision in Harvey v. Dale, 96 Cal. 160, 31 Pac. 14:

"Where a party obtained what he contracted for, he cannot avoid his contract on the ground that what he received is less valuable than he supposed or that it has no value at all, unless he shows fraud or mistake as to the subject-matter of the contract." Black on Rescission and Cancellation, § 166.

In Peck Colorado Co. v. Stratton (C. C.) 95 Fed. 741, where the defendant sought to avoid payment of the purchase price of stock which was worthless, the court said:

"The stock was the definite thing that he purchased, and he received the consideration selected by him. As distinguished from the consideration, the defendant seeks to set up the motive of the contract, and then to show that his expectation of deriving valuable benefits from this purchase * * * has not been realized; but such motive is not to be confounded with the consideration of the contract."

"The rule of caveat emptor applies as well to the sale of stocks as of chattels. The vendor can only be made liable for misrepresentation or fraud. Here, although the stock was worthless, there is not sufficient proof of any representation of its value, or any act that would amount to fraud either at law or in equity." Renton v. Maryott, 21 N. J. Eq. 123.

See, also, Hunting v. Downer, 151 Mass. 275, 23 N. E. 832; Long v. Symonds, 216 Mass. 595, 104 N. E. 476; Jones v. Garlington, 44 S. C. 533, 22 S. E. 741; Rothmiller v. Stein, 143 N. Y. 581, 38 N. E. 718, 26 L. R. A. 148.

It is not contended that, if the transfer of the stock is binding upon plaintiff, he is not liable to the defendant for the assessment paid by the latter. The payment was not voluntary, but under compulsion. 6 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d Ed.) p. 723 (U. S. Comp. St. § 9689). See People's Home Savings v. Stadtmuller, 150 Cal. 106, 109, 88 Pac. 280.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANDERSON, Judge pro tem.; BURNETT, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 687

CEINAR v. HAWES et al. (Civ. 4299.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2. California. Nov. 18, 1922.)

1. Fraudulent conveyances ⟸263(5)—Complaint, although not directly alleging facts showing conveyance of all of grantor's property, held sufficient.

In action to set aside a fraudulent transfer of property, a complaint, not directly alleging the facts, but containing such allegations that the inference was strong, that the conveyance transferred all of grantor's properties, and that she had not since been the owner of any, held sufficient.

2. Fraudulent conveyances ⟸297—Evidence held sufficient to support judgment setting aside transfer as fraudulent.

In an action to set aside a fraudulent transfer of property, the judgment roll in a former case and grantor's oral testimony before a referee that she transferred the property for no other consideration than support of her brother and love and affection for grantee, that the property was all she possessed, and that she had acquired none since, held sufficient, in the absence of evidence that grantee furnished any support or parted with anything since the deed was made, to support a judgment for plaintiff.

3. Fraudulent conveyances ⟸80—Transfer of all of one's property in consideration of support of one whom grantor is not bound to support is void.

A transfer of all of one's property in consideration of the future support of one whom grantor is not obligated to support, as well as a transfer in consideration of the future support of grantor, is void.

4. Fraudulent conveyances ⟸168—Grantee's lack of knowledge of grantor's indebtedness immaterial.

That one to whom property was conveyed in consideration of the future support of grantor's brother did not know of grantor's indebtedness is immaterial in an action to set aside the transfer as fraudulent.

5. Witnesses ⟸275(5)—Questions asked plaintiffs as to defendant's testimony before referee concerning matters as to which she was not asked held improper as not cross-examination.

In an action to set aside a fraudulent transfer of property by one defendant to the other, an objection to a question, asked plaintiff on cross-examination, as to whether he remembered that grantor, as to whose testimony before a court referee he had testified on direct examination, testified that she had transferred the property many years before, but had never recorded anything, was properly sustained as not cross-examination, where she was not asked when the deed was made or whether it was recorded, but was asked questions regarding her assets before and after it was made.

6. Appeal and error ⟸1048(6)—Question on cross-examination of plaintiff as to defendant's transfer of property without recordation held not prejudicial to defendant.

In an action to set aside a fraudulent transfer of property from one defendant to another, sustaining an objection to a question asked plaintiff on cross-examination as to whether he remembered that grantor, as to whose testimony before a referee he testified on direct examination, testified that she transferred the property many years before, but never had anything recorded, was not prejudicial to defendant, as an affirmative answer would have strengthened plaintiff's case, by tending to show that the transfer was a secret, while defendants would neither have been assisted nor injured by a negative answer.

7. Judgment ⟸256(2)—Finding of no consideration except love and affection and future support of grantor's brother held sufficient to support judgment setting aside conveyance.

In an action to set aside a fraudulent transfer of property, the court's finding that there was no consideration therefor except love and affection for grantee and the future support of grantor's brother was sufficient to support a judgment for plaintiff, whether treated as a finding of no consideration or that the consideration was the support of a member of grantor's family; the case being ruled by Civ. Code, § 3442, in either event.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by William Tracey Ceinar against Mary E. Hawes and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Edward J. Lynch, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Reisner & Honey, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendants to obtain a judgment declaring a certain transfer of real and personal property fraudulent and to obtain a decree setting the same aside. Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendants have appealed.

[1] Attacking the complaint filed by the plaintiff, the defendants contend that the same does not state a cause of action. In this behalf the appellants state their objections under 12 different heads, but do not argue any of them. Thereupon the appellants cite Albertoli v. Branham, 80 Cal. 631, 22 Pac. 404, 13 Am. St. Rep. 200. Although the complaint in the instant case does not directly allege the facts, nevertheless it contains such allegations that the inference is strong that when the conveyance was made by the grantor said conveyance transferred all of her properties, both real and personal, and that since the date of said conveyance she has not been the owner of any other properties.

The record before us does not show when the action was commenced, and the only information we have on that subject is a statement of fact set forth in the appellants' brief. The fact that an execution was issued in the first case is clearly set forth, and there is an attempt to plead that the execution has been returned wholly unsatisfied. The latter allegation is in the form that we think falls within the rule concerning facts defectively pleaded, but it does not fall within the rules of a total failure to plead such facts.

[2, 3] The appellants claim that the evidence was insufficient to support the decision. The point is without merit. Windhaus v. Bootz et al., 3 Cal. Unrep. 351, 25 Pac. 404. The judgment roll in the first case proved many of the plaintiff's allegations, and oral testimony was introduced to the effect that before the court referee the grantor testified that she transferred the property described in the complaint for the support of her brother and for the love and affection which she bore the grantee and for no other consideration; and that she further testified that the property conveyed constituted everything she possessed, and that she owned nothing and had nothing since. There was no evidence that the grantee furnished any of the support for which the deed was made, or that she has ever parted with anything since the deed was made. If the transfer had been made in consideration of the future support of the grantor, it is settled law in California that the transfer would be void. Baxter v. Baxter, 19 Cal. App. 238, 125 Pac. 359. In other jurisdictions the rule is the same when, as here, the support to be furnished is to be furnished to some person whom the grantor is under no legal obligation to support. No reason is presented why a different rule should be declared in this state. Brown et al. v. Moore et al., 52 S. W. 944, 21 Ky. Law Rep. 664.

[4] The trial court found that the grantee did not know of the existence of the indebtedness of the grantor. That fact, in this case, was immaterial. Clowe v. Seavey, 208 N. Y. 496, 499, 102 N. E. 521, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 284.

[5, 6] The plaintiff took the stand as a witness in his own behalf, and testified as to certain testimony given by the defendant Hawes when she was being examined before a court referee. She was not asked when the deed was made nor whether the deed was recorded, but was asked questions regarding her assets both before and after the deed was made. Counsel for appellants then propounded this question:

"Do you remember also Mrs. Hawes testifying as follows: 'I transferred that property to Mrs. Burke many years ago, but never had anything recorded; transferred to Mrs. Burke years ago by a notary public in the Hibernia Bank.'"

The respondent objected to the question as not being cross-examination and immaterial. The trial court sustained the objection. We think the ruling was correct. The question was not cross-examination, but the appellants should have made the witness their own if they wanted further passages of the former testimony recited. Moreover, if the question had been answered in the affirmative, the answer would have strengthened the case of the respondent, as tending to show that the transfer was a secret. If the question had been answered in the negative, then the appellants would not have been assisted, nor would they have been injured.

[7] On the issue of consideration the trial court found:

"That there was no consideration for said conveyances of said real and personal property, save and except love and affection of defendant

Mary E. Hawes, for said Elizabeth E. Burke, and the future support of the father of said Elizabeth E. Burke."

Whether said finding be treated as a finding that there was no consideration, or as a finding that the consideration was the support of a member of the family of the grantor, we need not determine. In either event the case is ruled by the provisions of section 3442 of the Civil Code.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 699

LEBALLISTER et al. v. MORRIS et al. (Civ. 2524.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 18, 1922.)

1. Vendor and purchaser ⟸95(2)—Default in payment of installment under land contract not ground for forfeiture where prompt payment impliedly waived.

Where an installment under a contract for the sale of realty in which time was made of the essence was payable at a bank on August 8th, and on August 9th and 10th plaintiffs made demand for payment forthwith, and defendant made payment August 10th, which payment the cashier of the bank accepted before he was told by plaintiff not to do so, prompt payment on August 8th was impliedly waived and a forfeiture on such ground would not be sustained.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⟸101—Where prompt payment of installments under land contract has been waived, right of forfeiture for future delays can only be restored by special notice.

Where by the acceptance of partial payments for the sale of realty after they became due, there has been a waiver of performance in accordance with the terms of the contract, the right of forfeiture for a future delay in payment is temporarily suspended and can only be restored by giving a definite and special notice to that effect.

3. Appeal and error ⟸197(7)—Objection to pleadings cannot be made for first time on appeal.

In a suit to declare a forfeiture of an installment land contract for failure to make prompt payments, an objection that defendants did not plead a waiver of promptness of payment cannot be made for the first time on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by James G. Leballister and another against John Morris and another, to cancel an agreement for the sale of real estate. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

George E. Gardner, of Oroville, for appellants.

W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The appeal is from a judgment in favor of defendants and the record is presented by the alternative method. Appellants have filed herein only what is denominated "Appellants' Opening Brief." Therein they have not set out the pleadings or the evidence in the case, but have contented themselves with the discussion of the legal question whether a vendee by failure to make payments at the time specified in a written contract for the sale of real property, wherein time is made of the essence thereof, does not subject himself to the penalty of forfeiture. The consideration, though, as thus presented is of no assistance in the absence of an exposition of the particular facts of the case. However, what has been omitted by appellant has been supplied by respondents, and as the statement by the latter is not denied by the former, we may virtually adopt it as a proper portrayal of the real situation. On August 8, 1919, a written agreement of the sale and purchase of a tract of land near Gridley, in Butte county, for the sum of $20,000 was executed by the parties herein. Four thousand dollars were paid by respondents at that time, and it was agreed that the balance should be paid in 32 consecutive installments of $500 each on February 8 and August 8 of every succeeding year until paid, with interest upon deferred payments at 6 per cent. per annum. The payments were to be made at the Gridley branch of the Rideout Bank at Gridley, and the bank was to receive the moneys, give receipts therefor and hold the deed, which had been placed in escrow. On February 8, 1920, respondents made the first payment of the balance amounting to $980. They made the next payment on August 9 of $965. The next payment, which became due February 8, 1921, respondents paid in two installments, $550 on February 8, and $416 on August 1, 1921. These payments were received by the bank and accepted by appellants. The next installment became due and payable on August 8, 1921. On the next day, appellants demanded payment of this money from respondents, who then had only $200, which they offered to pay; this appellants refused to accept on account, and threatened to terminate the contract. On the following day, as soon as the Bank of Gridley was open for business, respondents went to the bank and paid to the cashier for appellants the sum of $935.35, the total amount then due. This money was received by the cashier who had charge of this account, and a deposit tag was made out in the name of appellants and as respondent, John Morris, was turning away from the counter a telephone message came from appellants' attorney to the cashier not to receive the money, but it had already been paid in, and said respondent left it there. Thereafter, upon the same day, appellants served upon respondents a written notice of cancellation of the instrument, but respondents refused to surrender possession of the premises, and the action was brought for an annulment of said agreement, for the restitution of said premises, and for damages in the sum of $2,000 for breach of contract. The trial court found against plaintiffs on all the material issues, and particularly as to said belated payment that "Time is of the essence of said written agreement and the sum of $500 and interest under said agreement became due and payable by and from defendants to plaintiffs at the Rideout Bank in the city of Gridley, county of Butte, state of California, on the 8th day of August, 1921, under the terms of said written agreement, said money was not paid on said 8th day of August, and on the 9th day of August, plaintiffs demanded of defendants that they forthwith make said payment at said bank, and again on the 10th day of August, 1921, plaintiffs again demanded of defendants at the hour of about 8 o'clock a. m. of said day that they, defendants, forthwith pay said money; and thereafter, at the hour of 9:30 a. m. of said day, defendants went to said city of Gridley, and then and there paid into said bank for said plaintiffs at said bank the sum of $935.35, being the full amount of the payment which became due and payable under said written agreement on the 8th day of August, 1921, with interest as specified in said agreement up to and including the 10th day of August, 1921; that said money was received by the assistant cashier of said bank, and a deposit tag made out in the usual way for the purpose of depositing said money to the credit of plaintiffs upon the books of said bank. Plaintiffs did, on said 10th day of August, 1921, but not until the hour of about 4 o'clock p. m. of said day, and long after said money had been paid into said bank as aforesaid, make, sign, and serve upon defendants a written notice purporting to cancel, annul and terminate said written agreement."

In this connection the trial court further found:

"From and after the execution of said contract or agreement on the 8th day of August, 1919, defendant duly and regularly made payments of principal and interest to plaintiffs at the Gridley Branch of the Rideout Bank in the city of Gridley, county of Butte, state of California, as therein required as follows, to wit:

| | |
|---|---|
| On February 9, 1920 | $980 00 |
| On August 9, 1920 | 965 00 |
| On February 8, 1921 | 550 00 |
| On August 1, 1921 | 416 00 |

—said last two payments making a total of $966, which constitutes and was the total amount which should have been paid on February 8, 1921. However they were paid in two installments as aforesaid, and by plaintiffs with full knowledge of the respective times of payment, namely, February 8, 1921, $550, and August 1, 1921, the balance in the sum, of $416, accepted and received from defendants and credited and applied upon said written agreement as full payment of the principal and interest which became due and payable under said agreement on the 8th day of February, 1921; the next payment, coming due and payable under said contract on the 8th day of August, 1921, was paid by defendants to plaintiffs at said bank in the manner and at the time hereinbefore in these findings found and specified."

[1] We must assume that these findings are supported by the evidence, and it follows that there was no forfeiture by defendants upon either of two theories. In the first place, there was an implied waiver as to the prompt payment of the installment due on August 8 by the receipt for plaintiffs on August 10th of said amount by the cashier, and also by the demand of plaintiffs, made on August 9th and August 10th, that defendants forthwith pay the money. After such demand and an immediate compliance with it plaintiffs could not stultify themselves by insisting that there already had been a forfeiture by reason of the failure to pay on the 8th of August.

[2] It is also apparent from the foregoing findings that the case falls within the principle enunciated by the authorities that where, by the acceptance of partial payments after they became due, there has been a waiver of strict performance in accordance with the terms of the contract, the right of forfeiture for a future delay in payment is temporarily suspended, and can only be restored by giving a definite and special notice of an intention to that effect. Boone v. Templeman, 158 Cal. 290, 110 Pac. 947, 139 Am. St. Rep. 126; Myers v. Williams, 173 Cal. 301, 159 Pac. 982; Pearson v. Brown, 27 Cal. App. 125, 148 Pac. 956.

[3] There is no merit in the point that defendants did not plead a waiver. Respondents in their brief have set out a portion of the answer, which clearly meets this objection. Besides, as far as we are advised, no such objection was made at the trial, and appellants should not be heard to make it now for the first time.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

59 Cal. App. 760

LEAL et ux. v. MARTIN. (Civ. 4376.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 24, 1922.)

1. Highways ⟸184(2)—Plaintiff held bound to prove that defendant's automobile was not operated in a careful or prudent manner when it struck plaintiff's son.

Where in an action for the death of plaintiff's son, caused by being struck by defendant's automobile on a highway, plaintiff relied on Motor Vehicle Act, § 22, subd. (a), requiring operator of motor vehicle to operate it in a careful and prudent manner, and at such speed as not to endanger another, it was necessary for plaintiff to prove that the automobile was not operated in a prudent manner, or that it was operated at an unreasonable speed.

2. Appeal and error ⟸1010(1)—Court's findings supported by evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

Where there is evidence to support the findings of the trial court, they will not be disturbed on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Dudley Kinsell, Judge.

Action by Manuel Leal and wife against Frank Martin. From a judgment in defendant's favor, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

M. J. Rutherford, of Oakland, for appellants.

Frank M. Carr and Stanley R. Sterne, both of Oakland, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiffs appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant in an action for damages for the death of plaintiffs' son, caused by having been struck by an automobile driven by defendant on the public highway. The appeal is taken under the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The grounds of appeal, as stated by appellants in their brief, are that the respondent was guilty of negligence because at the time of the accident he was operating his automobile in the vicinity of a schoolhouse at such a rate of speed that he could not stop the same in less than 30 feet; that he failed to give a warning of his approaching machine, though the street was banked with trees and poles; that he was driving the machine without watching the road over which he was passing. All the grounds urged by appellants are mere matters of fact which the trial court was called to determine, and all of which were found adversely to appellants.

[1, 2] It is not argued that respondent was guilty of negligence per se, or that he violated any statute relating to the manner of operation of the automobile upon the public highway other than the provisions of section 22, subdivision (a), of the Motor Vehicle Act (Stats. 1919, p. 220), which requires that one operating a motor vehicle on the public highways shall do so in a careful and prudent manner and at such a rate of speed as shall not endanger the life or limb of another. When reliance is placed on this provision of the statute, it is necessary to prove that the vehicle was not operated in a careful or prudent manner, or that it was operated at an unreasonable rate of speed. The trial court found that the respondent was operating his car in a careful and prudent manner, and that the accident was not the result of any carelessness or negligence on his part, but that it resulted from the fact that the little boy suddenly and without warning jumped from behind a tree and ran directly in front of the automobile. There is evidence to support all the findings of the trial court. Such being the case, the judgment should not be disturbed.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 743

HALL et al. v. MITCHELL. (Civ. 2527.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 23, 1922.)

1. Trial ⟸395(6)—Finding that "all material allegations" are true is insufficient.

A finding that "all material allegations of the complaint are true" is insufficient and must be disregarded on appeal.

2. Sales ⟸130(3½)—Finding that defendant "made untrue statements" held insufficient to enable court to determine whether reliance thereon was warranted.

A finding in an action to rescind a contract to purchase nursery stock for fraud that defendant "made untrue statements to plaintiffs regarding the number of dormant buds that would grow" is insufficient, in that it does not disclose the representation made so that the court could determine whether it was of a character to justify reliance thereon by plaintiffs.

3. Sales ⟸130(3½)—Findings that representations were knowingly false and intended to deceive necessary to warrant annulment of contract.

That false representations were known to be false when made and were made with intent to deceive, should appear in the finding to warrant an annulment of a contract for fraud.

4. Sales ⟸130(3½)—Specific finding of damage necessary to warrant award.

A specific finding that plaintiffs were damaged by misrepresentations made is necessary to warrant damages, and a finding that "plaintiffs are entitled to damages" is insufficient.

5. Sales ⟸38(9) — Misrepresentations not harmful not grounds for action to rescind contract.

A misrepresentation that does not result in injury to the innocent party cannot be the predicate of an action to rescind a contract of sale on the ground of fraud.

6. Appeal and error ⟸704(2), 907(2)—Failure to bring up evidence on special defense precludes review.

Failure of the lower court to find regarding a special defense set up by appellant is not reviewable, where the evidence is not brought up and it must be assumed that the showing made would not warrant a finding in favor of appellant.

7. Sales ⟸130(2)—No particular phraseology necessary in allegation of intent to deceive.

Though the intent to deceive is a material element of fraud, complaint in an action to annul a contract for misrepresentation need not allege it in any particular phraseology, though, in accordance with Civ. Code, § 1572, the complaint should contain an allegation that misrepresentations were intended to induce plaintiff to enter into the contract.

8. Sales ⟸38(3)—Whether representations are expressions of opinion depends on facts.

Whether a representation relied upon to constitute fraud in a sale, is in fact but an expression of an opinion, must be adjudged upon its own surrounding facts, taking into consideration the nature of the representation and the language used, for an expression of opinion may constitute actionable fraud, if coupled with an actual misrepresentation or concealment, or if it relates to a subject of which the parties have not equal knowledge or means of ascertaining the truth.

9. Appeal and error ⟸1031(2)—Defects in pleading assumed to be without prejudice.

In considering on appeal the sufficiency of appellee's complaint, it will be assumed that evidence of a complete cause of action was received without objection, and that defects in the complaint were without prejudice.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; J. C. Needham, Judge.

An action by H. V. M. Hall and another against R. N. Mitchell. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Hawkins & Hawkins, of Modesto, for appellant.

F. W. Reeder, of Oakdale, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought to rescind, on the ground of fraud, a written contract for the sale of certain nursery stock, and the appeal is by the defendant from the judgment upon the judgment roll. Said written contract provided:

"Agreement, made and dated at Waterford, Cal., November 2, 1920, between Robert Mitchell of Ceres, Cal., hereinafter described as the seller, and H. V. M. Hall, of Waterford, Cal., hereinafter described as the purchaser. Witness, that the seller agrees to sell and convey, and the purchaser agrees to purchase, all that block of nursery stock grown and now standing on the northerly portion of the property owned and farmed by J. T. McComic at Waterford, Cal. The price is ten thousand dollars ($10,000.00) payable as follows: Three thousand five hundred dollars ($3,500.00) on the signing of this contract, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged. Fifteen hundred dollars ($1,500.00) on or before March 1, 1921. Five thousand dollars ($5,000.00) on or before March 1st, 1922, with interest on this deferred payment at six per cent. from the date of this agreement until March 1, 1922, payable at that time. The seller agrees to remove strings now on part of the within described stock, and to furnish to the purchaser a correct and true list of all varieties and their exact location. The seller hereby guarantees that title to the stock described within is free from liens, or other debts or incumbrances. The stipulations aforesaid are to apply to and bind the heirs, executors, administrators, successors and assigns of the respective parties."

After an allegation of the execution of said contract, the complaint proceeds:

"That a few days before the entering into of said contract the exact dates being to plaintiffs unknown, defendant made to plaintiffs the following false, fraudulent and untrue statements: That defendant stated to plaintiffs that he had placed 52,000 dormant buds in the trees comprising the nursery stock mentioned in before mentioned contracts, and that plaintiffs could depend upon 60 to 70 per cent. of said dormant buds growing and producing trees. That plaintiffs, relying upon the representations of defendant as to the amount of dormant buds which would grow and produce trees, as represented by defendant, agreed to and did enter into a contract with defendant in writing as hereinbefore set forth and agreed to pay said defendant the sum of $10,000 therefor. That plaintiffs had no way of knowing whether or not the representations were true and were compelled to rely and did rely upon the representations made by defendant as to the amount of buds that would grow and produce trees. That plaintiffs are not nurserymen by profession, but that defendant is a man who has been engaged in the nursery business for a number of years and is fully conversant with said business, which plaintiffs knew at the time of entering into said contract, and because of this knowledge plaintiffs gave a greater degree of reliance upon the statements made by defendant than they would otherwise have done. That the statement made by defendant to plaintiffs that they could depend upon 60 or 70 per cent. of the dormant buds of said nursery stock growing and producing trees was false, fraudulent, and untrue, which defendant well knew, but plaintiffs did not know and had no way of determining at the time of the entering into of said contract. That defendant well knew, as an experienced nurseryman that at the time of entering into said contract and at the time of making the said statement to plaintiffs that 60 or 70 per cent. of the dormant buds would not grow because of the nature of the budding and which the defendant had done in said nursery, which was wholly within the knowledge of defendant. That in truth and in fact there were only 30 per cent. of the dormant buds placed in said nursery by defendant that grew and produced trees. That by reason of the false, fraudulent, and untrue statement of defendant to plaintiffs that 60 or 70 per cent. of said dormant buds would grow and produce trees, plaintiffs were damaged in the following amounts and did pay to defendant on the 2d day of November, 1920, the sum of $3,500."

Then follows an enumeration of the other losses claimed to have been sustained, the allegation of a written demand for rescission and restoration, and that "plaintiffs have carried out the terms and conditions of said contract in every particular."

The answer put in issue every material allegation of the complaint and set up an affirmative defense of ratification of the contract, and laches in the failure of plaintiffs to rescind the contract promptly after ascertaining what proportion of said buds would grow. It was also averred "that if a due proportion of the said nursery stock failed to grow, it was because the plaintiffs failed to properly care for the same in an approved manner of horticulture, and for their failure to so care for the said nursery stock, a large percentage of the same failed to grow."

The court found:

"That all the material allegations of plaintiffs' complaint are true. That the material allegations as to the denial of fraud and misrepresentation in defendant's answer are untrue. That plaintiffs H. V. M. Hall and Caroline Rice Dyer are inexperienced in the nursery business. That defendant, R. N. Mitchell, is an experienced nurseryman. That defendant R. N. Mitchell, made false, fraudulent and untrue statements to plaintiffs regarding the number of dormant buds that would grow at the time and before the sale of said nursery to plaintiffs. That plaintiffs H. V. M. Hall and Caroline Rice Dyer, relied upon the statements made by defendant, R. N. Mitchell, and so relying purchased said nursery from defendant. That because of the delay of notice of rescission of contract served by plaintiffs H. V. M. Hall and Caroline Rice Dyer on defendant, R. N. Mitchell, said contract of purchase cannot be rescinded by plaintiffs against the defendant. That plaintiffs H. V. M. Hall, and Caroline Rice Dyer are entitled to damages from defendant, R. N. Mitchell, because of the misrepresentations and fraud of defendant in the sale of said nursery to plaintiffs by defendant."

Among the conclusions of law is also this finding of fact:

"That H. V. M. Hall and Caroline Rice Dyer, plaintiffs, have already paid to the defendant, R. N. Mitchell, all that nursery stock mentioned in said contract of purchase is reasonably worth."

[1] It is apparent that the findings as to "all the material allegations," etc., must be entirely disregarded. Stampfli v. Stampfli (Cal. App.) 199 Pac. 829; Krug v. F. A. Lux Brewing Co., 129 Cal. 322, 61 Pac. 1125; Holt Mfg. Co. v. Collins, 154 Cal. 265, 97 Pac. 516.

[2] We must look to the other findings to ascertain whether there is sufficient basis for the support of the judgment, and we are satisfied that they fall short of meeting the requirement of the law. The court does not find what false statement or statements were made by defendant to plaintiffs. It is not sufficient to declare that he made "untrue statements to plaintiffs regarding the number of dormant buds that would grow," etc. Such a vague and indefinite finding as to the supposed misrepresentations cannot be deemed of any value. If it had been qualified by the phrase "as alleged in the complaint" or some equivalent expression, the situation would be different. But the vital consideration of what representation was made is left entirely to surmise and conjecture. It should have been exhibited with at least reasonable certainty so that the court could determine whether it was of a character to justify the conduct of plaintiffs in relying upon the statement.

[3] Again, there is no finding that any statement made by defendant was known by him to be untrue or that it was made with intent to deceive or to induce plaintiffs to rely upon it. These are vital elements in a case of actual fraud, and manifestly they should appear in the findings in order to warrant a conclusion that the contract should be annulled by reason of misrepresentation. 20 Cyc. 13; 26 Corpus Juris, 1062.

[4, 5] There should have been also a specific finding that plaintiffs were damaged or injured by the misrepresentation of defendant. That "plaintiffs are entitled to damages from defendant" is not a sufficient finding of fact in that regard. Of course, any misrepresentation that does not result in injury to the innocent party cannot be the predicate for an action such as this.

[6] There was no finding as to the special defense set up in the answer that any loss suffered by plaintiffs was the result of negligence on their part in the care of the nursery, but of this no complaint can be made, since the evidence is not brought up. We must assume that the showing made would not warrant, in that respect, a finding in favor of appellant.

[7] In view of the necessity for a reconsideration of the case by the trial court, it becomes advisable to notice appellant's criticisms of the complaint. One is that it is not alleged that any misrepresentation was made with intent to deceive. Authorities are cited to the effect that such an allegation is material. Of course, there can be no actual fraud without such evil intent. But, manifestly, in setting forth this necessary element, the pleader is not required to adopt any particular phraseology, although the simple and direct averment that the representation was made with such intent would relieve the situation of any uncertainty in that respect.

It is also claimed that there is a failure to allege that the misrepresentation was made with the intent to induce plaintiffs to enter into the contract. It would have been a simple matter to set this forth so as to avoid just criticism. It is to be observed that section 1572 of the Civil Code, in defining actual fraud, provides that it "consists in any of the following acts, committed by a party to the contract, or with his connivance, with intent to deceive another party thereto, or to induce him to enter into the contract," etc. In this particular case no more important element could be suggested, and it is unfortunate that plaintiffs were not more careful to reveal it more clearly.

[8] Appellant seems to attach most importance to the claim that the so-called misrepresentation consists simply in the expression of an opinion and not the statement of a fact, and therefore it could not constitute actionable fraud. He insists that "a vendor has the right to free expression of opinion as to what will or will not happen in the future in relation to the sale of the property under consideration, and such statements will never constitute a ground for actionable fraud." The familiar principle is stated in 12 R. C. L. 245, as follows:

"Generally, therefore, fraud cannot be predicated upon the mere expression of an opinion which is understood to be only such or cannot reasonably be understood to be anything else, nor upon representations in regard to matters of estimate or judgment. The person to whom such statements are made has no right to rely upon them, and does so at his peril, nor can it be supposed that they influenced his judgment."

However, as stated by the same and other authorities, there are exceptions to these general rules "growing out of the need of preventing the successful perpetration of fraud," but we need not specify them. Moreover, it is true that—

"There is no certain rule by the application of which it can be determined when false representations constitute matters of opinion or matters of fact, but each case must in a large measure be adjudged upon its own facts, taking into consideration the nature of the representation and the meaning of the language used as applied to the subject-matter and as interpreted by the surrounding circumstances." 12 R. C. L. 247.

Illustrations of the application of the principle, as thus stated, are given in the text; indeed, the books contain many of them, but in this connection we notice specifically only the California cases cited by appellant, holding that a mere opinion was involved. In Rendell v. Scott, 70 Cal. 514, 11 Pac. 779, it was said:

"It was certainly a matter of opinion when the plaintiff stated that the land was the best ranch in Ione Valley, and was very rich and productive, and would produce 50 bushels of wheat to the acre, that a portion was good alfalfa land, and that another portion was rich in mineral deposits."

It was held that, since there was nothing in the pleadings to exclude "the idea of personal inspection by the purchaser," he must be presumed to have exercised his own judgment.

In Nounnan v. Sutter County Land Co., 81 Cal. 1, 22 Pac. 515, 6 L. R. A. 219, it was held that the representations made by the defendant to the plaintiffs "as to the nature of the soil to be excavated, and the number of cubic yards in the levee which they contracted to construct, were mere expressions of opinion with reference to matters equally within the power of both of the parties to ascertain and determine," and it was held further that the contract itself showed that the plaintiffs did not rely upon these representations.

In Holton v. Noble, 83 Cal. 7, 23 Pac. 58, it appears that plaintiff represented that the land sown in alfalfa would produce at least 8 tons of hay to the acre, that he also represented that the 40 acres of grapevines on the land would produce at least from a ton to two tons of raisins per acre. The Supreme Court said:

"The alleged representations of the plaintiff as to the amount that the alfalfa and grape vines would produce were clearly matter of opinion, and cannot be regarded as fraudulent."

Lee v. McClelland, 120 Cal. 147, 52 Pac. 300, is to the same effect. Therein defendant testified:

"He [referring to the plaintiff] said it was fine orange land, and I could put out oranges and go east in the summer and come back and I would get a crop of oranges; and on the strength of that statement I purchased the land."

Said the Supreme Court:

"It is quite obvious that such statements made by a seller of land, even admittedly to induce a purchase, cannot be made the predicate of false or fraudulent representations such as will avoid a contract of sale. They are the exaggerated, and it may be the reckless, declarations of an eager trader, holding out the golden promise of profit to induce a sale, but after all they are but the expressions of the vendor's opinion, actual or pretended, upon which the purchaser will rely at his peril."

It may be added that the most recent decision upon the subject by an appellate court of this state is presented by French v. Freeman, 39 Cal. App. Dec. 405,[1] wherein it was held that the representations that certain land was suitable for raising pears and that it was the finest sediment soil "were merely expressions of opinion" which could not be regarded as fraudulent.

Herein, the representation was that "60 or 70 per cent. of the dormant buds would grow." This—so appellant claims—could be nothing more than the opinion of the seller; that, manifestly, he could not know that such would be the result in the future, nor could any one of ordinary understanding believe it was more than the expression of an opinion. It is not at all unlike—so it is said—the representation in the Rendell Case, supra, that the land would produce 50 bushels of wheat per acre, or in the Holton Case that the land sown in alfalfa would produce 8 tons to the acre. Standing alone, it may be admitted that this would be a mere opinion upon which plaintiffs would rely at their peril. It must be stated, though, that there is a defective attempt herein to couple with this opinion the concealment of a material fact, which necessarily would affect the development and productivity of the buds. This is suggested in the allegation that defendant "well knew, as an experienced nurseryman, * * * that 60 to 70 per cent. of the dormant buds would not grow because of the nature of the budding and which the defendant had done in said nursery which was wholly within the knowledge of defendant." If the budding was imperfectly done and this fact was intentionally concealed from plaintiffs, who were unskilled in that business, and who did not possess an equal opportunity of ascertaining the real condition, and with this knowledge defendant had no reason to believe that the buds would grow as he represented, then it could hardly be disputed that such representation, if made with the intent to deceive and induce plaintiffs to enter into the contract and upon which representation plaintiffs relied, could be nullified in a court of equity. Under such circumstances the representation would be equivalent to the statement of a fact for which the party making it would be held to accountability. The expression of an opinion may amount to fraud where it is accompanied by active misrepresentation or concealment (Gray v. Richmond Bicycle Co., 167 N. Y. 348, 60 N. E. 663, 82 Am. St. Rep. 720), or where it relates to a subject as to which the parties have not equal knowledge or means of ascertaining the truth (Davis v. Lee, 52 Wash. 330, 100 Pac. 752, 132 Am. St. Rep. 973).

Where the statement of the opinion is necessarily based upon a fact, or carries such inference that it must be regarded as the statement of a fact and is known to be false and made with intent to deceive, it may be actionable. Olston v. Oregon Water Power, etc., Co., 52 Or. 343, 96 Pac. 1095, 97 Pac. 538, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 915.

In Wendell v. Ozark Orchard Co. (Mo. App.) 200 S. W. 747, it was held that representations as to the productiveness of a peach orchard and the enhanced value of the land because of it being fruit land should be regarded as representative of existing conditions and fraudulent because made by one having superior knowledge based upon past experience of himself and others, and sufficient to support allegations of fraud.

In Stonemets v. Head, 248 Mo. 243, 154 S. W. 108, it is said:

> "Courts generally recognize that where parties do not stand on an equal footing of opportunity and knowledge a positive assertion of a matter, which, stated in another form, might be a mere opinion, may, when false and fraudulent, be actionable if the statement was a material inducement to the trade or sale. So a statement of an opinion under like circumstances, when in fact the party has no such opinion or has a contrary opinion, may become a statement of a material fact, to wit, the fact that an opinion exists."

The subject is clearly set forth in 2 Pom. Eq. Juris. (3d. Ed.), § 878, to which we also refer for an instructive discussion of the question.

[9] We think we discern in the complaint an attempt—though imperfectly stated—to set forth a situation within the contemplation of such recognizable fraud. The complaint is defective in the respects indicated, but, considering the whole pleading, we think it cannot be said that there is such entire omission of any material element of fraud as to require the action to be dismissed. We must assume that the evidence of a complete cause of action was received without objection and thus said defects were without prejudice. However, if it should be amended the various elements to which we have referred should be set forth more explicitly.

We think the judgment should be reversed and the parties permitted to amend their pleadings, if so advised. It is so ordered.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

[1] Rehearing granted by Supreme Court, 217 Pac. 515.

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

212 PACIFIC REPORTER

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

212 PACIFIC REPORTER

190 Cal. 308

LOCKHART v. J. H. McDOUGALL CO. (L. A. 7193.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 6, 1923.)

1. Mortgages ⟸38(1)—Evidence held to support finding deed with contract to convey constituted mortgage.

Evidence that plaintiff had contracted to purchase a tract of land, that defendant agreed to furnish the money necessary to enable her to complete the purchase, taking the deed therefor in its own name and giving plaintiff a contract for the purchase of the property on payment of the amount advanced, which was less than the value of the land, held sufficient to sustain a finding that the deed and contract constituted a mortgage.

2. Interest ⟸50—Mortgages ⟸608—Absolute refusal held to waive objection offer to pay was conditioned on conveyance of too much land, and indebtedness ceased to draw interest.

The objection that the offer of a mortgagor, under a deed and contract to convey which were intended as a mortgage, to pay the balance due was conditioned on a conveyance by the mortgagee of land to which the mortgagor was not entitled, was waived, under Civ. Code, § 1501, where the mortgagor did not object on that ground, and did refuse to consider that mortgagor owed any debt, or had any interest in the land, so that a tender of the amount due was useless, and the indebtedness ceased to bear interest on that date, under Civ. Code, § 1504.

3. Interest ⟸45—Bonus for extension of time for payment held to draw interest.

Where the parties to a mortgage transaction in the form of a deed and contract to convey expressly stipulated that two sums separately agreed to be paid by the debtors for the extension of time for the payment of the principal were bonuses for the granting of such extensions, such amounts are not to be treated as interest payments, and must bear interest from the date they became due, under Civ. Code, § 1917, notwithstanding the agreement of the parties that they should not bear interest before they became due.

4. Mortgages ⟸602—Presence of wells on mortgagee's lands held not to affect apportionment of rent.

Where a corporation held title to a tract of land, a portion of which it had agreed to convey in a transaction which was in effect a mortgage, the fact that the wells from which the tract was irrigated were all located on the land belonging absolutely to the corporation does not establish a greater rental value for the corporation's portion of the tract so as to render inequitable an apportionment of the rent received from the entire tract on an acreage basis.

5. Appeal and error ⟸877(4) — Mortgagee cannot complain because decree gave half interest to heirs of husband of mortgagor.

In a suit to redeem from a mortgage in the form of an absolute deed and agreement to convey, the defendant cannot object that the judgment required conveyance of a one-half interest to the heirs of the husband of plaintiff, whereas plaintiff was entitled under the contract to the entire interest.

6. Mortgages ⟸611—Mortgagee held not entitled to question validity of original agreement.

Where a partnership composed of a man and a woman originally contracted to purchase a tract of land, but that agreement was abandoned and the woman completed the purchase of her portion of the land by securing an advancement from a corporation which took the conveyance in its own name and gave her and her husband the right to purchase, the corporation cannot, in a suit to redeem from the mortgage, raise the issue that the original partnership agreement was intended to defraud the husband's creditors.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Russ Avery, Judge.

Action by Cora S. Lockhart, as executrix of the last will and testament of Otis H. Lockhart, and individually, against the J. H. McDougall Company, to redeem real property from the lien of a mortgage. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Anderson & Anderson, of Los Angeles, Daugherty & Thiele, of Salinas, Silas W. Mack, of Monterey, and Stuart M. Salisbury and Wm. B. Himrod, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Chas. H. Brock and J. N. Hastings, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. This is an action to redeem certain real property from the lien of a mortgage. Plaintiffs obtained a judgment fixing the amount due, and providing that upon payment thereof defendant should execute a deed to them. The principal controversy between the parties was over the question of whether or not the transaction between them was shown by parol to be a mortgage or was a contract of sale of the real estate in question entered into between the defendant corporation as vendor and the plaintiffs as vendees, as it purported to be. The action was originally brought by Otis H. Lockhart and Cora S. Lockhart, as husband and wife. The husband has since died and his wife has been substituted as executrix. Inasmuch as the husband and wife were the vendees in the contract and the plaintiffs in the action, we will refer to them hereafter as "the plaintiffs," notwithstanding the substitution. The J. H. McDougall Company appealed from the judgment.

We will first outline a few of the outstanding facts. Cora S. Lockhart entered into a partnership agreement with M. E. Post for the purchase of 2,793 acres from the Loma Vista Ranch Company. Subsequently, in order to pay the sum of $40,000 due upon the purchase price of the land from the Loma Vista Ranch Company it was arranged to segregate the partnership interest. The portion allotted to Cora S. Lockhart was conveyed to the J. H. McDougall Company; that company advanced the sum necessary to procure the deed from the Loma Vista Ranch Company and from Post, and took title to the property and executed a contract for the sale of the land to the plaintiffs. This arrangement was found by the trial court to be in effect a mortgage to secure to the J. H. McDougall Company the repayment of the sums agreed upon as the ostensible purchase price of the premises agreed in the contract of purchase to be paid by the plaintiffs as vendees.

[1] Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to justify this conclusion of the trial court. It is clear that the defendant took title to the land in question, and executed the contract of sale for the purpose of accommodating the plaintiffs. By this arrangement the defendant ostensibly acquired the legal title, and the plaintiffs the equitable title; defendant's interest in the property as vendor being a right to receive the purchase price and to retain the legal title of the property until it was paid. Aside from the provisions in the contract making time the essence of the contract, the relative rights of the parties to the contract of sale were quite similar to those of a mortgagor and mortgagee. Otis Lockhart testified that J. H. McDougall, representing the defendant, said that he would let plaintiffs have what they needed, and they could pay it off as they liked, even as low as $100 at a time, and that if it was a mortgage it would not be so elastic. The property was worth a great deal more than the purported purchase price, and the difference between the purchase price and the value of the property represented the investment or interest of the plaintiffs in the property which was by their direction conveyed to and vested in the defendant. Without an analysis of the correspondence and dealings of the parties tending to support the finding of the trial court that the arrangement between the parties was a mortgage, it is sufficient to say that the evidence supports the finding of the court, and that the question of whether or not the fact that the transaction constituted a mortgage was established by clear and satisfactory proof was a question for the trial court. Sheehan v. Sullivan, 126 Cal. 189, 58 Pac. 543; Wadleigh v. Phelps, 149 Cal. 627, 87 Pac. 93; De Kahn v. Chase, 177 Cal. 281, 170 Pac. 608.

Two additional questions are raised by the record with reference to the proper allowance of interest to be made to the defendant. It is claimed by plaintiffs and found by the court that a tender of the full amount due was made to defendant, and that because of such tender and refusal thereof the defendant company is not entitled to interest from that date. Civ. Code, § 1504. The appellant claims that the tender made was insufficient to stop the running of interest.

On April 10, 1919, one J. N. Hastings tendered defendant a certified check for $73,000. The finding of the trial court upon the matter of tender is as follows:

"That on or about the 10th day of April, 1919, these plaintiffs made an offer to the officers and directors of the defendant at the office of the defendant in the city of Salinas, Cal., to pay then and there the full amount of indebtedness due on that day to said defendant from plaintiffs, including all accrued interest and bonuses, and demanded that defendant execute a deed to plaintiffs of that part of said property then standing of record in the name of defendant, being the west half of the southwest quarter, and the east half of the southwest quarter and the west half of the southeast quarter of said section 10.

"That the plaintiffs were then and there ready, willing, and able to pay said obligation in full, and made known this fact to said officers and directors, but said officers and directors then and there refused absolutely to entertain the plaintiffs' offer of payment, stating that the matter was closed and the defendant did not care to have any further negotiations. That said officers and directors then and there further declared and claimed that the defendant was the owner of said property, and that plaintiffs had no ownership, right, title, or interest in or to the said property, or any part thereof, and refused to execute to plaintiffs a deed for all or any part of said property.

"That the money due from the plaintiffs to the defendant was not actually offered to the defendant because of the said statements of said officers and directors of defendant.

"That plaintiffs are now, and at all times since said offer of payment was made have been, ready, willing, and able to pay the balance due on their said indebtedness to defendant, but defendant has at all times since said 23d day of May, 1917, refused, and does now refuse, to accept said payment and to execute to plaintiffs a deed."

It will be observed that the plaintiffs in making the tender demanded a deed to 240 acres of land. During the trial it was stipulated and the court found that the plaintiffs were not entitled to 80 acres of this land. This 80 acres had been hypothecated by the defendant company by a deed of trust executed to the Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank, and had been subsequently purchased at the trustees' sale by the defendant corporation. The money secured by the corporation on the trust deed was applied to the indebtedness due from the plaintiffs to the defendant. The defendant's first claim with reference to this tender is that it was made upon condition that the defendant convey 80 acres more than the plaintiffs were entitled to, and that therefore it was not a tender sufficient to stop the payment of interest.

[2] Did it also constitute a sufficient tender to prevent the running of interest? The plaintiffs had a right to demand a deed to the land held by the defendant as a mortgage (160 acres); the tender of the full amount due was made, and it was not suggested by defendant that there was any distinction between the 80 acres acquired by it by virtue of the sale to it under a trust deed executed by it, and the balance of the land held by it. Apparently none of the parties had this distinction in mind. The defendant declined to negotiate with plaintiffs or consider the question of tender affirming title to the whole 240 acres. The offer of performance was upon a condition not authorized, and hence, if objected to upon that ground, would have been unavailing to stop the running of interest, but where the defendant not only did not object on that ground, but also refused to consider the proposition that the plaintiffs owed any debt, or that they had any interest in the land, the defect in the tender was waived by failure to object thereto on that ground. Civ. Code, § 1501; Kofoed v. Gordon, 122 Cal. 314, 320, 321, 54 Pac. 1115. A good tender having been made, or waived, the indebtedness ceased to bear interest. Civ. Code, § 1504; Stein v. Leeman, 161 Cal. 502, 119 Pac. 663.

Appellant claims that the court erred in failing to allow interest at 7 per cent. per annum on the sum of $15,000 from the date it was due, to wit, February 1, 1914. The court disallowed any interest on this amount, apparently upon the theory that the item was itself interest, and that the contract provided it should not bear interest, and that therefore section 1917 of the Civil Code, which provides that interest shall be payable on all moneys at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum after they become due, unless there is an express contract in writing to the contrary, has no application.

It appears that when the original contract of purchase and sale was entered into between the parties, the vendees agreed to pay $8,000 in addition to the amount of money which the vendor, the defendant, had paid in connection with the acquisition of the title to the land. On May 7, 1909, the defendant company executed an agreement of extension for five years from and after February 1, 1909, containing the following statement:

"Provided, nevertheless, and this extension of time is made upon the express condition, that said parties of the second part in said agreement, shall at the time of the execution of the deed as in said contract stipulated to be made, pay and give to said J. H. McDougall Company, the sum of fifteen thousand dollars, without interest, in place and stead of eight thousand dollars, as in said agreement stipulated, such sum being stipulated as a consideration for this extension of time.

"This extension applies to the balance still unpaid under said contract or agreement, and to the lands still unconveyed pursuant to its terms, and time is of the essence hereof."

It is true that there are cases holding that a bonus paid for the making of a loan is in effect additional interest. If we adopt the respondent's view that the $8,000 payable without interest, agreed upon in the original contract of sale, and the additional $7,000 agreed upon in the extension of February 1, 1909, were items of interest in addition to the 6 per cent. fixed in the contract, then the rate of interest agreed upon in the original contract was 6 per cent. plus $2^{10}/_{11}$ per cent., a total of $8^{10}/_{11}$ per cent., and the agreement for the next five years upon the same basis was $8\ ^{8}/_{10}$ per cent. Malone v. Roy, 107 Cal. 520, 40 Pac. 1040. In that case the court was evidently of the opinion that the difference between the amount loaned and the amount agreed to be repaid was to be considered as interest, and that the total amount so agreed to be paid would bear interest after maturity at the rate of 7 per cent., in the absence of any agreement as to the rate of interest or payment thereof. In that case the parties contemplated that at the end of the year the rights of the vendee or mortgagor should cease and made no provision for continuing their relations. In the case at bar it is clear that, if we regard the transaction as a mortgage, as we must under the findings of the court, and consider that the item of $15,000 was made up of two items of interest, $8,000 for the first five years and $7,000 for the second five years, that the rate of interest at the time the obligation of the mortgagor became due was 8 6/11 per cent., and that the parties clearly contemplated that the amounts due were to bear interest. The result of this conclusion would be that the principal of $55,000 would bear interest at the rate of 8 6/11 per cent. from the maturity of the contract to the date of the tender in 1919. Disregarding the question of partial payments, the additional interest, of 2 6/11 per cent. per annum, upon the entire principal of $55,000 for that period, would be over $7,000, while the interest upon $15,000 at 7 per cent. for the five years would be $5,250.

[3] Without ascertaining the date and the amount of the partial payments—something the parties have not undertaken to do—we cannot say which view is more favorable to the appellant. We see no reason, however, why the sum of $15,000 should not be taken, as the parties agreed it should be considered, as the amount to be paid for the five-year extension, and when so considered it must bear interest from the date it was due, notwithstanding the agreement of the parties that it should not bear interest before it became due. Civ. Code, § 1917; Roberts v. Smith, 64 Tex. 94, 53 Am. Rep. 744; Jones v. Gardner, 57 Cal. 641. The defendant is entitled to the allowance of interest at 7 per cent. on $15,000 from the 1st day of February, 1914, to the 10th day of April, 1919.

[4] The appellant next contends that the court committed error in the allowance of $12,000 to the plaintiffs by reason of rents collected for the use of the land in question. The point arises out of the fact that the 80 acres conceded to belong to the defendant were included in the lease of 240 acres made to the American Beet Sugar Company at $25 per acre. The particular point involved is the contention of the appellant that the 80 acres to which it had title was of greater rental value than the other 160 acres, by reason of the fact that certain wells from which water was pumped for the irrigation of the entire 240 acres was located upon the defendant's 80 acres, and that the use of this water increased the rental value of the property $15 per acre. In the absence of anything to the contrary, the court would have been justified in applying the rental value of $25 per acre pro rata, and we think there is nothing in the evidence with regard to the use of water which would justify departure from this rule, and that the trial court was not in error in its application of the amount of $12,000 to the mortgage indebtedness.

[5] The defendant claims that the judgment is erroneous for the reason that the trial court directed that a deed be made to Cora S. Lockhart and the heirs of Otis H. Lockhart jointly upon payment of the amount due. The contract of sale was executed by both husband and wife. The plaintiffs do not complain that the judgment gives the heirs of Otis H. Lockhart a half interest in the property, and the defendant is not interested in that question.

[6] It is suggested, rather than argued, that plaintiffs cannot maintain this action, because the partnership agreement between M. E. Post and Cora S. Lockhart was entered into by the wife instead of the husband to defeat or delay the husband's creditors. We do not see that the defendant is in a position to raise the question as to the invalidity of this original transaction between M. E. Post and Cora S. Lockhart, for both husband and wife are named as vendees in the agreement with the defendant, and such agreement is not tainted with the fraud.

The judgment is reversed, and the lower court is directed to modify the judgment by including therein interest upon the sum of $15,000 from February 1, 1914, to April 10, 1919, at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, the total amount of the judgment so ascertained to bear interest from the date of the original judgment, May 26, 1921. Appellant to recover its costs on appeal.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; WASTE, J.; SLOANE, J.; LENNON, J.; LAWLOR, J.; WARD, J.

---

190 Cal. 257

PEOPLE ex rel. BRADFORD, Dist. Atty., v. JACKSON et al. (Sac. 3396.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 5, 1923.)

1. Appeal and error ⊂=2—Constitutional law ⊂=55—Legislature can regulate effect of appeal as a stay.

The Legislature can regulate the effect of an appeal from a judgment as a stay of execution, so that the amendment of Code Civ. Proc. § 949, by the Act of 1921 (St. 1921, p. 95), so as to except from a stay a judgment that a place is a nuisance, and closing it for a period of time, was valid.

2. Constitutional law ⊂=56—Amendment, excepting petition judgments of stay on appeal, does not deny right to appeal.

Since the amendment (St. 1921, p. 95) to Code Civ. Proc. § 949, excepting from the effect of an appeal as a stay of execution judgments declaring a building to be a nuisance, and ordering it closed, does not deprive the Supreme Court of authority to issue a supersedeas, or deprive it of its jurisdiction to determine the correctness of the judgment, it is not invalid as an impairment of the power of the Supreme Court under article 6, § 4, to issue of writs and process necessary to the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction.

---

⊂=For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

3. Statutes ⊜47—Amendment of statute regulating stay on appeal held not to render it unintelligible.

The amendment (St. 1921, p. 193) of Code Civ. Proc. § 941, specifying the requirements of a cost bond on appeal so as practically to repeal that section, in view of the amendment of section 940, which no longer requires the bond, does not render unintelligible section 949, providing that, in cases not provided for in sections 942–945, the perfecting of an appeal by giving the undertaking mentioned in section 941 stays proceedings upon the judgment except in specified cases, since the effect of that amendment and the repeal of section 941 was to make the filing of a notice with the clerk effective in all cases to perfect an appeal which would operate as a stay without an appeal bond, except in the specified cases.

4. Appeal and error ⊜478—Supersedeas refused for unreasonable delay.

A writ of supersedeas will not be granted in the exercise of Supreme Court's appellate jurisdiction where there has been an unreasonable delay in taking an appeal, or the appeal is merely for the purpose of delay, since supersedeas does not issue of right, but only when necessary to protect the rights of the parties to the appeal.

5. Appeal and error ⊜478 — Supersedeas should not be granted in abatement suits without showing of merits.

Since the Legislature (St. 1921, p. 95) by amending Code Civ. Proc. § 949, has indicated that there should be no stay of an action to abate a building as a nuisance and order it closed under the Red Light Abatement Act, the Supreme Court should not lend its aid to the continuance of that business by issuing a supersedeas, staying the abatement judgment pending appeal, in the absence of some showing of merit in the appeal and of diligence in its prosecution.

6. Appeal and error ⊜478—Delay in prosecuting appeal held to authorize refusal of supersedeas.

When notice of appeal from a judgment abating a nuisance under the Red Light Abatement Act was served on May 13, and the transcript had not yet been filed when the application for supersedeas was heard the following January, the writ will not be issued.

In Bank.

Action by the People on relation of Hugh B. Bradford, District Attorney of Sacramento County, against Jim Jackson and others, to abate a nuisance under the Red Light Abatement Law. Judgment for relator, and defendants appeal. On petition by appellants for supersedeas. Petition denied.

George E. McCutchen and Ralph H. Lewis, both of Sacramento, for petitioners.

Markham Johnston and Clifford A. Russell, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Sacramento, for relator.

LAWLOR, J. This is a petition on behalf of Jim Jackson and Elizabeth Jackson for a writ of supersedeas directed to the district attorney, clerk, and sheriff of Sacramento county to restrain the execution of a judgment rendered against petitioners by the superior court of that county. Respondent has filed a demurrer to the petition, without briefs or authorities, and no question of fact is raised.

The judgment was rendered in an action instituted by the district attorney of Sacramento county under the "Red Light Abatement Law" (Stats. 1913, p. 20), and ordered that petitioners refrain from maintaining certain described premises for purposes of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution, directed that the occupants thereof be removed, and that the building be closed for the period of one year. From that judgment petitioners have appealed. They now allege that, notwithstanding their appeal, a writ of execution will be issued to the sheriff by virtue of section 949 of the Code of Civil Procedure, hereinafter considered, directing him to "remove all furniture, fixtures, musical instruments, and other movable property from the said premises and building, and sell the same in the manner provided in said judgment," and that the sheriff, unless restrained, will execute the judgment. It may be noted that it is not ordered by the judgment, as required by the statute, that the furniture, fixtures, musical instruments, and other movable property be removed from the premises or sold. However, as the statute provides that the plaintiff's costs and the expenses of enforcing the judgment shall be paid out of the proceeds of such a sale, it may be assumed such a sale will result from the enforcement of the judgment.

Prior to 1921 section 941 of the Code of Civil Procedure provided that—

"The undertaking on appeal must be in writing, and must be executed on the part of the appellant, by at least two sureties, to the effect that the appellant will pay all damages and costs which may be awarded against him on the appeal, or on a dismissal thereof, not exceeding three hundred dollars; or that sum must be deposited with the clerk with whom the judgment or order was entered, to abide the event of the appeal."

Section 949, also amended in 1921, was as follows:

"In cases not provided for in sections nine hundred and forty-two, nine hundred and forty-three, nine hundred and forty-four, and nine hundred and forty-five, the perfecting of an appeal by giving the undertaking or making the deposit mentioned in section nine hundred and forty-one, stays proceedings in the court below upon the judgment or order appealed from, except where it directs the sale of perishable property. * * *"

In 1921 (St. 1921, p. 193) section 941 was so amended as virtually to amount to its repeal as it formerly read, the section as amended having no reference to undertakings on appeal. To section 949 was added the following clause:

"And except, also, where it adjudges a building or place to be a nuisance, and as a part of the judgment in the case orders and directs the closing of the building or place against its use for any purpose for any period of time" (St. 1921, p. 95).

Petitioners contend this section is unconstitutional because it, in practical operation, destroys the right of appeal by making the judgment of the superior court final, and that because of the amendment of section 941, providing for the giving of a bond on appeal, section 949 has become so uncertain as to be unenforceable.

[1] It was held in People v. Laine, 177 Cal. 742, 171 Pac. 941, a case similar to the one at bar, but decided before the above amendment was added to section 949, that an appeal in such an action did not stay execution of that portion of the judgment prohibiting the maintenance of the premises for purposes of lewdness, under the rule that an appeal from a prohibitory injunction does not operate to stay its force. Those parts of the decree directing the removal of persons and property from the premises and the removal and sale of the furniture and fixtures were held to be mandatory and stayed by virtue of the appeal. See Wolf v. Gall, 174 Cal. 140, 162 Pac. 115. The effect of the amendment to section 949 is to except also from the stay of execution, by statutory enactment, the portion of such a decree directing the closing of the building against its use for a period of time. Therefore, the only question presented by petitioners' first point is the authority of the Legislature to except mandatory injunctions from the statutory stay of execution provided by section 949, which incidentally involves the authority of the Legislature to put any condition or restriction on a stay of execution. Such an act is an entirely proper exercise of the legislative power. In Ex parte Queirolo, 119 Cal. 635, 51 Pac. 956, considering the effect of the taking of an appeal upon a judgment in a divorce action, it was declared:

"The effect of an appeal from the judgment, as suggested in Foster v. Superior Court, supra, 115 Cal. 279, is purely a matter of statutory regulation, to be determined by a construction of the statute under which the appeal is taken, and by the terms of which, when clear and unambiguous, we are concluded."

[2] Petitioners have cited Haight v. Gay, 8 Cal. 297, 68 Am. Dec. 323, to the effect that—

"The appellate power of the Supreme Court is given by the fourth section of the sixth article of the Constitution, which expressly empowers this court to issue all writs and process necessary to the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction. The Legislature, therefore, can pass no act impairing the exercise of this appellate power."

We are also referred to other cases containing similar language. It is a sufficient answer to this proposition that the execution of a judgment does not deprive this court of its jurisdiction to determine the correctness of the judgment on appeal, and that this court has authority under the Constitution to issue a writ of supersedeas whenever it is essential to preserve the rights of the parties pending the appeal. The mere fact that the Legislature provides that the taking of an appeal shall not itself stay the execution does not deprive this court of authority to issue a writ of supersedeas. The amendment to section 949 does not, therefore, take away appellants' constitutional right of appeal.

[3] Nor can the contention that, since the amendment of section 941, section 949 has become unintelligible, be sustained. Under the methods of appeal provided before the year 1921, if the appeal was taken under sections 940 and 941, it was necessary for the appellant to file a bond of $300 for costs in order to perfect the appeal. The appeal then operated to stay all proceedings under the judgment by reason of the provisions of section 949, unless an additional bond was required under sections 942, 943, 944, or 945. Under the alternative method of appeal provided by section 941b, whereby an appeal might be taken by merely filing a notice with the clerk, it was held that an appeal bond was unnecessary (Theisen v. Matthai, 165 Cal. 249, 131 Pac. 747), and that proceedings under a judgment were stayed by the taking of an appeal unless an additional stay bond was required by sections 942, 943, 944, or 945 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was obviously the purpose of the amendments of 1921 (Stats. 1921, p. 193) to alter this situation, in which if the notice was given under section 941 a bond of $300 was required, but none if it was given under 941b.

The effect of the repeal of section 941b and the amendment of section 940 was to make the mere filing of a notice with the clerk effective to take the appeal in all cases. By reason of the amendment of section 940, removing the requirement of a stay bond to perfect an appeal, section 941, prescribing the bond required, was no longer necessary. It having been in effect repealed by the amendment of section 940, the section numbered 941 was used for a different subject.

Section 949 was amended in 1921, as already pointed out, by the insertion of the provision that a stay of execution under section 941 was not applicable to a judgment for the abatement of a nuisance. Before its amendment, upon perfecting an appeal under section 940 and giving a bond under section 941, a judgment was stayed; upon perfecting an appeal under section 941b by giving the notice of appeal, a judgment was stayed without an appeal bond. People v. Laine, 177 Cal. 742, 745, 171 Pac. 941. In view of these facts, the subsequent amendment of sections 940 and 941 and the repeal of section 941b merely give to section 949 the meaning that the perfecting of an appeal, without a bond, is sufficient to stay execution of a judgment except when a special bond is required under sections 942, 943, 944 or 945. It follows that the effect of the amendment of 1921 to section 949 is that an appeal, with or without a bond, does not stay execution of the judgment in such a proceeding as the one at bar.

[4] As already indicated, this court, by the amendment to section 949, is not deprived of its authority to issue a writ of supersedeas to stay execution. It remains to consider whether in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction in the case at bar it should issue such a writ, which does not issue of right, but only when in the judgment of the court it is necessary to protect the rights of the parties on appeal. Luckenbach v. Laer (Cal. Sup.) 204 Pac. 591. It has been held that a writ of supersedeas will not be granted where there has been an unreasonable delay in taking an appeal (Bauer v. Parker, 47 App. Div. 623, 61 N. Y. Supp. 1021), or where the appeal is merely for the purpose of delay (see cases cited in 3 C. J. 1291, note).

[5] The Legislature by enacting section 949 has indicated as its opinion that there should be no stay of an action to abate the character of nuisance complained of in the case at bar, and this court ought not to lend its aid to the continuance of such business, in the absence of some showing of merit in the appeal and some showing of diligence in the prosecution of the appeal.

[6] In the case at bar the notice of appeal was served on May 13, 1922. The order to show cause upon the application for a writ of supersedeas was made May 22, 1922, ordering a stay of proceedings pending a decision upon the application, but the transcript on appeal is not yet filed. Under these circumstances no sufficient reason appears why the writ should be issued.

The petition is denied.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; WILBUR, J.; WASTE, J.; LENNON, J.; WARD, J.

---

190 Cal. 243

McCARTHY v. MADISON et ux.

(S. F. 9910.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1922.)

Husband and wife ⊂⊃232(3)—Evidence held to support finding that wife did not sign joint and several note as surety only.

In an action on a note executed by husband and wife in consideration of earlier note of the husband alone, and in form joint and several, evidence held sufficient to support the finding that the wife did not sign as surety only.

Shaw, C. J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by Thomas B. McCarthy against Charles Madison and Mrs. Jessie Madison, his wife. From a judgment for plaintiff, the wife appeals. Affirmed.

Powell & Dow, of San Francisco, for appellant.

R. H. Cross, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. Plaintiff, Thomas B. McCarthy, commenced this action on September 21, 1915, to recover the amount of a promissory note executed by defendant, Mrs. Jessie Madison, and her husband, Charles Madison, who was formerly a defendant in this action, and who died on June 21, 1917. The note is as follows:

"$6132.50. San Francisco, Cal., Sept. 22, 1911.

"One day after date for value received we or either of us promise to pay to the order of Thomas B. McCarthy at San Francisco, California, six thousand one hundred thirty-two dollars and fifty cents, with interest thereon at the rate of seven per centum per annum, from date until paid, principal and interest payable in United States gold coin only; said interest payable monthly and if not paid as it becomes due, to be added to the principal and become a part thereof, and to bear interest at the same rate. In case suit is brought thereon to compel the payment of this note or any portion thereof, the payers promise to pay costs thereof and such attorney's fees as may be incurred. Chas. Madison.

"Mrs. Jessie Madison.

"Witness R. H. Cross."

On December 30, 1919, the action was dismissed as to defendant Charles Madison.

Defendant's answer was filed on July 3, 1918, and in it she alleged she was induced to sign the note by the threats, menace, and intimidation of plaintiff and his attorneys and that there was no consideration for its execution. On April 16, 1920, she filed an amendment to the answer, in which she alleged she signed the note as surety at the request of defendant, Charles Madison, who was the principal, and that this fact was known to plaintiff and his attorneys. As a supplemental answer or separate defense, she alleged that the release of defendant Charles Madison operated to discharge and release her as surety from all obligation on the note and she pleaded such release as a defense to plaintiff's claim.

Upon the trial the court found that the allegations of the answer were untrue and that defendant executed and delivered the note in consideration of the forbearance of plaintiff to sue on a prior note executed in plaintiff's favor by defendant Charles Madison alone, in consideration of its surrender and cancellation and the extension of the time for the payment of the indebtedness. Pursuant to the findings, judgment was entered for plaintiff, from which defendant takes this appeal.

Appellant's contention is that the evidence shows defendant signed the note as surety only, that the findings to the contrary are therefore erroneous, and that the release of defendant Charles Madison operated to release her. Supporting this contention is her own testimony that at the time the note was signed "Mr. Cross wished me to sign the note also, so that if Mr. Madison should come into possession of any property he couldn't turn it over to me. I simply signed as a surety," that with reference to the matter of suretyship "they wished me to sign with Mr. Madison so that I wouldn't have—so that he couldn't turn any property over to me. * * * I only signed as a surety on the note." In a deposition taken before the issue of suretyship was raised by the amendment to the answer, Cross had testified as follows:

"He [defendant Charles Madison] said that he could not pay it, and could not give any security except the indorsement of his wife, Mrs. Jessie Madison, the defendant in this action. * * * Q. Did he say he would undertake to get her to go as his security at that time? A. Yes, and told me she was in the city. * * * Q. Did he suggest to you that she might go security on this note, or did you suggest it to him? A. He suggested it to me. * * * Q. And you had ascertained either through Mr. Madison or by some other means, that she had property, or might have property, and you felt that she would be sufficient, or some, security on that note? A. That is right. * * * Q. At the time the note was signed, did you explain to Mrs. Madison what it was for? A. Yes, sir. Q. What did you say? A. I asked her if she understood what she was doing, and she said she did; that Mr. Madison had explained it to her. I said that Mr. McCarthy held Madison's note and was intending to commence suit upon it, that we required him to give some security, and he had offered her as security on a new note."

He explained his use of the words "security" and "surety" by stating that at the time the deposition was taken the question of suretyship had not been raised, that he was not speaking with reference to it, and was not using those words in a technical sense.

Opposed to the foregoing evidence is the fact that the note was in form joint and several and the testimony of appellant that at the time the note was signed defendant Charles Madison met her on the street and they went to Cross' office together; that there was very little conversation; that Cross asked if they were ready to sign the note, and she said, "Yes"; that she stated to Cross that defendant Charles Madison had told her what the note was for; that he mentioned the fact that there was a prior note; that Cross asked her if she fully understood what she was doing; and that she answered that Mr. Madison had explained what the note was for. She stated this was about all the conversation that occurred. Cross testified that respondent had held an unpaid promissory note of defendant Charles Madison which he had unsuccessfully tried to collect; that defendant Charles Madison had offered to give a new note signed by himself and his wife; that the matter had been placed entirely in his hands by respondent; and that appellant's account of the signing of the second note was practically correct. He further stated that the old note was delivered to defendant Charles Madison when the one of September 22, 1911, was executed; that he did not recall anything having been said concerning the note being given to prevent defendant Charles Madison from transferring property to appellant; and that nothing whatever was said about appellant being a surety for her husband. This testimony presents a conflict on the question as to the capacity in which appellant signed the note.

In Casey v. Gibbons, 136 Cal. 368, 371, 68 Pac. 1032, it was held that in attempting to show, under section 2832 of the Civil Code, that one has signed an obligation as surety only, it is necessary to allege and prove that the payee not only knew of the fact of suretyship, but consented to deal with the signer in the capacity of surety. There is nothing in the evidence in the case at bar to show that respondent or his agent Cross recognized appellant as a surety merely or consented that she act as such. Although in previous discussions the subject of her acting as a surety may have been considered, her own statement that she signed as such is the only evidence that that was the position she assumed when the note was finally executed. The evidence amply supports the finding that she was not a surety.

Because of this conclusion, it is unnecessary to consider the point that appellant, as a surety, was released by the release of defendant Charles Madison.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SLOANE, J.; WILBUR, J.; WASTE, J.; LENNON, J.

I dissent: SHAW, C. J.

(190 Cal. 252)

JONES v. O'TOOLE et al. (S. F. 10414.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 5, 1923.)

1. Evidence ⟸83(2)—Civil service commission presumed to have promulgated rule required by statute.

Where the civil service commission had credited a patrolman with three additional points in his standing on the eligible list because he was a veteran, it will be presumed that the commission had promulgated a rule for such credit under an amendment to the City Charter ratified by the Legislature January 13, 1921 (St. 1921, p. 1797), § 22, requiring the commission to establish preference for veterans by giving, among other preferences, a credit of three points to veterans in the case of promotional examinations.

2. Mandamus ⟸154(2)—Allegation action was unlawful is only a conclusion.

An allegation in the petition for writ of mandamus that the action of respondents was "taken unlawfully and in violation of the rights of petitioner" is only a conclusion of law.

3. Municipal corporations ⟸176(3) — Statute giving preference to veterans in promotion applies to existing laws.

The preference given to veterans in case of promotional examinations under the amendment to the San Francisco Charter, approved January 13, 1921 (St. 1921, p. 1797), § 22, can be given on lists of examinations already taken without the requiring of new examinations.

4. Constitutional law ⟸102(1) — Patrolman has no vested right to place on civil service register.

A patrolman has no vested right to his place on the civil service register of those eligible to promotion, which cannot be taken away by an amendment to the City Charter.

In Bank.

Petition by C. L. Jones for a writ of mandamus, prayed to be directed to John J. O'Toole and others, as members of the Civil Service Commission of San Francisco, to require the restoration of petitioner to his proper rank on the list of patrolmen eligible for promotion. Writ denied.

Andrew F. Burke, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

George Lull, City Atty., and Maurice T. Dooling, Jr., Asst. City Atty., both of San Francisco, for respondents.

Wm. P. Golden, of San Francisco, amicus curiæ.

SHAW, J. This is a proceeding in mandamus to compel the respondents, as members of the civil service commission of the city and county of San Francisco, to restore the petitioner to his alleged proper rank on the eligible list of patrolmen eligible for promotion to the position of corporal in the police department and to certify him to the police commission of said city and county of San Francisco for promotion to the position of corporal in the police service of said city.

The board of civil service commissioners, on August 3, 1920, made a list of persons eligible for promotion to the office of corporal in the police service, ranking them on such list in the order of their relative excellency. James Casey, then a patrolman in the employ of the city, had a rating on said list, at that time, less than that of C. L. Jones. Jones was No. 29 thereon, and Casey was No. 31 thereon. On September 12, 1922, the civil service commission, on ascertaining that he was a veteran of the war of 1917, added 3 per cent. to the rating of Casey thereon, thereby raising his percentage to an amount greater than that of the petitioner. It is this action that the petitioner seeks to have canceled.

An amendment to the charter was ratified by the Legislature on January 13, 1921, which provides as follows (section 22 [St. 1921, p. 1797]):

"The civil service commission shall by rule establish preference for veterans as follows: In the case of entrance examinations to establish eligible lists in the police and fire departments, veterans who become eligible for appointment by attaining the passing mark established for the examination, and whose service as veterans exceeds three months, shall be classified on such eligible lists in the relative order of the individual ratings attained and ahead of all non-veterans passing such examinations, and shall be eligible for appointment on the basis of such order of standing on such eligible lists. This preference shall expire five years after the ratification of this amendment."

"In the case of all other entrance examinations, veterans with thirty days or more of service, and widows of veterans who were married to such veterans on or before November 11, 1918, who become eligible for appointment by attaining the passing mark established for the examination, shall be allowed an additional credit of five points, which shall be added to the percentage attained in such examinations by such veterans, and they shall be placed on eligible lists and be eligible for appointment in the order and on the basis of the percentages attained by them in examinations after such credit of five points shall have been added. All ties shall be decided in favor of veterans; provided, however, in the case of promotional examinations a credit of three points shall be allowed to veterans and widows of veterans who were married to such veterans on or before November 11, 1918, who shall have been in the city and county service prior to July 1, 1920."

The civil service commissioners, in undertaking the action which they did, were assuming to act under the provisions of said amendment, and added 3 per cent. to the rating of Casey on account of the fact that he was a veteran of the late war and was already employed as a patrolman.

We think from the provisions of the charter that they had the power to do this. Section 7 of article 13 of the Charter of the City and County (St. 1899, p. 351) has the following provision:

"From the returns of the examiners, or from examinations made by the commissioners, the commissioners shall prepare a register for each grade or class of positions in the classified service of the city and county of the persons whose general average standing upon examination for such grade or class is not less than the minimum fixed by the rules of the commissioners, and who are otherwise eligible. Such persons shall take rank upon the register as candidates in the order of their relative excellence, as determined by examination, without reference to priority of time of examination."

The only allegation concerning the manner in which the civil service commission carried out this provision of the charter is that about September 12, 1922, "under the assumed authority of said section 22 of article 13 of said Charter, but unlawfully and in violation of the rights of the petitioner and of said F. X. Latulipe, A. L. Christiansen, and H. H. Ludolph, added 3 per cent. to the percentage secured by said James Casey on his examination as hereinbefore alleged, and thereupon credited said Casey with a percentage of 84.54 per cent., and raised his rank on said register above that of each of the other persons named in paragraph 4 hereof, and gave to said Casey a rank of No. 16½ on said register."

[1-3] This would all be in strict accordance with section 22 aforesaid, provided the commissioners had made a rule that they would carry out the said amendment in that manner. The making of a rule to that effect would seem to be almost a superfluity if the amendment embodied in section 22 furnishes rule enough. It declares that said credit shall be given to veterans asking for promotion, and gives the commission no power to refuse. But, however that may be, official duty is presumed to have been performed, and as there is no allegation that they did not make a rule to that effect, nor any argument based on the fact that they did not do so, before taking the action alleged, it will be presumed that they did so. The allegation that they assumed to act under section 22 must be taken in connection with the presumption that they made the rule preceding their action. There is no return made by the civil service commission, but it has presented the case to this court upon a demurrer to the petition. Hence all the legal steps which they are required to take prior to their making the order complained of will be supposed to have been taken, except in so far as the petition denies that they have taken them. The allegation in the petition that the action was taken "unlawfully and in violation of the rights of the petitioner" is nothing more than a conclusion of law, and does not add anything to the force of the allegation. It was said in support of the contention of the petitioner that the amendment is not retroactive and that it was ineffectual to deprive him of his supposed right of preference by reason of being on the eligible list before the amendment was adopted.

This is not the giving of a retroactive effect to the amendment, but is merely making it take effect at once upon its adoption. Accordingly, the persons whose percentage is thus raised should be given rank upon the register according to their new percentage, and this is what the commissioners did. We can see nothing unlawful in this action. It would be a proper and right construction of the amendment that it was intended to give the veterans on the existing register who had not been given the percentage allowed thereby, to receive it at once and enter the same upon the old register, in which event they would have their rating increased accordingly. They would then come under the provision that they take rank upon the register "without reference to priority of time of examination," as provided in section 7 aforesaid.

[4] There may be a vested right in an office, once the appointment is received, but the petitioner was not vested with any right, which an amendment to the charter could not take away, by virtue of having his name placed on the register prior to the appointment.

The demurrer to the petition is sustained and the petition for a writ of mandate is denied.

We concur: LENNON, J.; WASTE, J.; WARD, J.; LAWLOR, J.

WILBUR, J. I concur.

Section 8 of article 13 of the Charter, as amended by St. 1913, p. 1613, deals with the question of promotion, and is as follows:

"The commissioners shall provide for promotion in the classified service on the basis of ascertained merit and standing upon examination; and shall provide, wherever practicable, that vacancies shall be filled by promotion. All examinations for promotions shall be competitive among such members of the next lower rank, as established by the commissioners, as desire to submit themselves to such examinations. The commissioners shall submit to the appointing power the names of not exceeding three applicants having the highest rating for each promotion."

Section 22 of article 13 of the Charter, relating to preference to be given to veterans upon entrance examinations, contains the following:

"All ties shall be decided in favor of veterans; provided, however, in the case of promotional examinations a credit of three points shall be allowed to veterans and widows of veterans who were married to such veterans on or before November 11, 1918, who shall have been in the city and county service prior to July 1, 1920."

Assuming that section 4 and section 7 of article 13 apply to applicants for promotion and that the commissioners are required to prepare a register "for each grade or class of positions in the classified service of the city and county of the persons whose general average standing upon examination for such grade or class is not less than the minimum fixed by the rules of the commissioners, and who are otherwise eligible," and that "such persons shall take rank upon the register as candidates in the order of their relative excellence, as determined by examination, without reference to priority of time of examination," the question submitted for our decision is whether the relative rank of candidates upon the register can be altered without an entirely new examination, wherein all the candidates upon the register receive the credit given on said examination and the veterans taking such examination are allowed 3 per cent. in addition thereto.

Of course, it might be true that by the holding of a new examination the relative position of eligible candidates upon the register might be changed and that veterans so examined might lose sufficient credits upon the examination to offset the credit given to them as veterans. It is clear, however, that the civil service commission, in giving the credit to veterans upon the eligible list on the register, has provided "for promotion in the classified service on the basis of ascertained merit and standing upon examination" within the meaning of the charter as amended, which provides a new method of ascertaining the merits of candidates, namely, by giving a credit of 3 per cent. to veterans.

---

190 Cal. 263

BAKER et al. v. MILLER. (L. A. 6930.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 5, 1923.)

1. Pleading ⟸8(6)—Complaint in suit for specific performance, alleging that contract was just and fair held demurrable as stating mere conclusions.

A complaint in a suit to compel specific performance reading, "at or about the date of the contract the estate of said deceased was of the appraised value of $22,753, and said contract was in all respects just and fair and liberal in its provisions in favor of said defendant," held demurrable; there being no attempt to state facts, but mere conclusions of law with no facts to support them.

2. Specific performance ⟸121(9)—Evidence held sufficient to sustain finding that contract was fair, liberal, and in favor of defendant.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that contract was fair, just, and liberal in its provisions in favor of defendant.

3. Appeal and error ⟸1170(3)—Court will not set aside judgment for error in pleading unless error results in miscarriage of justice.

Where a complaint was properly demurred to, but the demurrer was overruled, and it did not appear whether defendant demurred as a matter of form only, and thereafter a fair trial was had, the appellate court will not set aside the judgment, in view of the Constitution forbidding reversal where substantial rights are not affected.

4. Specific performance ⟸56—Stipulation in a contract held to mean defendant should pay plaintiff $1,700 in event defendant could not obtain title for her, but not to make performance optional.

An added stipulation to a contract, reading, "If the title thereto is not secured for her [plaintiff] as herein provided, she shall be paid for or in lieu of said lot and premises $1,700 out of the two said insurance policies," held not intended to make performance optional, but defendant was obligated to do all in her power to secure title to the lot and convey it to plaintiff, and should pay plaintiff $1,700 in the event defendant could not obtain clear title.

5. Descent and distribution ⟸84—Statute forbidding executors and administrators from purchasing estate property held not to prevent heirs from making contract for division, though one of them is administrator.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1576, forbidding an executor or administrator from purchasing directly or indirectly any property of the estate he represents, or be interested in any sale thereof, does not prevent the heirs from making a contract for the division of the estate, even though one of them is also the administrator; the statute being merely a declaration of the principle of law existing before its enactment that a trustee must not deal with himself.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Wellborn, Judge.

Action by Cora Lee Baker and G. R. Baker against Orrilla Z. Miller, for specific performance. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Kemp & Clewett, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Geo. E. Cryer, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WASTE, J. The defendant appeals from a judgment and decree in specific performance.

Plaintiff alleged and the court found that

Art O. Miller died intestate, leaving an estate in the county of Los Angeles consisting of real and personal property. Cora Lee Baker (who has since married, and whom we will refer to as the "plaintiff") was the surviving widow, and the defendant, Orrilla Z. Miller, was the surviving mother of said deceased. They were his sole heirs at law. In due time plaintiff was appointed and qualified as administratrix of the estate. The defendant, who was the principal creditor of the deceased, filed claims against his estate approximating $8,500. She also held a second lien upon certain of the real property, which appears to have been the home of the decedent and the plaintiff. The deceased was further indebted to the defendant for other sums of money, to secure the payment of which he had during his lifetime assigned certain policies of life insurance.

Before the filing of an inventory and appraisement of the estate the plaintiff and defendant entered into a written contract, by the terms of which plaintiff agreed to at once resign as administratrix of the estate in favor of O. A. Miller, son of the defendant, and to request and secure his appointment as administrator of said estate. By the terms of the agreement plaintiff was to receive the sum of $100 as her commissions as administratrix of the estate to the date of the contract, and the sum of $500 in cash, and the real property hereinbefore mentioned, together with certain personal property, defendant to release the real property from her indebtedness, and to reduce the first lien thereon to the sum of $1,000, the defendant thereupon to receive the rest, residue, and remainder of the estate. Plaintiff also agreed to assist the defendant "in all respects in and by the exercise of her rights as widow and heir of said deceased in all the steps in the proceedings advised and desired to be taken in the administration of the estate," and stipulated that defendant might hold as security for the performance of the agreement the policies of insurance assigned by the deceased to the defendant as collateral security for the indebtedness already mentioned. In pursuance of this agreement the plaintiff filed an inventory and appraisement of the estate, and resigned as administratrix, the son of the defendant being appointed in her place.

Plaintiff performed all the conditions of the contract on her part to be performed. The defendant did not pay the $500 in cash, did not reduce, or offer to reduce, the mortgage on the real property, did not convey, or offer to convey, the title hereto to the plaintiff, but, on the contrary, she caused the property, which had in the meantime been set aside to the plaintiff as a probate homestead, to be sold under the terms of her trust deed for the alleged nonpayment of the indebtedness secured thereby. She purchased the property at the trustee's sale for the sum of $300, and thereupon proceeded to evict plaintiff's tenant in possession. This real property has since been sold by the agreement of the parties, and the proceeds of the sale deposited in court, pending the determination of this action.

Defendant alleged, and sought to prove, that she was induced to enter into the contract through the false and fraudulent misrepresentations of the plaintiff, and that by reason of the insolvency of the deceased his estate was in that condition which rendered the contract without consideration. It appeared that the negotiations between the plaintiff and the defendant were mainly conducted by an attorney of the defendant's own choosing, who continued to act as the legal advisor of the substituted administrator. The plaintiff, so the trial court found, was inexperienced in matters of business, and had practically no knowledge of the affairs of her deceased husband's estate, and that the defendant and her son, O. A. Miller, were at all times better informed than plaintiff as to the condition and value of the estate, and that the defendant was not induced to enter into the contract by any false misrepresentations or fraud on the part of the plaintiff. As to the alleged insolvency of the estate, it appears that the business affairs of the decedent at the time of his death were very much involved. There is considerable testimony from which the defendant argues that the estate was insolvent. The trial court found to the contrary, and we think the evidence sustains the finding.

[1] Appellant contends that the complaint fails to state a cause of action, in that there is no allegation of fact tending to show that the consideration provided for in the contract sought to be enforced is adequate, or that the contract is just and reasonable to the defendant. The only averment in that connection is that "at or about the date of the contract the estate of said deceased was of the appraised value of $22,753, and said contract was in all respects just and fair and liberal in its provisions in favor of said defendant." Aside from the statement of the value of the estate, there is not here any attempt to state facts at all—nothing more than the general language of the statute, which amounts to a mere conclusion of law without facts to support it. Joyce v. Tomasini, 168 Cal. 234, 237, 142 Pac. 67; Stiles v. Cain, 134 Cal. 170, 172, 66 Pac. 231. If it be contended that the statement of facts in the complaint, including the contract, set out in exact words, together with an allegation of the appraised valuation of the estate, constitute an inferential averment not amounting to an absolute want of facts, the cases relied upon to support the contention merely hold that if, "no demurrer is interposed, the pleading will be held good after judgment."

Estate of Behrens, 130 Cal. 416, 418, 62 Pac. 603, 604. Viewed as a whole, we feel there is no escape from the conclusion that the complaint is insufficient, and the general demurrer interposed by the defendant should have been sustained. We are not inclined, however, to reverse the judgment for that reason.

[2] Whether the defendant called the attention of the court below to the infirmity of plaintiff's complaint, or only demurred as a matter of form, does not appear. After the demurrer was overruled, however, she answered, denying generally and specifically the averment of the complaint attempting to allege the adequacy of the consideration and the fairness of the contract. The greater part of the testimony was directed in support of her contention that the consideration was inadequate, and that as to her the contract was unjust. The trial court found that the defendant could fulfill the contract mentioned in plaintiff's complaint, and that the aggregate amount to be paid by defendant for the right acquired by her under the contract would not exceed $2,000. The plaintiff relinquished absolutely all claims to the estate of her deceased husband, in return for the homestead, with its incumbrances reduced to the amount specified in the agreement, and a few articles of personal property. She released her claim to the further fees of herself and her attorney for administering the estate, relinquished her right for a family allowance, and for an order setting apart to her all of the personal property of the estate exempt from execution, including the proceeds of certain of the insurance policies on the life of the decedent, provided the annual insurance premiums paid thereon did not amount to more than $500. The estate was not insolvent. With all of the evidence before it, the trial court found that the contract between the parties was fair and just and liberal in its provisions in favor of the defendant. The evidence, we think, amply supports the findings.

[3] The case presented is one which falls squarely within the constitutional inhibition that no judgment shall be set aside for any error as to any matter of pleading, unless after an examination of the entire case, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

[4] Two other points relied upon by the appellant for a reversal were satisfactorily disposed of by the District Court of Appeal of the Second Appellate District, Division 2, as follows:

"After the principal contract was signed, it appears from a copy of the contract set forth in the complaint that the parties added a further paragraph and appended their signatures thereto. It is claimed that this addenda to the contract makes it optional with defendant to pay plaintiff $1,700 instead of conveying the real property in question and otherwise carrying out the provisions of the main contract. The added paragraph is to the effect that 'if the title thereto is not secured for her [plaintiff] as herein provided she shall be paid for or in lieu of said lot and premises $1,700 out of the two said insurance policies,' etc. We do not think this stipulation was intended to relieve defendant of the obligation of doing all that might be in her power to secure title to the lot and then conveying it to plaintiff. The fair construction of the language employed is that defendant should pay plaintiff $1,700 in the event of being unable to obtain clear title.

"Defendant also contends that this contract is void under the provision of section 1576 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which reads: 'No executor or administrator must, directly or indirectly, purchase any property of the estate he represents, nor must he be interested in any sale.' The case of O'Connor v. Flynn, 57 Cal. 293, and others cited by appellant are not in point. They are instances of an administrator buying property of the estate. The rule against such conduct does not prevent heirs making a contract for the division of the estate even though one of them is also the administrator. This section of the Code of Civil Procedure is only declaratory of the principle of law existing before its enactment, that a trustee must not deal with himself. Burris v. Adams et al., 96 Cal. 664, 31 Pac. 565."

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; WILBUR, J.; WARD, J.; LAWLOR, J.; LENNON, J.

---

190 Cal. 278

In re BELSHAW'S ESTATE.

CLARK et al. v. OXNER et al.

(S. F. 10167.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 5, 1923. Rehearing Denied Feb. 1, 1923.)

1. Descent and distribution ⇐14—Kindred of half blood not excluded from inheriting, though estate came to intestate by descent as gift from ancestor.

Civ. Code, § 1394, providing that "kindred of the half blood inherit equally with those of the whole blood in the same degree unless the inheritance comes to the intestate by descent, devise or gift of some one of his ancestors, in which case all those who are not of the blood of such ancestors must be excluded from such inheritance," is applicable only where there are kindred of equal degree to those of the half blood, and, in view of section 1386, subd. 5, kindred of the third degree, though only of half blood may succeed when the next in line of succession is of kindred more remote than the third, and this is true, though the decedent obtained by descent property from both mother and father and the half blood was on father's side.

2. Courts ⊂⊃93(3)—Rule of property not disturbed.

Where an interpretation of a statute has become a rule of property, it will not be disturbed, though the holding may be against the weight of authority.

3. Descent and distribution ⊂⊃22—Half-sister of decedent's father is kindred of half blood.

A half-sister of decedent's father, having one common ancestor with decedent, is kindred of the half blood.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; R. H. Latimer, Judge.

In the matter of the Estate of Charles Mortimer Belshaw, deceased. Proceeding to determine heirship by Elizabeth Oxner Clark and others against Bert Oxner and others. From judgment, plaintiffs and all defendants except Violetta H. Purchase appeal. Affirmed.

Charles M. Peck, and Henry C. McPike, both of Oakland, and F. P. Webster, Gerald C. Halsey, and Frederick T. Leo, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

M. R. Jones and Creed, Jones & Dall, all of San Francisco (W. K. Powell, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. This is a proceeding in the nature of an action to determine heirship, under section 1664 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in the matter of the estate of Charles M. Belshaw, deceased, who died on November 23, 1919. A testamentary disposition of all his property to his first wife having failed because of her death before his own, his estate is to be distributed according to the rules of succession applicable to cases of intestacy.

[1] Mortimer W. Belshaw, decedent's father, died April 28, 1898, and his estate was distributed one-half to his wife, Jane E. Belshaw, and one-half to decedent. Jane E. Belshaw died June 26, 1900, whereupon the property she had inherited from Mortimer W. Belshaw also passed to decedent.

The sixteen plaintiffs and defendant Burton J. Oxner are second cousins of decedent, in the sixth degree of relationship to him. They are descendants of three sisters and two brothers of Conrad Oxner, decedent's maternal grandfather. Defendant Violetta H. Purchase, formerly Violetta Belshaw, is a half-sister of Mortimer W. Belshaw, decedent's father. She is a daughter of Mortimer W. Belshaw's father by a second wife and is in the third degree of relationship to decedent. The other ten defendants are descendants of two sisters of Mary Rhodes, decedent's paternal grandmother, who was the mother of Mortimer W. Belshaw, but not of Violetta H. Purchase. These defendants are cousins of decedent in the fifth, sixth, and seventh degree of relationship.

The trial court found that "defendant Violetta H. Purchase is a kindred of the third degree to Charles Mortimer Belshaw, deceased, on the paternal side and that said Violetta H. Purchase is the sole heir at law of said Charles Mortimer Belshaw, deceased." From judgment entered pursuant thereto, plaintiffs and all of the defendants except Violetta H. Purchase appeal.

It is conceded by all the parties that the distribution of the estate is to be governed by subdivision 5 of section 1386 of the Civil Code, which provides:

"If the decedent leaves neither issue, husband, wife, father, mother, brother, nor sister, the estate must go to the next of kin, in equal degree, excepting that, when there are two or more collateral kindred, in equal degree, but claiming through different ancestors, those who claim through the nearest ancestor must be preferred to those claiming through an ancestor more remote."

The principal question presented on this appeal is whether respondent, Violetta H. Purchase, being a half-sister of decedent's father, is inhibited, under section 1394 of the Civil Code, from inheriting that portion of decedent's estate which came to him from his mother. That section is as follows:

"Kindred of the half blood inherit equally with those of the whole blood in the same degree, unless the inheritance come to the intestate by descent, devise, or gift of some one of his ancestors, in which case all those who are not of the blood of such ancestors must be excluded from such inheritance."

Violetta H. Purchase is not of the blood of decedent's mother, Jane E. Belshaw.

Appellants contend the second clause of section 1394, the portion following the word "unless," applies to all cases wherein next of kin of the half blood claim the property which has come to a decedent from an ancestor not of the blood of the claimants, and that its effect is to exclude such kindred from the inheritance. Respondent's position is that the second clause is operative only when there are kindred of the whole blood of the same degree as the kindred of the half blood and that kindred of the half blood inherit such property in preference to those of the whole blood of more remote degree.

Estate of Smith, 131 Cal. 433, 63 Pac. 729, 82 Am. St. Rep. 358, is cited by respondent as determining this proposition in her favor. In that case the deceased, who died intestate, inherited the property distributed from her father. She left surviving her her husband and two half sisters on the mother's side. It was decided the half sisters were entitled to share the estate with the husband under the provisions of subdivision two of section 1386 of the Civil Code. The court held that the word "unless" should be given the same meaning as "except" and that the last clause—

"can therefore apply only to the class described in the first, or, in other words, to the class from which it constitutes an exception, which is, kindred 'in the same degree'" and that "the effect of the provision is therefore simply to subdivide each of the classes as determined by degree of relationship into two classes, namely, those of the full and those of the half blood, and in each class to postpone the latter to the former."

Appellants insist the decision in that case should not be followed for the reason that it placed a wrong interpretation on section 1394, and it is further claimed the remarks concerning that section were obiter dictum. Exhaustive arguments are presented for the purpose of showing wherein the court erred in arriving at the conclusion therein announced, it being contended by appellants that the natural and ordinary meaning of section 1394 is that it should apply to all cases where estates are claimed by kindred of the half blood; that the second clause contains a declaration of a general policy of exclusion of the half blood from ancestral property and not a rule to be applied to an unusual state of facts, as when there are kindred of the half blood and whole blood in the same degree; that the construction contended for by appellants is in harmony with the provisions of the statute regulating succession wherever attention is given to the source of a decedent's title, such as subdivisions six and seven of section 1386; that the construction placed on the section by respondent limits the application of the second clause to cases where there are kindred of the whole blood and of the half blood in the same degree, without a corresponding limitation of the first clause; that is, it allows kindred of the half blood to inherit the property in the first place without the existence of others of the whole blood in the same degree. It is stated that "wherever the first clause of section 1394 authorizes the half blood to take, the second clause excludes the half blood not of the blood of the ancestor from taking ancestral property" and that respondent's "only hope is that the first clause enables her to take as next of kin without limitation, and that a restricted application be given to the second clause confining it to the next of kin 'in the same degree.'"

After a careful consideration we are of the opinion we must adhere to the decision in Estate of Smith, supra. It may first be said the statements therein construing section 1394 were not obiter dictum. It was necessary in that case to determine whether section 1394 excluded all kindred of the half blood not of the blood of the ancestor from inheriting ancestral property, for if such were its effect, the half sisters of the decedent in that case would have received nothing, notwithstanding they were within a class mentioned in section 1386 as entitled to inherit. In order to decide whether or not it had such an effect, the court was required to interpret the section in order to determine whether it applied in that case.

The court there adopted the interpretation placed upon similar statutes by the Supreme Court of Michigan in Ryan v. Andrews, 21 Mich. 229, 234; Rowley v. Stray, 32 Mich. 70; and by that of Indiana in Robertson v. Burrell, 40 Ind. 336. Two cases reaching contrary conclusions (Perkins v. Simonds, 28 Wis. 90, and Kely v. McGuire, 15 Ark. 555) were distinguished, it being stated that subsequently the former was in effect overruled. An extended discussion of those cases and the merits of the court's comments concerning them is unnecessary. The question presented here has arisen in several other jurisdictions under statutes having the same general effect as section 1394 of the Civil Code. Such statutes are usually regarded as enabling laws, conferring on kindred of the half blood a right not theretofore enjoyed to inherit equally with those of the whole blood, those of the half blood being excluded from the inheritance at common law. 1 Cooley's Blackstone (4th Ed.) p. 614. In a majority of decisions the courts have construed the exception referring to ancestral property as excluding in every case all kindred of the half blood not of the blood of the ancestor, the construction favored by appellants. Perkins v. Simonds, supra; Kelly's Heirs v. McGuire, supra; Den v. Searing, 8 N. J. Law, 349; Conkling v. Brown, 57 Barb. (N. Y.) 276; Amy v. Amy, 12 Utah, 278, 42 Pac. 1121; Cox v. Clark, 93 Ala. 400, 9 South. 457, wherein it was held that, but for a special provision not contained in the other statutes, the court would have held all kindred of the half blood excluded. Cutter v. Waddingham, 22 Mo. 206; Rotenbach v. Young (Sup.) 196 N. Y. Supp. 220. But in the case of Ryan v. Andrews, supra, it was said:

"The obvious and natural connection of the various provisions would confine the operation of the rule of exclusion to those cases where there is more than one person in the same degree of kinship, and where they are not all relatives of the blood of the ancestor from whom the estate is derived. This construction gives the property in all cases to the nearest kindred, but excludes such as are not of a particular stock. It avoids the incongruity of passing over near kindred for those who are remote, and satisfies all the words of the section, while it prevents very serious mischiefs. We think, therefore, that under the statute the estate can, under this section, never go to any one else but the nearest of kin, according to the degrees of the civil law. If there is but a single next relative, he or she will take the whole estate without reference to whether the kindred is on the side of one parent or the other. If there are several next of kin, and they are not all related on the same side, then only such of them will take as are of the blood of the ancestor from whom the estate was derived."

In Rowley v. Stray, supra, it was held the statute meant that "when the inheritance falls to a certain designated class of persons, these will share it equally, unless the estate was ancestral, in which case the half blood not of the blood of the ancestor shall be excluded."

[2] The latter interpretation was adopted in Estate of Smith, supra, and, although the weight of authority may be opposed to such a construction, it cannot be said it is not without precedent or that it does not give a reasonable effect to the language of the statue. See, also, In re Pearsons, 110 Cal. 525, 42 Pac. 960. We therefore see no cause for overruling that case or departing from its interpretation of the statute, which has become a rule of property. Estate of Nigro, 149 Cal. 702, 87 Pac. 384.

Appellants attempt to distinguish Ryan v. Andrews, supra, and Rowley v. Stray, supra, cited as authority in Estate of Smith, supra, on the ground that in Rowley v. Stray, supra, it was said:

"Ours is but the expression of a general policy which has always characterized our legislation, beginning with the Ordinance of 1787, and which a part of the time in all respects, and all the time in most respects, has put the half blood on a footing of equality with the whole blood in the law of descents. See Ordinance of 1787, § 2; 1 Ter. Laws, p. 352; 2 Ter. Laws, p. 20; Laws 1833, p. 308; R. S. 1838, p. 208; R. S. 1846, p. 274. A discrimination against the half blood is the exception, and is not to be extended by construction beyond the obvious intent."

It is insisted that in this jurisdiction the inclusion of the half blood is an exception, to be strictly construed. There appears to us no distinction between the Michigan case and our own. The statute in question became a part of the law of Michigan through the ordinance of 1787 and the statute now embodied in section 1394 of our Civil Code was first adopted in 1850. Stats. 1850, p. 221. The court in Rowley v. Stray, supra, was speaking of the law of Michigan as it has stood since the adoption of the Ordinance of 1787. It cannot now be said there was any difference in the purpose of the adoption of the two statutes, though that of our own state was adopted at a later date than that of Michigan.

It is also contended that public policy favors an interpretation of section 1394 which would insure to a property owner that his estate would descend upon his death to those of his own blood, which would encourage continued exertion on the part of one about to become an "ancestor" within the meaning of the Code. However, it must be borne in mind that it is the estate of the decedent, not that of the ancestor, which is being distributed, and that, as far as the ancestor is concerned, his property has descended to one of his own blood, who has had the enjoyment of it for his lifetime. In addition, as pointed out in Ryan v. Andrews, supra, if the construction asked by appellants were placed upon section 1394—

"it would follow that in the absence of paternal kindred the estate would escheat in preference to passing to near kindred on the maternal side, which is also a result not to be needlessly attributed to the legislative intent."

[3] Counsel for the sixteen appellants, who were plaintiffs in the trial court, advance the argument that respondent is neither of the whole blood nor half blood of decedent and not entitled to succeed to any of his property because she "has the same blood as the father, Mortimer Belshaw, to the extent of one-half. But the father, Mortimer Belshaw, contributed only one-half to the blood of the son, Charles M. Belshaw. Therefore, only one-half of that one-half which was contributed by the father, is the same blood as that of Violetta Purchase, or one-quarter." Such a proposition is entirely devoid of merit. In 1 Cooley's Blackstone (4th Ed.) p. 615, it is said:

"A kinsman of the whole blood is he that is derived, not only from the same ancestor, but from the same couple of ancestors. For, as every man's own blood is compounded of the bloods of his respective ancestors, he only is properly of the whole or entire blood with another, who hath (so far as the distance of degrees will permit) all the same ingredients in the composition of his blood that the other had."

It clearly appears from this that respondent, being a half sister of decedent's father, and having one ancestor in common with decedent, is a kindred of the half blood.

The contention is made that "There is no evidence to support finding XV, 'That defendant, Lillie Abbie Carruth, is a kindred of the 5th degree to Charles Mortimer Belshaw, deceased, on the paternal side;' and there is no evidence whatever in support of defendant-appellant, Lillie Abbie Carruth's alleged relationship to decedent." It is unnecessary to consider this claim, for, in view of the conclusions we have reached with reference to the meaning of section 1394 of the Civil Code, appellant Lillie Abbie Carruth is not entitled to succeed to any of the estate of decedent, even though the relationship be established.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; WASTE, J.; LENNON, J.; WILBUR, J.; WARD, J.

190 Cal. 269

BURNS v. ROSS et al. (S. F. 9511.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 5, 1923.)

1. Trusts ⟸366(3)—Vendor and person forging assignment of contract not necessary parties to suit to establish resulting trust.

Where one to whom plaintiff intrusted a contract for the purchase of land, forged assignment to himself and made pretended assignment to defendants, who paid the balance due and took a conveyance, the vendor and the forger were not necessary parties to a suit to establish a resulting trust, under Code Civ. Proc. § 379, as to joining persons claiming an adverse interest or necessary to complete determination.

2. Action ⟸50(10)—Complaint held not to improperly join causes of action.

A complaint alleging that plaintiff contracted to purchase lands from a third person, that thereafter she intrusted the contract and other papers to F. who, without her knowledge or authority, forged an assignment to himself and made a purported assignment to defendants, who paid the balance due and received a deed, and that plaintiff had tendered to defendants the amounts paid, and asking that a resulting trust be declared, did not purport to state a cause of action to quiet title under Code Civ. Proc. § 738, or section 749a and hence there was no improper joinder of causes of action.

3. Quieting title ⟸22—Holder of mere equity cannot institute suit.

One having a mere equitable right to have a trust in land declared in her favor cannot institute a suit to quiet title against the holder of the legal title, under Code Civ. Proc. § 738, or section 749a.

4. Trusts ⟸72—Vendee not entitled to have resulting trust declared as against one claiming under forged assignment.

Where plaintiff intrusted a contract for the purchase of land to one who forged an assignment to himself and made a purported assignment to defendants, who paid the balance and took a conveyance, no trust resulted in plaintiff's favor under Civ. Code, § 853, relative to transfers of real property to one person when the consideration is paid by another.

5. Trusts ⟸95—Purchaser entitled to have constructive trust declared as against persons claiming under forged assignment.

Where plaintiff intrusted contract for purchase of land to one who forged an assignment to himself and made purported assignment to defendants, who paid the balance of the price and received a deed, plaintiff was entitled to have constructive trust declared in her favor under Civ. Code, § 2224, declaring one gaining a thing by fraud, etc., an involuntary trustee.

6. Principal and agent ⟸160½—No rights acquired by forged assignment though assignee a bona fide purchaser.

Where one to whom plaintiff intrusted a contract of sale forged an assignment to himself and made a purported assignment to defendants, no title to the contract passed, and plaintiff's rights cannot be defeated even though defendants were bona fide purchasers.

7. Appeal and error ⟸762—Court may decide case on points not taken by counsel.

Though appellant should state in his opening briefs the points upon which he relies, and though matters first raised in a reply brief may be disregarded, the court may decide a case upon any points that its proper disposition may seem to require, whether taken by counsel or not.

8. Trusts ⟸95—That purchaser had not fully paid for land does not prevent relief against persons claiming under forged assignment.

Where plaintiff intrusted a contract for the purchase of land to one who forged an assignment to himself, and made a purported assignment to defendants who paid the balance and received a deed, the fact that plaintiff had never paid the last installment did not defeat her right to have a constructive trust declared in her favor.

9. Principal and agent ⟸160½—Principal not bound to anticipate that agent would commit forgery.

Plaintiff, who intrusted a contract for the purchase of land to one who forged an assignment to himself and then made a purported assignment to defendants, was not bound to anticipate that such person would commit forgery, and her rights were not defeated by his act.

10. Trusts ⟸343—Failure to record contract held not to defeat right to enforce constructive trust.

Where person to whom plaintiff intrusted contract for purchase of land forged an assignment to himself, and then made purported assignment to defendants, plaintiff's negligence in failing to record her contract does not defeat her right to have a constructive trust declared in her favor.

11. Limitation of actions ⟸202(2)—Assumed that action was commenced within time allowed.

In the absence of anything to show the contrary, it must be assumed that an action to have a trust declared was commenced within the four years allowed by Code Civ. Proc. § 343.

12. Trusts ⟸365(5)—Complaint held not demurrable on ground of laches.

In suit to establish constructive trust in land which plaintiff had contracted to purchase and to which defendants had received a deed because of a forged assignment of plaintiff's contract, complaint held not to allege facts showing that any injury would result from delay in suing, so as to render it demurrable on the ground of laches.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; A. B. McKenzie, Judge.

Action by Palma Burns, formerly Palma Cuneo, against William M. Ross and another, to establish a resulting trust. From a judgment for defendants on demurrer, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Hoefler, Cook & Snyder, of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. J. Dunne, of San Francisco, for respondents.

LAWLOR, J. Plaintiff brought this action to have declared a resulting trust in her favor in certain land to which defendants hold the legal title, and to compel a conveyance of the land to her by the defendants upon her payment to them of such a sum as the court should deem equitable. A demurrer, both general and special in form, interposed to plaintiff's second amended complaint, was sustained without leave to amend, and from judgment entered pursuant thereto plaintiff appeals.

The complaint alleged that on June 28, 1911, the Richmond Center Land Company owned the land in question, and on that date entered into a written agreement with appellant for its sale to her for $2,000, payable in installments. A copy of the agreement was attached to and made a part of the complaint. It was further alleged that in January, 1913, appellant became ill and bedridden, and while in that condition delivered to one John A. Fitzgerald, at his request, the contract of sale and other papers, and that thereafter, until May, 1917, she regularly delivered to him sufficient money to pay the monthly installments provided for in the contract of sale; that on January 6, 1913, Fitzgerald, without her knowledge or authority, forged her name to an assignment of the contract of sale to himself; that on November 3, 1913, he executed, without appellant's knowledge or consent, a purported assignment of the contract from himself to respondents; that before the latter assignment appellant "had paid on account of the said purchase price of said lots of land, the sum of $1,040, together with $26.40 interest and $28 taxes"; that after November 26, 1913, respondents paid on account of the purchase price $960, together with $69.30 interest and $29.40 taxes; that thereafter, by virtue of the contract and the assignments thereof and the payments made thereunder, respondents demanded and the company executed to them a deed of the land in question, which deed was recorded; that appellant first learned in June, 1917, of the purported assignments of the agreement of sale and that respondents had secured a deed of the land; that she was informed of those facts after she wrote to the company on May 30, 1917, requesting a statement of the amount of taxes due on the land.

In the complaint appellant also tendered to respondents the sums of $960, $69.30, and $29.40, alleged to have been paid by them in connection with the land, or any other sums which the court should find they had so paid.

The agreement of June 28, 1911, provided that appellant should make an initial payment of $200, receipt of which amount was thereby acknowledged; that she should make payments of not less than $30 per month, together with interest at the rate of 6 per centum per annum on deferred payments; that the whole of the principal and interest should be paid within six months of the date of the agreement; that the title to the land should remain in the seller until all money due should have been paid; that the seller should pay all taxes for the first two years and the buyer should pay them thereafter; that if, after one-fifth of the price had been paid, the buyer should be unable to meet any payment, an extension of 90 days might be had, and that time should be of the essence of the contract.

[1] Three objections to the sufficiency of the complaint are now advanced by respondents. The first is that John A. Fitzgerald and the land company should have been joined as parties defendant, under section 379 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it being insisted they have some interest in the property adverse to appellant. The complaint is not defective in this particular, for whatever interest Fitzgerald or the land company had in the property has been assigned to respondents, the land company admittedly having been fully paid for its interest. Nothing is asked from either of them and they are in no way necessary parties to a determination of the respective rights of appellant and respondents in the property which is sought in this action.

[2, 3] The second objection to the complaint is that there is an improper joinder of causes of action, in that a cause of action to have a trust decreed in land is joined with one to quiet title. But there is no claim of any title in appellant other than the equitable right to have a trust in her favor declared, and the enforcement of that right is all she asks in this action. The complaint does not purport to be one to quiet title either under section 738 or section 749a of the Code of Civil Procedure, proceedings under which sections she could not, as the holder of a mere equity, institute against the holder of the legal title. Buehner v. Malloy, 155 Cal. 253, 100 Pac. 687.

Respondents' third and principal contention is that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. It is claimed it does not state facts sufficient to constitute any trust in favor of appellant, whether pro tanto or otherwise; that where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, he who has enabled such third person to cause the loss, in this case appellant, must bear it; and that it affirmatively appears from the complaint that if appellant ever had any right it is barred by her laches.

Appellant insists the complaint shows the major portion of the consideration for the transfer of the land was paid by her, and that therefore a trust results in her favor pro tanto; that, even if this position is not maintainable, respondents have no right to retain the property as a result of Fitzgerald's act in forging the assignment, and that under one theory or the other a cause of action is stated.

[4] The complaint is not specific in many respects and certain allegations which might well be set forth, such as those concerning the dates of the transfers of the property, are omitted. But in our opinion it does state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action and to justify the declaration of a trust in appellant's favor. This conclusion is not reached upon the theory, chiefly relied on by appellant, that a resulting trust arose under section 853 of the Civil Code, which provides:

"When a transfer of real property is made to one person, and the consideration therefor is paid by or for another, a trust is presumed to result in favor of the person by or for whom such payment is made."

Respondents are to be regarded instead as constructive trustees under section 2224 of the Civil Code, which is as follows:

"One who gains a thing by fraud, accident, mistake, undue influence, the violation of a trust, or other wrongful act, is, unless he has some other and better right thereto, an involuntary trustee of the thing gained, for the benefit of the person who would otherwise have had it."

That the facts presented here are not embraced within the theory of resulting trusts is obvious from a consideration of the following cases, wherein that principle was considered. In Woodside v. Hewel, 109 Cal. 481, 42 Pac. 152, it was said that—

"The equitable principle that when, upon the purchase of lands, the consideration therefor is furnished by one person, and the conveyance is taken in the name of another, a resulting trust in the lands is created in favor of the one from whom the consideration came, is well recognized, as is also the rule that a resulting trust is created pro tanto where only a specific part of the consideration was so furnished."

In Lezinsky v. Mason Malt Whisky Distilling Co., 185 Cal. 240, 247, 196 Pac. 884, 888, the court declared:

"The furnishing of the consideration, by reason of which a resulting trust arises, is a furnishing, not to the seller of the property bought, but to the purchaser. The whole theory upon which a trust is imposed upon the purchaser in such a case is that, as between him and a third person, it was the latter who furnished the consideration with which the property was acquired, so that it will be presumed that as between them it was intended that the purchase be for the benefit of him who supplied the means with which to make it. * * * A resulting trust is not founded on the simple fact that money or property of one has been used by another to purchase property. It is founded on a relationship between the two, on the fact that as between them, consciously and intentionally, one has advanced the consideration wherewith to make a purchase in the name of the other. The trust arises because it is the natural presumption in such a case that it was their intention that the ostensible purchaser should acquire and hold the property for the one with whose means it was acquired."

In the case at bar there are no circumstances which raise any presumption that the parties herein intended the land for the benefit of appellant. No money was paid by appellant to respondents or on their behalf; in fact, respondents presumably considered they had acquired from Fitzgerald any interest which appellant had in the land, and that they themselves had purchased it with their own money. In Lezinsky v. Mason Malt Whisky Distilling Co., supra, it is also said (185 Cal. 247, 196 Pac. 888):

"Manifestly, this theory has no application to a case where the purchaser uses what he believes to be his own property in making the purchase. So far as he is concerned, the consideration for the sale is what he himself furnished."

[5, 6] But in our opinion the facts alleged bring the case within the application of section 2224 of the Civil Code and entitle appellant to have a constructive trust in her favor imposed upon the property. The equitable principle contained in that section is thus stated in Mandeville v. Solomon, 33 Cal. 38, 44:

"Where the circumstances of a transaction are such that the person who takes the title to property cannot be permitted to hold and enjoy it, in whole or in part, without necessarily violating some principle of equity, a constructive trust will be raised for the benefit of the party entitled in equity to its beneficial enjoyment. It is because he holds the property, or some interest therein, which it is inequitable for him to enjoy, that the court declares the trust and fastens it upon his conscience, and wrests the property or interest from him and causes it to be transferred to the person equitably entitled to it."

In Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence (4th Ed.) vol. 2, p. 1919, it is said:

"Where an owner has been apparently deprived of his title by a fraudulent conveyance or assignment which is void, as where he was procured to execute it by the fraudulent representation and under the conviction that it was an entirely different instrument, or where it was fraudulently executed in his name without any authority express or implied, or where, after being executed by him for one purpose it was fraudulently altered without his knowledge or authority, so as to include the property, or where it was a forgery, and he has done no collateral act with reference to it which might amount to an equitable estoppel by conduct, and the property, by means of such transfer, comes into the hands of a purchaser for value and without notice, the original defrauded owner is not barred of his remedy." (Italics ours.)

According to the complaint, appellant intrusted Fitzgerald with the contract of sale, and he by a forged assignment of it to himself and another to respondents enabled them apparently to secure the right to purchase the land and later the land itself. It is true respondents are assignees of the wrongdoer, and it is not alleged they themselves were guilty of any wrongful act or were not bona fide purchasers. But the original assignment having been forged, no title to the contract passed, and the rights of appellant under it cannot be defeated, even, as respondents contend, by a bona fide purchaser.

[7] Respondents object to a consideration of this point that a cause of action was stated under section 2224 of the Civil Code, on the ground that it was presented for the first time in appellant's reply brief. Although it is true an appellant should state in his opening brief the points upon which he relies and that matters first raised in a reply brief may be disregarded, this court "is undoubtedly at liberty to decide a case upon any points that its proper disposition may seem to require, whether taken by counsel or not." Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. v. Farnham, 153 Cal. 578, 584, 96 Pac. 9, 12 (126 Am. St. Rep. 129).

[8] It is argued by respondents that, inasmuch as the contract provided the title should not pass until the purchase price was fully paid, and appellant never paid the last installment, she could claim no right to the property whatever. But appellant is not asking anything of the land company, which has fully performed its obligations under the agreement of sale and transferred title to respondents upon their performance of the purchaser's obligations. Nor is she seeking to assert a legal title paramount to that held by respondents. She is endeavoring to recover only her proportionate share of the property from respondents, who have paid the last installment and who hold the title.

[9, 10] In support of their second contention, respondents insist that appellant, by giving Fitzgerald charge of her papers, made him her business representative; that she thereby invested him with the management of her affairs and put into his hands the means of wrongdoing. Schultz v. McLean, 93 Cal. 329, 357, 28 Pac. 1053, 1058, is cited to the point that—

"The vendee will not be compelled by a court of equity to lose the benefit of a bargain obtained in all fairness and honesty, because of a fraud practiced upon the vendors by their own agents."

However, in Walsh v. Hunt, 120 Cal. 46, 52, 52 Pac. 115, 117 (39 L. R. A. 697), wherein the court considered the liability of a maker of a promissory note which had been altered through the forgery of the maker's agent, it was held:

"But, if it were conceded that the finding established carelessness or negligence by defendant, which might in some degree have contributed to the successful execution of the fraud by which plaintiff was deceived into parting with her money, it would not then constitute an estoppel. This is upon the principle that a party is not bound in transactions of this character either to anticipate or take precaution against the commission of a crime by which another may be deceived; that where it is through the instrumentality of a criminal act that the wrong is accomplished, it is the crime and not the negligent act which is the proximate cause of injury; and in such a case the maxim that where one of two innocent persons must suffer from the wrongful act of another, the loss must fall upon the one making the act possible, has no application."

In the case at bar, appellant was not bound to anticipate that Fitzgerald would commit forgery and assign her contract, and, as already pointed out, her rights cannot be defeated by his act in that regard. As respondents' claim is based solely on the assignment from Fitzgerald, appellant's negligence in other particulars, such as her failure to record her contract, is immaterial.

Respondents' argument with reference to their third point is that it must be presumed appellant has stated her cause as favorably as possible to herself and that the parties have followed the ordinary course of business; that from this presumption follows another that, inasmuch as appellant alleged respondents paid the balance of the purchase price and took the deed from the land company after November 26, 1913, they took the deed and had it recorded on November 27, 1913. From this is would follow that, as the second amended complaint was filed on August 22, 1918, nearly five years after appellant had the means of knowledge of respondents' claim, her cause of action is barred by laches and by the statute of limitations.

In the demurrer it was stated "that the cause of action attempted by said plaintiff to be set forth in said second amended complaint is barred by laches." There was no allegation that it was barred by the statute of limitations. It is said in Hecht v. Slaney, 72 Cal. 363, 366, 14 Pac. 88, 89, cited with approval in Lezinsky v. Mason Malt Whisky Distilling Co., supra, that—

"Whatever may once have been the rule, it is now well settled that the statute of limitations runs in favor of a defendant chargeable as a trustee of an implied trust, and it is not necessary, in order to set the statute in motion, that he should have denied or repudiated the trust [citing authorities]. In such a case, the statute begins to run when the wrong complained of is done, and under our code the limitation is four years. Code Civ. Proc., sec. 343; Piller v. S. P. R. R. Co., 52 Cal. 42."

[11] It must be assumed, in the absence of anything to the contrary, that the action was commenced within the four years allowed by the statute.

[12] In Meigs v. Pinkham, 159 Cal. 104, 112 Pac. 883, the court declared that—

"Under our law, as the statute of limitations is applicable to both legal and equitable actions, there can be no laches in delaying the bringing of an action if it is brought within the period of limitation [citing authorities], unless there are some facts or circumstances attending the delay which have operated to the injury of the defendant."

There are no facts alleged in the complaint from which it appears that any injury will result from appellant's delay in instituting the proceeding.

Inasmuch as appellant has offered to do equity, she is entitled to her own equitable relief.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; LENNON, J.; WASTE, J.; WILBUR, J.; WARD, J.

---

190 Cal. 294

KALES et al. v. HOUGHTON. (S. F. 9833.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 6, 1923.)

1. Master and servant ⊂⊃70(3)—Contract to obtain and handle construction contracts construed.

In an action for an accounting under a contract of employment providing for a division of profits and losses on construction contracts, plaintiffs to "exclusively give their services to obtaining and handling of contracts to be entered into" between defendant and others, held, that defendant, having interpreted the agreement to apply to contracts which were "obtained" by plaintiffs, but not "handled" by them, and upon contracts "handled," but not "obtained," by them, could not contend that, unless a contract was both obtained and handled by plaintiffs, they were not entitled to participate in profits thereon.

2. Contracts ⊂⊃170(1) — Where language doubtful, construction by parties during course of execution will be adopted.

When the meaning of the language of a contract is doubtful, the construction which the parties placed upon it during its execution will be adopted, where the language will reasonably permit such interpretation.

3. Account ⊂⊃22—Finding of ultimate amount due in accounting held sufficient to sustain judgment, although subsidiary finding as to elements on which based not expressed.

In an action for an accounting under a contract whereby plaintiffs were entitled to share with defendant employer in the profits of certain construction work, defendant to render a statement every year, costs of administration to be charged against plaintiffs in proportion to the overhead of defendant's office, a finding by the court as to plaintiffs' share in the net profits of the year held sufficient to sustain a judgment based thereon, notwithstanding it did not expressly find as to the scope and effect of an oral agreement by the parties relating to the amount of overhead to be charged.

4. Master and servant ⊂⊃80(9)—Finding of oral agreement as to overhead expenses sustained.

In an action for an accounting under a contract of employment, whereby plaintiffs were to share the profits of certain construction work, costs of administration to be charged in proportion to the overhead of the employer's office, where it was claimed that as to certain construction work a special oral agreement was made as to overhead charges, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that such oral agreement was made.

5. Set-off and counterclaim ⊂⊃44(1)—Personal indebtedness of one of parties to joint agreement cannot be set off against amount due to both of them.

Where plaintiffs agreed with defendant to share profits and losses of certain construction work, defendant could not, in making a statement of account, offset against the sum due to both of plaintiffs the amount of a personal note of one of them made before the agreement was entered into, since, in the absence of insolvency or of other facts making applicable rules of equitable set-off, the personal indebtedness of one of the parties to a joint agreement cannot be availed of as a set-off so as to affect the other party without his consent.

6. Contracts ⊂⊃266(1)—On rescission that which party is in any event entitled to retain need not be restored.

One who seeks to rescind an agreement is not bound to restore that which he would be entitled in any event to retain.

7. Damages ⊂⊃67—Interest on several sums making up aggregate of amount due held allowable.

Plaintiffs recovering judgment held entitled to interest on the several sums making up the aggregate of the amount found due from the dates when payable at the legal rate, under Civ. Code, § 3287, allowing a person entitled to recover damages interest from the day the right of recovery vests in him.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. J. Van Norstrand, Judge.

Action for an accounting by Franklin A. Kales and another against Shirley Houghton. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

---

James P. Sweeney and Courtney L. Moore, both of San Francisco (Adair & Winder, of Riverside, of counsel), for appellant.

Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, of Oakland, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This appeal is by the defendant from a judgment in the plaintiffs' favor in an action for an accounting.

On or about the 12th day of July, 1915, the plaintiffs herein and the Van Sant-Houghton Company entered into the following written agreement:

"San Francisco, June 22, 1915.

"Messrs. Van Sant-Houghton Co., 503 Market Street, San Francisco, California—Gentlemen: The undersigned offer to enter your employment for the period of five years, commencing July 1, 1915, and to exclusively give their services towards obtaining and handling of contracts to be entered into between yourselves and others. This service shall exclude:

"(1) All contracts to the carrying out of which your Unit-Bilt system of concrete construction is adaptable.

"(2) All contracts to the carrying out of which your pneumatic concrete Placing System is adaptable.

"(3) All work in Alameda county.

"(4) All railroad work.

"This service shall particularly include:

"(1) All residence work outside of Alameda county.

"(2) More particularly all work in the Bay counties not specifically mentioned as excluded above.

"(3) Any contracts for construction work not excluded above where same are undertaken with the consent of Shirley Houghton and R. H. Van Sant, Jr.

"(4) By special agreement between the parties concerned, work may be undertaken in the territory or under the classifications excluded above.

"Every twelve months a statement of profits and loss shall be drawn up on the work closed during the preceding twelve months, and we shall be entitled to draw out one-half of our share of the profits then earned, the balance to remain with Van Sant-Houghton Company as protection against any possible loss during the ensuing year.

"The division of the profits or losses shall be 50% to Van Sant-Houghton Co. and 50% to ourselves.

"During the period of the year from July 1, 1915, to June 30, 1916, Van Sant-Houghton Company are to advance to us the sum of $500.00 at the end of each month. These advances are to be charged against our share of the profits during our period of service.

"Any additional advances after June 30, 1916, that may be agreed upon must be warranted by the work completed or then in the course of construction.

"The costs of administration which are chargeable against us will be based on that portion the overhead of the office of Van Sant-Houghton Company which is chargeable against our work.

"In the event of the death of either of the undersigned, this agreement may be terminated at the option of Van Sant-Houghton Company.

"Franklin A. Kales.
"Jasper S. Connell.

"Accepted this 12th day of July, 1915.
"Van Sant-Houghton Co.,
"By Shirley Houghton and
"R. H. Van Sant, Jr."

At the time of entering into this agreement the Van Sant-Houghton Company was, and for several years prior thereto had been, engaged in business as construction engineers with headquarters of the same in San Francisco, but with its operations, which were quite extensive, reaching into several other states. The plaintiffs herein were also engineers of considerable past experience in similar lines of work, and had in fact been in the employment of the said firm, Van Sant-Houghton Company, prior to the execution of the written agreement above set forth. A few months after its execution Mr. Van Sant transferred all of his interest in the firm to his associate, the defendant herein, who thereupon assumed all of the obligations and became entitled to all of the benefits of the foregoing agreement. The service of the plaintiffs herein began on July 1, 1915, according to the terms of said agreement, and were to continue for the period of five years thereafter. The activities of the respective parties under said agreement actually continued for a period a little over two years and eight months, when, discords having arisen between them over the state of their accounts, the plaintiffs, after some efforts made to arrange a compromise of these difficulties, left defendant's employ on or about March 9, 1918, and then undertook to repudiate and rescind said agreement. On March 25, 1918, they commenced the present action for an accounting, alleging in substance that the defendant had failed and neglected to furnish them with the statements of account provided for in said agreement, and to collect the account for and pay over to them sums from time to time due thereon. The defendant demurred to the plaintiffs' complaint unsuccessfully and then answered, admitting the execution of said agreement, but denying any breach thereof upon his part, and that any sum whatever was due said plaintiffs thereunder. He also filed a cross-complaint against said plaintiffs setting forth said agreement and alleging that said plaintiffs had without cause made default in the terms and conditions thereof to be by them performed, whereby the defendant and cross-complainant had sustained damages in the sum of $18,000, for which he prayed judgment. Plaintiffs answered said cross-complaint with denials of the allegations thereof. The cause went to trial before the court sitting without a jury upon the issues thus joined, at the conclusion of which the court made and filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law. In the first paragraph of its said findings the trial court found generally that the first five paragraphs of the complaint, having reference to the making of said agreement and to the defendant's alleged breach thereof, were true, and that the facts were as alleged therein. The trial court then proceeded to make specific findings as to the amount due to said plaintiffs and for which they were entitled, stating that said amount was in excess of the sum of $20,000, which the defendant had refused and neglected to pay The court then proceeded in its findings to go into further and more specific details as to the sources from which it derived the conclusion that an amount in excess of the above sum was due and unpaid the plaintiffs. It is certain of these specific findings which the defendant particularly assails on this appeal as unsupported by the evidence in the case.

The primary contention of appellant in this regard has to do with the interpretation which the trial court placed upon said agreement as affecting its findings as to the several amounts due the plaintiffs upon certain construction work undertaken thereunder by the defendant. It is the appellant's contention that the plaintiffs were entitled to share in the performance of no construction contracts which they did not "obtain and handle." This contention is based upon the phrasing of the first paragraph of the plaintiffs' offer, which reads as follows:

"The undersigned offer to enter your employment for the period of five years, commencing July 1, 1915, and to exclusively give their services towards obtaining and handling of contracts to be entered into between yourselves and others."

[1] It is the appellant's claim that the words "obtain and handle" in the foregoing paragraph of the plaintiffs' accepted offer are to be used in the conjunctive in their application to the succeeding provisions there. There are several sufficient reasons why this interpretation should not be placed upon these words. To so interpret them would be to allow the plaintiffs no part in the performance of any construction contract which they obtained and turned over to said defendant, unless they also "handled" the construction work thereon. It would also lead to the denial of any share in the performance of any construction work of the defendant upon which the plaintiffs worked, but the contract for which they did not "obtain" or assist in obtaining. The result would be that the plaintiffs' motive and advantage in entering into the contract at all would be largely taken away, as well as any motive or advantage to them to exert themselves in obtaining construction contracts for their employer which they were not to handle, or for handling construction work or contracts which they did not assist in obtaining. A further reason for denying to this clause in the agreement the interpretation which the defendant now claims for it is to be found in the interpretation which the parties themselves placed upon it at the time and in respect to several construction contracts which were obtained and handled during the period of plaintiffs' activities under their said agreement. In the case of the Sperry flour contract the evidence shows that this contract was obtained by or through the efforts of the plaintiff Kales, but that practically no work was done by either of said plaintiffs in handling the construction work thereon. This contract resulted in a loss, and the evidence shows that the defendant charged 50 per cent. of said loss to the plaintiffs under the provision of said agreement, which provides for a sharing of the losses as well as profits upon work undertaken during the term of said agreement. Another example is that of the contract for a foundry building for the Union Iron Works which the plaintiff Kales also obtained, but which neither of the plaintiffs handled, and upon which there also was a loss, one-half of which the defendant charged to the plaintiffs' account. Still another example of the defendant's conduct in the interpretation of said phrase is to be found in the so-called Floriston contract, in the execution of which there was a profit, 50 per cent. of which the trial court awarded to the plaintiffs. There is a conflict in the evidence as to whether the plaintiffs obtained this contract, which conflict the trial court resolved in the plaintiffs' favor. The appellant concedes that by reason of such conflict and of the court's conclusion thereon he cannot now attack that portion of the finding of the trial court; but he insists that the trial court was in error in making any award to the plaintiffs thereon for the reason that the undisputed evidence was that the plaintiffs did not handle said job. The evidence, however, divulges that the defendant charged the plaintiffs with their proportion of the agreed expense of the San Francisco office, which under the terms of the agreement was chargeable as "costs of administration" against the plaintiffs' work. This could only have been done upon the theory that the plaintiffs would ultimately be entitled to share in the performance of the Floriston contract, although they did not "handle" the work upon said contract. The defendant, having thus placed an interpretation upon said agreement which operated to his benefit, cannot be heard to deny the same interpretation thereof when it would operate to the plaintiffs' benefit.

[2] It is a well-settled rule of law that, when the meaning of the language of a contract is doubtful, the construction which the parties to it place upon it during the course of its execution will be adopted where the language will reasonably permit such an interpretation. Hill v. McKay, 94 Cal. 5, 29 Pac. 406; Keith v. Electrical Engineering Co., 136 Cal. 178, 68 Pac. 598; Kennedy v. Lee, 147 Cal. 586, 82 Pac. 257. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the trial court was not in error in interpreting this agreement as to allow the plaintiffs their due share of the profits upon all construction work covered by the terms of said agreement which they assisted in obtaining, but did not handle, or which they handled but did not obtain.

The next contention of the appellant is that the trial court was in error as to its conclusion as to the proper basis for the ascertainment and distribution of the "costs of administration" between the parties in respect to construction work in which the parties were to share profits or losses under the terms of said agreement. The provision in said agreement relating to this subject reads as follows:

"The costs of administration which are chargeable against us will be based on that portion the overhead of the office of Van Sant-Houghton Company which is chargeable against our work."

The importance of interpreting and applying the foregoing provisions in the agreement consists in the fact that every 12 months during the term of the agreement a statement of profit and loss was to be drawn up as to the work closed during the preceding 12 months upon which the plaintiffs were entitled to draw one-half of their share of the profits therein shown to have been earned, on the basis of a 50 per cent. division of said profits; the plaintiffs' other half thereof to remain with the defendant as a protection against possible loss during the ensuing year. The undisputed evidence shows that a statement was prepared and presented by the defendant's bookkeepers at or about the close of the first 12 months of the operations of the parties under said agreement, which statement showed that during said year the Houghton Company had handled work in which the plaintiffs were not interested, aggregating $470,761.39, and that during the same period the Houghton Company had handled work in which the plaintiffs were interested aggregating $173,845.80. Upon the basis of these figures and under what would seem to be a reasonable interpretation of the somewhat vague provisions of the clause above quoted as to the division of overhead expense, the plaintiffs should be charged with 27 per cent. of such overhead and the defendant with 73 per cent. thereof. This first statement was prepared upon this basis and was apparently accepted by the parties and by the court as exemplifying the proper interpretation of the above-quoted provision. The trial court found that this first statement as thus agreed to constituted a stated account between the parties, and with this finding both parties apparently agree. This first statement, however, contained one specification as to overhead charges upon a particular piece of work then in progress which was to be prolific of trouble between the parties in their later accountings: The item referred to reads as follows: "Overhead Ocean Falls, $40.00, 2 mos—$120.00." The construction contract thus referred to was one which had been entered into in the early part of the year 1916 between the Pacific Mills, Limited, and the defendant, the work upon which was to be done at Ocean Falls, British Columbia. This particular contract differed from the other construction contracts in which the parties had become interested during the life of their agreement in the respect that, while the plaintiffs were to be the superintendents in charge of the work at Ocean Falls, neither they nor the defendant were to furnish any of the labor, materials, or capital to be employed in the construction part of said work. All of this, with the exception of the superintendency of the job, was to be supplied by the Pacific Mills, Limited, who were to furnish all of the clerical and office work and do all of the bookkeeping connected with said job. The sole connection which the parties hereto had with said work was that of superintending the job, which was to be done by the respondents herein as employees of the defendant herein, and for which there was to be fees on the basis of 5 per cent. of the cost of the work as the same proceeded. Payments on account of these fees were to be made monthly to the defendant, whose sole overhead expense in connection with said contract was that of receiving and crediting the monthly check for the fees earned through the respondents' superintendency during the preceding month. When the time arrived for the preparation of the first annual statement, the question arose between the parties hereto as to the basis of overhead charge on account of this contract, upon which at that time about $300,000 worth of work had been done, and upon which fees aggregating $15,000 had been received by the defendant. The parties hereto are in substantial agreement in their evidence as to the basis of overhead charge which was agreed upon between them with relation to this particular contract. Mr. Keating, the defendant's office manager at San Francisco, testified upon that subject as follows:

"Why you see we had been discussing this overhead matter for weeks, and possibly months, and, after Mr. Kales and I had become rather peeved at each other, Kales said, 'It doesn't make any difference what you say, Keating, I will settle with Mr. Houghton, and fix it up with him;' and that is what they did, fixed it up between them. Then the question of the proper charge of Ocean Falls overhead came up, and Mr. Houghton seemed to think it ought to be about $75 and Mr. Kales thought it should be about $40 per month. And he asked me if I thought $40 would cover it, and I said I did not know. As a matter of fact I said we do not know what the overhead has been, there was not very much done up there, and we have no way of gauging overhead up there, and then decided to let it go at $40 per month."

Mr. Kales testified upon the same subject that—

"It was finally agreed upon that my contention was right and an arbitrary amount of $40 per month was finally agreed upon and charged to the Houghton Construction Company in San Francisco against Ocean Falls account."

He further testifies that—

"Forty dollars per month was finally agreed upon by all parties and accepted as the legitimate overhead to be charged against the Ocean Falls work."

This was accordingly done in the first statement above referred to, which explains the item therein referring to the Ocean Falls work. The second annual statement between the parties hereto was delayed until December, 1917, but was made as of the date of July 1, 1917. In the several statements as made up by the defendant and presented to the plaintiffs in December, 1917, it appeared that the total amount of construction work undertaken by the defendant and upon which the plaintiffs were entitled to a share in the profits was $2,364,884.20, and that the construction work undertaken by the defendant in which the plaintiffs were not entitled to share was $1,135,435.76. The percentage from these figures upon which the plaintiff estimated the proportionate charge on account of overhead expense was 68½ per cent. to the plaintiffs and 31½ per cent. to the defendant. In presenting these figures and making this estimate and charge the defendant included the Ocean Falls contract, the work upon which alone aggregated $2,364,884.20. In making up this second statement the defendant ignored the previous arrangement between the parties whereby the overhead charge was to be made against the Ocean Falls contract at $40 per month and undertook to charge the plaintiffs with overhead expenses of administration upon the whole amount of work according to the foregoing percentages, which resulted in a charge of approximately $20,000 against the plaintiffs on account of overhead expense upon the Ocean Falls job. When this second statement embracing this charge was presented to the plaintiffs in December, 1917, they objected to the same upon the ground that the foregoing was an erroneous charge, and that the only amount chargeable as overhead to the Ocean Falls job was that of $40 per month as originally agreed upon between the parties. There were certain other objections to this statement which will be considered later. After considerable dispute and much conflict in the evidence as to what actually occurred between the parties during such dispute, a tentative offer of compromise was made by Mr. Connell, representing the plaintiffs, by the terms of which he appears to have been willing to waive the objection to the overhead charge against the Ocean Falls account and also to waive certain other objections to said statement provided a cash payment of the amount shown to be due the plaintiffs thereon was immediately made. Some comparatively small payments were made by the defendant pursuant to this tentative offer of settlement, but after considerable effort on the plaintiffs' part to obtain the full settlement thus tentatively agreed upon the plaintiffs in the month of April, 1918, left the defendant's employ, withdrew their offer of compromise, gave notice of a rescission of their agreement, and commenced the present action for an accounting. Upon the foregoing facts and with relation to the second statement made by the defendant the trial court did not make a specific finding as to whether the overhead charges for costs of administration chargeable to the Ocean Falls contract were to be estimated according to the oral agreement between the parties providing for a charge of $40 a month as overhead against said job, or according to the basis fixed in the original agreement between the parties as to the chargeable overhead against work in which the plaintiff had a right to share; but the trial court made findings upon the ultimate fact of the net amount to which the plaintiffs were entitled as their share of the profits of the business covered by said second statement of account, and this finding is obviously based upon the implied conclusion of the trial court that the said oral adjustment between the parties of the amount of overhead chargeable to the Ocean Falls job was that calculated upon the basis of said oral agreement. The appellant herein in respect to said finding of the trial court makes two contentions, the first thing that by reason of the failure of the trial court to make a specific finding as to the scope and effect of said oral agreement amounts to a failure to find upon a material issue for which the judgment must be reversed, and the second being that the evidence is insufficient to support the general finding of the trial court as to the net amount to which the plaintiffs are entitled upon the work covered by said second statement of account.

[3] With respect to the first of these contentions we are of the opinion that the finding of the trial court as to the ultimate fact of the plaintiffs' due share in the net profits for the year covered by said second statement of account, involving as it does the court's implied conclusion regarding the probative facts upon which to predicate its express conclusion as to the ultimate fact, is sufficient to sustain the judgment based upon such finding.

[4] As to the appellant's second contention that the court's said finding of the ultimate fact is unsupported by the evidence in the case, his conclusion in that regard rests upon his claim that the undisputed evidence shows that the arrangement between the parties as to the agreed basis of $40 per month or as an arbitrary overhead charge for costs of administration to be made against the Ocean Falls contract was a merely temporary arrangement made in the earlier stages of the work being done under said contract for convenience in making up the defendant's first statement of account, and that it was never the intention of the parties that such arrangement should be given application to the entire work to be done during the execution of said contract. We are unable to give our assent to this contention, since an examination of the record sufficiently shows that there is substantial evidence upholding the implied finding of the trial court. The Ocean Falls contract was entered into in January, 1916. It was unique among the construction contracts of the defendant during the period of his agreement with the plaintiffs in the respect that there were to be and were practically no overhead expense for costs of administration to be incurred during the execution of this contract. At the time, in June, 1916, that the parties entered into their oral arrangement as to the adoption of an arbitrary overhead charge of $40 per month as applicable to this particular contract, about $800,000 worth of work had been reported to the defendant as having been done by the Pacific Mills, Limited, which was doing the construction work thereon, under the plaintiffs' superintendency. There was therefore no apparent reason for the making of a mere temporary arrangement between the parties hereto as to an arbitrary overhead charge to be made against said contract; neither was there anything in the arrangement as to such arbitrary charge as testified to by all of the parties thereto to indicate that the adjustment of overhead thus to be made was temporary. It would seem, in fact, to have been an altogether equitable arrangement in view of the fact that there was to be no overhead costs of administration in the course of the performance of their part of said contract by the parties herein concerned; while, on the contrary, it would appear quite inequitable for the defendant herein to have been permitted to charge against the plaintiffs' share in the profits of said contract over $20,000 of overhead costs of administration which he had not incurred or expended. It was doubtless these considerations which moved the trial court to arrive at the conclusion that the arrangement between the parties as the arbitrary overhead charge of $40 per month, applied during the early stages of this particular piece of work, was intended by them to be given application to the entire period of execution of the Ocean Falls work. We are not disposed, therefore, to disturb the ultimate findings and conclusions of the trial court in this regard.

[5] The appellant makes the further contention that the trial court was in error in its refusal to allow the defendant in his said second statement of account to offset against the sum shown therein to be due to both of these plaintiffs the amount of $2,538.60, which he claimed to be due him on account of the personal note of Mr. Kales, one of said plaintiffs, made by him to the defendant in the course of a transaction antedating the agreement between the parties hereto and with which Mr. Connell, the other of the plaintiffs herein, had nothing to do. The evidence shows that Mr. Connell objected to the making of said offset in said second statement of account, and that he persisted in said objection between the time of the rendition of said statement of account and the final breach between the parties a few months later, except as he was willing by way of compromise to waive said objection in case an immediate payment of the balance to be paid upon such account would be made. The appellant insists that he was lawfully entitled to make such offset and to have the same allowed, but such is not the law applicable to such a situation. The authorities appear to be uniform that, in the absence of insolvency or of other facts calling for the application of the rules of equitable set-off, the personal indebtedness of one of the parties to a joint agreement or obligation cannot be availed of as a set-off so as to affect the other party to such agreement or obligation without his consent. Collins v. Butler, 14 Cal. 223; Roberts v. Donovan, 70 Cal. 108, 9 Pac. 180, 11 Pac. 599; McDonald v. Poole, 113 Cal. 437, 45 Pac. 702. The appellant does not dispute this rule, but insists that the plaintiff, Connell, consented to said offset. This contention is based in the main upon the appellant's next contention that the acts and conduct of the plaintiffs subsequent to the presentation of the defendant's said second statement of account embracing said offset rendered the same a stated account. Without attempting to review in detail the evidence in the case relating to the acts and conduct of the parties in their conference and correspondence between December, 1917, and April, 1918, when the final break occurred, we are satisfied that the finding of the trial court that said second statement of account never took on the quality of a stated account finds substantial support in the evidence, and that the contention of the appellant to the contrary is without substantial merit. We reach the same conclusion as to the appellant's further contention that the plaintiffs were not entitled to withdraw from said compromise agreement and work a rescission of the same at the time early in April, 1918, that they attempted to do so, for the reasons either that there had been no breach of said agreement of compromise on the part of the defendant justifying such rescission, or that the plaintiffs had not acted promptly in making the same, or that the plaintiffs, at the time they did so rescind, were not entitled to do so without returning the moneys which they had been paid by the defendant on account of said compromise agreement. The evidence in the case, we think, sufficiently shows that the defendant did not perform his part of said proposed compromise; that the plaintiffs during the months between December, 1917, and April 1918, were diligently seeking to prevail upon him to make such performance, and hence cannot be held to have waived during that brief period their right of withdrawal from such compromise. The evidence further shows that whatever payments the defendant made to or on account of the said plaintiffs, or either of them, during that period, amounted in the aggregate to less than the amount which was actually due the plaintiffs in any event.

[6] The rule upon that subject is well settled to the effect that one who seeks to rescind an agreement is not bound to restore that which he would be entitled in any event to retain. 9 Corpus Juris, p. 1210, sec. 97; Richards v. Fraser, 122 Cal. 456, 55 Pac. 246; Gatje v. Armstrong, 145 Cal. 370, 78 Pac. 872.

[7] As to the appellant's final contention that the trial court was not entitled to allow interest upon the plaintiffs' judgment: It is based wholly upon his claim that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any judgment in their favor, and hence were not entitled to any interest thereon. The trial court having correctly, as we conclude, found in the plaintiffs' favor as to the principal amount they are entitled to recover under their within agreement with the defendant, it follows, that they were entitled to interest upon the several sums which make up in the aggregate the amount found due from the dates when the same became payable at the legal rate under section 3287 of the Civil Code.

The judgment is affirmed.

SHAW, C. J., and LAWLOR, LENNON, and WASTE, JJ., concur.

---

(190 Cal. 246)

KISH v. CALIFORNIA STATE AUTOMOBILE ASS'N. (S. F. 9896.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1922.)

1. Master and servant ⟸302(6)—Servant acting for himself not acting within scope of authority.

A master is not responsible for injuries caused by his servant, though they could not have been caused without facilities afforded by the master unless the servant was engaged at the time in the transaction of his master's business, that is, was using the facilities in furtherance of the business of the master and not merely for his own personal ends, in which event the relation would be that of lender and borrower.

2. Master and servant ⟸302(1)—Scope of employment defined.

In order that the acts of the servant shall be within the scope of his employment so as to render the master liable, it is not necessary that the servant shall be engaged in the direct performance of the thing which is the ultimate object of his employment, but it is sufficient if his acts incidentally or indirectly contribute to the service.

3. Master and servant ⟸302(6)—Truck driver going to supper held not within employment.

A truck driver, who was employed to put up highway signs and paid so much per day and his expenses, including the cost of his meals, and who was allowed to fix his own working hours, was not engaged in his master's business, when, after finishing his work for the day, he had gone home to clean up and then started out for supper, so that the master is not liable for his negligence while driving the truck to his supper, though authorized to include the cost of his meals in his expense account.

4. Master and servant ⟸330(1)—Proof servant was within scope of employment essential to prima facie case against master.

Proof that the servant was acting within the scope of his employment at the time his negligence caused the accident is as essential to a cause of action against the master as proof of the employment itself, so that proof only that the negligent truck driver was in the general employ of defendant is not sufficient to prevent a nonsuit.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; M. F. McCormick, Judge.

Action by Mabel Kish against the California State Automobile Association to recover damages for personal injuries sustained in an automobile collision. From an order granting a nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

G. L. Aynesworth and L. N. Barber, both of Fresno, for appellant.

Everts, Ewing & Wild and J. R. Fitch, all of Fresno, for respondent.

LENNON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of a nonsuit in an action for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been suffered by plaintiff as the result of a collision between an auto truck owned by the defendant and driven by an employee of the defendant, California State Automobile Association, and another auto truck in which the plaintiff was riding at the time of the accident. The relationship of employer and employee is admitted by the defendant, and this appeal presents the single question of whether or not the evidence adduced by the plaintiff was sufficient to show that, at the time of the accident, the employee was acting within the scope of his employment. In support of her cause of action the plaintiff relies solely upon the testimony of Kelley, the employee of defendant and the driver of the truck at the time of the collision. The facts as embodied in his testimony, which are pertinent to the point presented, briefly stated, are these: Kelley and one Daughters were employed by the California State Automobile Association in the work of installing road signs, and used in this work a truck of the defendant association. They had no stated hours of employment, the number of hours depending upon the territory to be covered and the trips to be made. While engaged in this work for the association, they were allowed their meals as part of their expense account and were permitted to use the truck in going to and from their meals. On the day of the accident Kelley and Daughters had been installing road signs near Clovis and had finished this particular work at about half-past 5 or 6 o'clock in the evening. Instead of going to supper immediately upon the conclusion of their day's work, they rode in the defendant's truck to their home at 147 Coast avenue, Fresno, to wash and clean up and change their clothes. After they were cleaned up and while they were riding in the defendant's auto truck on their way down town to get their evening meal, the accident which caused plaintiff's injury occurred.

[1] It is, of course, elementary that, the master's liability being predicated upon the fact of the employment, the master is not responsible for the acts of the servant while the servant is pursuing his own ends, even though the injury complained of could not have been committed without the facilities afforded to the servant by his relation to his master. 26 Cyc. p. 1536; Stephenson v. S. P., 93 Cal. 558, 29 Pac. 234, 15 L. R. A. 475, 27 Am. St. Rep. 223; Brown v. Chevrolet Motor Car Company, 39 Cal. App. 738, 179 Pac. 697; Berry on Automobiles, § 684. Whether or not the master is responsible for the act of the servant at the time of the injury depends, therefor, upon whether the servant was engaged at that time in the transaction of his master's business or whether he was engaged in an act which was done for his own personal convenience or accommodation and related to an end or purpose exclusively and individually his own. In other words, if the servant used the automobile of his master not in furtherance of his master's business, but for his own individual use, he is merely a borrower, and, the relation of master and servant not existing during the course of such use, the master is not liable for his acts. Gousse v. Lowe, 41 Cal. App. 715, 183 Pac. 295.

[2] In determining whether a particular act is within the scope of the servant's employment, it is obvious that if the servant is directly engaged in the duties which he was employed to perform, or if his acts are directly producing the result desired by the master, that the servant is at that time in the course of his employment. It is not, however, necessary in order to hold the master liable, that the servant shall be engaged in the direct performance of the thing which is the ultimate object of his employment, for also included within the scope of the servant's employment are those acts which incidentally or indirectly contribute to the service. Hall v. Puente Oil Co. (Cal. App.) 191 Pac. 39; Jessen v. Peterson, Nelson & Co., 18 Cal. App. 349, 123 Pac. 219.

The test, as laid down in Chamberlain v. Southern California Edison Co., 167 Cal. 500, 140 Pac. 25, for determining whether or not a particular act was done in the course of the servant's employment, "is whether the act was done in the prosecution of the business in which the servant was employed to assist." The act of the servant must be connected directly or indirectly with the business of the employer and be in furtherance of the object for which the servant was employed. In other words, if the act is for the benefit of the employer, either directly or incidentally, the act is within the general scope of the servant's employment; but if the act performed is not in any way connected with the service for which he is employed, but for his own particular and peculiar purpose, then the act is not within the scope of the employment.

[3] Having in mind the primary and principal purpose of the employment of the driver of the truck and his associate—the installation of road signs—we are of the opinion that, at the time of the accident, which occurred after the employees had finished the job of putting up signs for the day and after they had gone home and while they were on their way down town for supper, the employees were not in the performance of an act either directly or indirectly connected with the business of the employer nor incidental thereto, but were engaged in an act for their own individual and personal convenience, and from which the employer was to derive no benefit.

It may be conceded that the use of the truck for transportation to and from their work to their home was for the benefit of the employer indirectly for the reason that it permitted them to devote more time to accomplish the results of installing road signs, for which they were employed. Also, from the fact that they had what may be termed a "roving commission," having no fixed hours of employment and no fixed place of employment, it may be admitted that their employment commenced when they left the house in the morning and did not terminate until they returned in the evening. This point was, however, the utmost boundary of their employment and was not enlarged by the fact that they were permitted the use of the truck in going to places to get their meals. This was permitted solely for the accommodation of the employees themselves. We cannot assent to the reasoning of plaintiff that because it was necessary for employees to eat and sleep in order to perform the labor for which they are employed, that these acts are incidental to their employment.

Kelley and his associate were paid so much per day and their expenses. It was no concern of the employer what they did after returning home, nor can it be inferred that the employer had any control over them after that time. At that time they were through for the day, and it was no concern of the employer as to when they ate or where they ate. If, for instance, the employees had decided to defer dinner until after the theater, could it be said that during the interim they were engaged in the employer's business? Or if the employees had concluded that they would go to an adjoining town, 20 or 30 miles away, to get a meal, surely it could not be said that the trip was within the scope of their employment.

Nor do we believe that the inclusion of the employees' meals in their expense account extended the employer's business to that of boarding its employees. To so hold would be to make the employer's business coextensive with the employee's expense account and extend the liability of the employer for acts of a servant as being within the scope of employment to acts having no relation whatever to the actual business of the employer and to the accomplishment of the results for which the servant was hired.

Having in mind the purpose of the employee's employment and the results to be accomplished thereby, the act of the employee in going to dinner, not on his way from work but after having gone home, cannot be said to have any relation to this business either directly or incidentally; it was not in furtherance of the master's business of installing road signs, nor for the benefit of that business nor was it in the line of the servant's duties in the installation thereof. It was not, therefore, within the scope of his employment.

[4] It is insisted by plaintiff that the evidence adduced having conclusively shown the relation of master and servant, a prima facie case was made out of the responsibility of the master which must be overcome by the defendant, and that a nonsuit was therefore improper. But to recover against an employer upon the theory of respondeat superior, it is necessary for the plaintiff to establish the two distinct facts of (1) the status of master and servant, and (2) that the act was done within the scope of the servant's employment. The latter is as important and vital to plaintiff's cause of action as the former. If the same testimony which proved the relationship of master and servant proved that, at the time of the act for which it is claimed the master was liable, the servant was not acting within the scope of and in the course of his employment, the prima facie case made by plaintiff is rebutted by the very proof offered to prove the first fact. It is not necessary, therefore, for the defendant to negate the master's liability, inasmuch as the plaintiff has done so herself. The proof at that stage lacks an essential element to support plaintiff's cause of action, and an order granting a nonsuit is therefore proper.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; LAWLOR, J.; SLOANE, J.

WASTE, J., being disqualified, does not participate in the foregoing.

190 Cal. 286

Ex parte MURPHY. (Cr. 2466.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 5, 1923. Rehearing Denied Feb. 1, 1923.)

1. Municipal corporations ⟹592(1)—General traffic laws of state are not superseded in charter cities.

The provision of the San Francisco Charter that, except as otherwise provided in the Charter or in the state Constitution, the supervisors shall have power to control the use of streets, does not supersede the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1919, p. 191), within the city, since the regulation of traffic is not a municipal affair in which by the Constitution chartered cities are given power superior to that of the state Legislature.

2. Municipal corporations ⟹703(1)—Provision of general traffic laws excepting subjects for regulation by cities not invalid curtailment of rights of cities.

The provision of Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1919, p. 191), § 22, subd. d, that local authorities shall have no power to enact traffic regulations inconsistent therewith with certain specified exceptions, could not limit the power of local legislative bodies to pass regulations not inconsistent with the general law, in view of Const. art. 11, § 11; but, since the Motor Vehicle Act was intended to cover the whole field of traffic regulation and any regulation by a city would be inconsistent therewith, the section in effect confers on the cities the right to regulate with respect to the excepted matters and is valid.

3. Municipal corporations ⟹592(2)—City ordinance is inconsistent with state statute prescribing punishment for the same offense.

Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1919, p. 215) § 20, subd. a, requiring careful driving, creates the same offense as San Francisco Ordinance No. 1857, New Series, § 2, and the ordinance is therefore inconsistent with the Motor Vehicle Act, since a conviction under the ordinance would prevent a conviction under the state statute, so that the ordinance is void under Const. art. 11, § 11.

4. Habeas corpus ⟹30(2)—Reference to city ordinance in complaint does not prevent conviction thereunder for violation of state law.

That a complaint on which a conviction was based charged violation of a city ordinance does not entitle accused to discharge on habeas corpus, where the conviction may be sustained under the state law; the acts alleged constituting the offense charged.

5. Municipal corporations ⟹707—Complaint held to charge violation of Motor Vehicle Act.

A complaint charging that defendant operated his vehicle upon a city street in a careless and reckless manner without due regard to the safety and convenience of pedestrians and other vehicles, thereby violating a specified city ordinance, contrary to the form of the statute, while not in the exact language of the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1919, p. 191), in substance charges a violation of section 20, subd. a, of that act, and is sufficient to sustain a conviction thereunder.

6. Municipal corporations ⟹707—Recital of ordinance number in judgment is not jurisdictional.

In a judgment of conviction for violation of a city ordinance, the omission in the recital of the ordinance violated of the words "New Series," after the number, was not a jurisdictional defect available on habeas corpus.

In Bank.

Application by Della Murphy for writ of habeas corpus to procure the release of John H. Murphy from custody after conviction of operating an automobile carelessly and recklessly on a public street. Writ discharged, and prisoner remanded to custody.

Clarence A. Henning, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

R. M. J. Armstrong, of San Francisco, for sheriff.

LAWLOR, J. Petitioner, Della Murphy, instituted this proceeding to secure the release of one John H. Murphy, who was convicted of a misdemeanor in violating Ordinance No. 1857 (new series) of the city and county of San Francisco by operating an automobile in a careless and reckless manner upon a street in the said city and county, and who was sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail for 50 days. A writ of habeas corpus was issued by this court, and it is now contended that the said ordinance is unconstitutional and void on the ground that it is in conflict with the provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act (Stats. 1919, p. 191), and that the said John H. Murphy should be discharged.

[1] Preliminarily it may be said that under the decision in Ex parte Daniels, 183 Cal. 636, 192 Pac. 442, it cannot be held that the general laws of the state with respect to traffic regulation are superseded by the provision of the charter of the city and county of San Francisco that—

"Except as otherwise provided in this charter or in the Constitution of the state of California [the board of supervisors shall have power] to regulate and control for any and every purpose, the use of the streets, highways, public thoroughfares, public places, alleys and sidewalks of the city and county." Subdivision 2, § 1, c. 2, art. 2.

In that case the court reached the conclusion that—

"The regulation of traffic upon the streets of a city is not one of those municipal affairs in which by the Constitution chartered cities are given a power superior to that of the state Legislature, but that such power is subject to the general laws of the state, and ordinances inconsistent therewith are invalid."

It was there held that notwithstanding a provision in the charter of the city of Pasadena which delegated the power to regulate traffic to the city, an ordinance passed for that purpose was in conflict with the general law and invalid.

Section 22, subd. (d), of the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1919, p. 223), provides that—

"Limitations as to the rate of speed herein fixed shall be exclusive of all other limitations fixed by any law of this state or any political subdivision thereof. Local authorities shall have no power to enact, enforce or maintain any ordinance, rule or regulation in any way in conflict with, contrary to or inconsistent with the provisions of this act," excepting the regulation of traffic at street crossings or where traffic is heavy, of vehicles offered to the public for hire, of streets for the use of processions and assemblies, of traffic in cemeteries and parks, of vehicles used for carrying merchandise and freight, the use of trailers, the exclusion of heavily laden vehicles from particular streets or the declaration that they should be "one way" streets.

Section 2 of Ordinance No. 1857 (New Series) of the city and county of San Francisco provides that—

"Every person, riding, driving, propelling or in charge of any vehicle upon any of the streets, shall ride, drive or propel such vehicle upon such streets in a careful manner and with due regard to the safety and convenience of pedestrians and all other vehicles upon such streets."

Section 11, art. 11, of the Constitution, is as follows:

"Any county, city, town, or township may make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws."

[2] It is necessary to determine whether the Legislature, by section 22, subd. (d), may lawfully restrict the local authorities in their control of traffic within their respective jurisdictions to the subjects enumerated therein. In Ex parte Daniels, supra, it is said that—

"The legislative declaration that 'local authorities shall have no power to enact, enforce or maintain any ordinance, rule or regulation in any way in conflict with, contrary to or inconsistent with the provisions of this act' amounts to no more than the similar constitutional declaration that general laws control municipal police regulations. (Const. art. XI, § 11.) If it were to be construed as an attempt to limit the power of local legislative bodies to pass regulations not inconsistent with such general law it would of course be unconstitutional."

It is further stated in the same opinion that "it cannot be doubted that the Legislature in enacting section 22 (d) with relation to the authority of municipalities to regulate speed intended to occupy the whole field of traffic regulation," and that "this legislation would seem to occupy the whole field of traffic regulation."

The Motor Vehicle Act being intended to cover the whole field of traffic regulation, any local ordinance on that subject in conflict with it would be unconstitutional and void without the declaration to that effect in the act. But if the Legislature had the power to enact the statute, intending it to cover the whole field of traffic regulation, it also had authority to make the exceptions enumerated in section 22, which amounted to a declaration that they should not be included in the general scheme of legislation. Section 22, subd. (d), must therefore be regarded as excluding such exceptions from the operation of the act. Such subjects being excepted from the field of regulation of the general law, local ordinances with respect to them are not in conflict with it. But conversely, other subjects, not so excepted, falling within the scope of the act, must be considered as included in its operation and may not be effected by inconsistent local ordinances. Viewed in this light, section 22, subd. (d), is a valid enactment and not an attempted statutory curtailment of the authority of the local legislative bodies. The ordinance involved in the case at bar does not fall within any of the exceptions to that subdivision.

[3] Section 20, subd. (a), of the Motor Vehicle Act, provides:

"The driver or operator of any vehicle in or upon any public highway shall drive or operate such vehicle in a careful manner with due regard for the safety and convenience of pedestrians and of all other vehicles or traffic upon such highway, and wherever practicable shall travel on the right-hand side of such highway." Stats. 1919, p. 215.

The section contains other subdivisions specifically providing certain rules of conduct on the part of drivers of vehicles, as, for instance, giving signals upon turning at intersections. It also regulates the speed of vehicles, fixing a general maximum limit and maximum limits for business and other closely built-up districts and for other localities such as crossings. Thus it prohibits the operation of vehicles in an unsafe manner at any time and declares that in particular contingencies a failure to follow the rules there laid down is unsafe. Ordinance No. 1857 (New Series) of the city and county of San Francisco prohibits the operation of vehicles in an unsafe manner, without defining what shall constitute an unsafe method of operation. It is at once apparent that the two laws prohibit the same acts.

In the case of In re Sic, 73 Cal. 142, 14 Pac. 405, wherein was involved an ordinance which was intended to prohibit opium dens, and which was substantially the same as a section of the Penal Code, it was said:

"It would seem that an ordinance must be conflicting with the general law which may operate to prevent a prosecution of the offense under the general law. The Constitution provides that no one shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense. If tried and convicted or acquitted under the ordinance, he could not be again tried for the same offense under the general law. The contrary doctrine has been held in some states, but this conclusion seems more in consonance with reason and justice. * * * It will be observed that we only hold that there is a conflict where the ordinance and the general law punish precisely the same acts."

It was held in Ex parte Daniels, supra, that—

"If we seek to uphold the local legislation by concluding that it is not in conflict with the state law for the reason that the ordinance, as well as the state law, prohibits an unreasonable speed, we are met with the proposition that a local ordinance cannot prohibit exactly the same thing prohibited by the state law and still be valid."

It follows that section 2 of Ordinance 1857 (New Series) of the city and county of San Francisco is in conflict with the general law of the state, and therefore void under section 11, art. 11, of the Constitution.

[4] However, we are of the opinion that the prisoner is not entitled to his discharge, but that his conviction may be upheld under the provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act. As already pointed out, section 20 (a) of the Motor Vehicle Act and section 2 of Ordinance 1857 (New Series) prohibit the same acts. Section 83 of the ordinance provides a penalty for a violation of its provisions consisting of a fine of not more than $100 or imprisonment for not more than 50 days. Section 32 (a) of the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1919, p. 225) provides that—

"Except as in this act otherwise provided, or where a different penalty is expressly fixed by this act, any person violating any of its provisions * * * shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, unless in this act otherwise provided, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars or by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

Certain specified acts are declared by the statute to be misdemeanors, others are made felonies and in addition to the punishment provided for a violation of its terms courts are empowered to suspend an operator's or chauffeur's license for a period of 30 days and such license may be revoked by the motor vehicle department. The penalty for the act in question in the case at the bar is provided by section 32 (a).

In the Matter of Rogers, 160 Cal. 764, 118 Pac. 242, the prisoner was arrested on a charge of violating the provisions of section 330a of the Penal Code, making it a misdemeanor to keep or maintain any mechanical device upon the result of the operation of which money or other valuable thing is staked or hazarded. The court said:

"The prisoner's machine, operated as it is manifestly designed to operate, is nothing more nor less than a lottery as defined in section 319 of the Penal Code, and by section 320 every person who contrives, prepares, or sets it up is guilty of a misdemeanor. And, so far as lawfulness of the imprisonment is concerned, it is of no consequence that a violation of section 330a was charged in the complaint, instead of sections 319, 320, under which the facts bring the offense."

This reasoning is equally applicable to the case at bar and the prisoner's conviction and detention under the Motor Vehicle Act entirely lawful if a commission of the offense there defined is charged by the complaint. In Ex parte Mansfield, 106 Cal. 400, 39 Pac. 775, the petitioner was convicted under a complaint of carrying on the business of selling liquor without having first procured a license so to do, contrary to ordinance number 124 of Butte county, which in section 1 required that such a license be procured and in section 5 provided that any one failing to procure such a license should be guilty of a misdemeanor. It was held section 1 was a valid exercise of the licensing power of the county, but that the penal provision of section 5, which was severable from the remainder of the statute, conflicted with section 435 of the Penal Code, which provides:

"Every person who commences or carries on any business, trade, profession, or calling, for the transaction or carrying on of which a license is required by any law of this state, without taking out or procuring the license prescribed by such law, is guilty of a misdemeanor."

The question was presented whether a crime was charged under section 435, inasmuch as the complaint did not follow the language of that section and only charged the commission of an offense under Ordinance No. 124. The court considered the common-law rule that in charging a statutory crime the conclusion of an indictment contra formam statuti is required, and it was held that the complaint was sufficient. It was there said:

"The defendant in this case was plainly informed of the nature of his offense. It consisted, in the language of the complaint, in carrying on the business of selling distilled, fermented, malt, vinous, and other spirituous liquors and wines without having procured a license so to do, contrary to the provisions of Ordinance No. 124 of Butte county, Cal., which ordinance is fully set forth. This was his alleged offense. If guilty of it he became amenable to section 435 of the Penal Code. * * * The essentials to a criminal complaint in a justice's or police court, as set forth in section 1426 of the Penal Code, do not include a conclusion to the statute. Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. As to complaints for misdemeanors in justices' and police courts at least, the common law rule has been changed. The complaint in this case complies with the requirements of the law, and states a cause of action against the defendant."

[5] In this case the complaint charged that—

The prisoner "did willfully and unlawfully drive, ride, propel and operate said vehicle upon a certain Fell street, between Masonic avenue and Ashbury street, in the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, in a careless and reckless manner without due regard to the safety and convenience of pedestrians and other vehicles upon said street.

"Thereby violating the provisions of sections 2 and 83 of Ordinance No. 1857 (New Series) of the board of supervisors of the city and county, contrary to the form, force and effect of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the people of the state of California."

While it was not in the exact language of the Motor Vehicle Act, it is in substance the same and could not have failed to inform the prisoner of the nature of his offense, and it clearly recited an act forbidden by the Motor Vehicle Act.

[6] It is urged on behalf of petitioner that the judgment is void in that in describing the misdemeanor of which the prisoner was convicted it omits to add the words "New Series" after the number of the ordinance. This is not a jurisdictional defect (Ex parte Turner, 75 Cal. 226, 16 Pac. 898), and in addition we are holding it is not a prosecution under the ordinance but one under the Motor Vehicle Act. The other specifications in support of the petition are without merit for the same reasons.

The writ is discharged and the prisoner remanded.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; WILBUR, J.; WASTE, J.; LENNON, J.; WARD, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 734

HOLMAN v. MUSSER. (Civ. 4341.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 23, 1922.)

1. Vendor and purchaser ⊜97—No forfeiture for nonpayment of installments on land contract where deed not tendered as required thereby.

A contract for the purchase of real estate, providing that, if no objection to title was made, the balance of the purchase price was to be paid in a certain manner upon the delivery to the purchaser of a properly executed and acknowldged deed, and also providing that fire insurance, rents, and water rates were to be prorated as of date of the delivery of the deed, held to require the seller to deliver a deed of the property at the time the first of the installments became due, and hence no forfeiture could be declared for nonpayment where the seller had not tendered such a deed.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⊜46—That construction of land contract is unusual held immaterial.

That the construction placed upon a contract for the sale of real estate is unusual is immaterial.

3. Vendor and purchaser ⊜46—Land contract must be construed if possible to avoid forfeiture of purchaser's deposit.

Forfeitures are not favored in law, and a contract for the purchase of real estate must be construed if possible so as to avoid a forfeiture of the purchaser's deposit.

4. Vendor and purchaser ⊜341(3)—Evidence held to sustain finding that purchaser had not abandoned contract so as to make tender of deed unnecessary.

In an action to recover a deposit paid under a contract for the purchase of real estate claimed by the seller to have been forfeited for nonpayment of installments due, a finding that the purchaser had not announced an intention not to go on with the contract, so as to relieve the seller from tendering a deed, held sustained by the evidence.

5. Vendor and purchaser ⊜334(6)—Vendor cannot insist upon forfeiture of deposit where he himself is in default.

Where the parties to a preliminary contract for the purchase of real estate had agreed to execute a formal final agreement, the seller could not retain a deposit on the purchase money made at the time of the execution of the preliminary agreement on the ground of default in payment of installments where he himself was in default in failing to tender a deed within a given time.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Joseph S. Koford, Judge.

Action by Everett A. Holman against Leo P. Musser. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Ezra Cox, of Oakland, for appellant.

C. S. Morbio, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This action was brought by the plaintiff to recover $500, money paid by him on a contract to purchase from defendant certain real property in Oakland, Cal., on the ground that the defendant had abandoned and refused to perform said contract. The contract entered into between the parties was dated November 12, 1920, and was as follows:

"Received from Everett A. Holman the sum of five hundred dollars, being deposit on account of seven thousand nine hundred dollars, United States lawful money, the purchase price of the property this day sold to him subject to owner's approval, situate in city of Oakland, county of Alameda, state of California, and described as follows, to wit:

"House and lot located at 628 Capel St. subject however to certain repairs mentioned in letter Nov. 12th, 1920. Price offered by buyer, $7,900.00; $500.00 deposit this day paid, and the balance to be paid as follows: Fifty dollars on Dec. 1st, 1920, and fifty dollars or more on the 1st of each month thereafter including interest 7%. It is further agreed that $500.00 or more shall be paid on July 1st, 1921, and $500.00 more each six months thereafter.

"10 days from date hereof are allowed Byron S. Arnold Co. in which to secure owner's approval; 10 days additional are allowed purchaser to examine title to said property and to report in writing all valid objections thereto to Byron S. Arnold Co. at its office. If no such objections to title are so reported the balance of said purchase price shall be paid by said purchaser to said Byron S. Arnold Co. in the manner hereinabove specified, upon the delivery to said purchaser at said office of a properly executed and acknowledged grant, bargain and sale deed of said property.

"If any such objections to title are so reported sixty days are allowed seller to perfect title, and if, after the expiration of said term (unless extended by mutual consent) the title shall not have been perfected, said deposit shall be returned; otherwise said deposit shall be retained by the seller's agent.

"Taxes for the current fiscal year shall be prorated as from July 1st to July 1st; fire insurance, rents and water rates shall be prorated as of date of the delivery of deed.

"Time is of the essence of this contract.

"Byron S. Arnold Co.

"I hereby agree to purchase the property above described upon the terms and conditions hereinabove expressed. Everett A. Holman."

The foregoing contract was set out in the complaint, and it was alleged that Byron S. Arnold Company was the agent of the defendant; that the contract of purchase and sale was duly signed and ratified by the defendant; that plaintiff paid $500 in reliance upon said contract; that defendant never tendered to plaintiff any deed or conveyance of the title to said property, and that on December 16, 1920, defendant notified plaintiff that all his interest in said property was forfeited and the money paid upon the purchase price thereof was forfeited because of the nonpayment of $50 on December 1, 1920.

Defendant answered, and admitted the making of the agreement set out in the complaint; denied that the defendant failed to perform any conditions binding upon him; denied that the plaintiff had performed the conditions of his agreement, and specifically denied "that he (defendant) did not offer a good and sufficient deed or conveyance of the premises to the plaintiff." Consequently, the issue upon the trial was whether or not the defendant had performed his obligations under the contract, which resolved into the questions: Was defendant bound to offer to plaintiff a good and sufficient deed conveying the title to said property under the terms of the contract? and Did he do so? The answer to the first of the questions depends entirely upon the construction placed upon the contract hereinbefore set out. The plaintiff urged upon the trial court the equitable principles that forfeiture is not favored in the law and that a contract will be construed, if possible, so as to avoid a forfeiture.

[1] The trial court construed the contract as requiring the defendant to deliver to the plaintiff a deed to the property at the time the first of the installment payments became due and payable. The language justifying such a construction was:

"If no such objections to title are so reported (prior to December 2, 1920) the balance of said purchase price shall be paid by said purchaser to said Byron S. Arnold Company in the manner hereinabove specified (first installment payment due December 1, 1920), upon the delivery to said purchaser at said office of a properly executed and acknowledged grant, bargain and sale deed of said property."

The construction placed upon the contract by the trial court was further justified by the following clause in the contract:

"Taxes for the current fiscal year shall be prorated as from July 1st to July 1st; fire insurance, rents and water rates shall be prorated as of date of the delivery of deed."

As the trial court pointed out, if the deed was not to be delivered for several years, or until the last installment payment was made by the plaintiff, as contended by defendant, then, under the terms of the contract, the defendant would be charged with fire insurance premiums, rents and water rates until the time of the delivery of said deed. It is admitted by defendant's witness Arnold that an adjustment of taxes, insurance, etc., was insisted upon by him, as defendant's agent, as of a date prior to December 1, 1920. This fact is valuable in arriving at a construction of the contract, being the interpretation which the parties themselves placed upon it.

[2, 3] The fact that the construction placed upon the contract makes it an unusual one is immaterial. Parties are not bound to enter into the usual contracts, and there is no legal presumption that they will do so. The defendant was protected by his vendor's lien, but that circumstance is also immaterial. Forfeitures are not favored in law, and the trial court was bound to construe the contract, if possible, so as to avoid a forfeiture of plaintiff's deposit. Forfeitures will be avoided upon any reasonable showing. Knarston v. Man. L. Ins. Co., 124 Cal. 77, 56 Pac. 773.

[4] The only other matter urged by the appellant is that the evidence shows that the plaintiff announced an intention not to go on with the contract prior to December 1, 1920, and therefore the defendant was relieved from the necessity of offering him a deed on that date, but might rely upon the anticipatory breach by the plaintiff. It is argued that, in legal effect, the situation amounted to a prevention of performance by the plaintiff. The trial court found that defendant was not prevented by any act of plaintiff from performing the terms and conditions of said contract. And this finding was supported by the evidence, for, while the testimony of defendant's agent was that the plaintiff stated, about November 22, 1920, that he would not go on with the contract, the testimony of plaintiff with regard to this matter is that, upon being told that he could not get back his deposit, he stated that he would go on with the contract, and he indicated his willingness and determination to go on with it by treating the property as his own, advertising it for sale, etc. As to these latter matters, he is corroborated by the testimony of defendant's agent. The record presenting a conflict of evidence upon this question, we are bound by the conclusion of the trial court.

It is also contended that the evidence shows that the contract set out herein was a preliminary agreement or deposit receipt, and that a further or final agreement was to be entered into between the parties which was to include all the terms and conditions of the sale of the property, and provide for the delivery of a deed at a time other than that mentioned in the preliminary agreement as construed by the trial court and by this court. Upon this phase of the case, it seems apparent that any final or more formal agreement must, necessarily, embody the terms set out in the preliminary agreement, even though additional ones were to be added. If the terms of this preliminary agreement, as construed by the trial court, are not binding upon the defendant so as to compel inclusion thereof in any more formal agreement concerning the subject-matter, assuredly none of its terms are binding upon the plaintiff. Defendant's only claim to the money in controversy is under the terms of the preliminary agreement. It is not provided that plaintiff should forfeit this $500 if he failed to agree upon the terms of a final agreement, and the validity of such a provision is not before us. If defendant is seeking to retain this amount as damages for plaintiff's alleged refusal to enter into the final formal agreement, defendant can only do so by showing that such an amount represents his actual damages, and, further, that the plaintiff was in default in refusing to execute the final agreement. To prove this latter point, it would be necessary for defendant to show that the final agreement offered by him to plaintiff conformed to the preliminary agreement as to the matters touched upon in the preliminary agreement. Levin v. Saroff (Cal. App.) 201 Pac. 961. This he failed to do. He also made no showing that he had been damaged in any amount by the plaintiff's failure to execute the final agreement. It appears that he resold the house, and, so far as the record shows, he may have received a substantially larger amount than the plaintiff was to pay for it.

[5] Conceding, therefore, that the parties had agreed to execute, later, a formal final agreement, and that the plaintiff refused to enter into such an agreement, defendant thereupon sought to hold plaintiff to the terms of the preliminary agreement, as he had a right to do. Levin v. Saroff, supra, and cases cited therein. He accordingly sought to retain the deposit made under the preliminary agreement. In holding plaintiff to the terms of the preliminary agreement, defendant must necessarily be bound thereby, and the rights of the parties, respectively, are determined with reference to its terms as such terms were construed by the trial court. In the light of such construction, the defendant was found to be in default by the trial court, because of his failure to furnish a deed. This was the important issue raised by the pleadings in the action. In this situation, defendant announced in writing to the plaintiff that he considered the contract at an end. This amounted to an abandonment of the same, and entitled the plaintiff to recover his deposit. In other words, the defendant may not hold the plaintiff to the terms of the preliminary agreement and retain his deposit made thereunder unless he is also held to a performance of the terms of such agreement. The interpretation of such agreement we have discussed heretofore herein.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 776

PEOPLE v. RYAN. (Cr. 1021.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 24, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 22, 1923.)

1. Criminal law ⇐1134(3)—Court of Appeal on appeal by state held authorized to review order sustaining demurrer to information for violating the Medical Practice Act.

Where a demurrer to an information for violating the Medical Practice Act has been sustained and the case dismissed pursuant to Pen. Code, § 1008, on refusal to amend, the Court of Appeal has power on appeal by the state to review the order sustaining the demurrer.

2. Physicians and surgeons ⇐6(9)—Information for practicing medicine without license held not demurrable for failing to allege that patients were human beings.

An information for violating the Medical Practice Act by treating "the sick and afflicted in this state" without having a certificate from the board of medical examiners held not demurrable because it failed to allege that the sick and afflicted were human beings.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Benj. K. Knight, Judge.

Al Ryan (as Al Rhyan) was charged with violating the Medical Practice Act. A demurrer to the information was sustained, and from an order of dismissal the People appeal. Reversed.

See, also, 207 Pac. 269.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

Lucas F. Smith, of Santa Cruz, Lucas F. Smith, Jr., of Los Angeles, and Stanford G. Smith, of Santa Cruz, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal taken by the people of the state of California from an order dismissing an action pursuant to section 1008 of the Penal Code, upon the failure of the district attorney to amend an information for misdemeanor, to wit, violation of Medical Practice Act (St. 1913, p. 722) filed against the defendant, to which information a demurrer had been sustained.

[1] Upon this appeal this court has power to review the order sustaining the demurrer. People v. Apple (Cal. App.) 206 Pac. 487.

The portion of the information material here is:

"The said Al Rhyan, on or about the 5th day of July, 1921, at and in the county of Santa Cruz and state of California, and before the filing of this information, willfully and unlawfully did practice, attempt to practice and advertise and hold himself out as practicing a system or mode of treating the sick and afflicted in this state, without having at the time of so doing a valid unrevoked certificate from the board of medical examiners of the state of California. * * *"

The trial court sustained the demurrer upon the ground that the information did not state a public offense, because it did not allege that the sick and afflicted upon whom the defendant is alleged to have practiced were "human beings."

In the cases of People v. Ratledge, 172 Cal. 402, 156 Pac. 455, People v. Poo On (Cal. App.) 192 Pac. 1090, and People v. Cochran (Cal. App.) 205 Pac. 473, indictments substantially identical with the one in the present case were approved. The case of People v. Cochran, supra, discusses the precise question involved here in the following language:

"The charging part of the information reads as follows: 'That the said A. D. Cochran on or about the 16th day of December, 1920, at and in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, did willfully, unlawfully and feloniously practice, attempt to practice, and advertise and hold himself out as practicing, a system and mode of treating the sick and afflicted in the state of California, without then and there having a valid unrevoked certificate, authorizing him to practice a system or mode of treating the sick and afflicted in the state of California, from the state board of medical examiners of the state of California.'

"The principal contention of the defendant and appellant is that the information does not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense. Our attention is called to the fact that in addition to the Medical Practice Act * * * there is a statute in force in this state regulating the practice of veterinary surgeons. We think no person of common understanding could fail to know from a reading of the information that it charges the defendant with having treated sick and afflicted persons in violation of the Medical Practice Act rather than having violated the statute concerning the practice of veterinary surgeons. This information complies with section 950 of the Penal Code, in that it is fully sufficient to charge a public offense."

[2] The orders dismissing the action and sustaining the demurrer to the information are reversed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; NOURSE, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 24

APPLEGARTH v. WEINTRAUB.
(Civ. 4260.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 29, 1922. Rehearing Denied Dec. 29, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 25, 1923.)

1. Sales ⟹149—Bill of sale held not to show that Liberty Bond given in consideration was permanent instead of temporary bond as understood by seller.

A bill of sale of an automobile, reciting that the consideration was "Liberty Bond No. B 00096672 of the Fourth Liberty Loan * * * from which all interest coupons have been cut off and which does not mature until October 15, 1938," etc., held not to show that the bond was a permanent, instead of a temporary, one as understood by the seller, suing for possession; the description fitting either.

2. Sales ⟹38(9)—Sale vitiated by buyer's failure to disclose fact that Liberty Bond given as part consideration was permanent bond.

Where an automobile buyer, knowing that a Liberty Bond given as part consideration was a permanent bond from which he had detached all interest coupons, did not disclose such fact to the seller and a bank clerk, by whom it was appraised as a temporary one, and the seller promptly rescinded the contract on discovering the mistake, no title passed, the sale being vitiated by the buyer's deceit, by which the seller was misled to his injury.

3. Replevin ⟹109—Judgment for possession of automobile or value thereof if delivery could not be had, and for damages for detention, construed.

A judgment for possession of an automobile, or the value thereof, if delivery could not be had, and for damages for detention, construed as a judgment for damages for detention, if defendant returned the car, and for the value thereof at the time of the taking, if he failed to return it.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by George A. Applegarth against S. S. Weintraub. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hiram W. Johnson, Jr., and Carl E. Day, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Keyes & Erskine, of San Francisco, for respondent.

ST. SURE, Justice pro tem. Plaintiff advertised his Dodge sedan automobile for sale for the sum of $750. Defendant sought to purchase, offering a Fourth Liberty Loan Bond of the par value of $500 on account of the price. Plaintiff not knowing what the bond was worth, both parties went to the Mercantile Trust Company, where plaintiff did his banking. The bond was exhibited to Mr. Ahnfeld, clerk in the bond department, and in the presence of plaintiff and defendant Mr. Ahnfeld stated that the bond was a "temporary" bond, worth about $480. Defendant knew at the time that the clerk had made a mistake when he stated the bond was a "temporary" bond. Defendant knew the bond was a "permanent" bond, as he had previously detached from it some 34 coupons and had used them in another transaction. Defendant knew that the bond, with coupons detached, was worth about $200 instead of $480. But he made no disclosures. The parties then went to plaintiff's office, where the deal was closed. Defendant delivered to plaintiff the Liberty Bond and a certified check for $240, and plaintiff delivered the automobile to the defendant, together with a bill of sale which recited that the consideration for the sale was "Liberty Bond No. B 00096672 of the Fourth Liberty Loan, and of the denomination of $500, and from which all interest coupons have been cut off and which does not mature until October 15, 1938, and the sum of $240, gold coin, etc. Next morning plaintiff went to the bank for the purpose of cashing the bond and was then informed that a mistake had been made; that the bond was not a "temporary" bond, as had been supposed, but that it was a "permanent" bond with all the semiannual coupons detached. Plaintiff and Mr. Ahnfeld went immediately to the residence of defendant, demanded the detached coupons or the return of the automobile, and offered to return the bond and the certified check. Both plaintiff and Mr. Ahnfeld testified that at this interview defendant said that he knew all of the time that a mistake had been made about the bond, but that he considered that he had done a good stroke of business, and he refused to accept a return of the bond and certified check and return the automobile to plaintiff, or to make good the value of the detached coupons. A policeman was then called, and all the parties went down to the Mercantile Trust Company and discussed the matter with Mr. W. B. Bakewell, vice president of the company. Mr. Bakewell in testifying said in part:

"I then suggested that if he (defendant) did not want to give back the car that he give Mr. Applegarth the coupons which had been detached from the bond. He stated he could not do that because he had used them in another deal, * * * and I asked him if he thought that was an honorable thing to do, and he said he thought it was good business. * * * I told him I thought he ought to be ashamed of himself for taking advantage of Mr. Applegarth."

From the testimony it appears that defendant claimed for the first time at the trial that he had agreed to purchase the automobile for $440 and that plaintiff was accepting the bond at $200, and that plaintiff knew it was a permanent bond.

An action in claim and delivery was commenced the day following the transfer of the automobile, and the sheriff was requisitioned to take the property. Defendant filed a bond and secured a return of possession. The action was tried by the court without a jury. Judgment was given and entered for possession of the automobile, or, in case delivery could not be had, for the value thereof, which was fixed at the sum of $650, and for $350 damages for detention, and costs of suit.

Findings usual in an action of claim and delivery were made, to the effect that plaintiff is the owner of the automobile; that it was unlawfully taken and detained; and that there were demand for return and refusal thereof.

The court further found:

"That it is not true that on the 21st day of December, 1921, for a good and valuable or good or valuable consideration or for any consideration paid by the defendant to the plaintiff or at all, said plaintiff sold and transferred or sold or transferred said automobile to the defendant herein; that on the last-mentioned date the plaintiff agreed to sell to the defendant and the defendant agreed to buy from the plaintiff the said Dodge car for the sum of $750 payable as follows: $240 in cash and the balance by a United States Fourth 4¼ per cent. Liberty Bond. Thereupon the said plaintiff signed and gave to the said defendant a bill of sale of said automobile and delivered possession of said automobile to said defendant and the said defendant gave the said plaintiff the said sum of $240 and a permanent Fourth Liberty Loan Bond maturing 1938, bearing interest at 4¼ per cent. with all the interest coupons detached; that plaintiff accepted the said permanent bond believing that it was a temporary bond and not knowing that it was the permanent bond with all the coupons detached; that the said defendant knew at all times that the said plaintiff was making this mistake and said plaintiff gave the said bill of sale and the said automobile to the defendant solely on account of this mistake and would not have done so except for said mistake.

"That on the 22d day of December, 1921, and as soon as plaintiff discovered the said mistake he notified the defendant thereof, tendered and offered to return to the said defendant the said sum of $240 and the said permanent bond with the coupons detached and demanded the return of the said automobile; that said defendant refused and still refuses to return the said automobile to the plaintiff."

Defendant appeals upon the judgment roll and a transcript of the testimony. He asks for a reversal of the judgment upon the following grounds:

"(1) The bill of sale itself positively shows that plaintiff was to get a Liberty Bond, but was not to get any coupons.

"(2) Title passed to defendant under the bill of sale, and this action of replevin cannot be maintained in the absence of a showing of fraud.

"(3) There is a total absence of any showing of fraud. * * *

"(4) The damages allowed for depreciation was outside the issues and unauthorized."

[1] 1. The description of the bond given in the bill of sale fits either a "temporary" or a "permanent" bond. A photograph of the bond involved in the litigation is attached to the record as an exhibit. An inspection of it shows how easily one might be mistaken as to its classification. Indeed, the evidence is undisputed that the bank clerk made such a mistake.

[2] 2, 3. Accepting the findings of the trial court as true and fully supported by the evidence, we are unable to agree with the contention of defendant that there was a "total absence of any showing of fraud." In its findings the trial court describes the conduct of defendant and says, in effect, that such conduct induced plaintiff to give the bill of sale. The bond transaction is called a mistake. It seems to us immaterial how the transaction is labeled. The suppression of facts by the defendant at the time the Liberty Bond was examined and appraised at the bank misled plaintiff to his injury. Inherent in every business transaction should be that sincerity which insures fair dealing between parties. Defendant's conduct in the premises was the very essence of deceit and vitiated the sale. Plaintiff promptly rescinded. No title passed to the vendee through the bill of sale under such circumstances. Wendling Lumber Co. v. Glenwood Lumber Co., 153 Cal. 412, 95 Pac. 1029.

[3] 4. We adopt the construction given the judgment by plaintiff. It is stated in his brief as follows:

"The judgment under consideration means that if defendant returns the automobile plaintiff may have judgment for $350 damages for detention, and if defendant fails to return the automobile plaintiff may have the value thereof at the time of the taking, to wit, $650."

And we are of opinion that such a construction is sustained by the decision of this court in the case of Morris v. Allen, 17 Cal. App. 684, 121 Pac. 690.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

---

(59 Cal. App. 785)

PEOPLE v. McMILLAN. (Cr. 639.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 27, 1922.)

1. Criminal law ⇐1166½(8) — Overruling challenge of juror for cause, subsequently peremptorily challenged, without showing that any juror unsatisfactory, held insufficient to warrant reversal.

Where after the challenge of accused of a juror for cause had been overruled, he was challenged peremptorily by accused, who thereafter exhausted his 10 peremptory challenges, and it did not appear that any juror who served on the trial was unsatisfactory to accused, the ruling on the challenge for cause is not enough to warrant reversal.

2. Witnesses ⇐318—Evidence of reputation of accused for truth and honesty and for peace and quiet held properly rejected.

In a prosecution for rape, where no element of force or violence was involved, and no attempt made to impeach accused as a witness, evidence of his reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity and for peace and quiet was not admissible to show accused worthy of belief, on the ground that his testimony had been squarely contradicted by the prosecutrix.

3. Witnesses ⇐318—Reputation of witness for truth inadmissible until challenged by evidence of party against whom he has testified.

The reputation of a witness for truth cannot be supported by evidence until it has been challenged by evidence produced by the party against whom he has testified.

4. Criminal law ⇐379—General reputation of accused for traits of character involved in charge against him admissible.

Evidence of the general reputation of accused for traits of character involved in the charge against him is admissible.

5. Rape ⇐42—Traits of character involved for which evidence admissible on reputation of accused, virtue, chastity, and morality.

The traits of character admissible in support of the reputation of accused, charged with rape, are virtue, chastity, and morality, and he could not give evidence of general reputation for integrity, peace, and quiet.

6. Rape ⊜59(3)—Charge that conviction may be had on uncorroborated testimony of prosecutrix of satisfying jury beyond reasonable doubt held proper.

An instruction that a conviction is warranted in a prosecution for rape upon the uncorroborated evidence of the prosecutrix, if it creates in the minds of the jury a satisfying conviction and belief, beyond a reasonable doubt, of the guilt of accused, held proper.

7. Criminal law ⊜1172(1)—Truism by court in concluding correct instruction held not prejudiced.

The remark by the court, after concluding correct instruction, that, if the instruction was not the rule, many offenses of such character would go unpunished, was a mere truism or commonplace, within the knowledge of all the jurors, and, if argumentative, was not prejudicial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; Denver Sevier, Judge.

John McMillan was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Thomas H. Selvage and E. S. Selvage, both of Eureka, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINCH, P. J. The defendant appeals from the judgment of conviction herein of the crime of rape upon a girl of the age of 14 years and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] Appellant contends that the court erred in denying defendant's challenge for cause interposed to one of the jurors on the ground of actual bias. The juror was subsequently challenged peremptorily by defendant. He thereafter peremptorily challenged other jurors, and exhausted his ten peremptory challenges, but it does not appear that any juror who served on the trial was unsatisfactory to defendant. The facts are similar to those in the case of People v. Schafer, 161 Cal. 573, 576, 119 Pac. 920, 921, where it is said:

"While the record shows that the defendant did subsequently exhaust his 10 peremptory challenges, it does not appear that he had occasion or desire to use an additional peremptory challenge, or that each and all of the 12 jurors finally accepted and sworn were not entirely satisfactory to him. * * * This is not enough to warrant reversal for error in the ruling on the challenge for cause." To the same effect is the holding in People v. Kromphold, 172 Cal. 512, 157 Pac. 599. In view of the authorities cited it is unnecessary to decide whether the ruling was error.

[2-5] The court sustained objections to evidence of defendant's reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity and for peace and quiet. No element of force or violence was involved in the charge, and no attempt had been made to impeach defendant as a witness. Appellant argues that, since the defendant squarely contradicted the testimony of the prosecutrix, the evidence offered was highly important to show that he was worthy of belief. The reputation of a witness for truth, however, cannot be supported by such evidence until it has been challenged by evidence produced by the party against whom he has testified. Evidence of his general reputation for traits of character involved in the charge against him may, of course, be given, but the evidence offered did not relate to such traits. The traits of character involved in a charge such as this are virtue, chastity, and morality. State v. Snover, 63 N. J. Law, 332, 43 Atl. 1059; State v. Brady, 71 N. J. Law, 330, 59 Atl. 6; State v. Thompson (Utah) 199 Pac. 161. Evidence of general reputation for peace and quiet is not admissible. Wistrand v. People, 218 Ill. 323, 75 N. E. 891. See, generally, People v. Fair, 43 Cal. 138; People v. Burke, 18 Cal. App. 72, 122 Pac. 435; People v. Romero (Cal. App.) 207 Pac. 933; People v. Thomas, 208 Pac. 343; State v. Bloom, 68 Ind. 56, 34 Am. Rep. 248. The court refused to give an instruction proposed by the defendant to the effect that evidence of the nature offered to establish the good character of defendant was pertinent to the issue of guilt or innocence. Under the foregoing authorities, it is clear that the ruling was not error.

[6] The court gave the following instruction:

"You are instructed that it is your province to determine the weight and credibility to be given the testimony of a female upon whom it is alleged in an information that a rape has been committed, and who testifies to the facts and circumstances of such rape as of any other witness testifying in the case. And if such testimony creates in the minds of the jury a satisfactory conviction and belief, beyond a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt, it is sufficient of itself without other corroborating circumstances or evidence to justify a verdict of guilty of rape upon the trial of the case. If this were not the rule, it is quite clear that many offenses of this character would go unpunished."

[7] With the exception of the last sentence thereof, the instruction has been often approved and it correctly states the law. The last sentence is not a statement of law, but of a mere commonplace, or truism, within the knowledge of all jurors. The district attorney, in his argument to the jury, doubtless made the same statement, and its truth is self-evident. While the statement may be said to be argumentative, it is highly improbable that any juror was influenced thereby.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

59 Cal. App. 753

HOLLMAN v. WOLF. (Civ. 4265.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 24, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 22, 1923.)

1. Appeal and error ⟹1140(3)—Case proper one for disposition on appeal.

Where the error in findings of fact in action for partnership accounting was purely clerical, and awarded judgment for plaintiff in an amount greater than he was entitled to, and which he consents to modify, it was a proper case for affirmance on condition of remittitur.

2. Costs ⟹238(2)—Defendant not attempting to get relief from clerical error in finding assessed with costs of appeal.

Where, in an action for partnership accounting through clerical error in findings, plaintiff was awarded a judgment in an amount greater than entitled, and defendant made no attempt to get relief in the court below, costs of appeal will be assessed to him.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George E. Crothers, Judge.

Action for accounting by F. W. Hollman against A. C. Wolf. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed on condition of remittitur.

Arthur W. Bolton, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Walter H. Linforth and Samuel M. Samter, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $2,326.01.

Plaintiff and defendant entered into a copartnership about June 1, 1906, for the purpose of carrying on a real estate business. The articles of copartnership drawn up at that time specified that all expenses, gains, profits, and increase growing out of said business should be divided between the partners, share and share alike. However, during the continuance of the partnership, first one partner, the defendant, withdrew more money from the common fund than the plaintiff, and later on the plaintiff drew more than the defendant. A trial balance prepared by the bookkeeper of the firm June 30, 1919, showed a balance due the defendant of $434.25 and an overdraft of the plaintiff in amount of $1,170.75. It was shown that this result was reached by ignoring all entries in the books of the firm up to and including the end of the year 1914, during which time the overdrafts of the defendant occurred. This was done on the theory that at that time the partners struck a balance, and thereafter made a readjustment of the net profits. The plaintiff in turn insists that from the beginning the defendant withdrew more money than plaintiff, due to the fact that he was a married man and required more money, and that an oral agreement was entered into that the first $400 profits was to be divided in the proportion of $225 to defendant and $175 to plaintiff, and that, when the profits of the business justified, the difference in withdrawals would be adjusted. This arrangement is alleged to have continued until some time in 1910. Taking this version of the agreement, the excess of profits drawn by defendant over that of plaintiff is $4,043.02, one-half of which is $2,021.51, or $304.50 less than the amount found by the court to be due plaintiff. Plaintiff concedes the amount allowed by the court to be $304.50 too much, and consents to a reduction of the amount of the judgment to that extent.

The court found that the partnership was created in June, 1906, and continued until May 29, 1917, when it was by mutual assent dissolved; that during that period the defendant appropriated from the partnership funds an amount in excess of that taken by plaintiff, equal to $4,652.02, due to the fact that during the latter part of 1908, all of 1909 and 1910, the defendant was given $225 out of the first $400 profits each month; that it was never agreed but that there should be an equal division of the profits, and the difference between the aforesaid amounts would be adjusted at a later date and the overdrafts would be made good to plaintiff.

Some question was raised about a nickelodeon business in which the partners were interested, and in which the defendant alleged the plaintiff spent all his time for a considerable period. The court found on this question that the partners were jointly interested in the nickelodeon, and that the real estate business was also conducted for the benefit of both.

The court also found that the trial balance hereinbefore referred to, and which showed an overdraft against the plaintiff, was prepared by the bookkeeper, solely at the instance of the defendant, and that said trial balance was not true or correct, and did not show the true condition of the account between the parties; that a true and correct account had been prepared from the inception of the partnership to its dissolution, showing therein the entire profits of the copartnership during the entire period, and that the same showed that defendant had drawn $4,652.02 more than had the plaintiff. As conclusions of law from the foregoing findings the court found that plaintiff was entitled to have and recover from defendant the sum of $2,326.01, and judgment was rendered accordingly.

The first contention of the appellant is that the judgment is not supported by the findings in relation to the amount thereof. The respondent concedes that the judgment is for too large a sum, due to a clerical error of the trial court, and consents that the judgment be modified so as to reduce the amount thereof by $304.50. However, this admission disregards another clerical error in plaintiff's favor, to the extent of $100, which we find exists in the addition of the amounts drawn by Hollman in the year 1908, as shown by his account. It is evident, therefore, that the amount of the judgment of the trial court should be reduced by $404.50. This would make the amount due $1,921.51.

The next contention of appellant is that the findings and judgment are not supported by the evidence, and in support of this contention attempts to show that there were three different methods of keeping the books during certain periods of the life of the partnership, and that as far as the personal accounts of the partners were concerned there must have been a different amount of compensation during those periods. However, taking into consideration the articles of copartnership having reference to the distribution of profits, there seems to be no contract or change sufficient to show otherwise than what the court found.

Appellant urges that the findings are contradictory, in that they find that the partnership was carried on under the original articles, and then finds to the contrary as to the division of the profits. There is no inconsistency in the findings; the court found that this arrangement was temporary, and not intended to change the original articles of agreement.

The finding that there was no accounting between the parties is assailed as not being supported by the evidence; the contention being made that there was an accounting in 1914, and also that the 1917 trial balance should therefore not be excluded. There is no sufficient evidence to support this contention, and we feel the finding of the court to the contrary in this particular should not be disturbed.

[1, 2] The question of costs is interjected into the case. It is conceded that the judgment must be modified, but whether such modification would place the burden of costs on respondent is the question. Respondent insists that the well-settled rule is that when a judgment is for a larger amount than it should have been, and respondent consents to a modification thereof, the appellate court will make the modification and affirm the judgment as thus modified. Respondent also insists that the error of $304.50 being purely clerical, and made by the court itself in its calculations, is one which the court below, if the matter was brought to its attention, would have corrected, and to which respondent would then have consented. The error in addition could also have been taken care of at the same time. The appellant insists, however, that the mistake is more than clerical, and that in order to arrive at the figures of respondent this court must exercise some of the functions of the trial court in an accounting. However, this is not the main point of appellant's case; it is only incidental, since he strenuously insists that the trial court erred in its conclusions, and that the proper judgment should show a balance in favor of defendant of $725. In disagreeing with this conclusion we feel that this is a proper case for the modification of the judgment, the record showing that the rights of the parties can best be determined in this manner (Fox v. Hale & Norcross, 122 Cal. 221, 54 Pac. 731; Atherton v. Fowler, 46 Cal. 320; Perine v. Lewis, 128 Cal. 241, 60 Pac. 422, 772; State Loan & Trust Co. v. Cochran, 130 Cal. 247, 62 Pac. 466, 600; McConnell v. Corona City Water Co., 149 Cal. 64, 85 Pac. 929, 8 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1171; Pearsall v. Henry, 153 Cal. 315, 95 Pac. 154, 159), and that it is also a proper case for the assessment of the costs to the appellant, since he made no attempt to get relief in the lower court (Tryon v. Sutton, 13 Cal. 490, 491; Cassin v. Marshall, 18 Cal. 689; Noonan v. Hood, 49 Cal. 293; Behlow v. Shorb, 91 Cal. 145; 27 Pac. 546; Cutting Fruit Packing Co. v. Canty, 141 Cal. 693, 75 Pac. 564).

The conclusion of this court is that the judgment should be reduced in the amount of $404.50. If the respondent shall within 15 days from the date of filing this opinion file in this court a remission of the sum of $404.50 from said judgment, the judgment, as thus modified, will be affirmed; otherwise the judgment will be reversed. It is so ordered.

---

59 Cal. App. 740

PEOPLE v. WOODS. (Cr. 904.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 23, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court. Jan. 22, 1923.)

1. False pretenses ⟹4—Defendant receiving checks charged against witness held guilty of obtaining money, though another may have received the money.

In a prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses, evidence that checks obtained by the accused by misrepresentations were charged against the bank account of the complaining witness, though it did not appear who received the money, was sufficient, under Pen. Code, § 532, denouncing obtaining money by false pretenses, so that evidence that accused, in making misrepresentations as to real property for which the checks were given, acted as the agent of another, and received only a commission on the sale, did not warrant a requested instruction that, unless the check was cashed by him and he received the money, he was not guilty.

2. Criminal law ⟸829(1)—Refusal of instructions covered by others not error.

In a prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses, a refusal to give instructions asked by the accused, the ground of which was covered by other instructions, was not error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

J. K. Woods was convicted of obtaining money by false pretenses, and he appeals. Affirmed.

W. T. Kendrick, Jr., L. W. Blodgett, and Victor H. Kendrick, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

WORKS, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment convicting him of the crime of obtaining money under false pretenses.

[1] The information under which appellant was prosecuted alleged that he had obtained from the prosecuting witness in the case, pursuant to certain fraudulent misrepresentations he had made to her, a certain sum in lawful money of the United States. The evidence showed without dispute that he had received from her two checks which totaled the amount alleged. Appellant contends that the trial court erred in refusing to instruct the jury:

"That unless you believe from the evidence that the check [sic] which was given to the defendant * * * was cashed (by the defendant) and that the defendant received the money, then you will find the defendant not guilty."

This instruction was doubtless requested for the reason that there is in the record some evidence tending to show that appellant was not the owner of the real property which was the subject of his misrepresentations, that he sold it to the complaining witness as the agent of a third party, and that he received merely a commission for making the sale. The requested instruction, however, does not correctly state the law. The fact that appellant was only an agent and that the purchase price was not received by him, if it were a fact, was immaterial. In prosecutions for obtaining property under false pretenses it is not necessary that the property "be obtained by the accused for himself," but "it is sufficient if, induced by his false representations, it is delivered to another, either for the benefit of that other or for accused's benefit." 25 C. J. 606. Section 532 of the Penal Code, denouncing the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses, contains nothing inconsistent with this statement of the effect of the decided cases.

There was here undisputed evidence showing that the two checks were cashed and charged against the account of the complaining witness at her bank, although it does not appear who got the money. This was all that was necessary, even if that much were required (People v. Hutchings [Cal. App.] 205 Pac. 480), speaking in view of the fact that the charge against appellant was for obtaining money.

[2] Appellant insists that the trial court erred in refusing to give two other instructions requested by him, but it is palpable that the ground covered by the two was also covered by instructions that were given. This is so plain to us that we do not further discuss the two questions presented.

Several other points are first made by appellant in his closing brief. It has been determined many times that points so made will not be considered.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 778

DICKSON v. PARKER. (Civ. 4168.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 25, 1922.)

1. Justices of the peace ⟸75(2)—Demurrer properly sustained to complaint of cause erroneously transferred to circuit court.

Where a cause was erroneously transferred by a justice of the peace to the circuit court, and the complaint upon its face showed that the justice had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action, a demurrer was properly sustained.

2. Appearance ⟸9(2)—To test jurisdiction, not general appearance giving jurisdiction on merits.

An appearance to object to the jurisdiction of the court was not a general appearance, and gave the court no jurisdiction on the merits of the case.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; C. E. Beaumont, Judge.

Action by J. E. Dickson against Tenia Parker. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

C. K. Bonestell, of Fresno, for appellant.

Geo. G. Graham, of Fresno, for respondent.

ST SURE, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a final judgment, and included in the appeal is a review of an order of the trial court refusing to quash service of summons. This court on June 23, 1922, affirmed the judgment. Rehearing was granted.

The respondent leased to the appellant certain real property at an agreed rental of $250 per month. Default being made in the payment of rent, the respondent gave notice, in conformity with the terms of the lease, that the estate of the appellant was terminated and thereafter commenced this suit in a justice's court. The appellant demurred therein to the complaint. The demurrer was sustained. Thereafter the justice erroneously transferred the cause to the superior court. After the filing of the papers in the clerk's office, that official issued a summons to the appellant, requiring her to appear and answer the complaint within three days, instead of the usual ten. This summons was served upon the appellant, and in due course, no answer having been filed, a judgment by default was entered against her. Thereafter she moved the court for certain relief. This motion is stated in the bill of exceptions in the following words:

"That on the 7th day of July, 1921, defendant, by her attorney, orally moved the court to set aside the default and the said judgment upon the ground that the court had no jurisdiction of the person of the defendant because there was no complaint properly on file in the above court and because the complaint that was on file therein did not state a cause of action against the defendant for forcible detainer, or any cause of action wherein the defendant might be brought into court on service of a summons requiring her to appear within three days after service of the same."

Subsequently the appellant filed in the case a written notice of motion to quash the summons, and she assigned the following grounds as the basis of the motion:

"(1) That there was no complaint properly on file with the clerk in the above-entitled court upon which to base the issue of a summons. (2) That said summons required defendant to appear within three days instead of ten days as required by law."

The court denied the motion on the ground, probably, that the special appearance waived the objection to the form of the summons. The appellant declined to avail herself of the opportunity afforded by the court to file an answer within the period of ten days, and, in due course, her default was entered, and judgment was entered against her.

[1] We are of the opinion that the motion to quash the summons should have been granted. The complaint filed in the justice's court clearly showed upon its face that the justice's court had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter. The demurrer interposed was properly sustained, and the action should have been dismissed. Shealor v. Superior Court, 70 Cal. 564, 11 Pac. 653; Ballerino v. Bigelow, 90 Cal. 500, 27 Pac. 372; Hoban v Ryan, 130 Cal. 96, 62 Pac. 296; Null v Superior Court, 4 Cal. App. 207, 87 Pac. 392, Bates v Ferrier, 19 Cal. App. 79, 124 Pac. 889. The action was dead, and the erroneous transfer of the pleadings in the case by the justice to the superior court and the subsequent filing of same in the office of the county clerk did not resurrect it. "The mode in which the jurisdiction of a court may be invoked is regulated by the Legislature." Raisch v. Sausalito Land Co., 131 Cal. 215, 63 Pac. 346; McAllister v. Tindal, 1 Cal. App. 236, 81 Pac. 1117. Section 838 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides under what circumstances and how an action shall be transferred from the justice's court to the superior court.

[2] Each time appellant appeared before the superior court she objected to its jurisdiction. Contention is made that in voicing her objection she used language which constituted an appearance in the action and thus conferred jurisdiction upon the court. With such contention we cannot agree. We think the record fairly shows that appellant never intentionally submitted herself to the jurisdiction of the court "for the purpose of obtaining any ruling or order going to the merits of the case." Davenport v. Superior Court, 183 Cal. 506, 191 Pac. 911.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

---

59 Cal. App. 772

GANZ v. J. D. & A. B. SPRECKELS SECURITIES CO. (Civ. 4176.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1. California. Nov. 24, 1922. Rehearing Denied Dec. 23, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court, Jan. 22, 1923.)

Brokers ⟸86(8) — Finding that defendant agreed to pay extra commission on sale of sugar not sustained by evidence.

In a broker's action to recover commission alleged to have been earned in the consummation of a sale of sugar by defendant to a third party, evidence held insufficient to sustain a finding that defendant agreed to pay a commission greater than 2 cents per 100 pounds.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by Frederick M. Ganz against the J. D. & A. B. Spreckels Securities Company, a corporation doing business under the firm name and style of the Western Sugar Refinery. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck and Edward Hohfeld, all of San Francisco (H. A. Judy, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Grover O'Connor, of San Francisco (Goodfellow, Eells, Moore & Orrick, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an action to recover from the defendant a commission, alleged to have been earned by plaintiff in the consummation of a sale of sugar by the defendant to one C. F. Buelow.

The plaintiff is a broker, and was engaged at the time of the transaction out of which this suit arose in consummating sales of beans, walnuts, and peanuts, and who, during 1920, at which time sugar was a valuable and scarce commodity, also engaged in the sugar brokerage business. The defendant was engaged in the business of refining sugar and selling the same in its refined state through a firm in San Francisco, paying therefor on all such sales a commission of 2 cents per 100 pounds, which fact, it is alleged by the defendant, plaintiff well knew.

Early in 1920 the plaintiff called on W. H. Hannam, general manager of the defendant company, and introduced as his agent in charge of his sugar department one L. W. Goeppert. Plaintiff at that time sought to buy from defendant some raw sugar. This was refused upon the ground, as stated by Hannam, that the defendant, Western Sugar Refinery, was a buyer, not a seller, of raw sugar. On June 21, 1920, subsequent to the visit aforementioned, Goeppert again called on Hannam, bringing with him one C. F. Buelow. It was represented to Hannam that Buelow was very anxious to buy 430 tons of raw "Java" sugar. The sugar was wanted in certain peculiar lots and tonnages, and had to be delivered by a specific date, which was close at hand, thus accounting for the anxiety felt by Buelow and Goeppert. Hannam again advised them that the firm did not sell raw sugar, but that he would, as a matter of accommodation, endeavor to match up the lots. This was done, and upon the occasion of the next call of Buelow and Goeppert the former brought with him a draft of contract for the sale of the sugar in question. The record is silent as to whether or not said contract contained any provision relating to a commission, but it appears that Hannam was not satisfied with the contract, and changed certain portions thereof.

Rabjohn, the assistant sales manager of the defendant company, was also present at the time of signing the contract, and when said contract was entirely written to be submitted to the parties for signature, Goeppert inquired of Rabjohn: "Where do I come in?" Rabjohn replied that Goeppert being a stranger to him, he knew nothing of it, and suggested taking the matter up with Hannam. This was done, the result being that Hannam in no uncertain terms stated that no commission would be paid, that the Western Sugar Refinery Company was making the deal as an accommodation, had not solicited the business, and was not going through with the deal under those circumstances. This was evidently the first intimation Hannam had that Goeppert sought a commission. The happenings at this time constitute the main bone of contention. Goeppert was, in his own words, "in a box, and the sugar was necessary and needed by Buelow" so that when Hannam stated that: "We won't pay a commission of 1 per cent.; we won't pay a commission of any kind;" and then upon second thought said: "We are in business here in San Francisco. We make it a point to try to get along with our customers without any friction and without any misunderstanding. I thought there was nothing in this except the matter of accommodation to you, but inasmuch as we pay brokerage in San Francisco, 2 cents on 100 pounds, which is the amount we pay month in and month out, * * * we will pay you the same commission." Goeppert was nonplussed, and replied: "I don't know what Mr. Ganz will think of that." Hannam replied that he did not care what Ganz thought, and said: "You will either accept right now, or I will tear the contract up and kiss the sale good-bye." There is a conflict as to the remaining portion of this conversation, Hannam and Rabjohn insisting that Goeppert accepted the 2 cents per 100, and Goeppert, in turn, stating that he insisted he could not accept any reduction. Buelow's testimony was taken by deposition, and his version was that nothing further was said after Hannam repeated his statement that he would not pay 1 per cent. Hannam's testimony indicated that after announcing his stand he said, "Shall I sign?" intimating that he desired an answer to his proposal and Goeppert said, "Sign." This is also testified to by Goeppert.

With the issues thus framed the cause was submitted to the jury, which returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff for $1,913.50. Judgment was accordingly given for that amount, from which judgment defendant prosecutes this appeal.

Defendant's chief contention is that the evidence is insufficient to justify or support the verdict of the jury. Except for the variance in the testimony of the witnesses on the question as to whether or not Goeppert accepted or refused the terms as laid down by Hannam the evidence is in substantial agreement. It is agreed that Buelow was brought to Hannam unsolicited, and that Goeppert and Buelow were told at that time that the Western Sugar Refinery was a buyer, not a seller, of raw sugar. However, Hannam testified that they seemed to be very anxious to get the sugar, and he agreed to sell. Nothing further appears with reference to a commission until the contract was ready for signature, at which time the commission feature was interjected into it. Goeppert himself testified that a brokerage clause was "usually" in the contract, and undoubtedly, standing on custom as he does, should have insisted upon it. Buelow, in his deposition—not cross examined—testified that he said to Goeppert, after the signing of the contract:

"I told Mr. Goeppert that he had been of some service to me, and I would be glad to pay him something for his services."

From this testimony of Buelow but one reasonable conclusion can be drawn, and that is that there had been no understanding on the part of the agent that any larger commission was to be paid than the 2 cents per 100 pounds, and that for that reason Buelow was willing to grant to the broker a portion of the commission which he had failed to receive from the company. This leaves only the testimony of Goeppert for our consideration which is to the effect that he (Goeppert) stated that he could not accept anything but the regular commission, and signed the contract under pressure, as above indicated. We do not regard that mere statement as sufficient to constitute a positive demand for the payment of the commission, and, as it would seem to be the fact that Hannam would not have entered into the contract unless Goeppert had accepted his gratuitous offer, we feel that the signing of the contract by Goeppert was an acceptance of the terms laid down by Hannam. Therefore we consider the evidence insufficient to sustain the verdict and judgment of the trial court.

The judgment is reversed.

---

60 Cal. App. 48

O'MALLEY v. CARRICK et al. (Civ. 4336.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 1, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 29, 1923.)

1. New trial ⊜138—Administratrix's interest in result of setting aside verdict against estate held not to require that she be served with notice of codefendant's intention to move for new trial.

That setting aside a verdict against two codefendants as administrator and administratrix of an estate and granting a new trial might result in additional expense to the estate held insufficient on which to predicate injury to the administratrix, who admitted the allegations of the complaint, but did not join with plaintiff in asking the relief claimed, so as to require that she be served with notice of the administrator's intention to move for a new trial, as the immediate result would be beneficial rather than adverse to her interest as administratrix, though she was personally satisfied with the verdict.

2. New trial ⊜66—Errors in refusing and giving instructions do not make verdict against law.

Errors in refusing and giving instructions do not make the verdict one against law, under Code Civ Proc. § 657, subd. 6, making that one of the grounds for new trial specified in the act, but are "errors of law occurring at the trial" referred to in subdivision 7

3. Appeal and error ⊜856(5)—Order granting new trial on only ground alleged in motion not upheld unless sustainable on such ground.

An order granting a new trial on a particular ground will not be upheld if not sustainable on such ground, though sustainable on other grounds, where the motion was made on that ground only.

4. Appeal and error ⊜662(1)—Record cannot be contradicted by matter in brief.

The appellate court is bound by the record on appeal, and cannot permit it to be contradicted by matter in the brief.

5. Attorney and client ⊜92—Counsel's statement that motion was based on one ground only held waiver of other grounds where record showed no dissent by other counsel.

Where counsel presenting a motion for new trial stated in open court that the only ground on which the motion was based was that the verdict was against law, all other grounds enumerated in the motion were waived, though there were other counsel for movant, where the record contained nothing indicating dissent on their part.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by Mary J. O'Malley against James Carrick and another, as administrator and administratrix of the estate of Catherine Ross, deceased. Verdict for plaintiff, and from an order granting a new trial, she appeals. Reversed.

George D. Collins, Jr., of San Francisco, for appellant.

T. G. Crothers, Wm. M. Abbott, K. W. Cannon, Wm. M. Cannon, and I. M. Golden, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

